

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL LIBRARY

See 2

27

.. THE ...

c

.

KENTUCKY
LAW REPORTER.

VOLUME XXVII.

Feb. 1, 1905, to Sept. 15, 1905, Inclusive.

Frankfort, Ky.
GEO. A. LEWIS, PUBLISHING HOUSE.
1905.

Rec. Jan. 16, 1906

TABLE OF CASES.

	Page.		Page.
Abrams v. Commonwealth	355	Ball v. Commonwealth	448
Adair County a. Taylor	36	Bank of Lewisport a. Smith	406
Adams Express Co. v. Commonwealth	1096	Bank of New Roads v. Ky. Refining Co.	645
Adams a. Hornsey	683	Barber & Vansant v. Ruggles	1077
Advance Thresher Co. v. Curd	492	Bargo v. Bargo, Adm'r	680
Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Sugg	846	Baries v. Louisville Electric Light Co.	658
Agnew a. Stanhope	1018	Barrett, &c. v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y.	586
Agricultural & Mechanical College v. Hager, Auditor	1178	Bassett & Stone v. The Aberdeen Coal & Mining Co.	1122
Alderson, &c. v. Alderson's Gd'n.	1067	Bates v. The Burt & Brabb Lumber Co., &c.	766
Allard v. Allard, &c.	750	Bates, &c. v. Frazier, &c.	576
Allen a. Borum	262	Baugh, &c. a. Scoville	319
Alvey a. Becker, L. A. Co.	832	Bay State Petroleum Co., &c. v. Penn. Lubricating Co.	1133
Amburgy, &c. a. Young, &c.	1079	Bean's Adm'r a. Logan, &c.	1081
American Ass'n Inc. a. Jones, &c.	804	Bean, &c. v. Venable, &c.	927
American Bonding Co. of Baltimore v. First National Bank of Covington, &c.	393	Becker, L. A. Co. v. Alvey	832
American German National Bank v. Hager, Auditor	1219	Beckett a. Commonwealth	265
American Tel. & Tel. Co. a. Commonwealth	29	Begley, &c. v. Commonwealth, &c.	1115
A. O. U. W. Grand Lodge of Ky. v. Edwards	469	Belknap, &c. v. Commonwealth, for, &c.	473
Anderson, &c. a. City of Louisville	143	Bell's Adm'r a. Paducah Ry. & Light Co.	428
Anderson v. Mt. Sterling Telephone Co., &c.	868	Bell & Coggeshall Co. a. Witten, By, &c.	580
Andrews v. Andrews, Committee	1119	Bell's Trustee, v. City of Lexington, &c.	591
Anglin v. Conley	1177	Benton, &c. a. Erwin	108, 909
Annis, &c. v. Ferguson, &c.	56	Berry, &c. a. City of Covington	962
Applegate, &c. a. Perkins	522	Berry v. Frisbie	724
Asher, &c. v. Uhl, &c.	938	Berry v. Lewis, &c.	109
Asher, &c. v. Ky. Union Co.	1102	Bevins v. Commonwealth	735
Atherton v. Warren	632	Big Sandy Ry. Co. v. Dills, &c.	952
Auxier, &c. a. Dills	531	Bishop v. Gregory, Judge	478
Avritt, &c. a. Cumb. Tel. & Tel. Co., &c.	394	Blackley Hurst & Co. a. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.	392
Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Commonwealth, By, &c.	585	Blenton, Sr., &c. a. Vincent, &c.	489
Azbill, &c. a. Ford, &c.	347	Board of Education of Somerset a. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.	863
Backer, &c. v. Penn. Lubricating Co.	1133	Board of Education of Winchester v. City of Winchester	994
Baker v. Baker	533	Bohlson, &c. a. Schroeder, &c.	188
Baldwin a. Warth	339

	Page.	Campbellsville Telephone Co.
Bouner v. Commonwealth..	647, 652	v. Lebanon, Louisville and
Boone v. Riddle, Judge	828	Lexington Telephone Co.....	90
Booth a. Clark, &c.	891	Carmony v. L. & N. R. R. Co..	948
Borum v. Allen	262	Carnes v. Commonwealth	1205
Boughner, &c. a. Laughlin's		Carney a. Guthrie	861
Ex'tx	19	Carpenter v. Carpenter's Trus-
Boulton a. Morgan, &c.	572	tee	206
Bowman a. City of Lexing-		Carper's Adm'r, &c. a. Shemton	286, 651	well, &c.	997
Bowling, &c. a. French	639	Carter a. L. & N. R. R. Co.....	748
Bradley-Watkins Tie Co. a.		Cassidy, &c. a. McCoy, &c....	818
Johnson, Sheriff, &c.	540	Catron a. Parker	536
Brady v. Fraley's Adm'r, &c... 163		Chamberlain v. Golden	686
Bramblett v. Commonwealth		C. & O. Ry. Co. a. Common-
Land & Lumber Co.....	156	wealth, By, &c.	1084
Bramblett v. Commonwealth		C. & O. Ry. Co., &c. a. Wilson's
Land & Lumber Co., &c.....	878	Adm'r	778
Braugman a. Speth	295	C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Common-
Bright v. L. & N. R. R. Co.....	1052	wealth	176
Bright v. Commonwealth	677	Chenault v. Gravitt	403
Brocking a. City of Owensboro.	1086	Chess & Wymond Co. a. Buey's
Brooksville Graded School Dis-		Adm'r	198
trict, &c. a. Hackett	1021	Chestnut v. Green	838
Brown, &c. a. Hoskin's Adm'r..	216	Chicago, St. Louis & N. O. R.
Brown, &c. a. Rissberger.....	538	R. Co. v. Liebel, &c.	716
Browning v. Wayland	438	C., N. O. & T. P. R. R. Co. v.
Bruce, Clerk, &c. a. Harris....	1089	Burgess.	252
Bryan's Adm'r a. The Ky. Stove		C., N. O. & T. R. R. Co. v.
Co.	136	Taylor	351
Buchanan a. I. C. R. R.		C., N. O. & P. R. R. Co. v.
Co.	1193, 1215	Marr's Adm'x	388
Buckner's Adm'r v. L. & N.		Cin., Newport & Cov. Street
R. R. Co.	1009	Ry. Co., &c. a. Murnahan....	737
Buckner's Adm'r v. Buckner ..	1032	Citizens Ins. Co. of Mo. v.
Buey's Adm'r v. Chess &		Henderson Elevator Co.....	151
Wymond Co.	198	Citizens Savings Bank v. Lan-
Bullock, Trustee, &c. v. Bul-		drum, &c.	693
lock, &c.	161	City of Bardstown a. Muir's
Burgess a. C., N. O. & T. P.		Adm'r.	1150
R. R. Co.	252	City of Louisville v. Louisville
Burke, &c. a. City of Louisville.	896	City Ry.	141
Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. v.		City of Louisville v. Ander-
Crawford	798	son, &c.	143
Burt & Brabb Lumber Co., &c.		City of Lebanon, &c. v. Knott,
a. Combs.	439	&c.	158
Burton v. City of Louisville... 514		City of Louisville v. Jacobs....	175
Bush a. Cuyler	148	City of Louisville a. Fenley, &c.	204
Bush, &c. a. Couchman	108	City of Louisville v. Louisville
Butler v. Stephens	241	School Board	209
Butler, &c. v. Taggart's Trus-		City of Louisville v. Louisvilletee	708	Courier Journal Co.	263
Cain, By, &c. v. L. & N. R. R.		City of Louisville a. Krieger,
Co.	201	&c.	472
Camden Interstate Ry. Co. v.		City of Louisville a. Burton... 514
Lee, &c.	75	City of Louisville a. Wathen,
Camden Interstate Ry. Co. v.		&c.	635
Smiley, &c.	134	City of Louisville v. Robinson's
Campbell a. Phillips	885	Ex'or, &c.	375

TABLE OF CASES.

v

	Page.		Page.
City of Lexington v. Bowman	286, 651	Commonwealth, By, &c. a.
City of Lexington, &c. a. Bell's Trustee	591	Ayer & Lord Tie Co.	585
City of Latonia, &c. v. Meyer.	746	Commonwealth a. Ball	448
City of Covington v. McKenna & Craig	784	Commonwealth a. Bonner.	647, 652
City and Suburban Teleg. Ass'n, By, &c. v. Woodworth.	860	Commonwealth a. Bevins	735
City of Mayfield a. Evers, &c.	481	Commonwealth, For, &c. a.
City of Newport a. Silva, For, &c.	212	Belknap, &c.	473
City of Nicholasville, &c. a.		Commonwealth a. Bright	677
Clark, By, &c.	974	Commonwealth a. Carnes	1205
City of Paducah a. Stone, Petitioner Ex Parte.	717	Commonwealth a. C. & O. Ry. Co.	176
City of Shelbyville, &c. a.		Commonwealth a. Combs	273
Ramsey, &c.	141	Commonwealth, For, &c. a.
City of Paducah v. Evitts.	867	Cofer.	934
City of Louisville v. Burke, &c.	896	Commonwealth a. Crigler, &c.	918, 925, 926, 927
City of Covington v. Berry, &c.	962	Commonwealth a. Denham.	171
City of Owensboro v. Brocking.	1086	Commonwealth a. Dunn.	113
City of Dayton v. Hirth.	1209	Commonwealth a. Greer	333
City of Winchester a. Board of Education of Winchester.	994	Commonwealth a. Hellar	115
City Savings Bank Gd'n. a.		Commonwealth a. Helton	137
Garth Gd'n.	675	Commonwealth, For Use, &c.
Clark, &c. v. Booth	891	a. Henderson Bridge Co.	1104, 1177
Clark, By, &c. v. City of Nicholasville, &c.	974	Commonwealth a. Hilton	1163
Clark's Adm'r, &c. a. Lapp & Flersheim	452	Commonwealth a. Jett	603
Clay, &c. a. Coons, &c.	1139	Commonwealth a. Koch	122
Clay's Gd'n v. Clay.	1020	Commonwealth v. Jones	16
Clemmons a. Ky. & Ind. Bridge & R. R. Co.	875	Commonwealth v. Robinson.	14
Cline, &c. a. Waters, &c.	479, 586	Commonwealth v. American Tel. & Tel. Co.	29
Cochran, &c. v. Lee's Adm'r, &c.	64, 631, 1038	Commonwealth v. Duncan, &c.	86
Cody, &c. a. Weatherhead	631	Commonwealth v. Napier	131
Cofer v. Commonwealth, For, &c.	934	Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Farmers Bank of Frankfort.	153
Colburn, &c. v. Glviden	353	Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Wisconsin Chair Co.	170
Cole's Adm'r v. I. C. R. R. Co.	1087	Commonwealth v. Beckett	265
Collins v. L. & N. R. R. Co.	825	Commonwealth, For Use, &c.
Colly a. I. C. R. R. Co.	713, 730	v. Ratcliff	297
Columbia Finance & Trust Co., &c. a. German Security Bank.	581	Commonwealth, For Use, &c. v. Donnelly	454
Columbia Finance & Trust Co. a. Reccius & Bro.	880	Commonwealth, &c. v. Ginn & Co. &c.	486
Combs, Adm'r, &c. v. Krish, &c.	154	Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co. &c.	497
Combs v. Commonwealth.	273, 751	Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Stites	616
Combs v. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co., &c.	439	Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Pate, &c.	623
Combs, &c. a. Begley, &c.	1115	Commonwealth v. Terry	684, 686
Combs v. Eversole, Judge	764	Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co.	692, 693
Commonwealth a. Abrams.	355	Commonwealth v. Williams.	695, 712
Commonwealth a. Adams Express Co.	1096	Commonwealth v. Walls.	739
		Commonwealth v. Combs	751
		Commonwealth v. I. C. R. R. Co.	763
		Commonwealth v. Finn, Alias Lowry	771

	Page.
Commonwealth, For, &c. v. Lee, &c.	806	Cowling a. Leonard's Adm'r...	1059
Commonwealth, For, &c. v. Donnell	859	Covington & Cin. Elevated R. R., &c. a. Shades Adm'r....	224
Commonwealth v. L. & N. R. R. Co.	932	Covington Sawmill & Mfg. Co. v. Drexilius, &c.	903
Commonwealth, By Bowman, Sheriff, &c. v. C. & O. Ry. Co.	1084	Crabtree v. Crabtree	435
Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co.	1073, 1075, 1076	Crawford a. Burt & Brabb Lumber Co.	798
Commonwealth v. Standard Oil Co.	1116	Crawford a. Jones.	191
Commonwealth Land & Lumber Co. a. Bramblett	156	Creasy a. Skinner.....	1078
Commonwealth Land & Lumber Co., &c. a. Bramblett....	878	Crigler, &c. v. Commonwealth	918, 925, 926, 927
Commonwealth a. Mathley....	785	Cumb. Tel. & Tel. Co., &c. v. Avritt, &c.	394
Commonwealth a. Messer	527	Cumb. Tel. & Tel. Co. a. Purdam	1166
Commonwealth a. Metcalfe . . .	704	Cumb. Tel. & Tel. Co. a. Rough River Telephone Co.	32
Commonwealth a. Miller	153	Curd a. Advance Thresher Co. .	492
Commonwealth a. Minniard . .	396	Cuyler v. Bush	148
Commonwealth a. Morris	145	Damron v. Damron	272
Commonwealth a. Moseley.....	156, 214	Daniel, K. F. & C. B. v. Day Bros. Lumber Co.	650
Commonwealth a. Mount	788	Daniels v. Daniels, &c.	882
Commonwealth a. Nichols.....	690, 1176	Daugherty, &c. a. Ky. Bldg. & Loan Assn's Ass'ee	609, 759
Commonwealth a. O'Neal	547	Daugherty, &c. a. The Ky. Citizens Bldg. & Loan Assn's Ass'ee, &c.	342
Commonwealth a. Perry	512	Daviess v. Dorey, Ex'tx, &c...	526
Commonwealth a. Powers.....	1221	Davis a. Gates	863
Commonwealth a. Shepherd....	376	Davis & Johnson, &c. a. Garth.	505
Commonwealth a. Standard Oil Co.	1131, 1132	Day Bros. Lumber Co. a. Daniel, &c.	650
Commonwealth a. Thacker....	620	Dee's Gd'n, &c. a. Provident Saving Life Assurance Society of N. Y.	670
Commonwealth a. Thomas . . .	794	De Gare a. Louisville Ry. Co..	54
Commonwealth a. Tudor	87	Dem. Com. of Franklin County, &c. a. Taylor, Jr. . . .	1041, 1064
Commonwealth a. Underwood.	8	Denham v. Commonwealth....	171
Commonwealth a. Warner.....	219	Denham v. W. U. Tel. Co.....	999
Commonwealth a. Weaver . . .	743	Deppen, &c. v. Immohr's Ex'ors.	43
Commonwealth a. Wheeler....	1090	Dickerson a. Sutton	504
Commonwealth a. White.....	561	Dills v. Auxier, &c.	531
Commonwealth a. Whitt	50	Dills, &c. a. Big Sandy Ry. Co..	952
Congleton, &c. a. Rogers	109	Dineen a. Hall	886
Conley a. Anglin	1177	Dinwiddie & Co. v. Nash.....	668
Conley a. Handshoe	277	Dodd a. Louisville Bridge Co..	454
Conley a. Spears	1169	Doggett a. Mahan	103
Conrad v. Humphrey	4	Donnell a. Commonwealth, For, &c.	859
Continental Ins. Co. of N. Y. a. Hall	99	Donnelly a. Commonwealth, For Use, &c.....	454
Continental Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Thomason	158, 1019	Dorey, Ex'tx, &c. a. Daviess..	526
Coons, &c. v. Clay, &c.....	1139	Dowling's Adm'r v. Walker, &c.	928
Cooper a. Offutt, &c.....	1066	Drexilius a. Covington Saw Mill & Mfg. Co.	903
Couchman v. Bush, &c.	108
Coulson v. Ferree	451
Courtney's Exo'rs a. Smith, &c.	642
County, Jefferson v. Young....	849
Cowper v. Weaver's Adm'r, &c.	48

TABLE OF CASES.

vii

	Page.	Fitzpatrick, &c. a. Second Nat.
Drake a. Sewell	571	Bank of Richmond, Ky.....	283
Droege, Circuit Clerk of Kenton County v. McInerney, Sheriff of Kenton County...	1137	Fletcher a. Morrison, &c.	124
Ducker's Adm'r a. Humboldt Bldg. Ass'n Co. of Cincinnati	1007	Floor's Ex'or v. Floor.	894
Duff, Jr., &c. a. Speer	292	Flowers v. Moorman & Hill...	728
Dulaney & Mitchell, &c. a. Jones	702, 810	Ford, &c. v. Azbill, &c.	347
Dunaway, &c. a. Nevell's Adm'r	678	Fowler Drug Co. a. Jones, &c..	558
Duncan, &c. a. Commonwealth	86	Franklin a. Hager, Auditor....	189
Duncan v. Gernett Bros. Lumber Co.	1039	Franklin a. Hardwick	484
Dunn v. Commonwealth	113	Fraley's Adm'r, &c. a. Brady..	163
Durrett v. Kenton County, &c..	1173	Frazier, &c. a. Bates, &c.....	576
Eastern Ky. Lunatic Asylum a. Hopper, &c., Trustee	649	Frazier v. Frisbie Furniture Co., &c.	688
Eastern State Hospital a. Mander's Committee.....	254	Frazier, &c. v. Mineral Development Co.	815
East Tenn. Coal Co. a. Willie..	335	French v. Bowling, &c.	639
East Tenn. Tel. Co. a. Luttrell.	872	Frisbie a. Berry.	724
Eaton, &c. a. Vokes	358	Frisbie Furniture Co., &c. a. Frazer	688
Eaves a. Palmer Transfer Co..	573	Fuqua, &c. v. Hager, Auditor..	46
Edwards a. A. O. U. W. Grand Lodge of Ky.	469	Furnish's Adm'r v. Lilly, &c... 226
Ellis a. Kessler & Co.	1042	Gallaher a. Voris' Ex'ors, &c..	1001
Erwin v. Benton, &c.	108	Garth v. Davis & Johnson, &c..	505
Erwin, &c. v. Benton, &c.	909	Garth, Gd'n v. City Savings Bank, Gd'n	675
Equitable Assurance Society, &c. a. Griffin's Adm'r	313	Garvin's Adm'r v. Vincent	1076
Evers, &c. v. City of Mayfield.	481	Gast, &c. a. Hager, Auditor....	129
Eversole v. Eversole, &c.....	385	Gates v. Davis	863
Eversole, Judge a. Combs	764	Gayle v. Rigg.....	618, 825
Evitts a. City of Paducah	867	German American Ins. Co. v. Yellow Poplar Lumber Company.	105
Ewen, &c. a. Berry.	467	German Security Bank v. Columbia Finance and Trust Co., &c.	581
Fairbanks, Morse & Co. a. The Lucile Mining Co.	1100	Gernert Bros. Lumber Co. a. Duncan	1039
Farmers Bank of Ky. a. Commonwealth, By, &c.....	153	Gibson, &c. a. Sutton, &c.	111
Fenley, &c. v. City of Louisville.	204	Ginn & Co., &c. a. Commonwealth, &c.	486
Ferguson a. Annis, &c.	56	Gividen a. Colburn, &c.	353
Ferree a. Coulson	451	Glisson v. Paducah Ry. & Light Co.	965
Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. Logan County	66	Golden a. Chamberlain	686
Fidelity Trust Co., Trustee, &c. a. Wittingham	800	Globe Fertilizer Co. v. Tenn. Phosphate Co.	636
Fields v. Vallance, &c.	992	Graves Co. Water & Light Co. a. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co.	420
Finn, Alias, Lowry a. Commonwealth	771	Gravitt a. Chenault	403
First Nat. Bank of Cov., &c. a. American Bonding Co. of Baltimore	393	Gravitt, &c. v. Mounts, &c....	945
Fisher v. W. U. Tel. Co.....	340	Gray v. Soden, &c.	673
Fitzpatrick a. Saulsbury	876	Green a. Chestnut	838
		Green v. Hart	970
		Green v. Louisville Ry. Co....	316
		Greer v. Commonwealth	333
		Gregory, Judge a. Bishop	478
		Gregory, &c. a. Simons	509
		Grief, &c. a. Siebert, &c.	824

	Page.		Page.
Gregory v. New Home Sewing Machine Co.	741	Hartford Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford Conn. v. McClain, &c....	461
Griffin's Adm'r v. Equitable Assurance Society, &c.	313	Hatcher v. Wagner	1016
Guenther v. Wisdom	230	Hay's Adm'r a. I. C. R. R. Co..	91
Gunkel v. Selberth	455	Head Gd'n a. I. C. R. R. Co....	270
Guthrie v. Carney	861	Hellar v. Commonwealth	115
Gutman, &c. v. Turner, &c....	386	Helton v. Commonwealth.....	137
Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School District, &c.....	1021	Henderson Bridge Co. v. Commonwealth, For Use, &c.	1104, 1177
Hackney, &c. v. Hoover	1003	Henderson Cotton Mills a. Travelers Ins. Co.	653
Hagan's Adm'r a. Linn ..996, 1113		Henderson Elevator Co. a. Citizens Ins. Co. of Mo.	151
Hager, Auditor a. Fuqua, &c..	46	Herman v. Wiedemann Brewing Co.	1016
Hager, Auditor v. Gast, &c....	129	Herndon, &c. v. Ogg	268
Hager, Auditor v. Kranklin....	189	Hess, &c. v. Trumbo, &c.	320
Hager, Auditor, &c. v. Louisville Title Co.	345	Hieatt, &c. v. Schmidt Ex'or..	239
Hager, Auditor, &c. v. Ky. Title Co.	346	Hill's Adm'r v. The Penn. Mutual Life Ins. Co.....	567
Hager, Auditor a. Ky. Live Stock Breeders Ass'n.....	518	Hill v. Holdam, &c.	1069
Hager, Auditor v. Lucas	710	Hilton v. Commonwealth	1163
Hager, Auditor a. Thomas	813	Hirth a. City of Dayton	1209
Hager, Auditor v. Shuck	957	Hoeltz v. Jeff. Southern P. D. Co.	278
Hager, Auditor a. A. & M. College	1178	Hogg v. Lusk	840
Hager, Auditor a. American German Nat. Bank	1219	Holdam, &c. a. Hill	1069
Hall v. Continental Ins. Co. of N. Y.	99	Holder's Adm'r v. Holder	1171
Hall v. Dineen	886	Holtheide a. Smith's Gd'n.....	51
Hall Ex'or, &c. a. Offutt, &c...1072		Holtheide v. Smith's Gd'n, &c.	60
Hall, &c. v. Wright	1185	Hoover a. Hackney, &c.	1003
Hamilton v. Maysville & Big Sandy R. R. Co., &c.	251	Hopper, &c., Trustee v. Eastern Ky. Lunatic Asylum....	649
Hamilton's Ex'or v. Hamilton, &c.	298	Hopson Bros. a. Jefferson, &c..	140
Hamilton's Ex'or v. Wright, Adm'r, &c.	1144	Hord, &c. v. Sartain, &c.	796
Hancock v. L. & N. R. R. Co... 434		Horine v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co....	893
Handshoe v. Conley	277	Hornsey v. Adams	683
Haney's Adm'r a. Straight Creek Coal Co.	1117	Hoskins' Adm'r v. Brown, &c..	216
Harbeson a. Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co.	713	Hoskins' Adm'r v. Morton	529
Hardesty v. Town of Mt. Eden, &c.	745	Hoskins, &c. v. Hoskins	980
Hardin, &c. v. Hardin	899	Howard a. I. C. R. R. Co.....	513
Hardin a. Jackson, &c.	740	Howard a. Wathen	7
Hardin a. Jackson	1110	Howard v. W. U. Tel. Co...244, 858
Hardwick v. Franklin	484	Hughes v. McCreary, &c.	666
Hargis, &c. v. Parker, Judge, &c.	441	Hulsey's Adm'r v. L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co.	969
Harman v. Stuart	101	Hulett a. Vaughn	35
Harman v. Thompson	181	Humboldt Bldg. Ass'n Co. of Cincinnati v. Ducker's Adm'r	1007
Harris v. Bruce, Clerk, &c....1089		Humphrey a. Conrad.	4
Harris a. Tipton, &c.	1175	Hunt, &c. a. King	528
Hart a. Green	970	Hunt v. Taylor, &c.	978
		Hunziker, &c. a. Supreme Lodge K. of P.	1201
		I. C. R. R. Co. v. Buchanan,	1193, 1215

TABLE OF CASES.

ix

	Page.		Page.
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Cole's		Ky. Live Stock Breeders' Ass'n
Adm'r	1087	v Hager, Auditor	518
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Colly	713, 730	Ky. Mutual Investment Co.'s
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Common-		Ass'ee v. Schafer, &c.	657 wealth	763	Ky. Refining Co. a. Bank of
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Hay's Adm'r..	91	New Roads	645
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Head, Gd'n..	270	Ky. Title Co. a. Hager, Auditor,
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Howard	513	&c.	346
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Jolly	118	Ky. Union Co. a. Asher, &c.	1102
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Keefer	305	Kessler & Co. v. Ellis	1042
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Manning	142	King v. Huni, &c.	528
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Pierce's		King, &c. v. See	1011
Adm'r	801	King v. Kahne, &c.	1080
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Rutherford..	397	Knott, &c. a. City of Lebanon,
I. C. R. R. Co. a. Smith's		&c.	158
Adm'r	596, 937	Koch v. Commonwealth	122
I. C. R. R. Co. v. Winslow	329	Kreiger, &c. v. City of Louis-
Immohr's Ex'ors a. Deppen,		ville	472
&c.	43	Krish, &c. a. Combs' Adm'r..	154
Jackson, &c. v. Hardin	740
Jackson v. Hardin	1110	* To be reported.
Jacobs, &c. a. City of Louis-		ancaster v. Lancaster Ex'or,
ville	175	&c.	1127
Jarvis, &c. a. L. & N. R. R. Co.	986	andrum, &c. a. Citizens Sav-
Jefferson P. D. Co. a. Leahy..	286	ings Bank	693
Jefferson Southern P. D. Co. a.		anghrone, Johnson & Co. v.
Hoertz	278	Wiley	908
Jenerson, &c. v. Hopson Bros..	140	anham v. L. & N. R. R. Co..	772
Jenkins v. Sun Life Ins. Co. of		Lapp & Flersheim v. Clark's
America	1142	Adm'r, &c.	452
Jett v. Commonwealth	603	Laughlin's Ex'tx v. Boughner,
Johnson, Sheriff, &c. v. Brad-		&c. &	19
ley, Watkins Tie Co.	540	Lawson v. Lightfoot, &c.	217
Johnson a. Louisville Ry. Co..	1034	Leahy v. Jeff. Southern P. D.
Joiner, &c. v. Trail	844	Co.	286
Jolly a. I. C. R. R. Co.	118	Lebanon, Louisville & Lex. Tel.
Jones a. Commonwealth	16	Co. a. Campbellsville Tele-
Jones v. Crawford	191	phone Co.	90
Jones, &c. v. Fowler Drug Co..	558	Lee's Adm'r, &c. a. Cochran,
Jones, &c. v. American Ass'n		&c.	64, 1038
Inc.	804	Lee, &c. a. Camden Interstate
Jones v. Delaney & Mitchell,		Ry. Co.	75
&c.	810, 702	Lee, &c. a. Commonwealth,
Kahne, &c. a. King	1080	For, &c.	806
Kane & Co. a. Trustees Com-		Lee v. Newton, &c.	1004
mon School District, No. 32,		Leonard's Adm'r v. Cowling..	1059 of Carlisle County	983	Leonard a. Ky. Distilleries &
Keebler a. I. C. R. R. Co.	305	Warehouse Co.	1055
Kenton County, &c. a. Durrett..	1173	Letzier's Adm'r v. Pacific
Ky. Building & Loan Ass'n's		Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Cali-
Ass'ee, &c. v. Daugherty,		ifornia.	372
&c.	609, 759	Lewis, &c. a. Berry	109
Ky. Dis. & Warehouse Co. v.		Lexington Hydraulic & Mfg.
Leonard	1055	Co. v. Oots, &c.	233, 797
Ky. & Ind. Bridge & R. R. Co.		Lexington Ry. Co. v. O'Brien..	336
v. Clemmons	875	Liebel & Co. a. Chicago, St.
Ky. Live Stock Breeders' Ass'n		Louis & N. O. Ry. Co.	716
v. Miller, &c.	39

	Page.		Page.
Lightfoot, &c. a. Lawson	217	Louisville Ry. Co. v. Johnson..	1034
Lindenberger Land Co., &c. v.		Louisville Ry. Co. v. Sheehan.	449
Park & Co.	437	Louisville Tobacco Warehouse
Lilly, &c. a. Furnish's Adm'r..	226	Co. v. Harbeson	713
Linn v. Hagan's Adm'r ...	996, 1113	Louisville Title Co. a. Hager,
Locke & Ellison v. Lyon Medi-		Auditor, &c.	345
cine Co.	1	Louisville School Board a. City
Loeser, &c. a. Murdock, &c....	1057	of Louisville	209
Logan, &c. v. Vanarsdall, &c....	822	Louisville School Board a.
Logan, &c. v. Bean's Adm'r....	1081	Oberdorfer	508
Logan County a. Fidelity & De-		Lucas a. Hager, Auditor	710
posit Co. of Maryland	66	Lucas' Adm'r a. L. & N. R. R.
Louisville, Anchorage & Pewee		Co.	769
Valley Electric Ry. Co. v.		Lusk a. Hogg	840
Whipps, &c.	977	Luttrell v. East Tenn. Tele-
Louisville Bridge Co. v. Dodd.	454	phone Co.	872
Louisville Bridge Co. a. L. &		Lyon Medecine Co. a. Locke &
N. R. R. Co.	454	Ellison	1
Louisville City Ry. a. City of		Maes, Bishop, &c. a. Silverman.	617
Louisville.	141	Magruder, &c. a. Underwood...	1165
L., C. & L. Ry. Co., &c. a.		Mahan v. Doggett	103
Schmidt	21	Mander's Com. v. Eastern
Louisville Courier-Journal Co.		State Hospital	254
a. City of Louisville	263	Manion v. Manion	400
Louisville Electric Light Co. a.		Manning v. I. C. R. R. Co.	142
Baries	653	Marrs' Adm'x a. C., N. O. &
Louisville Gas Co. v. Page ...	885	T. P. R. R. Co.	388
L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co. a.		Mathley v. Commonwealth ...	785
Hulsey's Adm'r	969	Mattingly v. Shortell	426
Louisville Lead & Color Co.		Mattox, &c. a. Monroe, &c....	575
a. Pacific Fire Ins. Co.	1155	May, &c. a. Ratliff, &c.	164
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Bright ...	1052	Maysville & Big Sandy R. R.
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Buckner's		Co., &c. a. Hamilton	251
Adm'r	1009	Maysville & Big Sandy R. R.
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Cain, By,		Co., &c. a. Willis, &c.	459
&c.	201	McClain, &c. a. Hartford Fire
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Carmony.	948	Ins. Co., &c.	461
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Carter....	748	McCoy, &c. v. Cassidy, &c. ...	818
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Collins ...	825	McCreary, &c. a. Hughes	666
L. & N. R. R. Co., &c. a. Com-		McDonald's Ex'ors, &c. v.
monwealth	497	McDonald, &c.	607
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Common-		McGrath's Adm'r a. Ross, &c..	723 wealth	692, 693	McInerney, Sheriff, &c. a.
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Common-		Droege, &c.	1137 wealth	932	McKenna & Craig a. City of
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Hancock..	434	Covington	784
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Lanham ..	772	McKenney v. Thompson	733
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Jarvis,		McMakin v. McMakin	1211
&c.	986	McNeill v. Thompson, &c....	289
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Louisville		Meadows, &c. a. Pierce,
Bridge Co.	454	Cequin, & Co., &c.	870
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lucas'		Merschel, By, &c. v. L. & N.
Adm'r	769	R. R. Co.	465
L. & N. R. R. Co. a. Merschel,		Messer v. Commonwealth	527
By, &c.	465	Metcalfe v. Commonwealth....	704
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Moore....	293	Meyer a. City of Latonia, &c... 746
L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Smith	257	Middleton a. Witt, &c.	831
Louisville Ry. Co. v. De Gore..	54	Miller v. Commonwealth	153
Louisville Ry. Co. a. Greene...	316	Minnard v. Commonwealth ...	396

TABLE OF CASES.

xi

	Page.		Page.
Miller, &c. a. Ky. Live Stock Breeders Ass'n	39	Nickols v. Commonwealth	690
Mineral Development Co. a. Frazier, &c.	815	Nolan a. Tharp	326
Minor, &c. a. Palestine Bldg. Ass'n	781	North British Mer. Ins. Co. of L. & E. v. Union Stock Yards Co., &c.	852
Mitchell & Co. v. Wallace, &c.	967	Nuckols, &c v. Stone	1043
Metz, &c. a. Murphy	617	Nutter, Sheriff, a. Sebree	1080
Monarch, &c. v. Owensboro City R. R. Co.	380	O'Bannon & Pence a. Saunders.	1166
Monroe, &c v. Mattox, &c.	575	Oberdorfer v. Louisville School Board	508
Moore a. L. & N. R. R. Co.	293	O'Brien a. Lexington Ry. Co.	336
Moore v. Rogers	827	Offutt, &c. v. Cooper	1066
Moore, &c. a. Vogel, &c.	94	Offutt, &c. v. Halls' Ex'or, &c.	1072
Moorman & Hill a. Flowers.	728	Ogg a. Herndon, &c.	268
Morgan, &c. v. Boulton.	572	O'Malley a. Squires, &c.	307
Morris v. Commonwealth	145	O'Neal v. Commonwealth	547
Morris, &c. v. Straughan Ex'or, &c.	742	Oots, &c. a. Lexington Hyd. & Mfg. Co.	233, 797
Morris & Co. a. Walter Pratt & Co.	1035	Overstreet a. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.	248
Morrison, &c. v. Fletcher	124	Owensboro City R. R. Co. a. Monarch, &c.	380
Morton a. Hoskin's Ad'mx.	529	Owsley, Sr. v. Owsley, &c.	180
Morton's Gd'n v. Morton, &c.	661	Owsley, Sr. v. Owsley, Jr.	180
Mosley v. Commonwealth	156	Pacific Fire Ins. Co. v. Louisville Lead & Color Co.	1155
Mosley v. Commonwealth	214	Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Cala. a. Letzler's Adm'r.	372
Mount v. Commonwealth	788	Paducah Ry. & Light Co. v. Bell's Adm'r	428
Mounts, &c. a. Gravitt, &c.	945	Paducah Ry. & Light Co. a. Glisson	965
Mt. Sterling Telephone Co., &c. a. Anderson	868	Page a. Louisville Gas Co.	885
Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown	1150	Palestine Bldg Ass'n v. Minor, &c.	781
Muir v. Muir	1162	Palmer Transfer Co. v. Eaves.	573
Mullins, &c. v. Mullins	1048	Park, &c. a. Lindenberger Land Co., &c.	437
Murdock, &c. v. Loeser, &c.	1057	Parker v. Catron	536
Murnahan v. Cin., Newport & Cov. Street Ry. Co., &c.	737	Parker, Judge, &c. a. Hargis.	441
Murphy v. Metz, &c.	617	Parks' Adm'r a. Smith	12, 351
Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. a. Barrett, &c.	586	Pate, &c. a. Commonwealth, By, &c.	623
Myers' Adm'r, &c. v. Zoll.	167	Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. a. Rochester German Ins. Co.	1155
Mycr, &c. a. Shuttleworth.	900	Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. a. Nat. Fire Ins. Co.	1155
Nahm & Friedman v. Register Newspaper Co., &c.	887	Penn Lubricating Co. a. Backer, &c.	1133
Nairin v. The Ky. Heating Co.	551	Penn Lubricating Co. a. Bay State Petroleum Co., &c.	1133
Napier a. Commonwealth.	131	Penn's Ex'or v. Penn's Ex'or.	946
Napper a. Weikel, F. Chair Co.	692	Perkins v. Applegate, &c.	522
Nat. Fire Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-Galbert Co.	1155	Perry v. Commonwealth	512
Nas'l a. Dinwiddie & Co.	668	Phillips v. Campbell	885
Negley a. Rhodes	291	Pierce's Adm'r v. I. C. R. R. Co.	801
Nevell's Adm'r v. Dunaway, &c.	678	Porter v. Porter's Ex'or, &c.	699
New Home Sewing Co. a. Gregory	741
Newton, &c. a. Lee	1004
N. Y. Life Ins. Co. a. Horine	893
Nicholls v. Commonwealth	1176

	Page.		Page
Pierce Cequin & Co., &c. v.		Pence	1166
Meadows, &c.	870	Schafer, &c. a. Ky. Mutual In-
Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v.		vestment Co. Ass'ee	657
Pratt	430	Schmidt, Ex'or a. Heatt, &c....	239
Poulter's Adm'r a. The Louis-		Schmidt, &c. v. L. C. & L. Ry.
ville & Eastern R. R. Co.....	193	Co., &c.	21
Powers v. Commonwealth	1221	Schroeder, &c. v. Bohlson, &c..	188
Pratt a. Postal Teleg. Cable		Scobee a. Skidmore	621
Co.	430	Scott, &c. a. W. U. Tel. Co. ...	975
Preston v. Price	588	Scoville v. Baugh, &c.	319
Prewitt, Commissioner v.		Sebree v. Nutter, Sheriff	1080
Security Mutual Life Ins. Co.	77	Second Nat. Bank of Richmond
Prewitt, Commissioner a. The		Ky. v. Fitz Patrick, &c.....	283
Travelers Ins. Co.	77	Security Mutual Life Ins. Co.
Price a. Preston	588	a. Prewitt, Com'r	77
Purdam v. Cumb. Tel. & Tel.		See a. King, &c.	1011
Co.	1166	Seiberth a. Gunkel	455
Putnan a. Ward, &c.	367	Sewell v. Drake	571
Ramsey, &c. v. City of Shelby-		Shade's Adm'r v. Cov. & Cln.
ville, &c.	141	Elevated R. R. & Transfer &
Ratliff, &c. v. May, &c.	164	Bridge Co.	224
Ratcliff a. Commonwealth, For		Sheehan a. Louisville Ry. Co..	449
Use, &c.	297	Shemwell, &c. v. Carper's
Reclus & Bro. v. Columbia		Adm'r, &c.	997
Finance & Trust Co.	880	Shepherd v. Commonwealth ..	376
Reed a. Sanford	431	Shortell a. Mattingly	426
Register Newspaper Co., &c. a.		Shuck a. Hager, Auditor	957
Nahm & Friedman	887	Shuttleworth v. Myer, &c.	900
Reid a. W. U. Tel. Co.	659	Siebert, &c. v. Grief, &c., now
Remelin, &c. v. Remelin	909	Mary B. Loraine	824
Riddle, Judge, a. Boone	828	Silva, For, &c. v. City of New-
Rigg a. Gayle	618, 825	port	212
Rhodes v. Negley	291	Silverman v. Maes, Bishop, &c.	617
Rissberger v. Brown & The		Simons v. Gregory, &c.	509
City of Louisville	538	Sisters of The Good Shepherd
Robards v. Robards	494	a. Smith	1107, 1170
Robinson a. Commonwealth ..	14	Skidmore v. Scobee	621
Robinson's Ex'or, &c. a. City of		Skidmore v. Smith, &c.	323
Louisville	375	Skinner v. Creasy	1078
Rochester German Ins. Co. v.		Smith's Adm'r v. I. C. R. R.
Peaslee-Gaulbert Co.....	1155	Co.	937
Rogers v. Congleton, &c.	109	Smiley, &c. a. Camden Inter-
Rogers a. Moore	827	state Ry. Co.	134
R. P. & R. M. Scobee a. Skid-		Smith v. Bank of Lewisport...	406
more	621	Smith, &c. v. Courtney's
Ross, &c. v. McGrath's Adm'r,		Ex'ors.	642
&c.	723	Smith's Gd'n v. Holtheide....	51
Ruggles a. Barber & Vansant.	1077	Smith's Gd'n, &c. a. Holtheide.	60
Rough River Telephone Co. v.		Smith a. L. & N. R. R. Co.....	257
Cumb. Tel. & Tel. Co.	32	Smith v. Parks' Adm'r.....	12, 351
Roush, &c. v. Vanceburg Salt		Smith, &c. v. Smith, &c.	362
Lick Tolesboro and Mays-		Smith v. Smith	776
ville Turnpike Co.	542	Smith v. Sisters of The Good
Rust, &c. v. Rust, &c.	275	Shepherd	1170
Rutherford v. I. C. R. R. Co....	397	Smith v. Sisters of The Good
Sanford v. Reed	431	Shepherd of Louisville, Ky.,
Sartain, &c. a. Hord, &c.	790	&c.	1107
Saulsbury v. Fitz Patrick	870	Smith a. South Cov. & Cln. Ry.
Saunders v. O'Bannon &		Co.	811

TABLE OF CASES.

xiii

	Page.		Page.
Smith, &c. v. Smith, &c.	609	Tenn. Phospate Company a.
Smith, &c. a. Skidmore	323	Globe Fertilizer Co.	636
Soden, &c. a. Gray	673	Teets, By, &c. v. The Snider
South Cov. & Cin. Street Ry.		Heading Mfg. Co.	1061
Co. v. Smith	811	T. G. & M. F. Skidmore v.
Southern Nat. Bank a. Sprowl.	874	Scobee	621
Spears v. Conley	1169	Terry a. Commonwealth...684,	686
Speer v. Duff, Jr., &c.	202	Thacker v. Commonwealth ...	620
Spencer Christian Church's		Tharp v. Nolan	326
Trustees, For Use, v.		The Aberdeen Coal & Mining
Thomas, &c.	250	Co. a. Bassett & Stone	1122
Speth v. Brangman	295	The Burt & Brabb Lumber Co.,
Spinks a. Union Central Life		&c. a. Bates	766
Ins. Co.	325, 453	The Hardy Packing Co. v.
Sprigg a. The Hardy Packing		Sprigg	133
Co.	133	The Ky. Citizens B. L. D. G. &
Springfield Fire & Marine Ins.		Loan Ass'ns Ass'ee, &c. v.
Co. v. Graves County Water		Daugherty, &c.	342
& Light Co.	420	The Ky. Heating Co. a.
Sprowl v. Southern Nat. Bank.	874	Nairin	551
Squires, &c. v. O'Malley	307	The Ky. Stove Co v. Bryan's
Standard Oil Co. v. Common-		Adm'r	136 wealth	1131, 1132	The Louisville & Eastern Ry.
Standard Oil Co. a. Common-		Co. v. Poulter's Adm'r	193 wealth	1073, 1075, 1076, 1116	The Lucile Mining Co. v. Fair-
Stanope v. Agnew	1018	banks, Morse & Co.	1100
Steele v. Steele	120, 351	The Mt. Carmel Telephone Co.
Steel a. WOLFORD	88, 1177	v. The Mt. Carmel & Flem-
Stephens a. Buller	241	ingsburg Telephone Co.....	30
Stephens v. Stephens	555	The Penn. Mutual Life Ins. Co.
Stites a. Commonwealth, By,		a. Hill's Adm'r	567
&c.	616	The Snider Heading Mfg. Co.
Stiths' Adm'rx a. I. C. R. R.		a. Teets, By, &c.	1061
Co.	596	The Travelers Ins. Co. v.
Stone a. Nuckols, &c.	1043	Prewitt, Com'r.	77
Stone, Petitioner, Ex. Parte v.		Thomas v. Commonwealth	794
City of Paducah	717	Thomas v. Hager, Auditor	813
Straight Creek Coal Co. v.		Thomas, &c. a. Spencer Christ-
Haney's Adm'r	1117	ian Church's Trustee, For
Straughan Ex'or, &c. a. Morris,		Use	250
&c.	742	Thomas v. W. U. Tel. Co.	569
Stuart a. Harman	101	Thomasson a. Continental Ins.
Sugg a. Aetna Life Ins. Co....	846	Co.	158, 1019
Sun Life Ins. Co. of America		Thompson a. Harmon	181
a. Jenkins	1142	Thompson a. McKinney	733
Supreme Lodge K. of P. v.		Thompson, &c. a. McNeill	289
Hunziker, &c.	1201	Thompson v. Thompson	516
Sutton's Adm'r v. Wood, &c....	412	Thompson, &c. v. Thompson..	949
Sutton v. Dickerson	504	Tipton, &c. v. Harris	1175
Sutton, &c. v. Gibson, &c.	111	Town of Mt. Eden, &c. a.
Swinford a. Trimble	747	Hardesty.	745
Taggarts Trustee a. Butler,		Trail a. Joiner, &c.	844
&c.	708	Travelers Ins. Co. v. Hender-
Taylor v. Adair County	36	son Cotton Mills	653
Taylor a. C. N. O. & T. P. R.		Trimble v. Swinford	747
R. Co.	351	Trumbo, &c. a. Hess, &c.	320
Taylor, E. H. Jr. & Sons v.		Trustees Com. School District
Taylor	625	No. 32 of Carlisle County
Taylor, Jr. v. Dem. Com. of		v. Kane & Co.	983
Franklin Co., &c.	1041, 1064	Tudor v. Commonwealth	87

	Page		Page.
Tuner, &c. a. Gutman	386	Western Union Telegraph Co.
Tyler, &c. a. Usher	354	v. Reid	659
Uhl, &c. a. Asher, &c.	938	Western Union Telegraph Co.
Underwood v. Commonwealth.	8	v. Scott, &c.	975
Underwood v. McGruder, &c....	1165	Western Union Telegraph Co.
Union Central Life Ins. Co. v.		a. Thomas	569
Spinks	325, 453	Wheeler v. Commonwealth ...	1090
Union Stock Yards Co., &c. a.		Whipps a. L. A. & Pewee Val-
North British Mer. Ins. Co.		ley Electric Ry. Co., &c....	977 of L. & E.	852	White v. Commonwealth	561
U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.		Whitney v. Whitney, &c....	158, 1197
v. Overstreet	248	Whitney v. Whitney	169, 1197
U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.		Whitney a. Whitney ..	158, 169, 1197
v. Blackley, Head & Co....	392	Whitt v. Commonwealth.	50
U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co.		Wiedeman Brewing Co. a.
v. Board of Ed. of Somerset.	863	Herman	1016
Usher v. Tyler, &c.	354	Wiedeman Brewing Co. v.
Vallance, &c. a. Fields	992	Wood	1012
Vanarsdall, &c. a. Logan, &c..	822	Wilder v. Wilder	715
Vanceburg, &c. T. P. Co. a.		Wiley a. Langhorne, Johnson
Roush, &c.	542	& Co.	908
Vaughn v. Hulett	35	Williams a. Commonwealth.	695, 712
Venable, &c. a. Bean, &c.	927	Willie v. East Tenn. Coal Co...	335
Vincent, &c. v. Blanton, Sr.,		Willis, By, &c. v. Maysville &
&c.	489	B. S. Ry. Co. & C. O. & S. W.
Vincent a. Garvin's Adm'r	1076	Ry. Co.	459
Vogel, &c. v. Moore, &c.	94	Willis a. Witt	417
Vokes v. Eaton, &c.	358	Wilson's Adm'r v. C. & O. Ry.
Voris' Ex'rs, &c. v. Gallaher...	1001	Co., &c.	778
Wagner a. Hatcher	1016	Winslow a. I. C. R. R. Co.	329
Wallace, &c. a. Mitchell, &c.		Wierman, &c. v. Wierman's
Company.	967	Adm'r.	961
Walls a. Commonwealth	739	Wisconsin Chair Co. a. Com-
Walker, &c. a. Dowling's,		monwealth, By, &c.	170
Adm'r.	928	Wisdom a. Guenther	230
Walter Pratt & Co. v. W. C.		Wise v. Wolfe, &c.	610
Morris & Co.	1035	Witten, By, &c. v. Bell &
Ward, &c. v. Putnam, &c.	367	Coggeshall Co.	580
Warner v. Commonwealth	219	Witt, &c. v. Middleton	831
Warren a. Atherton	632	Witt v. Willis	417
Warth v. Baldwin	339	Wittingham v. Fidelity Trust
Waters, &c. v. Cline, &c.	479	Co., Trustee, &c.	800
Waters v. Cline, &c.	586	Wolfe, &c. a. Wise	610
Wathen, &c. v. City of Louis-		Wolford v. Steele	88, 1177
ville	635	Wood a. Weidemann Brewing
Wathen v. Howard	7	Co.	1012
Wayland a. Browning	438	Wood, &c. a. Sutton's Adm'r..	412
Weatherhead v. Cody, &c. ...	631	Woodworth a. City & Suburban
Weaver v. Commonwealth ...	745	Teleg. Ass'n, By, &c.	860
Weaver's Adm'r, &c. a. Cowper.	48	Wright's Adm'r, &c. a. Hamil-
Wedding v. Wedding	943	ton's Ex'or	1144
Weikel F. Chair Co. v. Napper.	692	Wright a. Hall, &c.	1185
Western Union Telegraph Co.		Yellow Popular Lumber Co. a.
a. Denham	999	German American Ins. Co... 105
Western Union Telegraph Co.		Young, &c. v. Amburgy, &c....	1079
a. Fisher	340	Young a. County Jefferson....	849
Western Union Telegraph Co.		Zoll a. Myer's Adm'r, &c.	167
a. Howard	244, 858

INDEX TO VOLUME XXVII.

ABATEMENT—See Taxation—	Page.
where a conveyance was made to one in trust for appellee, only a dry naked trust being taken, his death did not have the effect of abating the action in which taxes were sought to be collected against the property and it was error to sustain a motion to strike such action from the docket.	148
ACCEPTANCE—See Contracts, 1.
ACCESSORIES—See Writ of Prohibition, 2, 3, 4.
ACCOUNTS—See Commissioner—
1. in an action between parties embracing about 500 items in the petition, the most of which are controverted and a counterclaim filed involving the settlement of mutual complicated accounts of great detail, it was proper for the court, on motion of defendant, to transfer the case to the equity docket and refer it to the commissioner for settlement	400
2. in an action on an account, part of which is denied and payment of the balance pleaded, the burden on the whole case is on the defendant, who is entitled to the closing argument.	426
3. an entry on the books of the employer by his bookkeeper of a transaction between them, in the way the bookkeeper understood it, and which differs from the understanding of the employer, is an issue of a civil and not of a criminal nature, and does not put the character of the bookkeeper in issue so as to permit him, in a controversy over the transaction, to introduce evidence, over the objection of the employer, of his general reputation for honesty	426
4. where an account is stated between a debtor and creditor and a balance struck and agreed upon, this constitutes the cause of action, and must be proved, as alleged, and if not so proved, there will be a variance unless the pleadings are amended.	426
5. an entry made by a bookkeeper upon his employer's books, of statements made to him by another concerning the transaction, is not competent evidence for the bookkeeper	426
ACTIONS—See Guaranty, 1; Limitation, 3; Office and Officer, 6, 7, 8; Parties to Action; Taxation; Vicious Dog—
1. in an action by a mortgagee of the bonds and coupons of the net earnings of a railroad company for an accounting, it does not devolve upon the plaintiff to aver that there was such earnings; all that is required is to set forth the bonds and the coupons and to aver nonpayment and ask an accounting, and any supposed conditions precedent are defensive matter.	21
2. in an action against one as guarantor of notes executed for fertilizer, who filed answer, alleging that the notes sued on were given for the price of a fertilizer on a warranty that it was a good wheat producer, but that it was worthless and of no value, on which answer issue was joined by a traverse, it was competent and relevant for the defendant to prove by the farmers who purchased and used the fertilizer that it would not, and did not, produce wheat	188
3. where land was sold by master commissioner of a court under a decree of the court, and bond taken payable to himself as commissioner for the use and benefit of the owners of the land, with lien on the land, an action may be maintained by such commissioner or his successor in office on such bond without joining with him the persons for whose benefit the land was sold	689
4. where a petition, in an action by a commissioner on a sale bond given for land, shows on its face that such bond was executed more than fifteen years before the filing of the petition, a demurrer thereto was properly sustained and the lien to secure its payment is likewise barred by limitation and can not be enforced.	689

ACTIONS—Continued.

Page.

5. where an action was brought by an infant by next friend against the Snider Heading Manufacturing Co., alleging that it was a corporation and service had on C. as its agent, to which a plea in abatement was filed by the company, denying that it was incorporated, but was a partnership, composed of M. S. & L. S. and C., doing business as the Snider Heading Manufacturing Co., it was error in the court to dismiss the action and refuse to allow an amended petition then tendered withdrawing the averment that the defendant was a corporation, and making the members of the firm doing business in that style as partners defendant to the action... 1061
6. the fact that the plaintiff might have brought another action after the dismissal of this, or that another summons against the parties constituting the partnership will be necessary, can not affect plaintiff's right to file the amended petition offered in the lower court... 1061
7. where an action is brought and a recovery had by the personal representative for the killing of plaintiff's intestate, a subsequent action can not be maintained for the killing of a horse and destruction of a buggy which occurred at the same time of the killing of plaintiff's intestate. The rule is that the entire claim arising out of a civil transaction, whether in the nature of a contract or tort, can not be divided into separate and distinct claims and each form the basis of an action... 1087
8. the fact that one item of damage should be distributed in a different way from another does not prevent a recovery in one action... 1087
9. in an action for damages against a Catholic Convent for false imprisonment by a woman who had been sent there by reason of moral depravity and stayed for fifteen years, and who at all times had opportunities to escape, the court properly reduced the issue upon the merits of the case to the question as to whether her stay in the institution was voluntary or involuntary, and upon proper instructions submitted this question to the jury... 1107
10. the fact that some of the jury panel were of the Catholic faith did not exclude them from service on the jury on the trial of the action... 1107
11. evidence of the beating by appellees of other persons then appellant was properly excluded by the court on the trial... 1107
12. evidence of the previous depraved character of appellant was admissible as explanatory of her being in a reformatory for fallen women, and as furnishing a motive for her being willing to stay there... 1108
13. where a petition for personal injuries was filed against the city by one who was injured by falling into a hole in the sidewalk and a summons was issued thereon and served, the action was begun, although the petition was not verified until after twelve months from the date of receiving the injury... 1209
14. the fact that a petition had been filed without verification on which summons was duly issued, remained on the docket about three years after it was filed and then was filed away, it was in the discretion of the court to redocket the case on motion of the plaintiff, and to allow an amended petition to be filed, and this court will not disturb the action of the lower court in matters of discretion unless it be made clearly to appear that it abused that discretion. The plea of the twelve months' statute of limitations to such petition was properly overruled... 1209
15. where it is shown by the evidence that a pedestrian in passing along on a sidewalk of a street of a city was severely injured by falling into a hole on the sidewalk six feet deep, of which she was not aware and which was known to the city officials or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been known by them in time to have repaired it before the accident, considering the nature and permanency of the injuries a verdict for $8,550 was not excessive... 1209

ACTION TO SETTLE AN ESTATE—

In an action to settle an estate valued at $75,000, consisting almost wholly of lands lying in different tracts, in several counties, for the payment of the indebtedness of the estate amounting to over $10,000, and requiring of the attorneys engaged a great deal of labor in ascertaining the quantity, quality, value and location of these various tracts, and in the examination of titles and also in investigating the claims of the various creditors of the estate, an allowance in the aggregate for the services of the several attorneys so employed in such settlement of $1,250, which was fixed by the lower court upon a "hearing" of the value of such services, can not be held to be excessive or unreasonable 581

ACTIONS TO SETTLE AN ESTATE—Continued. Page.

ADMINISTRATORS—

1. where an action was brought against a railroad company by L. B. and F. R., who sued as administrators of deceased for damages for causing his death, it was error in the lower court to sustain a plea in abatement to the action on the ground that the plaintiffs were not entitled to be appointed as such administrators, because not next of kin to the deceased 1011
2. the county court having the jurisdiction to appoint an administrator of a decedent, necessarily has the right to determine whether a given applicant is related to the decedent in the degree authorizing her appointment, and the fact that such court erred in so deciding, and appointed another, such appointment, though erroneous, is not void 1011
3. under section 3896, Kentucky Statutes, providing that "the court having jurisdiction shall grant administration to the relatives of deceased, who apply for same, preferring the surviving husband or wife, and then such others as are next entitled to distribution, or one or more of them whom the court shall adjudge will best manage the estate," the first in rank as distributee is entitled as a matter of right to administer upon the decedent's estate, provided such distributee possesses otherwise legal qualifications to act. Where, however, there is but one distributee this discretion can not exist if the distributee makes application before the second county court from the death of the intestate 1032
4. where it is shown by the evidence that a child was born to the wife after her marriage to her husband, and during their wedlock and within the usual period of gestation, the law's conclusive presumption is that the offspring is legitimate 1032

ADVERSE POSSESSION—See Lands, 26, 27, 28, 29—

1. after thirty years' continuous, adverse possession of land in this State, all rights of others are barred, no matter under what disabilities the true owner may have labored. 610
2. where a grantee of land took possession of his purchase, not recognizing or admitting the right of any other person to enjoy it, or any part of it, with him, but in hostility to every other title, under a warranty of a complete title, his possession is adverse to any owner who did not join in the conveyance, although such owner may have been an infant 610
3. lands sold at a judicial sale which had been in the adverse possession of the decedent (for whose estate it was sold) and those claiming under him, for more than fifteen years before the suit, which fact was set out in the petition, conferred upon the purchaser a good title thereto 610

AFFIDAVIT FOR CONTINUANCE—See Practice, 2, 3—

a motion for a new trial in this action upon the ground that appellee made an affidavit for a continuance on the ground that an absent witness would swear to certain facts, if present, when after the trial was over appellant learned that the witness would have sworn to the reverse, was properly overruled in view of the ruling of this court in Gibson v. Sutton, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 868, the witness had been present. 54

AFTERBORN CHILDREN—See Wills, 20, 21, 36.

AGENCY—See Attachments, 1; Pleading, 18.

AGENT—See Insurance—

where the agent of an insurance company had the power to issue a policy of insurance no reason can be seen why he could not make a new contract by annulling a space clause upon receiving additional premiums. A contract of insurance is not within the statute of frauds. It is not necessary that it should be in writing, it may be changed by parol, even though the contract provides that it shall only be changed by writing 105

AGENTS—See Contracts, 83, 84.

	Page-
ALIENATION —See Wills, 16.
ALIMONY —See Husband and Wife, 3.
AMENDMENTS —See Pleading, 6.
APPEALS —See Costs, 1, 2; Pleadings, 3; Practice, 1, 2; Transcripts—
1. where a former appeal settled all questions between the parties and nothing remained except to state the claims between them and calculate the interest it was not error to refuse an allowance to the executrix of commissions, or attorney's fees, but the lower court erred in fixing the date from which interest must be computed, May 8, 1888, being the date from which interest must run	19
2. where the appellant dies after his appeal has been filed in the appellate court and the appeal is decided in said court without an order of revivor, the decision of the appellate court is not void, but is erroneous, and the error can be corrected only in the Court of Appeals, and until so corrected is binding upon the parties and the lower court.	2
3. it is elementary that on a second appeal the opinion on the first appeal must be treated as the law of the case, and all questions which were then properly before court are as conclusively settled as if each were specifically referred to in the opinion.	392
4. where appellee had in no way violated appellant's right, no judgment for costs should have been entered against him.	438
5. a motion to dismiss an appeal in this court because the transcript was not filed in time can not be considered unless notice thereof has been given to the adverse party, or unless such motion is made on the regular call of the case.	824
6. on the return of a case from this court to the circuit court, where the entire judgment is reversed, the case stood as though it had not been tried, and the principles announced by this court in its opinion must control the circuit court on the subsequent trial of the case; the language of this court must be understood to refer to the facts then shown to the court.	863
7. in an action on the bond of a tax collector of city taxes for school purposes, such collector can not excuse his failure to collect the taxes on the ground that no notice of the time and place of the meeting of the board of equalization was given, as such notice is required to be given for the benefit of the taxpayer, and if he waives it and pays his taxes the collector must account to the board for the money collected.	864
8. in an action on the bond of a tax collector of city taxes for a graded school, where a part of the district lies outside the city, the failure of the board to take a bond from the assessor of tax did not render the assessment void as to the property lying outside the city as the assessor was a de facto officer, having been regularly appointed and recognized by the board as the assessor.	864
9. the board of education in levying taxes must speak by its records. If the order levying the tax for the year 1899 was void, under the Constitution it was a nullity and gave no authority to the collector to collect tax or retain the money when collected. His obligation as to the money collected is to the taxpayer and not to the public.	864
10. rule 3 of this court authorizes a dismissal of an appeal without prejudice, upon the motion of the appellee, where the appellant has not filed his brief twenty days prior to the day the case is set for hearing; the purpose of the rule is to give appellee an opportunity to file his brief after appellant's brief is filed.	987
11. under section 738 of the Civil Code, providing that "the appellant shall file the transcript in the office of the clerk of the Court of Appeals at least twenty days before the first day of the second term of said court next after the granting of the appeal, where an appeal was granted on November 22, 1904, and the appeal bond was given on December 12, and the supersedeas was issued on December 13, the appellee, by filing a copy of the judgment and bond in this court on May 16 following, was entitled on his motion to have the appeal dismissed.	908
12. in an appeal from a judgment allowing a city attorney $190 against the city for services and salary where the case does not involve the possession of the office, only the salary, this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal.	1066

APPEALS—Continued.	Page.
13. on rehearing the court withdraws the former opinion in this case (26 Ky. Law Rep., 909,) and now holds that though the court had no jurisdiction over the property except to enforce a mortgage lien thereon for an amount that might be found to be due on final trial, yet where a sale of the property would have the effect to divest the owner of a property right, and in such manner as to put it out of the power of the court, after the expiration of the term, to place the parties in their original condition, it was a final order from which an appeal would lie	1175
APPEALS TO CIRCUIT COURT— See Fiscal Courts, 4, 5.
APPORTIONMENT WARRANTS— See Street Improvement, 5.
APPRAISEMENT— See Practice, 2.
APPROPRIATIONS— See Act General Assembly, March 26, 1900; Auditor, 1, 5; Section 184, Constitution—
1. an aid to the interpretation of this section is a reference to the debates of the constitutional convention, which show that when this section was reported from the committee of education without the proviso it was objected to upon the grounds that it might be construed to prevent further appropriation to the very institutions which have been named, including appellant, when members of the convention, including the chairman, a distinguished citizen and lawyer, disclaimed such a purpose and defended the report by the assertion that it could not properly be so construed, and which, after debate, culminated in the adoption of the proviso	1179
2. another aid to its interpretation is its contemporaneous practical construction by all the other departments of the State government, including the legislature, by which every one of these institutions has been sustained by annual appropriations at nearly every session since the adoption of the present Constitution, which have been approved by the chief executives of the State...	1179
3. the final canon of construction is, where there may be doubt after all sources of aid have been resorted to, whether the act violates the Constitution, the doubt is resolved in favor of its constitutionality	1179
4. this appropriation is not upheld on the ground that it is not a levying of taxes. If an object can not have a tax levied for it if deemed necessary by the proper power, then no appropriation of public money can be made to it. Where the Constitution forbids the levying of a tax for a given purpose it must be held that it also withholds the power of making appropriations for that purpose unless there is something in the Constitution which particularly and unmistakably authorizes an appropriation, which is not the case here	1179
ASSESSMENTS— See Fiscal Courts, 2; Taxation, 8.
ASSIGNEE—
it is the duty of an assignee before paying out the money of the assignor to know that his estate is solvent, or to have the fact judicially ascertained, else he takes the risk, and if he pay out the estate to some of the creditors, believing them to be all, he is still liable to those he negligently failed to pay	582
ASSIGNMENT FOR CREDITORS— See Building and Loan Associations, 2, 8.
ATTACHMENTS— See Fraudulent Conveyances, 1—
1. the tobacco in controversy was raised upon appellant's farm, one-half of it belonged to them and the other half to a tenant. W. E. Monroe, creditor of appellees, did no work in the tobacco, and had no interest in it so far as the record shows. While he had been in the habit of selling the crops made on the place in his own name, he seems to have done this with the knowledge and acquiescence of appellants and as their agents, but this gave him no title to the land or its products. Upon this state of fact it was error to dismiss the petition of appellants seeking to recover for the value of the tobacco in the hands of appellees, the attaching creditors	575
2. an attaching creditor stands in the shoes of his debtor and has no higher rights than the debtor has, and the proof in this action showing the debtor could not hold the tobacco, certainly appellees as attaching creditors can not do so	575

ATTACHMENTS—Continued.

Page-

3. on the day an attachment was sued out against his property a debtor conveyed his property to Wells, who was on his bail bond. Wells did not have to pay anything on the bond, and about ten months later conveyed the property to the wife of the debtor at the latter's request. The record seems to establish a fraudulent intent to defeat the recovery of the appellant's claim. 163-
4. where a defendant in an attachment proceeding sued the sheriff for damages because of the loss of his property while in the officer's possession, the latter can not complain that the judgment was for the entire amount of the property where the attaching creditor was made a party and a lien was adjudged in his favor for the extent of his debt. Such judgment protects the officer from further action either by the creditor or debtor. 998.
5. the act of a deputy sheriff in levying an attachment was the act of the sheriff, and an allegation in appellee's petition that the loss sued on was occasioned by the sheriff's agent, when the proof showed that the employment was by the deputy sheriff, is within the rule that facts may be pleaded according to their legal effect, and the act of the agent in this case was that of the principal. 998.
6. where a defendant in possession of attached property executed bond to perform the judgment of the court, the court did not lose power over the attached property by reason of the execution of the bond. 1004.
7. where the record of a sale of attached property is silent as to why it was sold, and it is not shown that any proof was heard upon the motion for an order of sale, or that the sureties in the attachment bond were insolvent, and where the issues were incomplete and not tried, it was error to direct a sale of the attached property. 1004.
8. while the levy of an order of attachment on a tract of land, by giving the occupant a copy and posting another copy on it, creates a lien on that tract and affects the parties to the action, as well as subsequent purchasers, such a levy can not be extended to another and different tract at least a half a mile distant from the other so as to give a lien on it, which would affect a subsequent purchaser, lessee or incumbrancer. There being no one occupying the land, a lien could only be created on it so as to affect a subsequent purchaser, by leaving in a conspicuous place on the land a copy of the order. 1016.

ATTORNEYS—See Action to Settle an Estate, 1; Divorce and Alimony, 1, 2; Fiscal Courts, 8; Practice—

1. the claim of appellants for an attorney's fee in this action was properly rejected. Whatever may have been the rule anciently, by our present statute the attorney's fee allowed to be taxed in favor of the successful party in cases involving the title to land is all that can be recovered in a case like the one at bar. 51
2. a lawyer should never be disbarred upon testimony of a doubtful character. 87
3. where all the testimony in the case supports the claim the judgment of the lower court fixing an attorneys' fee should be affirmed. 718.
4. under the Code, sections 38 and 59, the court appointing the guardian ad litem or attorney for the nonresident defendant should make him a reasonable allowance for his services. The same rule applies whether the services are rendered in this court or in the circuit court. 1038.

AUCTION SALE OF LOTS—

- where two persons verbally agreed to form a copartnership and to attend an auction sale of town lots and each was to buy in his own name certain lots, and both were thereafter to pay for and own all of them as copartners, and in pursuance thereof each of them did attend said sale and bid in certain lots, of each of which bids a memorandum was kept and signed by the auctioneer, such agreement constituted a copartnership, and the owner of the lot having tendered them a joint deed for said lots and demanded a compliance on their part with the terms of the sale, which they refused, was entitled in a joint action against them to enforce a specific execution of the contract. 505.

AUDITOR—

- | | Page. |
|---|-------|
| 1. a stipulation in a contract that neither party may resort to the courts is void, as tending to oppression and being contrary to the public policy..... | 957 |
| 2. the auditor of public accounts is a public agent of the State, whose duties and powers are limited by the law. All persons dealing with him in his official capacity are conclusively presumed to take notice of this limitation. Wherein he may exceed his authority his act is void in so far as it attempts to bind the State | 957 |
| 3. the State can not be made liable at all except under a statute passed by the legislature incurring the liability, nor can it then be liable to suit against its auditor to compel him by mandamus to issue his warrant upon the treasurer for the same unless the legislature has expressly appropriated the money to discharge the liability..... | 957 |
| 4. there can be no implied undertaking on the part of the State to pay clerks employed by the auditor otherwise than out of the fund expressly appropriated for the purpose, and then only in such sums as the auditor may in his discretion determine | 957 |
| 5. the fact that the auditor and the claimant have compromised the claim adds nothing to its validity | 958 |

AUDITOR'S AGENTS—

under Kentucky Statutes, section 4259, providing that "the auditor of public accounts may appoint a revenue agent in each county of the State, and may in addition appoint four revenue agents from the State at large, whose term of office shall be four years," a revenue agent appointed on August 28, 1892, for the State at large by the auditor then in office can not be removed from his office by the successor of the auditor who made the appointment, but is entitled to hold his office for four years from the date of his appointment

710

AUCTIONEERS—

the auctioneer's memorandum, signed by him, describing the lots sold and stating the terms of the sale, was sufficient to bind both seller and buyer, and was a compliance with the statute

505

AVOWAL—See Claim and Delivery, 8.

BAIL BONDS—

- | | |
|--|-----|
| 1. in a proceeding upon a forfeited bail bond in the circuit court no judgment can be rendered thereon against the bail in the absence of the record from the examining court showing that the accused was held over and was in custody at the time the bail bond was executed. | 647 |
| 2. the fact that an accused under bond for his appearance to answer an indictment was sick in a hospital, and unable to appear, does not release the bail, which will stand until accused is able to appear..... | 652 |
| 3. offer to surrender the accused when the latter is not present is unavailing and is not a compliance of section 98, Criminal Code. | 652 |

BANKS AND BANKING—

- | | |
|---|-----|
| the fact that the bank in which the stock is held will soon go into liquidation, or have to be reorganized because of its charter, can not affect the rights of the remaindermen or other parties in interest. In case the bank should go into liquidation the chancellor may, upon the petition of the parties in interest, direct the reinvestment of the proceeds in other good securities, to be held for the benefit of the devisees as provided in the will | 868 |
| 2. the evidence upon trial of this action in the lower court for damages, resulting to appellant from the dishonor of his draft upon appellee, does not show that appellant suffered any substantial damages by the failure of the payee to pay his check, but shows that the whole trouble grew out of a mistake by which the proceeds of the note in question were placed to the credit of another. | 874 |
| 3. evidence relating to the dishonor of a previous check some time before was properly not admitted as it had no connection with the transaction sued on..... | 874 |

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—See Trial by Court, 1, 2; Commonwealth's Attorney; Verdict, 4, 5—

- | | |
|--|-----|
| 1. where the transcript fails to show what conduct of the Commonwealth's attorney is complained of, that question can not be reviewed..... | 158 |
|--|-----|

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—Continued.		Page.
2. the bill of exceptions failing to show the statements of counsel complained of, they will not be considered		428
3. it appearing from the record that the sixty days allowed by the lower court for the filing of appellant's bill of exceptions had expired before the order was made extending the time, the motion to strike the bill of evidence from the record will be sustained . .		863
4. section 4639, Kentucky Statutes, provides that the official stenographer's transcript of the evidence "shall be filed among the papers to be used in making up the bill of exceptions to the Court of Appeals, but the transcript in this case not having been filed by order of court, the record is here without a bill of exceptions.		518
5. although the Code provides that the time for filing a bill of exceptions shall not be extended beyond a day in the succeeding term, the parties may by consent extend the time		567
6. in a county having six terms of court a year, and by an order of court alternate terms are set apart for the trial of civil and criminal cases, where at one of the civil terms plaintiff's motion for a new trial was overruled, and in the presence of and without objection of one of the opposing attorneys he was given until the 10th day of the next civil term to file his bill of exceptions, and it was filed on the 9th day of said term against the objection of the defendant, the failure of the attorney to object to the extension of the time when it was made must be held to be an agreement to the extension, and a motion in this court to strike the bill of exceptions from the files will be overruled		567
BILLS OF LADING—See Contracts, 19.
BLOODHOUNDS—See Criminal Law, 2—
while the pedigree of bloodhounds used in trailing supposed criminals was not asked about nor stated with particularity, yet where it is shown that they were pure bloodhounds and had been carefully trained in tracking men, evidence of their trailing the defendant on the night of the alleged offense was properly allowed to go to the jury for what it was worth as a circumstance tending to connect the defendant with the crime		172
BOATS—See Carriers, 1, 8.
BOUNDARIES—See Lands, 7, 12.
BRIBERY—
there is no statute punishing the bribery of a private citizen, and in order to constitute an officer guilty of taking a bribe it must occur while he is such officer and a reference to a matter that occurred whilst he was a candidate, and before he was elected to the office, was no charge of bribery		826
BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—
1. where a building and loan association is insolvent and in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a borrowing member will not be allowed to apply to his debt the amount paid by him to the association as dues on his stock, but as to these he stands as any other stockholder, and must take such dividends as are coming to the stockholders on the settlement of the affairs of the corporation		842
2. where two old companies were consolidated and a new one formed which simply succeeded to their rights, took all their assets and liabilities, the renewal of a note to the new company in no way changed the situation of the parties or affected any of their rights, and the case must be determined though the new corporation had continued to hold the note executed to the old association		842
3. the fact the appellee accepted the new stock and was credited thereon for the dues he had paid on the old stock, was an election to continue as a stockholder, and an acquiescence in the dues he had paid to the old company being applied as payments on the stock issued to him in the new. He was thus entitled to all the profits which might accrue to him as a stockholder in the new concern, and took the risk of whether there would be such profits		842

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—Continued.	Page.
4. the rule is that a borrowing member of an insolvent building and loan association will not be allowed to apply to his debt, the amount paid as dues on his stock, but to these he stands as any other creditor, and must take such dividends as are shown to be due the stockholders on a final settlement	759
5. as to the dues paid by appellee on his new stock in the new association the rule applies, but it can not apply to his dues paid on the stock in the old company, which had been, by consent, canceled, for as to this he was never a stockholder in the new company. By surrendering his old stock and accepting the credit on his debt he elected to treat these dues as paid on it, and thereafter as to this money only the relation of debtor and creditor existed between him and the association	759
BURDEN OF PROOF—See Account, 2.
CARRIERS—See Local Option—
1. in an action by a shipper of a lot of brick against defendant company, who was doing a general towing business on Green river, and who agreed to carry the brick for hire and which was lost while being carried by striking a hidden snag in said river, Held—That while defendant's boats were not common carriers at all times, still if on certain trips when they had no towing to do they held themselves out as ready to carry for all, they would be common carrier for the time being	1122
2. on the trial of the case the jury should have been instructed that if defendant had expressly and publicly offered to carry for all persons, indifferently, or had by its conduct and the manner of conducting its business held itself out as ready to carry for all on such trips as the boat was then making, then it was a common carrier and was liable, although there was no negligence on the part of the defendant in the loss of the brick, but if defendant had not offered to carry for all persons, indifferently, or by its conduct or the manner of conducting its business held itself out as ready to carry for all, but only in each case acted in consequence of a special employment, it was not a common carrier and was not liable unless the bricks were lost by its negligence.	1122
3. where there was any evidence tending to show that the defendant company was a common carrier the case should have been submitted to the jury to determine whether the defendant had assumed the character of a common carrier	1122
CHANGE OF VENUE—See Criminal Law, 42; Homicide, 2; Practice, 1, 2—
1. unless application be made at the appearance term a party is not entitled to a change of venue, where he failed to give ten days' notice to the opposite party of his intended application therefor, or failed to file a verified petition accompanied by the affidavits of two credible housekeepers of the county	198
2. a party is not entitled to a change of venue by reason of the alleged undue influence of the counsel of his adversary in the "community" where the trial is to be had	198
3. under Kentucky Statutes, section 1118, providing that "no more than one change of venue, or application therefor, shall be allowed to any person or to the Commonwealth in the same case," the first application having been withdrawn, the last one should be regarded as the only one made in the case.	561
4. under Kentucky Statutes, section 1113, providing that "upon granting a change of venue in a criminal case the judge of the court shall direct that the defendant be delivered to the jailer of the county where the trial is to be had," and Ib., section 2238, providing "if in any county the jail is insecure, or there is danger, or probable danger, that a person confined therein * * * will be rescued therefrom by violence, the judge of the circuit court * * * shall by an order * * * direct that such person shall be transferred to the jail of the nearest county in which the jail is secure, and it shall be deemed that he shall be safely kept in the absence of anything appearing in the record to the contrary, it must be presumed that the judge's action in the premises was based upon some of the grounds authorized by the statute	561
CHECKS—See Banks and Banking, 2, 3.

CHILDREN—See Deeds, 2, 5.

Page.

CITIES—See Ordinances, 1, 2, 3; Damages, 10, 14.

1. an ordinance enacted by a board of town trustees, providing for the extension of the town limits one-third of a mile from the public well from a certain corner in each direction of the compass, is sufficiently definite, and the criticism that it should have stated from what part of the well is not apt, but the beginning point may be assumed to be the center of the well... 745
2. permitting the answer to be filed in this action after the expiration of twenty days was in the discretion of the court..... 745
3. where property was not situated within the corporate limits of a city on the date at which it should be assessed for taxation, it was not liable to taxation in that city for that year (sections 3535 and 3533, Kentucky Statutes), and the property of appellant not having been annexed to the city of Latonia at the time fixed for its assessment by these statutes, it was clearly not subject to taxation there for that year, but in South Covington, from which it was transferred, if it was subject to a tax at all..... 746
4. in an action against the city by the owner of about eight acres of land therein, on the margin of which the city opened two sewers, discharging thereon a deposit of foul matter to the depth of two or three feet, on which there was a pretty pond which was thereby made a cess pool, and which filth spread over about three acres of the land, impregnating and poisoning the air, and destroying the comfort and endangering the health of persons living several hundred yards away, a verdict for $2,250 under all the evidence is held not to be excessive..... 962
5. on the trial of the case the court gave the following instructions, which are held to be correct. "1st. The jury are instructed to find for the plaintiffs such damages as they believe from the evidence resulted to the plaintiffs' property from the discharge of sewerage from the Bank Lick street and Holman street sewers, and the deposit thereof on the plaintiff's property between May 21, 1898, and May 24, 1903..... 962
6. "3d. In ascertaining said damages, the jury are instructed that there are two measures of damages: First, the diminution in value of the plaintiffs' property caused by said discharge and deposit between said dates, if there be any such diminution in value; and, second, the cost of restoration of said property to the condition it was in on May 24, 1898, if any such restoration be possible..... 962
7. "3d. If the jury believe from the evidence that it is practicable and possible to restore said property to its condition on May 24, 1898, then the jury will adopt the one of said measures of damages which will result in the lesser damage to plaintiff's property, not to exceed $5,000"..... 962
8. the difference between the value of the property when the injury was inflicted and its value after the injury is not the proper measure of damages, where it is shown that there has been an increase in the value of the land due to the general enhancement of property in the neighborhood from the growth of the city..... 962
9. the court properly allowed the plaintiffs to show what was the expense of filling the place that was covered with slime, as this evidence tended to show the extent of the injury, and it was competent to show that they had used ordinary care to reduce the damages. The effect on the health of the neighborhood was also competent for the same reason, and to show why the market value of the property was lessened..... 962
10. under section 157 of the Constitution, providing that "no city * * * shall be authorized or permitted to become indebted in any manner, or for any purpose, to an amount exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof voting at an election held for the purpose," where under an ordinance of a city of the fifth class the proposition was submitted to the voters of said city to incur an indebtedness of $15,000 and issue bonds therefor, for the erection of a school building therein, more than two thirds of the voters voting on said proposition were cast in favor thereof, the proposition was adopted, although the number of votes cast in favor of such proposition was not equal to two-thirds of all the votes cast at said election on other questions then voted on.. 994

CITIES—Continued.

Page.

11. where the Constitution authorizes the incurring of an indebtedness by a city, county or taxing district by the assent of two-thirds of the voters of such city, county or taxing district, voting thereon the legislature can not add to such constitutional restriction, and the case of Belknap v. Louisville, 99 Ky., 474, in so far as it holds otherwise is overruled 994.

CITY TAXES—See Interest—

while Kentucky Statutes, section 2981, provides that the various named subdivisions of the city government, including the schools, shall receive their proportionate part of the tax bill after it is collected, there is no provision which in terms imports that they shall receive any part of the interest accruing on delinquent taxes. Each must receive that which the statute gives it, but they have no right to any part of the interest on the delinquency in the absence of an express provision of the law governing the matter. 209.

CLAIM AND DELIVERY—

1. in an action for damages in detaining logs that floated out and lodged on plaintiff's land, to which defendants pleaded a counterclaim for damages done by plaintiff to his land in permitting his logs to get loose, float on and injure his land, it is too late after the trial and verdict for the plaintiff to raise the question of the impropriety and irregularity of permitting defendants to file their counterclaim and have it litigated on the trial of plaintiff's action for claim and delivery of personal property. 798.
2. it was not improper for the court to say on the trial, after six or seven witnesses had been heard, "that is enough evidence on that point," where it is not shown that the remark was heard by the jury. 798.
3. we can not consider an alleged error of the court in refusing to permit a witness to state a contract he had made with one of the appellees, where there is no avowal of what the witness would have stated in answer to the question. 798.
4. it is the province of the jury to determine the amount of damages from the evidence, and the court should not interfere unless the verdict should be flagrantly against it. 798.

CLERKS OF COURTS—See Transcripts, 7.COLLATERAL ATTACK—See Settlements, 2.*COMMISSIONER—See Accounts, 1.*COMMONWEALTH'S ATTORNEY—See Bill of Exceptions, 6, 7; Homolde, 6, 7—

if the Commonwealth's attorney who prosecuted a case has received all the money that is coming to him, that is, $4,000 per year, then his prior right to a per cent. on judgment collected after he has gone out of office ceases, and the Commonwealth's attorney who is in office when the money is paid into the treasury, if he has not received his $4,000 for the year, is entitled to the per centum. 189.

COMPROMISE—See Auditor, 5 Railroads, 43, 44.CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—See Railroads, 33, 35.*CONSIDERATION—See Contracts, 23, 27; Infants, 4; Mortgages, 4, 5.*CONSTITUTION—See Cities, 1.*CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—See Appropriations, 1— section 7 of the Constitution provides "that the ancient mode of trial by jury is to be held sacred and the right thereof to remain inviolate," was not intended to be so strictly construed as to prevent the due and proper administration of justice in cases of complicated accounts when the remedy at law was deemed inadequate, so that a jury could not arrive with accuracy upon the condition of the account between the parties. 400.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—

the common law remedy for the obstruction of public roads has not been supplanted by chapter 110, Kentucky Statutes. (20 Ky. Law Rep., 604) 29.

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—

1. constructive trusts are held not to be within the statute because they rest in the end on the doctrine of estoppel, and the operation of an estoppel is never affected by the statute of frauds. 536.

- CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—Continued. Page.
2. the fact that the purchaser of the land paid the consideration himself does not destroy the trust, where the purchase was made for another, who offered to pay it, and was kept from paying it by the act of the purchaser, who refused to accept it, and had the deed made to himself 536
- CONSTRUCTION OF WRITING—
- the paper sued on limits each subscriber's liability to a pro rata proportion of the total amounts subscribed. No one guarantees the solvency of another, or that another subscription will be paid. The association risked the solvency of each subscriber, and where any are insolvent the association will bear that loss..... 89
- CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION—
- the contemporaneous construction of legislation for a long period of time by those charged with its enforcement is highly persuasive of the correctness of that interpretation, and the city council having acted upon this construction of the statute for a long period of years, illustrates the necessity of the courts giving great weight to such contemporaneous construction of the statute 209
- CONTESTS—See Primary Elections, 5, 14.
- CONTINUANCES—See Criminal Law. 43.
- CONTRACTS—See Auditor, 1; Evidence; Lands, 1, 2; Lease; Life Insurance, 19, 21; Sale of Timber, 1, 3—
1. where the contract for the building of a house provided for arbitration, in case of disagreement between the parties, there being nothing in the record showing that appellant dissented from the decision of his architect upon any of the matters in dispute, or that appellant ever asked arbitration before the bringing of this action by the contractor, or asked it in his answer, the lower court was not without jurisdiction, and the judgment for the balance of the contract price was properly rendered 12
 2. where the petition alleged, in this action upon a contract for services rendered as overseer, that appellant performed the labor at the special instance and request of the deceased; that he looked after her farm and stock, collected her debts, paid off her indebtedness and transacted all of her business, and the evidence conducing to substantiate these allegations and the further allegation that deceased agreed and promised to pay for these services, it was error for the lower court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for defendant..... 12
 3. the evidence conducing to show that appellee was seventy-four years of age, in infirm health and illiterate; that the mineral rights were worth much in excess of the amount appellant agreed to pay for them; that appellee had another tract of land which was the one he thought he was selling the mineral rights in; that he was induced by the nephew of appellant, who was a secret partner of appellant's in the transaction, to go over to appellant's house where the conveyance was signed, and there given whisky, the lower court improperly adjudged a specific performance. The purchase money paid should be returned appellee and the action dismissed 88
 4. where parties to a contract have written and signed a memorial of their undertaking, it is conclusively presumed, in the absence of fraud or mutual mistake, that the whole of the undertaking and all negotiations leading up to it, are merged in the writing. The writing is the best evidence, and so long as it can be produced is the only evidence of what the parties have agreed to do and of their whole meaning with reference thereto 181
 5. in construing a written contract by which T. and H. agreed with T. to take charge of T.'s farm of 125 acres, lying adjoining the city of W., and lay it off into lots, by streets and alleys, and to pay T. $600 per acre for two-thirds of the whole tract, and to allow T. to retain the other third of the land so divided, an allegation by H., in pleading a mistake in the contract, is not available unless it alleges a mutual mistake of both parties to the agreement 182
 6. in an action for damages for a breach of contract to sell land, where the breach alleged is an abandonment of the contract by the vendee and a refusal to execute his part of it, it is not neces-

CONTRACTS—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|---|-------|
| sary for the vendor to tender to his vendee a deed to the land when the vendee has declared that he will neither pay for the land nor accept the deed | 182. |
| 7. in an action on a written contract by a vendor against the vendee for damages for a breach of his contract to sell land, while it was a necessary allegation in the petition that plaintiff was willing, able and ready to convey the title to the land, it affirmatively appearing after verdict and judgment that plaintiff was able, ready and willing to convey, the failure to make such allegation in the pleading was cured | 182. |
| 8. where the vendee of an executory contract to buy land abandons and refuse to comply with its terms, the vendor upon electing to proceed for damages for the breach may, after making his election, and after the time when by the terms of the contract the conveyance was to have been made, dispose of the property by sale or mortgage without regard to the contract | 182. |
| 9. in an action by a vendor against a vendee for damages for the breach of an executory contract to buy land, the quantum of damages is the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the land at the date of the breach, and to which interest may be added | 182. |
| 10. under a contract by a city with a water company to supply the city with water, such company is liable to an individual property owner for damages by fire resulting to her property from lack of water | 282. |
| 11. in an ordinary action for breach of contract the general rule is that time is always of the essence of the contract, and a party who seeks damages for a breach of contract must show a compliance by himself of his own precedent covenants within the time required by the agreement | 380. |
| 12. even in equity, if it be apparent from the contract that the parties so intended, time will be considered of the essence of the contract, and a strict performance within the time fixed will be considered a condition precedent to an action for a breach | 380. |
| 13. the general rule for construing a contract is to take it as a whole, and if possible ascertain the true meaning of the parties, and where there is ambiguity or doubt as to its meaning it should be resolved against the party preparing it, if it can be done without violence to the rights of the parties thereto | 421. |
| 14. while an agreement to devise land is not enforceable under the statute of frauds, unless in writing, yet where the party has received the consideration of the contract the court will not allow him to rely on the statute and keep the consideration | 792. |
| 15. where the party who has performed the contract can not be restored to the situation in which he was before the contract was made, the contract itself is the best evidence of the value of what has been received | 472. |
| 16. under a contract by which appellants agreed to deliver lumber on board cars at Bowen, Ky., where appellant delivered twenty carloads, nineteen of which appellee accepted and paid for without complaint, in an action by appellant for the agreed price of the remaining car it was error for the court to permit appellee, the purchaser, to plead as a counterclaim damages for alleged defects in the nineteen carloads which appellees had inspected, accepted and paid for, as appellees were stopped to claim damages therefor | 621. |
| 17. in an action for a breach of a continuing contract the plaintiff has a right to sue at once for his entire damages without waiting for the expiration of the contract period | 636. |
| 18. evidence considered, and, Held—That appellee was guilty of a breach of its contract for the shipment of phosphate rock to appellant | 680. |
| 19. a delivery of a bill of lading is a symbolical delivery of the property which it represents, and where by the terms of a contract two tanks of oil were sold and the bills of lading therefor were delivered to a bank to be disposed of by the bank at current market prices and the proceeds applied in a given way, the title to the oil under the laws of Louisiana, where the contract was made, vested in the bank and was not subject to an attachment by the consignee in Kentucky | 645. |

CONTRACTS—Continued.

Page.

20. where a creditor has part of his debt secured and part unsecured, the law does not apply a payment by the debtor to the older items of the account, but will apply it to the unsecured debt 645
21. in an action to enforce a lien for lumber furnished for the erection of a dwelling house, which was controverted, and on the trial was dismissed by the court on the evidence, the appellant is not entitled to the favorable consideration of the court in alleging that appellee while intoxicated, in consideration of $5 paid to him by appellant, agreed to withdraw his defense, while at the said time appellee was not the owner of the house nor in possession of it, and this fact was known to appellant. 686
22. B., in consideration of $1, leased to F. & Co. the right to go on his land and prospect for oil, coal, gas and all other minerals, the said F. & Co. to have four months from date of contract to determine whether they would accept the grant, and if accepted to so notify B. in writing, and to have two years from date of acceptance to prospect and locate said minerals, and as compensation to give B. 10 per cent. of the product in the dump at the mine. F. & Co. gave notice of acceptance, sunk some wells on adjacent lands, finding some oil and gas, and within the two years applied to B. to make deed of conveyance to said mineral rights, which B. refused. Held—That the contract when accepted bound the lessees to, within two years therefrom, explore the land by actually sinking a well or wells upon it. If oil or gas or coal was found therein in paying quantities then the lessees were bound to diligently work and operate same so as to bring the product to a present market, and so as to promptly yield to the lessor his royalty; that unless the lessees did so actually develop the land in question, and in good faith and diligence operate it, the lease should be deemed abandoned, and in no event were the lessees entitled to a deed provided for by the option, until, as the result of such actual development within the life of the contract, gas, oil or coal was found in paying quantities. 724
23. such contracts lack the mutuality essential to their validity. A unilateral executory contract is, in law, nudum pactum, and is unenforcible. Where it is left to one of the parties to an agreement to choose whether he will proceed or abandon it, neither can specifically enforce its execution in equity, nor is a recited consideration of $1 sufficient to uphold an action for the specific enforcement of a contract otherwise unsupported by consideration. 725
24. where a sale of property is made by a drummer subject to the approval of the principal, it is a mere order for the goods and is revocable at any time at the option of the party giving it until accepted by the principal and notice of such acceptance is given to the purchaser, and the order may be withdrawn at any time by the purchaser before its final acceptance 832
25. where it is admitted that the telegram was to be delivered at Pineville in this State, it follows that the contract could not be fully performed without such delivery in this State, and if the failure to deliver it within a reasonable time was negligence, it is immaterial whether the negligence was that of its West Virginia or its Kentucky agent, as in either case it caused a breach of its contract in this State, which entitled appellant to receive some part of the damage claimed 858
26. G. and M. agreed in writing with M. to build a house on M.'s lot at $5 per month for the lease of the lot until the house was built, and then $5 per month for the rent of the house until the cost of the building of the house was paid for, and if they left it before paying for it, it was to belong to M. G. and M. procured appellants to build the house at an agreed price and assign them the contract as collateral, and abandoned the building before paying for it, and M. then took possession and refused to pay the contractors. Held—That the contract was such as gave G. and M. a longer lease than two years and was assignable without M.'s consent, and the appellants, as assignees of G. and M. were entitled to the house by paying M. the agreed rent of $5 per month until the cost of the building was paid for 870

CONTRACTS—Continued.

Page.

27. where a parol contract was made between appellant and appellee by which, in consideration of the use of his land for the construction of its telephone line, appellee was to give appellant free telephone service, an action to enjoin appellee from removing the box and interrupting his service is not an action within the meaning of the statute to charge appellees upon a contract or sale of real estate, and is not an action upon a verbal contract which was not to be performed within a year 868
28. under the facts as above recited appellant did not have a complete remedy at law, and, therefore, an injunctive proceeding was the proper one to preserve his rights. 869
29. where it is clearly stated in a contract that the consideration for transfer of designated property are services and assistance to be thereafter rendered, a purchaser from one under such contract must have known that he took only their rights, and he should have inquired what they were and what the contract was in this regard. 900
30. the appellant under the contract relied on in this action only bought one-half of appellees' rights, whatever these rights might turn out to be, and there can not be an implied warranty from this contract that appellees owned one half of the property referred to, and his cause of action not having been instituted within ten years after the cause of action accrued, his action to recover upon the contract was barred by limitation 900
31. where a letter from a dealer in yarns, fixing the price at which he proposed to sell his goods, was received by the buyer at Paducah on Saturday after business hours, and was answered both by telegram and letter on the following Monday, accepting the proposition at the price named, such acceptance was within a reasonable time and made it a binding contract between the parties, for a breach of which the seller is responsible in damages. 967
32. in an action to recover for goods sold by sample and warranted to be the same in quality, material and in all other respects as the sample and the purchaser agrees to examine and inspect them, and each part thereof at once upon their arrival, and if they fail to comply with the warranty he shall give written notice in five days thereafter by registered letter to the owner, otherwise the warranty is waived, in which the purchaser pleaded that when the goods were shipped to him they were in such condition that the quality could not be tested within five days, and that they were worthless and of no value, and this was known to plaintiff when the goods were shipped. Held—1st. It was error in the court on the trial to instruct the jury that if the goods were of no value for the purpose for which they were sold and purchased at the time they were delivered to plaintiff, they should find for defendant, for if the goods were of value for any other purpose there was some consideration for the contract. 1085
- 2d. Where the purchaser was an experienced druggist and knew whether the goods bought could be examined within five days, he can not be relieved of a contract deliberately made on the ground that it would be inconvenient for him to examine them within five days. If the defects could not be determined in five days he should not have made the contract. Contracts must be enforced as made 1085
- 3d. If the plaintiff under cover of the contract and knowing that the goods could not be tested in five days, knowingly sent inferior goods for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud on the defendant they can not recover if the defendant within a reasonable time discovered the defect to the goods and offered to return them 1085
- 4th. If the defendant after discovering the defects in the goods continued to control and sell them before giving notice to and offering to return them, then he is liable, but if after the plaintiff refused to take them back the defendant inadvertently sold some of them not with the intention on his part to treat the goods as his own, he would be liable only for the goods so sold 1085
33. in making a contract for services to be rendered the whole correspondence between the parties with reference thereto is admissible in evidence on a trial for a breach of the contract. 1042

CONTRACTS—Continued.

Page.

84. in an action on a breach of contract for employment, which was made by J. K., as president of defendant company, where the evidence shows that J. K. was an officer and agent of the company, and authorized to make contracts with reference to its business, there was sufficient evidence to allow the case to go to the jury.....1042
85. on the trial of an action for damages for breach of contract for improperly discharging employe, who had a contract for twelve months' service at $100 per month, the court properly instructed the jury that if they found for the plaintiff they should award him the sum of $1,200, less any amount that he earned during the year, or that he might have earned by the exercise of such diligence during that time as an ordinarily diligent person usually exercised under similar circumstances and it was not error in the court to refuse to give an additional instruction asked by defendant as to the duty of the plaintiff to seek other employment, and thereby reduced the damages.....1042
86. the construction of words in a written contract is for the court generally; if ambiguous the meaning intended may be gathered by the aid of parol or other extrinsic evidence, or if used in a sense peculiar to some special calling or trade the custom may likewise be shown by parol, which has given the word its extraordinary meaning in the case.....1155
87. terms in contracts in which time is the essence are construed according to the common or general meaning of the words. This is because they come to be so frequently employed in a different sense from that of their former meaning that the changed meaning comes to be the common one. Of these changes the court must take notice as they do, judicially, of all matters of common knowledge.....1156
88. contracts to begin or end at an hour certain, without naming a standard for reckoning the hour, must be deemed to have intended the system in most common use. Or, if more than one standard was in use at the place where the contract was to be performed, and as both could not have been intended, it is admissible to prove the prevailing custom at the place of performance in the business of which the contract under consideration partook, that the court might determine which was probably in the minds of the parties.....1156
89. in determining whether the word "noon," as used in a written contract of insurance, meant 12 o'clock standard time, the following guide should be given to the jury: "If the jury believe from the evidence that at the time the policy of insurance was issued there existed in the place where the contract was made a custom or usage with reference to the meaning of the word noon, so well settled, uniformly acted upon, and of such continuance as to raise a presumption that plaintiffs and defendants knew of it, and entered into the contract of insurance sued on with reference to it, such usage will govern the jury in arriving at their conclusions".....1156
40. if a fire broke out in the insured building before the policy expired, and continued to burn thereafter till it was totally destroyed, the loss is one occurring within the insured period. It is all deemed one event and not severable. A damage begun is damage done where the culmination is the natural and unbroken sequence of the beginning, but where the fire did not break out in the insured building before noon of the day the policy expired, the company is not liable although it was inevitable, at the noon hour, that the building would be destroyed by the fire then raging which had broken out in another building1156
- CONVEYANCES—See Deeds; Lands; Deeds of Partition; Fraudulent Conveyances; Mortgages, 4, 5.
1. where a father conveyed a house and lot to his daughter and delivered her a deed thereto, and later induced her to redeliver the deed to him, which he, with the understanding that he would convey other property to her in exchange therefor, and afterwards sold and conveyed said property to another, but did not convey to the daughter any property in lieu thereof, it is equitable that said daughter should be reimbursed out of her father's CONVEYANCES—Continued.

Page.

- estate for the value of the house and lot at the time she redelivered the deed to him 111
2. where property conveyed by deed by a mother to her daughter was afterwards devised by the mother to said daughter, the daughter could not take the property under both the deed and will, and the daughter having elected to take under the will, is thereby estopped to claim it under the deed 124
3. a conveyance made to appellants, by direction of appellee, of certain lots owned by appellee, upon a writing by which appellant agreed to let appellee have $211.87 in money to redeem same, and that appellee should sell the lots by a named date and repay appellant the money, with 8 per cent. interest, and to pay appellant the money which the lots sold for up to the amount of his debt, and those he failed to sell was to belong to appellant, if the debt was not all paid at said date, is adjudged to be a mortgage, and appellee adjudged to be the owner of the unsold lots, with a lien thereon to appellant for the balance unpaid 230
4. where property was conveyed to Wilson and wife for life, with remainder to their child or children, but if no child or children be alive at their death, then to the heirs of Wilson, the children took a defeasible fee, conditioned upon their being alive at the death of the survivor of their parents; and if at that time no child of the marriage should be alive then the property is to descend to the collateral heirs of Wilson. Therefore, upon the death of Wilson, his widow and children could not convey the property 353

CO-OPERATIVE INSURANCE—See Insurance, Life, 2.

COPYING RECORD—

when in a petition for a rehearing it is shown that in copying the record the clerk omitted the word "no" before the word "credit," and so made the sense just the opposite of what was expressed in the original record, and the opinion is based on this matter, such opinion is withdrawn and a rehearing granted and the case continued for further consideration, with leave to file additional briefs 609

CORPORATIONS—See Building and Loan Associations; Constitutional Law; Fraud—

1. thirty six persons subscribe various sums for the purpose of organizing a telephone company, and appointed a committee of nine of their number to prepare articles of incorporation, five of whom agree on articles which the other four refuse to accept, and which the remaining subscribers also refuse to accept, and the five members proceed to organize a corporation under one name, while the other thirty-one subscribers also organize under another name, the latter holding the subscription list and money paid in, for which the corporation composed of the five members has brought this suit. Held—That the subscribers for the stock of a proposed corporation, before they are incorporated, are partners in the business which they have in hand, and a committee appointed to prepare articles of incorporation are merely agents of the larger body, and it is not obligatory on the larger body to accept the articles prepared by such agents, and the larger body had the right to reject the same, and adopt articles of their own, and having done so the larger body are entitled to the assets of the partnership 30
2. the question as to whether a trading partnership or corporation who subscribed the paper is bound thereon, because the undertaking was contrary to the charter, or not within the original scope of partnership, is not decided under the pleadings. If all the partners agreed to it or ratified it, and the association has thereby been induced to act upon it, between the copartners and the association it ought to be binding, and if a street railway induced the association to locate its fair at a certain point, where it could get a monopoly of carrying visitors to and from the fair, it would be liable 39.
3. in this action appellee seeks to recover against appellants the amount of judgments recovered by them against the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. which, after these judg-

CORPORATIONS—Continued.

Page.

- ments were rendered and a return of no property found, was merged in appellant company. The fact that the former company was insolvent when the transfer was made is not a material inquiry. The rule is that where one corporation goes out of existence by being merged into another, the liabilities of the old corporation are enforceable against the new one, just as if no change had been made 75
4. legislation creating a corporation for draining swamp lands near a city, and thereby improving the health of the community, is a matter of public concern, and is not unconstitutional as special legislation. The fact that it is attended by some private benefit not enjoyed by the general public does not take from the work the quality of being for the public service 278
5. an amendment to the charter of a corporation organized to drain swamp lands, which recognized the "Pond Settlement in Jefferson county," as being the district to be drained, is sufficiently explicit to refute the claim of uncertainty as to the subject of the legislation 278
6. where the charter of a corporation organized to drain swamp lands provides for the appointment of commissioners, to assess a tax on certain adjacent lands, who were required to and did report their action to the Jefferson Chancery Court, which confirmed their assessment, a levy and collection of a tax so assessed is not a "taking of private property without due process of law," within the meaning of the Federal or State Constitutions, and the fact that the notice was by advertisement in the press and by posters instead of actual service of process, does not militate against the conclusiveness of the judgment of said court. 278
7. in an action by creditors of a defunct "investment company" against the stockholders to enforce payment of the balance due on their stock, alleging the insolvency of the corporation and for the appointment of a receiver, a failure to allege any indebtedness on the part of the corporation to the plaintiffs, or a failure to pay any supposed indebtedness due from the corporation to plaintiffs, and no proof that the stock was purchased with notice of its infirmity or in bad faith to defraud creditors, the petition of the plaintiffs was properly dismissed by the chancellor 820
8. under Kentucky Statutes, section 744, providing that "existing corporations transacting the business provided for in this act may * * * continue in business as though incorporated under this act," a title insurance company created by special act of the legislature prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, although acting under its old charter, is restricted to the exercise of powers specified in Kentucky Statutes, section 728, adopted March 19, 1894, and is not subject to assessment for franchise tax 346
9. under Kentucky Statutes, section 549, it is not necessary for a stockholder to sign a subscription in order to render himself liable to creditors for the full amount of unpaid subscription where he accepted the certificate of stock 657
10. under Kentucky Statutes, section 547, the liability of stockholders for unpaid subscriptions is not affected by the fact that their subscriptions were to be paid by the surrender of their old stock, but they should be held liable for the difference in the amount they actually paid and the amount of stock they received at its par value 657
11. where fraudulent representations are made to induce a subscription to the stock of a corporation it is not ground for the avoidance of the contract of subscription either as against the corporation or its assignee, after its insolvency and assignment for creditors, where there was laches in failing to discover it 657

COSTS—

1. under Kentucky Statutes, section 891, which provides that "on reversal of a judgment in the Court of Appeals the appellant shall recover of the appellee such costs as the judges in their discretion shall award," in view of this statute and the apparent unnecessary volume of the record, containing more than 1,000 pages, and the peculiar facts of the case, it is ordered that appellant pay one-half of the costs incurred in this appeal to the COSTS—Continued.

Page.

- clerks of the lower court and this court for the transcript and the copy of the record, and that he recover of appellee the remainder. 529
2. where attorneys for both appellant and appellee withdrew transcript of record from clerk's office of Court of Appeals, the custom having been uniform to charge for but one copy, this court is unwilling to change it. To charge for two copies where they have not been made has not been recognized by the legislature, and would be an undue addition to the cost of litigation, already very burdensome. 458

COUNTIES—See Roads and Passways, 1, 4.

COUNTY BOARD OF HEALTH—See Office and Officer—

1. in an action against the county by a county health officer for his services for one year in inspecting localities and persons thought to be infected with contagious diseases and for treating such diseases, an answer by the county denying, upon knowledge or information, that the plaintiff had been appointed health officer, or a member of the board of health, was a sufficient denial, as these boards are not required by statute to keep records of their proceedings. 86
2. the county board of health has not the power to delegate its duties to the county health officer in the matter of looking after epidemics of contagious diseases. It is to the county board and not to the health officer that is committed the duty of examining into these nuisances and conditions of filth and infection that tend to spread contagious diseases, and it must act as a board on each case or epidemic as it arises. 86
3. a petition for pay for services by a county health officer which fails to show that the patients were not able and willing to pay for the service rendered them, or that they were indigent persons or that any of them were treated in the county pest house or other place where they were confined, by order of the board of health, or that they were treated by order of the board of health, is demurrable. 86

COURTS—See Bill of Exceptions, 1, 2, 3; Change of Venue, 1, 2; Fiscal Court, 1, 5—

1. a special term of the circuit court provided for in Kentucky Statutes, section 964, may be called either by the order of the court made during the last preceding regular term, or by notice signed by the judge and posted at the courthouse door for ten days before the special term is held, and grand and petit juries may be summoned for, and criminal and penal cases tried at, such special terms, nor do we think it material whether the juries for the special term were ordered to be summoned before or after the beginning of the special term. 569
2. it was not error for the court to permit an attorney other than the regular attorney for the Commonwealth to state to the jury the nature of the charge against the defendant. 569

CRIMINAL LAW—See Bribery; Bloodhounds; Evidence, 1; Homicide, 1, 14; Indictments, 1, 7; Primary Elections, 4; Robbery; Shooting in Sudden Affray—

1. under section 506 of the Code, which applies to criminal trials as well as civil, a party introducing a witness may impeach him by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony, but such evidence must be limited in its effect upon its impeachment of the witness, and in this prosecution the failure of the trial court to admonish the jury that testimony tending to prove that one of the prosecuting witnesses had made statements different upon the examining trial to those testified to by him upon the trial in the circuit court, should be considered solely as affecting his credibility and not as substantive testimony against the accused, was error. 50
2. upon the trial of appellee, charged with the burning of property of Hiram Cawood, it was error to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant, the proof showing that the property was in the name of his wife. 181
3. upon the trial of appellant the court permitted the prosecution to prove that some weeks after the killing he returned to the house where it occurred and indulged in conduct indicating that he

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

Page-

- was being lashed by a guilty conscience; that he said he wanted to pray for those boys; that he had to kill them in his self-defense. Held—That the whole circumstances was immaterial, and should not have been admitted, yet it was not prejudicial to accused..... 187
8. where there was nothing in the testimony of appellant to show that he at any time abandoned the difficulty in good faith before he mortally wounded the deceased, he was not prejudiced by a qualification added to an instruction authorizing an acquittal upon the grounds of self-defense or apparent necessity..... 145
5. where there is any testimony to show the accused guilty this court will not reverse a case for lack of evidence..... 158
6. the defendant was not prejudiced by the fact that the court instructed the jury under the conspiracy count, as he was only found guilty of voluntary manslaughter..... 214
7. the fact that the trial court ordered a jury summoned from an adjoining county to try the case was not error, and, moreover, this court is without jurisdiction to review the decision of the trial court in the matter of selecting the jury, under Criminal Code, section 281..... 214
8. where the evidence upon the trial of appellant was to the effect that an outhouse of Mrs. Hunt was broken into and three chickens were stolen therefrom; that in order to get into the outhouse the door had to be unfastened and that it was securely fastened the night before the breaking into it after it was seen that all the chickens were there; that the chickens were found the following morning in the hands of a merchant who had bought them from Heisler who bought them from appellant the jury was authorized to conclude that appellant was guilty..... 355
9. an instruction which in substance told the jury that if they believed the house of Mrs. Hunt was feloniously broken into and chickens taken therefrom by a person other than appellant yet if they believed that at the time appellant was present aiding and abetting such other person in the commission of the crime they should find him guilty while inaptly worded was the law and was authorized by the evidence..... 356
10. upon the trial of appellant the Commonwealth proved by Felty that he had a conversation in the jail with appellant in which the latter told him he got the chickens from Worthington but did not know where the latter got them and that witness after this asked Heisler where appellant told him he got them and Heisler said that he told him from Worthington. Held—That this was incompetent but instead of being prejudicial to appellant was beneficial to him as it tended to contradict Heisler who testified that appellant told him the chickens were his..... 358
11. where a petition accompanied by the necessary affidavits were tendered and motion entered for change of venue before the jury was sworn it was error to overrule the motion on the ground that it came too late because the preparation for trial had begun. The trial had not begun until the jury was sworn and moreover the state of facts presented authorized the change of venue and until they were controverted the court did not have the discretion to refuse the application..... 396
12. as to whether or not there was any evidence conducing to show the guilt of appellant for this question see section 340 Criminal Code and note 20 and cases there cited..... 448
13. where one Fraverty testified upon the trial of this case that he was so near the parties at the time the shot was fired that blood spurted from the wound inflicted upon deceased upon his (witness') clothing and the appellant introduced testimony to show that this witness was not present at the time of the difficulty. Held—That the Commonwealth had the right in corroboration of its witness Flaverty to show that there was blood upon his clothing and where appellant's witness did not state what Flaverty said to him about it there was no error..... 448
14. where it appears that the Commonwealth's attorney did not connect appellant in any way with previous crimes in Bell county this language: "That more than a score of men perhaps had been killed in Middlesborough, Bell county, Kentucky, and

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

	Page.
nothing had been said about it because the people up there were afraid to talk about it' was not prejudicial to appellant	448
15. appellant's defense upon this prosecution was that the pistol with which deceased was killed was discharged accidentally and without knowledge upon his part that it was loaded, and it was error for the court to omit the giving of an instruction submitting the plea of self defense	527
16. the practical issue, sharply presented, upon this appeal of appellant, who went to Brown's house and when ordered away shot and killed the latter, was whether the appellant acted in his necessary, or apparently necessary, self defense, and under the evidence appellant's right of self-defense, even if his life was in peril, as he claimed when shot, depends upon the principle that if he brought about the peril by his own felonious act, he can not justify the taking of human life to extricate himself from it. The language of the instruction complained of got before the jury the idea that one himself beginning a felonious attack upon another, if bested in the fight, can not, when the battle turns against him, strike to save his own life so jeopardized. Appellant makes no claim to having withdrawn in good faith, nor is it true that his belief that he was about to be assaulted was by the instruction allowed to justify the shooting of appellant	547
17. the jury must understand, if they comprehend any part of their duty, that the law of the case was for their guidance, and the whole of it was continued in the court's written instructions, and that none of these instructions was paramount to the other, but must be read and considered as a consistent whole	548
18. the criticism of an instruction authorizing decedent's right to protect himself if he believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that appellant was then and there about to assault him, is not substantial. The pointing of a loaded gun at deceased, with threatening attitude by appellant, who was an intruder, was more than a simple assault, and deceased's belief was a proper element of his action if he did undertake to protect himself	548
19. under Kentucky Statutes, section 807, making it a felony for any person to "willfully and maliciously * * * do any act whereby an engine or car might be upset or thrown from the track," where a boy twenty years of age, in stealing a ride on a train, turned an angle cock which applied the air to the brake, which had the effect to stop the train, but the proof shows was calculated to bring it to a sudden stop and throw it from the track, where there was evidence tending to show that the boy did the act without knowledge of its probable consequences, and if this be true his act was not malicious, the court should have given an instruction to the jury submitting the question as indicated	620
20. on the trial of one for homicide the widow of the deceased is a competent witness to prove the dying declarations of her deceased husband made under a sense of impending death	677
21. a boy twelve years of age, while not able to define the legal obligation of an oath, but did know that by being sworn he was required to tell the truth and would be punished for it if he did not do so is a competent witness on the trial of one for homicide	677
22. whether one's religious training has been so developed that he comprehended his responsibility to God for lying is not material as affecting his competency as a witness in a court of justice. His disbelief or unbelief in deity may affect his credibility, but not his competency as a witness	677
23. under an indictment for shooting at random in a public highway the defendant may be found guilty where it is shown by the evidence that the highway in which the shooting occurred had been continuously used by the traveling public as a matter of right for more than fifteen years, although it may not have been formally dedicated and accepted by the county court as a public county road	684
24. an indictment is not bad because it charges the defendant with "murder" instead of "willful murder," as it is designated in section 1149, Kentucky Statutes. The statute does not create the crime of murder or manslaughter, but only fixes the punishment for the common-law offense. The word "willful" in the statute may be considered tautological as willfulness is an essential constituent of murder..	704

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.	Page.
25. an instruction to the jury covering the offense of voluntary manslaughter, which uses the two expressions, "in sudden heat and passion," and "without previous malice," are not so antagonistic as that the existence of one excludes the other as a motive for crime, both being proper to make clear to the minds of the jury that to reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter there must not exist "malice aforethought"	704
26. the use of the expression in the instruction, "and which did then and there excite the passions of defendant beyond control," was not prejudicial to appellant's substantial rights, as requiring the jury to perform a psychological task in measuring the effect of the provocation. The law requires the jury to ascertain or measure the effect of the provocation upon the mind of the defendant in order to believe the killing was done in sudden heat and passion	704
27. an admonition by the court to the jury as to the effect and purpose of a contradictory statement made by a witness, "that it must not be considered for any other purpose except to impeach the witness," need not be in writing, but may be made orally...	704
28. the fact that the attorney for the Commonwealth, in order to show that the killing was unnecessary, said to the jury in his closing argument that "the appellant could have withdrawn into the house thus escaped from his brother's knife," and when objected to the court told the jury they must be governed by the instructions and not by the statement of counsel was sufficient, and it was not error in the court to refuse to give the instructions then tendered by appellant, to the effect that he was not bound to retreat	704
29. it was not error in the court to refuse to admit as evidence that appellant, while in Missouri, received letters from his father inviting him to his home in Kentucky, as all the evidence showed that defendant was there with his father's consent and approval.	704
30. in this case, where the actors were brothers, the scene of the tragedy their father's home, the witnesses the immediate family, the evidence being entirely contradictory, it was simply a question of which set of witnesses were to be believed.	704
31. upon the trial of appellant upon an indictment charging him with grand larceny, an instruction directing the jury to find him guilty if they believed from the evidence that he took and carried away property of the aggregate value of $1,000, or property of the value of $20, was erroneous because the jury were warranted in finding him guilty if the articles taken were of the value of $20, although the property taken at no single instance was of as much value as $20. To constitute grand larceny the value of the things taken must be $20, and the taking must be done at one time.	743
32. the court should have given an instruction upon petit larceny because under the form of the indictment and under the evidence the jury might have found defendant guilty of the latter offense	744
33. where evidence was admitted solely as affecting the credibility of a witness the court should have so admonished the jury, instead of allowing it to go as substantive evidence of appellant's guilt.	744
34. an indictment which charges that the defendant, William Finn, alias Thomas Lowry, did unlawfully, feloniously and forcibly take, steal and carry away one diamond pin, the more exact description of same is unknown to the grand jury, then and there the personal property of W. R. Varian and of the value of $35 and more, all of which was so feloniously taken, stolen and carried away from the person of said W. R. Varian, without his consent and against his will, by force and violence and putting him, the said W. R. Varian, in fear of some immediate danger to his person, etc., is a good indictment for robbery	771
35. a second count in the indictment which charges that on the 19th day of July, 1900, the said William Finn, alias Walter Harvey, was convicted of burglary in the State of Wisconsin, and on the 28th day of February, he, the said William Finn, alias Thos.

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

- Lowry, alias Harry Ramsey, was convicted of robbery in the State of Louisiana, is not good in that it is not direct and certain as required by section 124, Criminal Code, as regards not only the party charged and the offense charged, but the county in which the offense was committed, as well as the particular circumstances of the offense charged in so far as they are necessary to constitute a complete offense. 771
36. good pleading in an indictment, where a judgment of a court of another State is relied on, requires that the laws of the State under which the judgment was rendered be pleaded so far as to show the jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment relied on, and that the trial court in this State may know that the convictions were for felonies punishable by confinement in the penitentiary 771
37. courts of this State do not take cognizance of the statutes and jurisdictions of courts of other States unless pleaded, and they must be pleaded as other facts 771
38. where the undisputed evidence shows that the defendant deliberately and without apparent cause shot and killed a young girl, with whom he was in love and wanted to marry, but who had refused to marry him, and also at the same time mortally wounded his rival, who was with the girl, the only defense being as to his sanity at the time, the following instructions, given by the court, are held to be proper 785
39. "No. 7. The court further instructs the jury that the law presumes every man sane until the contrary is shown by the evidence, and before the defendant can be excused on the grounds of insanity the jury must believe from the evidence that the defendant at the time of the killing was without sufficient reason to know what he was doing, or that, as the result of mental unsoundness, he had not then sufficient will power to govern his action by reason of some insane impulse which he could not resist or control. 785
40. "No. 8. The court further instructs the jury that although they may believe from the evidence that the defendant at the time of the killing of Emma Watkins was without sufficient power to govern his action by reason of some impulse which he could not resist or control, yet if they further believe from the evidence that such lack of reason to know right from wrong, or such insufficient will power to govern his actions, or to control his impulses, arose alone from voluntary drunkenness, but not from unsoundness of mind, they should not acquit the defendant on the ground of insanity" 786
41. letters taken from the possession of defendant at the time of his arrest, which he admitted were given to him by the deceased, which tend to establish the cause of jealousy on his part, and tend to furnish a motive for the killing, are clearly admissible in evidence. 786
42. on the motion of defendant in a criminal prosecution for a change of venue the burden is on him to show that he can not get a fair trial in the county where the indictment was found. The motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and this court will not interfere with its discretion unless it be made to appear with reasonable certainty that there was a manifest error on the part of that court in its decision of the question 788
43. where on a second trial of a defendant indicted for murder a witness who testified on the former trial was absent and the defendant filed an affidavit stating he can prove additional facts by the absent witness (reciting them) that are material to his defense and that can not be proved by any other witness, it was error in the court to refuse to grant the defendant a continuance because he would not consent for the stenographic report of the testimony of such witness, made on the former trial, to be used as his evidence on the trial then pending 788
44. the fact that it was shown on the motion for a new trial that two of the jurors had expressed opinions before the trial that the defendant was guilty of the charge and ought to be locked up or hanged, can not be reviewed by this court under section 281, Criminal Code, which provides that the decision of the lower court upon a motion for a new trial shall not be subject to exception 789

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

Page.

45. a statement by a witness in regard to the reputation of a witness for defendant that one Spaulding had told him that such witness had sworn to a lie was incompetent, and should have been excluded by the court. 789
 46. a statement by the attorney for the Commonwealth in his closing argument to the jury that, "If you convict the defendant, in my opinion, a more damnable villain never entered the doors of the penitentiary," though rebuked by the court, who told the jury that it ought not to influence them, was especially improper, because outside the record, grossly abusive of the prisoner at the bar, and so highly inflammatory in spirit and utterance as to be calculated to excite the passions and prejudices of the jury. . . . 789
 47. where the proof showed that appellant struck and kicked the deceased, from the effects of which she in a few days thereafter died, in addition to an instruction upon the question of murder, manslaughter and self defense the court should have given an instruction upon involuntary manslaughter because the beating may have been done without the intention of producing death. . . 794
 48. hands and feet are not deadly weapons within the meaning of the law, and when death results unintentionally from their use in an assault the result is not murder, but involuntary manslaughter, and whether or not murder or involuntary manslaughter resulted was a question for the jury, and it was error to refuse to instruct as to involuntary manslaughter. 794
 49. on the trial of appellant, who was jointly indicted with another for murder, where there was no evidence that the accused sought or provoked the difficulty, it was error in the court, after giving the usual and proper instructions as to murder, manslaughter and self defense and defense of another, to add to the self defense instruction: "Unless you shall further believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, Paul Carnes, first willfully and feloniously assaulted the deceased with a deadly weapon, a pistol, and in so doing thereby made the harm or danger, if any there was, towards him or his codefendant necessary or excusable on the part of deceased and those acting with him, if any, in which event you can not excuse the defendant upon the ground of self defense or apparent necessity." As the evidence conduced to show that appellant fired first the jury probably understood that the court meant by this instruction that if accused fired first, it was the assaulting referred to by the court in the instruction quoted, and that, therefore, the accused was deprived of the right of self-defense. The court should have omitted the qualification in the instruction named. 1205
 50. the court erred in permitting the attorney for the Commonwealth to repeatedly ask the appellant, against his objection, why he did not leave the store and go home when he found deceased there. As the court overruled the appellant's objection, it may have led the jury to believe that the court was of the opinion that appellant, by going home, could have avoided the difficulty and the jury may have been impressed with the idea that it was the legal duty of the appellant to have done so. 1205
- DAMAGES—See Contract, 19; Master and Servant; Telegram, 4, 9, 10—
1. in this action to recover damages for the injury to his property by appellant's sawmill, the evidence showing that the chute that carried off the dust was so built as to deposit the saw dust within a few feet of appellee's lot; that finer particles of it invaded his house, injuring his furniture, clothing, etc., killed his garden; it was not improper to permit the plaintiff upon the trial to prove that other mills burnt their dust, as the tendency of this evidence was to show that there was another and a proper way to dispose of the saw dust. 103
 2. in this action to recover damages for the death of appellee's intestate it is not a defense that deceased was at work under an independent contractor, as the furnishing of the wheel, the bursting of which killed him, its shafting and power, were all under the supervision of appellant. 136
 3. in this action the evidence showing that the deceased told the foreman that his machine was out of level, and needed new ap-

DAMAGES—Continued.

Page.

- pliances; that he made the repairs the night before the accident, and that when he went to oil it he took the precautions to keep the belt from running over on another pulley so it would not be started, show that he was conscious of the danger he was in, and this being true his death was the proximate result of his own negligence 198
4. it is the duty of the master to furnish the servant with reasonably safe machinery for his work. Not that such machinery may not be dangerous in its use, even when properly used, but it must be in reasonably fit condition for the use in which it is employed, and must be kept in reasonable repair. The servant is not bound to increase the hazard of his employment by working at machinery or with tools in unfit condition, but where he knows of the danger and conditions without complaint, or without bringing it to the master's attention, he assumes for the time the increased hazard in addition to the ordinary risks of his employment 198
5. as to Jefferson county, the fiscal court, the county judge and justices of the peace and jailer, the rule is that neither the county judge, the fiscal court, nor county officers are liable to a person injured from defects in the county highway, bridges or other structures which the county is, by law, required to maintain; that an elevator is a necessity in a five story building, and the fiscal court had jurisdiction to have it built for the comfort and convenience of holding the courts. 509
6. as the contract of the Fidelity and Casualty Co. was only to indemnify the county and fiscal court against loss, no action can be maintained against it by the plaintiff where neither the county nor the fiscal court are liable. 509
7. where a defendant sells a thing which he knows is dangerous and conceals the danger from the purchaser, a different question is presented. But this doctrine is not to be applied to the fall of an elevator which is charged to be due concurrently to its defectiveness and the unskillfulness and gross negligence of the operator in using it. 509
8. the evidence in this case showing that the injury to appellee resulted from a defective construction of appellant's gas box, and there being evidence that the injury was permanent, while it is difficult to determine the proper compensation which should have been awarded, the judgment will not be disturbed on the ground of its being excessive, it being the province of the jury to determine its extent 885
9. the mere fact that the court would not have fixed the damages as high as the jury did is no reason for setting the verdict aside and granting a new trial. To justify such a course it must be apparent that the action of the jury was influenced by passion or prejudice, and this fact does not appear here. 886
10. where a child eleven or twelve years old broke her leg in jumping from a pile of lumber and breaking into a sewer, which had been constructed in a public alleyway of a city without the consent of the city, by the owner of a lumber plant adjoining the alley, for his own convenience in drawing the surface water from his lot, which sewer was constructed of plank which had been allowed to become rotten, it was the duty of the owner of the plant to keep the sewer in safe condition, and such owner, and not the city, is liable in an action for damages for such injury 903
11. the fact that the sewer was constructed by a former owner of the plant for the use and convenience of the plant, and which was maintained by him during his ownership, will not excuse his vendee from liability, who continued to use the sewer and failed to thereafter keep it in repair, as he was liable for its repair, and the fact that it was kept in repair by the former owner, an agreement that he should keep it in repair was implied. 904
12. the fact that the child was playing in the alleyway when injured is no defense to her action for damages for the injury. In crowded cities the use of the public streets and alleys for purposes of recreation and pleasure by children and others may be regarded a public necessity, so long as such use does not impinge upon the rights of others to use them, and such users are entitled to have them in a reasonably safe condition 904

DAMAGES—Continued.

Page.

13. an instruction to the jury that they could find punitive damages against appellant if they should believe from the evidence that the injury complained of was the result of gross negligence, was error, and should not be given when there was no evidence whatever of gross negligence, and while this court might be of the opinion that the verdict rendered was no more than would compensate the plaintiff for the pain endured and the impairment of her capacity for laboring and earning money as the result of the injury, we do not feel warranted in saying that some part of the verdict was not given by way of punishment. 904
14. evidence showing that appellant, who was hurt by being struck by a piece of timber as it was being moved by a derrick, stated upon the trial that he never paid any attention to the moving of the timber; that he expected to get out of the way before it reached him, it appearing that he had ample time to get out of the way from the time the lifting of the timber began until it reached him, he was guilty of such negligence as to authorize a peremptory instruction upon the trial in which he sought damages against appellee for the injury inflicted 948
15. in an action against a coal mining company by an administrator for the killing of his intestate by a falling "stump," an instruction upon contributory negligence should have been given. The work of taking out "stumps" in a coal mine is hazardous, only experienced men are put at such work, and they must exercise precaution; and whether the deceased used proper care was a question for the jury, which they might determine from the circumstances of the falling of the roof as well as the testimony of the witnesses 1117
16. an instruction that assumed that the mine was in a dangerous condition was objectionable 1117
17. statements of the section boss made upon the day of the accident were not competent as substantive evidence against appellant . . . 1117

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—See Attachments.DECEASED PERSONS—See Evidence, 2—

1. declarations by a person, since deceased, and who was suffering from a physical injury, made to her physician, as to anything it was necessary for him to know in order to treat her injuries intelligently, are competent to be given in evidence as part of the res gestæ 224
2. if the patient is suffering it is necessary for the physician to know where the pain is and its character; also how the injury was inflicted, whether by a blow on the head or how she was otherwise hurt; but it was wholly immaterial to his understanding of the case whether she fell on a bridge or on ice, or elsewhere, and statements by her to her physician as to where she fell are incompetent. 224

DEED BY HUSBAND TO WIFE—See Husband and Wife—

where a husband made a deed conveying one-half of certain real estate to his wife and the other half to his stepdaughter, reserving a life estate therein in all of the property, but did not deliver the deed to either of the grantees, nor apprise either of them of its execution, but did subsequently give his wife a sealed envelope containing said deed with the request to hold it for him until he called for it, but without informing her of its contents, such acts did not divest the grantor of control or dominion over the deed, and was not an acceptance by the wife of the deed either for herself or for the other grantee. 111

DEEDS—See Infants, 6; Notice—

1. where a house and lot in this State was conveyed by a mother to her daughter, and the deed left by the grantor with her agent in this State for record in the county where the property was situated, and it was so recorded, the presumption arises that there was both a delivery and acceptance of the deed 124
2. a deed made by a son and heir to his undivided interest in land which had descended to him from his deceased father in which the son's wife did not join, does not divest the wife of her contingent right to dower in her husband's interest therein . . . 226
3. a deed made by a married woman of her interest in land descended to her from her deceased father, in which the husband did not join, is void, as a married woman can not alone convey her real estate. 227

DEEDS—Continued.

Page.

4. the deed of an "exceptancy" to land that a child may inherit from a parent, made while the parent is living is void 227
5. a father conveyed land to his daughter and her son, the daughter then having another child (who was a daughter), and thereafter when both children became of age the mother and son decided to convey one-third of the land to the daughter, who was then married, and the mother also had remarried, and in making deeds of partition the draftsman, in preparing the deeds, by mistake conveyed the mother's lot to her and her husband, and the daughter's lot to her and her husband. In an action on a mortgage executed by the husbands of the mother and daughter, respectively, on the land, in which their wives did not join, and in five years after the making of the deed of partition aforesaid, Held—It was error to enforce said mortgage where in a defense by the two wives it was alleged and proven that the conveyance to the husbands, respectively, was made by mistake, and the mortgagees knew of said mistake at the time of the execution of the mortgage..... 576
6. where a deed to a schoolhouse lot shows that it was made for the consideration of $35, paid in hand, although it purports to convey the lot to the "trustees of a school for the use and purposes herein expressed and for no other use whatsoever," such deed shows that the grantor was not a donor of a charity. The conveyance was made for a valuable consideration and for a presumptively commensurable consideration, without any reserved reversion and in such case the property does not revert.... 617
7. a deed was made by Robert George and wife in 1835 to Jas. D. George for six tracts of land, containing 540 acres, in which the habendum clause contained the following reservation: "To have and to hold the said tract or parcel of land with its appurtenances unto the said Jas. D. George and his heirs forever, with the exception of all the coal banks, and the said Robt. George and wife holding the right to them, and the privilege of a way to the different banks of coal with a wagon and team." Held—In view of the entire language and the circumstances under which it was made, when the grantor reserved all the coal banks he referred to the veins of coal under the ground, and not merely to such as had been opened, as there had been little or no development of coal land at that time, and the purpose of the grantor was to reserve the coal under the land 804
8. a deed was executed by D. to N. for land in which D. retained a life interest, and said deed was delivered to G., with written directions signed by both grantor and grantee that G. should surrender it to the grantor whenever it should be demanded by him, and the grantor then had the right to destroy it; but if not so demanded by grantor in his lifetime it should then be filed by G. in the proper office for record. The grantor died leaving a will which was executed before the deed, and without having demanded the deed from G., or in any way undertaking to cancel it, and upon the death of grantor G. filed the deed for record in the proper office. Held—That the deed and written contract must be read together, and by same the grantor vested the fee in the grantees, reserving to himself a life estate, with power to cancel the deed in a certain way, and the deed not having been defeated in the manner prescribed, became absolute at his death. 1043
9. a deed made March 21, 1885, by Eli Hall and wife to their son, Joseph Hall, the granting clause of which reads as follows: "This indenture, made and entered into by Eli Hall and Polly Hall, of the first part, and Joseph Hall and his children, of the second part," all of Letcher county, Kentucky, for 600 acres of land. The habendum clause is as follows: "We, the party of the first part, doth bargain, sell and convey the above-named tract of land, and will warrant and defend the title of the same from us, and our heirs and assigns and from all others unto the said Joseph Hall and his children forever, etc." At the date of the conveyance Joseph Hall had some children living and others were subsequently born. Held—That Joseph Hall was entitled only to a life estate in the land, and his children born, and thereafter born, take the remainder in fee 1185

DEPOSITIONS—

while the Virginia officer in his certificate to the depositions does not certify that the witnesses were sworn, he does so state in the caption, and the whole deposition, including the caption, must be read, and when so read it sufficiently appears that the witnesses were sworn 254

DESCENT—See Wills, 3.

DEVICE—See Local Option, 9.

DEVISE—

where decedent devised so much to appellant, but such devise was not equal to the whole debt claimed by him, a demurrer was properly sustained to a plea of the devise. If the money was due by contract the deceased had no right to attach conditions to its payment as was done. Moreover, the will contains express provisions as to the payment of debts, and this fact negatives the idea that the bequest was intended as a payment 12

DISTILLERIES—See Local Option, 11.

DIVORCE—See Husband and Wife, 1, 11.

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY—See Husband and Wife, 1, 11—

1. while the action of the chancellor in granting the divorce in this case can not be revised, he should have adjudged appellant alimony. She was turned out without anything and without sufficient excuse. The appellee is worth $3,500 after the payment of his debts and had capacity to earn money, while she has little or no such capacity. From the circumstances an allowance to her of $1,000 would be reasonable, and this should be adjudged her .. 516

2. in an action divorcing the husband, on the ground of abandonment by the wife for one year, it appearing that the husband was in fault, the wife was entitled to alimony, and the husband having sold a part of his property and carried away the proceeds, leaving his wife in possession of real estate worth from $4,500 to $5,000, of the rental value of $40 to $45 per month for the support of herself and two minor children, the use of which the court adjudged to the wife as well as the custody and control of their two infant children, on appeal by the husband on the ground of excessive alimony and the custody of the children, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed, the court having reserved the right to modify the judgment as to care, custody and support of the children, and as to the title, use and control of the property. 533

3. where the husband died before a judgment of divorce and alimony that had been agreed upon between him and his wife was rendered, she owned a potential right of dower in his lands, and can not be barred of this by a verbal contract, and the contract relied upon in settlement of her claim being void as to the land, it was void as to all of his property, but the court, instead of adjudging a sale of the part of the land belonging to her and the payment of the proceeds to her, should have allotted dower to her for life. 998

4. where one conveyed land upon a condition which was not fulfilled and died with the legal title in him, a delivery of the deed by his widow can not be made without the consent of all of the parties to the transaction, because she can not, by her election, make a contract for them, and the purchaser, under such a contract, is entitled to a return of the money paid by him, with interest, and must be charged with a reasonable rent for the land while he had it in possession..... 998

DOMESTIC RELATIONS—See Master and Servant, 9, 12.

DOMICILE—See Infants, 1.

DRUGGISTS—

1. in an action by the administrator against a druggist for causing the death of his intestate by selling her strychnine for morphine, and which was administered to her by her nurse, without the knowledge of either herself or nurse that it was strychnine, it was error in the court to strike out of the petition the averment that the defendant, Mudd, who sold and delivered the strychnine, "wrapped it in a paper without any mark or label on the outside of the package, designating the name of the poison contained therein, or the name of any antidote therefor; that at the time he, Mudd, was not a registered pharmacist, nor did he have a certificate of registration from the Kentucky State Board of Pharmacists authorizing him to sell or dispense drugs, medicines

DRUGGISTS—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|---|-------|
| or poisons, nor was he at the time legally authorized by law to sell or dispense drugs, medicines or poisons; that at said time defendant Mudd did not make any inquiry as to the purpose for which said strychnine was to be used, nor did he satisfy himself that said poison was to be used for legitimate purposes" | 412 |
| 2. the failure to observe a statutory regulation in the sale of poisonous drugs is per se a neglect of duty as well as neglect of care, and, where special damage flows from it, there exists, prima facie, a case of actionable negligence and it is, therefore, a material and appropriate averment in setting out a cause of action to have charged a specific breach of the statute although defendants may have been otherwise negligent in the transaction so as to have been liable to the plaintiff therefor | 412. |
| 3. in an action by an administrator against druggists for causing the death of his intestate by selling her strychnine for morphine, it was error in the court to strike from the petition an allegation that "plaintiff's intestate was caused to suffer intense pain and anguish in consequence of having had the strychnine given to her." The proper practice was, by motion, to require the plaintiff to elect whether he would prosecute his action for his "intestate's death" or for her "pain and suffering" | 412. |
| 4. where death is caused by the negligent sale by a druggist of strychnine for morphine, which was negligently administered to the deceased by her nurse, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that "if they believed from the evidence that the decedent or her agents, or servants acting for or attending on her, negligently failed to open the package (containing the strychnine), or negligently failed to look at the label thereof, or negligently failed to discover the nature and warning of said label or negligently failed to examine the character of the drug purchased and administered to the decedent, then in law the decedent is chargeable with contributory negligence, and in that event the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find" | 412. |
| 5. if decedent herself was so negligent in the matter, but for which the injury to her would not have occurred, her estate ought not to recover, under the rule of contributory negligence prevailing in this State, but the fact that her nurse or attendant was negligent in administering the strychnine to her, will not excuse the concurrent negligence of the druggist in furnishing the drug whereby the wrong drug was provided. Both the servant and the druggists in such case are joint tortfeasors, and both liable in damages | 412. |
| 6. the jury should have been instructed that if the defendant, Mudd, who was not a licensed pharmacist, sold to Allen Sutton, for his mother, strychnine, in quantity of five grains or more, without inquiring the purpose for which it was intended, and without entering in a book kept for that purpose the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold, and the purpose for which it was intended, and that Nannie Sutton came to her death by reason of such failure, if any there was, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find | 412 |
| 7. a druggist and his customer are not under the same degree of care in the furnishing and taking of poison. The latter's duty is to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, while the former is required to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of the public dealing with him | 412 |

DYING DECLARATIONS—See Criminal Law, 20, 22.

EASEMENT—

- | | |
|--|-----|
| 1. in an action by appellant claiming an easement by prescription over an adjacent private alley as an appurtenant to his lot, and charging that appellee had obstructed it by building a fence across it, an answer by appellee denying that appellant owned or had ever used the passway as a matter of right, or at all, and that as agent of the owners of the fee in the passway he had built the fence across it, presented a good defense to the action | 682 |
| 2. where appellant had erected a barbed wire fence along appellee's easement without his consent, under the provisions of section 1784, Kentucky Statutes, he was properly enjoined from maintaining such fence | 782 |

- EASEMENT—Continued. Page.
8. the evidence clearly establishing the use of the passway in controversy by prescription, appellant has no cause to complain of the judgment fixing the width of the passway at eighteen feet... 783
- ELECTIONS—See Local Option, 2, 8, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8—
1. in an election contest where the returns of a precinct were signed only by the clerk of the election, but on the trial the other officers testified to their accuracy and offered to sign them, this was not sufficient to justify the throwing out of the precinct. The officers should have been allowed to sign the returns, but the failure of the court to have this done worked no substantial prejudice to appellant... 588
2. while in some cases where men were allowed to vote on the table, signs were made in some way, by somebody on both sides, to those on the outside, indicating how such votes were cast, still this did not occur often, and the ends of justice would seem to be done by throwing out the vote cast on the table, where the voter was not sworn, and not throw out the precinct... 588
3. under Kentucky Statutes, section 1475, providing that where one is "so physically disabled as to be unable to mark his ballot and shall so declare on oath," the judges of the election must decide as to what is "sufficient physical disability" if the voter is sworn and states that he is physically unable to mark his ballot, and such vote must be counted although the judges may err in their judgment as to such disability. The question must be decided by them in the exercise of their discretion, and the voter is not to be disfranchised because they make a mistake... 588
4. the election law of October 24, 1900, Kentucky Statutes, section 1596a, subsection 2, provides that the sheriff of the county by virtue of his office shall be a member of the election board, * * * and it provided that "where there is no sheriff, or where from other causes the sheriff can not act the circuit clerk shall act in his place." By an act approved March 22, 1904, the words last above quoted were changed so as to read as follows: "In counties where there is no sheriff, and in counties containing cities of the second class, or where from any cause the sheriff can not act, the circuit clerk of the county shall be a member of the board instead of the sheriff and shall act in his place, and is given all the rights and powers that are given to sheriffs under this section." Section 59 of the Constitution provides that the general assembly shall not pass any local or special act "to provide for conducting elections." It also provides that in all cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted. Held—That the amended act of March 22, 1904, providing that "in counties containing cities of the second class the circuit clerk of the county shall be a member of the election board instead of the sheriff," is special legislation, and, therefore, unconstitutional and void... 1187
- EMINENT DOMAIN—See Railroads, 38.
- EMOTIONAL INSANITY—See Homicide, 5.
- ERRORS NOT EXCEPTED TO—See Practice—
- this court can not consider any alleged improper remarks made by the trial judge to appellant's counsel in the hearing of the jury unless it is shown by the bill of exceptions to have been excepted to at the time... 193
- ESCHEAT—See Lands—
1. in this action to recover lands on the ground that it had escheated to the Commonwealth, sections 1606 to 1623, Kentucky Statutes, do not give the right to maintain the action... 153
2. Constitution, section 192, and Kentucky Statutes, section 567, providing "that no corporation * * * shall hold any real estate in this State except such as may be proper and necessary for carrying on its legitimate business for a longer period than five years under penalty of escheat," an escheator can not maintain an action under section 1606, Kentucky Statutes, to have the title to a tract of land owned by a foreign corporation in Ballard county to vest in the Commonwealth, as it is only to land mentioned in said section 1606 that the escheator has authority to maintain an action to escheat... 170
- ESTATES—See Assignee, 1; Wills, 31, 36.

ESTOPPEL—See Actions, 7; Contracts; Constructive Trust; Land, 7, 31; Liens, 8; Passways, 2—

1. an owner of land whose grantors procured the charter authorizing the drainage of swamp lands and the assessment of the adjacent lands therefor, is stopped to deny the validity of the law under which the assessment is made. 278
2. in such case the law must imply a request for the ten-year payment, whether it was made or not, and the debtor by his acquiescence therein is estopped to deny it. 286
3. pleas of res judicata and estoppel considered by the court under the facts in the record, and held to have been properly overruled by the court 298

EVIDENCE—See Accounts, 2, 5; Bill of Exceptions, 1; Contracts, 4, 8, 18; Criminal Law, 1, 2, 21, 45; Homicide, 1, 2, 12; Lands, 1, 11, 12, 16, 36; Life Insurance, 18; Pleading, 5; Street Railway, 12—

1. upon the trial of appellant upon motion of the Commonwealth's attorney the court permitted the jury in charge of the sheriff to go upon the premises where the tragedy occurred, the judge, the accused and his counsel all being present. When at the scene one of the jurors requested the court to have the accused point out to them the particular spot where he had testified he had hidden his pistol. The judge having some doubt about this took the accused and his counsel aside, and no objection being made, permitted the accused to point out to the jury the spot. Upon the return of the jury objection was made by appellant for the first time as to what had taken place. Held—This was not error, and no reason appears why the court should have not tried the whole case at the place where the tragedy occurred if it had suited his convenience. 8
2. where the clothing of the deceased had been carried out of the State by his widow, it was competent to prove the condition of the clothing just after the homicide occurred. The witnesses testified to physical facts of which they were cognizant 8
3. evidence to the effect that notches were cut upon appellant's pistol was immaterial except as he had admitted that they were put there to indicate the number of men he had killed. Had there been doubt as to its identity, then evidence of such marks would have been admissible. There was no evidence that appellant had ever fired his pistol at any other person, and the admission of evidence as to marks upon it does not seem to have been prejudicial 188
4. the testimony of the physician who examined the wounds of deceased, to the effect that the wound in the head tended to hasten the death of deceased, was immaterial as the appellant admitted that he killed deceased and the physician had already stated that a knife wound in left breast was a fatal wound. 145
5. where the evidence shows a total failure of proof to sustain plaintiff's action, he was not damaged by the failure of the court to award him a jury to try the action 489
6. the evidence upon this appeal examined and held to support the judgment, which is, therefore, affirmed. It was the province of the jury to pass upon the evidence, and if it was at all it was not so flagrantly against the weight of the evidence as to authorize the granting of a new trial. 747

EXEMPTIONS—See Homestead, 1; Taxation, 5.

EX PARTE SETTLEMENT—

- an ex parte settlement made by commissioners after the sheriff's term of office had expired, and after he had left the State, and of which he had no notice, though filed in the county clerk's office and recorded, can not be treated as a confirmed settlement made under the statute 67

FAILURE TO DELIVER TICKET—

- a railroad ticket from St. Louis, Mo., to Greenville, Ky., was paid for at Greenville, and a telegram sent to the agent at St. Louis to furnish R. Head such ticket, the object being to get R. Head to reach Greenville in time for his father's funeral; and another telegram was sent to R. Head, by his guardian, to call at "Illinois Central" for the ticket. R. Head called at the city office in St. Louis, which the agent said was the right place for the ticket to be, and after waiting two days found it at the Union

FAILURE TO DELIVER TICKET.—

Page.

Station'' and reached home after his father's burial. Held—That in an action for damages by R. Head for delay in getting the ticket the measure of damages is simply a reasonable compensation for the time lost and any expense incurred by reason thereof. 270

FEDERAL CORPORATION—Insurance, Life, 22.FEDERAL COURTS—

1. the circuit courts of the United States have all the appliances which are needed for the trial of any criminal case. They adopt and apply the laws of the State in civil cases, and there is no more difficulty in administering the State's criminal law. They are not foreign courts. The Constitution has made them courts within the States to administer the laws of the States in certain cases, and so long as they keep within the jurisdiction assigned to them their general powers are adequate to the trial of any case. 1121
2. in order to work a transfer of jurisdiction from the State to the Federal courts pursuant to section 641, United States Revised Statutes, three things are essential: First, it must appear that the defendant has a right that he is entitled to have enforced; second, such right must appear to be secured to him by a law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, that is, a right secured to him by the equal protection of the law's clause of the fourteenth amendment; and, third it must appear that the defendant is denied such right, or can not enforce it in the State courts having jurisdiction of the prosecution against him within the meaning of section 641 1121
3. the defendant has the right to have the jurors from which the jury is to be empaneled selected from persons possessing the statutory qualifications without discrimination against those of them who are members of the same political party as defendant, because of their belonging to such party, and that this right is secured to him by the equal protection of the laws as guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment. 1121
4. the defendant is entitled to have his case removed from the State to the Federal court if he is denied, or can not enforce, the rights guaranteed to him by the fourteenth amendment. 1121
5. no reply having been filed by the Commonwealth of Kentucky to the petition for a removal, and no issue having been taken with the defendant as to its allegations, they must be taken as true except as they may be contradicted by the transcript of the record of the trial in the lower court. 1121
6. a refusal to hear evidence offered by a defendant in a criminal prosecution that he has been illegally discriminated against in the selection of jurors, is a violation of the fourteenth amendment and a denial of the equal protection of the laws 1121
7. this defendant can not enforce his right to the equal protection of the laws in the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, if denied in the circuit court, because of a legislative provision embodied in section 281 of Kentucky Criminal Code, to the effect that decisions of the trial court upon challenges to the panel and for cause, upon notice to set aside an indictment and upon motions for a new trial, shall not be subject to exception 1121
8. the legislature has provided that the Court of Appeals of Kentucky shall not have jurisdiction to review challenges to the jurors in criminal prosecutions for any cause whatsoever, and that the action of the circuit court is final in regard thereto . . . 1121
9. the Court of Appeals was correct in its ruling declining to pass upon the Federal question raised by the defendant in regard to the selection of jurors from which were selected the jury that tried him. It has not denied him the equal protection of the laws because it had no jurisdiction to pass on the question 1121
10. the question as to who was governor of Kentucky on the 10th of March, 1900, and as to the validity of the Taylor pardon, is a local one, and having been determined by the Kentucky Court of Appeals that Beckham was then governor, and that the pardon was invalid, this court is concluded by the judgment of that court. 1121
11. by virtue of the second paragraph of the petition the removal proceedings have worked a transfer of jurisdiction within the meaning of section 641, United States Revised Statutes. 1121

FINAL ORDERS—See Appeals, 12; Local Option, 2.

Page.

FINDING OF CHANCELLOR—

1. while the finding of a chancellor upon a judgment of fact is not given the same weight as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, still some weight is given to it, and it will not be disturbed on the facts where under all the evidence the mind is left in doubt as to its truth..... 668
2. where appellee had a man to count the staves in controversy, who kept an account of the count of staves in a book which he testified was correct, and appellants being acquainted with the arrangement, employed the same man to make the count, no other count being produced, the chancellor was authorized to uphold this count to hold that the book was the best evidence of the staves delivered..... 668
3. the facts in this case examined and held insufficient to disturb the finding of the chancellor..... 692

FISCAL COURTS—

1. the fiscal court has no authority to allow road overseers $50 per year, or any compensation for their services as overseers, and an order of said court making such allowance is void... 35
2. the fiscal court of a county can not fix the compensation of a county health officer in advance of rendering the service as it can not then be known what service he may be required to render. 37
3. the fiscal affairs of a county are under the control of the fiscal court, and the county judge has no authority to make any contract for the county unless specially authorized to do so by statute, and there is no statute authorizing him to employ counsel for the county or to contract with attorneys for their fees... 319
4. under sections 724, 731 of the Civil Code, regulating appeals from fiscal courts to the circuit court, such cases are to be tried anew when appealed to the circuit court as if no judgment had been rendered, and no bill of exceptions is necessary..... 850
5. the fiscal court is one of limited jurisdiction and authority, and has no power to make an assessment of the property of the county for taxation, and has no control over the county assessor, and such court has no authority to employ a surveyor or to purchase plats of land made by such surveyor in order to enable the county assessor to fix the boundary of lands to be assessed for taxation in said county..... 850

FORCIBLE ENTRY—

1. when an amendment does not change, but only perfects, the cause of action it should be filed... 417
2. where a writ of forcible entry was sued out after two years from the time the forcible entry complained of was committed, upon the trial of the traverse a peremptory instruction by the court to find for the defendants was proper..... 796
3. an agreement to arbitrate a controversy as to the possession of land, no change whatever in the possession taking place, was not a surrender of possession, and this being true appellants had not the actual possession of the property, and, therefore, there was no forcible entry..... 796
4. where in a forcible detainer proceeding the defendant appealed from a judgment of the circuit court awarding a writ of restitution against him, by executing a supersedeas bond under section 748 of the Civil Code, instead of a traverse bond under section 463 of the Code, the covenant of such supersedeas bond does not cover an attorney's fee as part of the costs recoverable thereon... 928
5. where a supersedeas bond has been executed by the appellant with insufficient surety, and on the motion of appellee a new bond is required to be executed by appellant with sufficient surety pending the appeal, the new bond is not limited in its operation to the time elapsing between the date of the execution and the day upon which the property was returned to the owner, but relates back and covers the period between the execution of the first bond, the surety of which was adjudged insufficient, and the date of the return of the property to the owner... 929
6. where in a written lease between a landlord and tenant for the rent of a distillery, both of whom were experienced distillers, fixing the annual rental at $1,000, in an action on the super-

FORCIBLE ENTRY—Continued.

Page.

sedas bond for the damages in detaining the property, by the lessor against the lessee, the measure of damages for the rent is at the rate of $1,000 per year for the time it was so detained, and as appellant was entitled to recover whatever damages accrued to the property during the period covered by the supersedeas bond, due to the negligence of the party detaining it, such party is liable for the blowing down of the smoke stacks if it resulted from his failure to properly secure it, and for other damages of a similar kind which accrued because of his failure to take such care of it as a prudent owner would of his property as well as for all property taken by theft, which he could, by diligence, have prevented by repairing the house or employing a watchman to protect it 929

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—

1. Kentucky Statutes, sections 4077 to 4091, inclusive, prescribe an elaborate system for the taxation of the franchises of all corporations, whether foreign or native, doing business in this State, and sections 4090 and 4091 are applicable to foreign corporations alone. These show conclusively the legislative intent to tax the franchises as foreign corporations, and not as naturalized corporations. 1084
2. the cardinal principle of ad valorem taxation in Kentucky is that all property not specifically exempt therefrom by the Constitution, whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, and whether owned by individuals or corporations, must, for the benefit of each taxing jurisdiction in which it is liable, be taxed once and no more 1084

FOREIGN WILL—

where a will was made and duly probated in another State and subsequently presented for ancillary probate in this State in the county where land devised therein is situated, the judgment of the court admitting it to probate can not be collaterally attacked 124

FORMER APPEAL—

1. all questions of law settled upon a former appeal are res judicata upon a second appeal of the same case. 289
2. the judgment of sale recites that it was made by agreement of all the stockholders, both in their individual and corporate capacity, and from its language the corporation entered its appearance, and is bound by the order of sale 289
3. the additional evidence taken after the rendition of the former opinion in this case, together with the evidence in the former record, is sufficient to show that the land in controversy is covered and included in the Pickett and Marshall patent, establishing the contention of appellees. 299

FRANCHISES—See Corporations, 1.FRAUD OR MISTAKE—See Contracts, 81, 82; Railroads, 44—

where an action for fraud or mistake is brought after five years from the making of the mistake or the perpetration of the fraud, the plaintiff must allege and prove that he discovered it within five years before the bringing of the suit, and must allege and prove facts showing that he could not, by reasonable diligence, have discovered it sooner. 581

FRAUD—See Deeds, 1; Master and Servant—

1. in this action upon a note executed by appellant for shares of stock in a chair company, in which plaintiff alleges fraud and misrepresentation in its purchase, evidence examined, and Held—That there was neither fraud nor misrepresentation in said sale. 404
2. even if there had been misrepresentation in the sale, the fact that appellant was elected a director and president of the chair company, and after knowing all about its financial condition, continued to pay the interest on the note executed therefor, was an acquiescence in, and an affirmation of, the purchase 404

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—

it appearing that Morgan the day before judgment herein was rendered against him conveyed twenty five acres of land to his sons for the recited consideration of $40; that the land was worth five times that amount, and that the sons were unmarried and lived with him and that this land was the only property he had that was subject to execution, the conveyance was properly adjudged fraudulent and the deed cancelled 572

GATES—See Roads and Passways, 2.

Page.

GIFTS—

1. where appellant delivered a note to her daughter without any assignment of it, it is not reasonable to suppose that she made an absolute gift of it. Had that been her intention she would have endorsed it 942
2. in this action to recover of appellee the value of a note which appellant claims she left with her for collection the claim of appellee that it was a gift to her is not sustained by the evidence, and the fact that there was no assignment of the note endorsed upon it is presumptive of the fact that it was not a gift, but placed with the appellee for collection as appellant contends 942

GUARANTY—See Actions, 2—

1. in an action by plaintiff, alleging that he was induced by defendant to invest money in a company in which defendant represented that he was a stockholder, and that it was a safe, legitimate and prosperous business, and that he, defendant, would guarantee plaintiff a profit of 20 per cent. on February 1, thereafter, and in which he invested $467.50, and that defendant has failed to pay plaintiff any part of the money advanced, or one cent of the profits thereon, and has wholly failed to keep and perform any part of his promise, obligation and guaranty with plaintiff, and in which he seeks to recover the sum of $561. Held —That a demurrer to the petition was properly sustained 978
2. the petition contains no allegation of a breach, the warranty of which is the basis of the action, no allegation that the company did not return to plaintiff the money he invested in it with 20 per cent. profit on or before February 1, 1902, and further, it fails to allege that the guaranty sued on was in writing, which is required under subsection 4 of section 470, Kentucky Statutes, and known as the statute of frauds 979

GUARDIAN AD LITEM—See Attorneys, 1.

GUARDIANS—See Office and Officer, 2, 8.

GUARDIAN AND WARD—

1. where a ward had an estate sufficient to support it there was no necessity for the father to contribute to its support... 1080
2. under the provisions of section 2032, Kentucky Statutes, it is the duty of the guardian to maintain and educate the ward out of its own estate... 1080

HEARSAY—See Life Insurance, 18.

HEIRS—See Slaves.

HOMESTEADS—See Husband and Wife, 4; Lands—

1. under Kentucky Statutes, section 1707, providing that "the homestead shall be for the use of the widow * * * and the unmarried infant children of the husband, * * * but the termination of the widow's occupancy shall not affect the children," * * * where an infant who occupies a homestead under said act marries, it thereby becomes a member of another or new family, and its right to the homestead ceases... 191
2. a homestead right exists when the claimant is in occupancy of it as a housekeeper in good faith at the time the attempt is made to subject it by execution to the payment of a debt, although at the time the debt was contracted the claimant was unmarried and did not then live on the land or claim it as a homestead ... 1171
3. where a wife owned a homestead before her marriage, which she inherited, and she and her husband rented and lived on an adjoining place and used the wife's land in connection therewith, by cultivating part of it and using the balance for pasture purposes, the wife is entitled to a homestead therein, and such homestead of the wife continues after her death for the benefit of the surviving husband ... 1171

HOMICIDE—See Change of Venue, 8, 4; Criminal Law, 15, 19; Druggists, 4, 6—

1. it was not error for the court to overrule the motion for a continuance where it appeared that one of the persons named in the affidavit was beyond the jurisdiction of the court and the other in the county, and his attendance could be procured which was afterwards done. While section 120 of the Criminal Code requires that the names of the witnesses before the grand jury shall be placed on the indictment, there is no rule of law which

HOMICIDE—Continued.Page.

- prevents the Commonwealth from calling additional witnesses upon the trial of the case 8
2. on the trial of one for homicide, where the evidence shows that deceased accosted defendant with an insulting remark, and invited him to "come out and take his medicine," whereupon defendant went into his house, got a pistol and returned, when he and deceased engaged in a shooting match till deceased threw down his gun, picked up an axe and continued the fight with it, defendant retreating and shooting as he went, the evidence justified the submission to the jury the question of a mutual and willing combat, as was done by the trial court. 115
3. that the defendant retreated during the conflict seems certain, but a retreat is not necessarily an abandonment. It may be only a falling back on a better position. In order to excuse one who begins a conflict the fight must be abandoned in good faith and in fact. It must be something more than a mental determination to quit. It ought to apprise the other party that his assailant has quit the fight and has relieved him of the necessity for defense which had been imposed on him by the assailant's conduct 115
4. in a prosecution against one for murder in killing a man who had debauched the defendant's wife and caused their separation, it is competent for the defendant to testify that his wife told him immediately before the shooting that deceased had threatened his life, and would kill him rather than let her return and live with him 876
5. if the fact be that deceased had violated the sanctity of defendant's home, estranged his wife's affections, debauched her person, and threatened his life if he interfere with a continuance of his illicit relations, forcing his presence on them for that purpose, it may well be supposed that the passion of the husband was aroused to an uncontrollable extent; and whether it was such as to have created an emotional insanity so as for the time to dethrone the reason of the outraged husband, or whether it merely reduced the homicide to manslaughter, was a question which, under the circumstances, should have been submitted to the jury. 877
6. on the trial of one for murder in the killing of a man who had debauched his wife it was error in the court to admit evidence that the defendant had committed adulterous acts himself, or that he had shot another man, or that he had said that deceased was the third man he had shot. 877
7. on the trial of one for murder it was error in the court to allow the attorney for the Commonwealth, against the objection of the defendant, to refer to an affidavit admitted as evidence for the defendant, as the "supposed testimony of the absent witnesses, but was not in fact their testimony, but merely an affidavit filed on behalf of the defendant" 877
8. on the trial of defendant for the assassination of James Cockrell, by shooting him from the window of the upper story of the courthouse while deceased was standing on the street below, the defense being an alibi, it was error in the court to allow a witness for the Commonwealth to state in his testimony that he, witness, was in the office of P., and that when the shooting occurred P. went to the front window of his office, and while looking out of the window and apparently at those doing the shooting, called out the name "Curtis Jett." This evidence was incompetent as hearsay. The witness himself did not see Curtis Jett, but was allowed to state that P. said he saw him. The fact that the court required the witness to eliminate the statement "he called the name of Curtis Jett," and substitute therefor "he called attention to Curtis Jett," does not alter the incompetency of the testimony 608
9. where defendant had been tried with another defendant in the same county within less than a month prior to this trial for another murder, in which both the defendants were convicted and their punishment fixed at a life sentence in the penitentiary, and public opinion was greatly inflamed because the death penalty was not inflicted, and it was shown that on this last trial two of defendant's counsel, on whom he mainly relied in his de-

HOMICIDE—Continued.

Page.

- fense, were necessarily absent, and who were acquainted with defendant's witnesses, while the remaining counsel was a stranger to them, the defendant having been in jail for four months by change of venue, 100 miles from his home, and where his witnesses lived, the court erred in overruling his motion for a continuance and forcing him to trial under these exceptional circumstances 608
10. where it is shown by the evidence that the deceased had enmity against four persons who were jointly indicted for killing him, all growing out of the same transaction, proof of threats made by deceased against all or any one of the four was competent on a separate trial of any one of them for the killing of deceased, whether communicated to defendants or not, especially as bearing on the question of whether deceased was the aggressor and assailant at the time he was killed 1090
11. on a separate trial of defendant, C. H. Wheeler, who was jointly indicted with his father and two others for killing deceased, where the evidence shows that deceased was killed by some one of the four acting together, it was error in the court to instruct the jury that "if you believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that W. P. K., M. K. and L. W., with the consent and acquiescence of and aided and abetted by defendant, C. H. W., were armed with deadly weapons and sought deceased with intent to kill him, or doing him some other great bodily harm, or first attacked or assaulted him with such intent, then defendant can not avail himself of his plea of self-defense," as it in effect advised the jury that if defendant at any time aided or abetted his codefendants to seek deceased, armed and with the intention of killing him, he was thereby deprived of the right to defend himself or them from danger, real or apparent, at the hands of deceased, though neither defendant nor his codefendants may have made an attempt to carry out the intention of killing deceased, or were first attacked by him 1090
12. the court in lieu of the instruction given should on a retrial instruct the jury that if they believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that appellant or his codefendants, or any of them, commenced the difficulty with deceased by making the first demonstration to shoot, or if he or they and deceased met, armed, determined on a conflict, and on meeting, the combat was engaged in by mutual consent, then, in either event, appellant could not rely on the right of self-defense, nor act in defense of his codefendants 1090
13. where it was shown on the trial of accused for the killing of two brothers on August 29, for which he was indicted by special grand jury on August 31, and his trial had on September 10, by his affidavit for a continuance, that he was too poor to employ counsel, and by reason of a severe wound in the head inflicted in the affray by one of the brothers, from which he was suffering as to be unable to communicate with the counsel appointed to defend him, so as to properly prepare his defense, and by reason of the great excitement in the community because of the double homicide, feeling ran high against him and he was in danger of mob violence, which in a great measure prevented his preparation for trial, his motion for a continuance should have been sustained 1168
14. where on the trial of accused for the killing of two brothers there was proof to the effect that the accused was assaulted by them, one striking him on the head with a jug, felling him to the ground before he shot, and that the assault was concerted by the brothers, the court in defining defendant's right to act in self-defense should not have limited it to danger, real or apparent, at the hands of one of them, but the court should have told the jury that if they believe from the evidence that accused was first assaulted by the two acting in concert, and that there was about to be inflicted on him immediate death or great bodily harm at their hands, or at the hands of either of them, that the accused had the right to use such force as was necessary, or as to him, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, appeared to be necessary to repel the assault or threatened danger, real or to him apparent even to the taking of the lives of his assailants 1168

HOUSEBREAKING—See Criminal Law, 15, 17.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—See Deeds by Husband to Wife, 1; Divorce and Alimony, 1, 4; Sale of Lands, 1, 8—

Page

1. in an action by the husband against his wife, in which he obtained a divorce on the ground of her lewd and lascivious conduct, and in which she filed answer denying the allegations of the petition and filed a cross petition asking a divorce from him for cruel and inhuman treatment, the wife is entitled to her costs, including a reasonable attorney fee to be paid by the husband, unless it is shown that she has ample estate out of which to pay her costs and attorneys, although the wife was in fault on the merits of the suit for divorce 120
2. a judgment allotting alimony to the wife in land should be only an estate in the wife for her life 435
3. in an action by a judgment creditor against a debtor and his wife to set aside a deed made to the wife for land alleged to have been paid for by the husband, and to subject it to the payment of the husband's debts, where the evidence conduced to show that the wife had not a great while before the conveyance received from her father's estate money or property equal to the consideration paid for the land, fraud will not be presumed in making the conveyance in the absence of evidence to the contrary 467
4. in an action by a creditor of the husband to set aside a deed made to his wife, which is shown to have been paid for by property of the husband which at the time was exempt to the husband under the statutes, and it is also shown that the land so conveyed is occupied by the husband and wife as a homestead, and is of less value than $1,000, it can not be subjected to the payment of the husband's debts, and the deed to the wife was not fraudulent.... 468
5. under Civil Code, section 34, subsection 4, which provides that "if a husband deserts his wife she may bring or defend for him any action which he might bring or defend," in an action by the judgment creditors of a nonresident husband to subject his homestead to the payment of their judgments the wife may intervene, alleging that the land was the home of her husband, who had deserted her and her children, and will be allowed to defend for him and establish her homestead... 555
6. under Civil Code, section 410, providing that before judgment is rendered against a defendant constructively summoned, and who has not appeared, a bond shall be executed with good security, approved by the court, to the effect that if the defendant shall procure a vacation or modification of the judgment * * * restoration shall be adjudged," it was error to sell the homestead of the husband, who was before the court only by constructive process, without the execution of the refunding bond .. 555
7. under Kentucky Statutes, section 1907, a voluntary conveyance of land by the husband to his wife without valuable consideration is void as to all debts owing by the husband at the time of such conveyance, but no evidence being shown of a fraudulent intent of the husband to defeat his subsequent debts, such conveyance was not fraudulent as to his subsequent debts .. 689
8. a married woman is not bound by a compromise of her suit made by her husband, to which she was not a party, without her knowledge or consent, and a sale of her land made under a judgment so obtained to which she objected is not valid, and should be set aside... 766
9. in an action by the wife for a divorce and alimony, where the evidence shows that their differences resulted mainly from troubles arising in attempting to raise two families of children together (both parents having children by former marriages) and that the wife was more to blame in these matters than the husband; that he was old and in bad health and needed her attention and services and desired her to remain with him that he had very little property and was a pensioner, she was not entitled to alimony, and a judgment allowing her $60 per annum is set aside 776
10. in an action by the husband against his wife for a divorce on the ground of "living separate and apart without any cohabitation for five consecutive years next before the application," an allegation in the petition that the wife "had been previously ad-

HUSBAND AND WIFE—Continued.

Page.

- judged a lunatic, and is now an incurable lunatic and confined in a sanitarium in New York, where she now resides, and that for five consecutive years next before she was adjudged a lunatic they lived separate and apart and without any cohabitation, and since that time they have continued to live separate and apart and without any cohabitation." Held—That if while she was sane she and her husband lived apart without any cohabitation for five consecutive years, a cause of action for divorce accrued to him, and this cause of action is not destroyed by the fact that she subsequently became insane 1120
11. under our statute the allegations of the petition are not to be taken as true, but must be proved, and the wife's committee may make for her any defense which she could make for herself 1120

IMPEACHING WITNESS—

1. where in an attempt to impeach the character of a witness for the Commonwealth some statements were allowed to be made by witnesses on both sides as to the character of the witness for sobriety, paying his debts, attending church and Sunday school, etc., while incompetent, was not prejudicial to appellant 561
2. where a statement was made to the jury by a sister of deceased, "that deceased had information that defendant and others were going to kill him," was immediately excluded from the consideration of the jury by the court, and they were told to disregard it, we have no right to presume that the defendant was prejudiced thereby 561

IMPLIED LIABILITY—See Auditor, 4.

IMPROPER QUESTIONS—See Criminal Law, 50.

INDEMNITY—See Contracts—

an action was brought by the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders' Association and the Citizens National Bank, which had advanced money to the association, against the subscribers to the following paper: "The Kentucky State Fair to be held by the Live Stock Breeders' Association during the week beginning September —, 1903, for the purpose of having the above described fair in or near the city of Owensboro, and of providing a fund to cover possible loss in giving said fair, the undersigned hereby subscribe the sums set opposite their names on condition that not less than — are subscribed. The loss, if any, be divided among the subscribers to the fund in proportion that each subscription bears to the whole amount subscribed." Held—That to the extent that the receipts of the association holding the fair at that point failed to pay the expenses thereof there was a deficit which in business parlance represented "a loss" 89

INDEMNITY BOND—

an indemnity bond conditioned that the surety "will make good and reimburse to the employer any pecuniary loss sustained by him of money, securities or other personal property in the possession of the employe in the discharge of the duties of his office, amounting to larceny or embezzlement," does not make the surety liable for money advanced by the employer to the employe to enable him to prosecute his work, expecting him to be charged with it all in his final settlement, or for money that the employer paid to his employe's creditors, but is responsible for money collected by the employe on contracts for the employer 248

INDEMNIFYING BONDS—

where a sheriff levied an execution on personal property in the possession of the execution debtor, which belonged to another, but before sale required an indemnifying bond from the execution creditor, the owner of the property may recover its value from the surety on such bond, unless it be shown that the execution debtor had been in possession of such property for five years prior to the levy and sale 876

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—See Landlord and Tenant, 2.

INDICTMENTS—See Criminal Law, 1, 31, 49; Local Option, 11; Railroads, 14—

1. where an indictment charged in substance that appellee had created and maintained a nuisance by unlawfully, wrongfully and injuriously cutting down and felling a large tree in the public road, leaving it there for a period of three months, it properly charged a nuisance 29

INDICTMENTS—Continued.

Page.

2. an indictment against one for breaking into a smokehouse and stealing therefrom, which fails to charge that the smokehouse belonged to or was used with a dwelling house, is insufficient to sustain a charge of felony under Kentucky Statutes, section 1162, which provides that "if any person * * * shall feloniously break any dwelling house, or any part thereof, or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and feloniously carry away anything of value, although the owner or any person may not be there, he shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years" 113
3. where appellee swapped horses with another, it being agreed that he was to receive $7.50 to boot, and after the exchange of horses had been made appellee handed the other party a $10 Confederate bill, with the remark, "give me $2.50; here is a $10 bill," he was guilty of the crime denounced by section 1208, Kentucky Statutes, and a demurrer to the indictment against him should have been overruled 265
4. a proposition to sell an article for $10, without designating the currency in which the price is to be paid, implies that the seller is to get lawful money or currency of the United States, and the use of a worthless bill, pretending that it is valid, and with intent to defraud, is a false token under the statute 365
5. an indictment found on July 20, 1904, for selling liquor without license, which alleges that the offense was committed on July 18, 1904, and that a former indictment for said offense, filed November 18, 1903, had been stolen and could not be found, is inconsistent and uncertain, and as the dates named neutralize each other, there is nothing in the indictment to show that the offense charged was committed within twelve months before the finding of the last indictment or within twelve months before the finding of the one that was stolen 278
6. an indictment which charged in substance that an order for the payment of money was altered by erasing certain words, which directed that a certain sum should be withheld, so as to collect the entire amount, is sufficient to charge forgery because it enabled him who made the erasure to obtain money by his wrongful act 739
7. it is not necessary that an entire instrument should be forged to make the crime of forgery complete. This crime may be committed by the alteration of an instrument, by erasure or addition, with intent to prejudice the rights of another 739

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE—See Insurance.

INFANTS—

1. where, after the death of her husband in Kentucky, the widow moved from Kentucky to Tennessee and took her infant child with her, intending to make Tennessee her future home, and died there after having so resided for about three years, her domicile was the domicile of her infant child, and said infant having reached the age of fourteen years had the right, under the laws of the State of Tennessee, to choose a guardian in said State, and such guardian is entitled to recover the personal estate of said infant from a guardian previously appointed in the State of Kentucky 675
2. in an action by the father against his infant child to set aside a deed made by him to them, he stated in his petition, which was sworn to, that he was divorced from their mother and her place of residence was unknown, but failed to state whether or not they had a statutory guardian. Upon this affidavit the circuit clerk, under section 745 of the Civil Code, appointed a practicing attorney at the bar, upon whom service of process was had for the two infants. Held—That under the facts stated the affidavit and the action of the clerk were only defective and not void and the judgment rendered therein was not void 1048
3. this court has no jurisdiction to correct the records of a circuit court 1048
4. in an action by a father against two of his infant children to set aside a deed made by him to them, the father was an incompetent witness to testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of or any transaction with his said infant children, who were at the time of the transaction under fourteen years of age.. 1048

INFANTS—Continued.

Page.

5. favor and affection is a sufficient and valid consideration to uphold a deed from a parent to his child. 1048
6. the fact that the father in his petition alleged that he had the deed made and recorded in the proper office was positive evidence of his intention to part with and pass the title to the land to his children. It did not require the actual manual delivery of the deed to them to make it a legal conveyance. The children being infants at the time, and the conveyance being beneficial to them equity implied an acceptance thereof on their part, but they had the right to reject the conveyance when they became of age within a reasonable time 1048

INJUNCTIONS—See Contracts, 28; Nuisance, 1, 2; Primary Elections, 8, 4—

1. in an action to enjoin a railroad company from constructing a viaduct in a street in front of plaintiff's property, where an injunction granted by the clerk was dissolved by the circuit court, it was not error in this court to permit the plaintiff to amend her petition, charging that the viaduct was a permanent obstruction and praying for damages to her property caused thereby. 184
2. section 747, Civil Code of Practice, pertaining to the suspending, modifying or continuing of an injunction during the pendency of an appeal, limits the application to this court to revise the action of the circuit court as to continuing the injunction enforced pending the appeal to "twenty days after the entry of such order," and when such motion is made within twenty days after the entry of the order it comes too late 740

INSANITY—See Criminal Law, 38; Land, 36, 37; Wills, 28.

INSTRUCTIONS—See Contracts, 32; Criminal Law, 1, 82, 83; Damages, 15, 16; Druggists, 4; Evidence, 43; Homicide, 12; Land, 20; Life Insurance, 18; Malicious Shooting, 1; New Trial, 3; Practice, 4; Telegrams, 5—

1. in an action upon a contract to sell patent medicines when the defense was that the written contract did not correctly reflect the contract between the parties, an instruction was erroneous which excluded from the consideration of the jury all evidence that conduced to support the contention of the defense as to the mistake in the writing 1
2. upon the trial of appellee upon an indictment charging him with feloniously striking and wounding an officer with a deadly weapon, it appearing that appellee was resisting arrest by the officer, an instruction to the effect that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused had committed a public offense in the presence of the officer and knew the officer to be the marshal of the town where the offense was committed, and the officer attempted to arrest him, it was his duty to submit to the arrest; and if he refused to do so and assaulted the officer, the latter had the right to repel the assault and compel the defendant to submit to the arrest, correctly stated the law, and should have been given by the lower court 14
3. an instruction telling the jury that they should find for plaintiff such sum in damages as would compensate him for injury sustained by deposit of sawmill dust upon his premises, in injuring his trees, garden, furniture, etc., was not only right as far as it went, but it might have gone further and defined that committed, and the officer attempted to arrest him, it was his duty to submit to the arrest; and if he refused to do so and assaulted the officer, the latter had the right to repel the assault and compel the defendant to submit to the arrest, correctly stated the law, and should have been given by the lower court 14
3. an instruction telling the jury that they should find for plaintiff such sum in damages as would compensate him for injury sustained by deposit of sawmill dust upon his premises, in injuring his trees, garden, furniture, etc., was not only right as far as it went, but it might have gone further and defined that plaintiff was not only entitled to the use of his property, but that he had the right to enjoy it in peace and comfort 103
4. where upon motion and grounds for a new trial no complaint was made of instructions given by the court, they will be regarded upon appeal as the correct exposition of the law 216

INSTRUCTIONS—Continued.

Page.

5. the court did not err in failing to instruct or admonish the jury that they should consider evidence of previous threats made by the defendant only for the purpose of showing the motive or state of defendant's mind at the time of the killing 220
6. in this action against appellant for the killing of stock the court properly instructed the jury that while it is the duty of the engineer to keep a lookout ahead of the train to see if the track is clear of obstructions, yet he is not required to keep his eyes constantly on the track in front of him, but only that he should exercise reasonable care in the discharge of his duty 252
7. the rule in this State is that if there is any evidence the question is for the jury, and in cases like this, where the circumstances showed that the stock might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have been seen in time to avoid a collision, and warranted such finding of the jury, this court has uniformly held that a peremptory instruction should not be given 252

INSURANCE—See Agents; Contracts, 5, 40; Criminal Law; Fire, 52; Life, 52, 53; Indemnity—

1. in his action to recover upon a policy of insurance, where it is apparent that the agent undertook to facilitate the transfer of the policy to appellant, and for this purpose mailed him a blank application for the consent of the company, and that appellant failed to sign and forward the necessary application, and pending the negotiations the property burned, the court correctly awarded a peremptory instruction to find for appellee 99
2. in this action for the recovery of insurance upon appellee's lumber there is some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not what is known as the "clear space clause" was abrogated before the loss, but the question was submitted to a jury, who found for appellee, and the preponderance of the evidence appears to sustain the verdict on this point 105
3. the testimony in this action conduces to show that the policy was cancelled; that appellee's agent agreed to its cancellation, and the money returnable under a clause of the policy relating to its cancellation was by consent of appellee's agent to be applied to premiums on another policy to be issued by another company upon the same property. There was sufficient evidence to authorize the submission of the case to the jury 151

INSURANCE, FIRE—

1. where L. was conducting a store in the trade name of M. and had taken out a policy of insurance for $2 500 on his stock of goods in that name, there being no fraudulent concealment of the ownership and interest of L. therein, such policy is a valid contract of insurance. 461
2. although L. and M. were not partners, M. held the title to the property as an indemnity against liability for merchandise bought on his credit by L., which was enforceable as between them, and it appearing that M. was bound for merchandise bills to the amount of $1,000, he had a material interest in the goods and their preservation. The value of the insured stock being $2,000 in excess of the direct interest of M., he held such excess as pledgee in trust for the beneficial owner, and these were insurable interests 461
3. appellant had a policy on a building in which baled rags were stored, which are extra hazardous, and allowed a rebate on the risk by reason of information given by Wood, the secretary of the insured, that the rags had been removed. The policy provided that "this entire policy shall be void if the insured shall conceal or misrepresent in writing, or otherwise, any material fact concerning the insurance or the subject-matter thereof, or if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of insured." This information, though false, was believed by the informer to be true. He did not profess to have any personal knowledge as to the removal of the rags but upon inquiry of the insurer informed the inquirer of his course in learning whether the rags had been removed, which answer he believed to be true. Held—That such answer was not a concealment or misrepresentation 852

INSURANCE, FIRE—Continued.

Page.

4. if Wood, the agent of insured, knew that rags were stored in the building and concealed it from the insurer, such a fact would have been binding on the insured, but the knowledge of Wood's agent, who was not the agent of Wood's principal, is not imputable to the latter 858
5. the fact that the rags were stored in the building by O'Brien, who was the tenant of insured, although in violation of the tenant's rightful use of the premises, does not affect the policy if the insured was ignorant of it, although it was a matter which he might have controlled had he known it, or although he knew of it, yet if it was a thing beyond his control the policy is not affected by it..... 858
6. the fact that the risk was increased after the issuing of the policy, by the storing of rags without the consent of the insurer, yet if the extra hazardous condition was removed before there was a fire, then the condition remained precisely as when the contract was made, and while the liability of the insurer was suspended during the time of the existence of the condition, if the fire had then occurred insurer would not have been liable. But if before loss, and during the time covered by the policy, the original condition was restored, the liability of the insured was restored also and it was thereafter liable for the loss..... 858

INSURANCE, LIFE—

1. under a contract by a water company to furnish a city an ample supply of water for all purposes, an instruction to the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the failure of the defendant to furnish an ample supply of water at the time of the burning of the property was due to accidental cause, not the result of defendant's negligence, and which it could not by the use of ordinary diligence have foreseen and prevented, the law is for the defendant. was proper..... 421
2. under section 679, Kentucky Statutes, where the application for the certificate of insurance is not attached to or does not accompany the policy, it can not be received in or considered as part of the contract in a controversy between the parties interested in the certificate 469
3. where policies of insurance were taken out on the life of the insured by persons claiming to be his creditors and who paid the premiums, and on the death of the insured the policies were paid by the company to the beneficiaries named therein under the belief that they were in fact creditors of the insured, the company is not liable to the administrator of the insured for the sums so paid, although the parties to whom the money was paid were not in fact creditors of, and had no insurable interest in, the life of the insured 818
4. where the beneficiaries named in a life insurance policy were not in fact creditors of the insured and procured the policies by falsely representing themselves to be such creditors, the transaction was a speculation upon the hazard of a human life, and a gambling scheme, and the policies are void as against public policy, and no cause of action can be maintained on them by the administrator of the insured 818
5. where an insurance policy is taken out upon the life of another without his consent or knowledge it is void, but in such case, where one in good faith paid the premium on such a policy, he would be entitled to recover the premiums so paid 818
6. where a life insurance policy provides that any indebtedness of the assured to the company will be deducted from the face of the policy, a note owing to the company by the assured should be credited on the sum payable by the company 825
7. under a policy of insurance, which provides that after it has been in force for three full years should it lapse and not be surrendered, the full amount thereof at date of lapse any indebtedness being repaid, within three months will be extended without request or demand therefor, where the yearly premiums are to be paid in quarterly installments, in advance, a payment of the premiums for two years and for two quarters of the third year will not have the effect to continue the policy in force, where the insured died shortly after the expiration of the third year.... 872

INSURANCE, LIFE—Continued.

Page.

8. so much of section 679, Kentucky Statutes, as provides that the policy, or certificate, application, constitution, by-laws or rules shall be plainly printed, and no portion thereof shall be in type smaller than brevier, applies only to co-operative companies. ... 872
9. in an action for a paid up policy by the husband and wife on a policy issued December 16, 1889, on the life of the husband, payable to his wife at his death, in consideration of an annual premium of $189 for twenty years, which contained this clause: "After three full annual payments have been paid upon this policy the company will, upon legal surrender thereof or within six months thereafter, issue a nonparticipating policy for paid-up insurance; * * * when the husband paid four annual premiums, but failed to pay the fifth, due December 16, 1893, but did not demand a paid up policy until December 7, 1894, to which the company responded that the policy had lapsed, and as an application for a paid-up policy was not made within six months, the policy became forfeited according to its printed terms, and was of no value." Held—That though the action was not brought until eight years after the default occurred, the demand having been made within five years after such default, the action for the issuance of the paid-up policy may be brought on the written contract at any time within fifteen years after the cause of action accrued ... 586
10. in an action for a paid-up policy, where there was no demand by the company for a surrender of the policy, and there being a demand for a paid-up policy which was refused on the ground that the policy was no longer in force, it was not incumbent on the policy holder to tender the policy to the company before suit ... 586
11. S. took out a life policy for $5,000 in appellant company on the twenty payment plan, payable to his wife, the annual premium being $208.90, on which he paid nine annual payments and defaulted, and died four years and eleven days after making the first default. The policy under its terms gave the insured, after making three annual payments, the right to surrender his policy and demand a paid-up policy within twelve months after making default, which insured failed to obtain. The beneficiary within five years after the first default demanded that such paid-up policy be issued to her for $2,150, which appellant refused and offered her the "legal reserve," amounting to $1,190, which she refused. Held—That she is entitled to recover the value of the paid-up policy, $2,150, as though it had been applied for by the insured within twelve months after the first default in the payment of the premium ... 846
12. where one applied for insurance on the 26th day of November, and died suddenly on the 29th, three days later, and suit was brought to recover the insurance, alleging that the applicant had paid the premium when the application was made, and there was no receipt relied on and the oral contract relied on was denied by the company, a peremptory instruction to find for the company was proper ... 898
13. appellant upon the trial of this action offered to prove by a witness that her deceased husband had told her that he had applied for insurance and that he had paid for it by giving the agent credit upon an account he had against the agent, and that the agent had told him he was fully insured, was properly excluded, for to have admitted it would have been to allow appellant to make evidence for herself. The evidence was only a narration of a previous transaction and was in no sense res gestæ. ... 898
14. so also was properly excluded evidence offered by deceased's son to the effect that deceased told him soon after leaving the agent that he had taken the insurance and had agreed to credit the agent upon his account for the premium, and directed the son to make the credit on the book kept by him, and that he forgot to make such credit. The conversation did not occur at the time of the transaction with the agent and the latter was not present, and was clearly incompetent. ... 898
15. where in an original certificate of insurance there was no provision concerning suicide, but the application contained a provision by which the applicant agreed to be controlled by all the

INSURANCE, LIFE—Continued.

Page.

- rules and regulations of the order then in force, or that might thereafter be enacted, where a by-law was subsequently adopted by the company, under the provisions of section 679 of Kentucky Statutes, requiring all contracts pertaining to such policies and all by-laws, rules and regulations, or copy thereof, to be attached to the policy or it shall not be considered as a part thereof, while it did not affect the previous contract in so far as its obligations had been fixed, we see no reason why the statute, although passed since the original contract was made, should not apply to alterations or changes of such contracts 1201
16. such alterations are in a sense new contracts, although it had been previously provided that they might be entered into. When the new matter became attached to the original contract as an obligation of the parties, a police regulation of the State required certain prerequisite formalities before it became their act. This did not impair the obligation of the old contract, but dealt alone with the attempt to alter that contract. Such new matter could not have been added at all, as was done, except for the provisions in the old certificate that let it in. That provision gave to the insurer the right to alter the terms or conditions of the original agreements of the parties at any time in the future by the adoption of a new rule or regulation of the society affecting it. The new law, leaving the old contract precisely as it was found, laid hold of the parties and said in effect, when you make alterations of this contract, as you may do by the adoption of by-laws or rules, the sovereign power of the State requires that a copy of such by-laws shall be endorsed on or attached to the certificate or policy of insurance. But it will not do to tender such copy years after it should have been done and after the liability of the insurer has been completed under the original contract 1201
17. a pleading that the contract was an Illinois contract, made and to be performed in that State, and that the statute of this State could have no extra-territorial force there, was properly rejected. The statute applies to persons insured in this State by companies doing business in this State. It had no right to come in this State to do an insurance business except upon such terms as this State might impose. 1202
18. the fact that appellant is a "Federal corporation," having been organized in the District of Columbia under an act of congress, is no defense. No matter where created, by its presence in Kentucky as an insurance corporation its contracts are to be construed and enforced by the courts of Kentucky when it is sued in our courts 1202
19. a life policy was issued by appellant for $10,000 on the life of W. P. Gatlin, in which insured's daughter, Gray A. Gatlin, was named as beneficiary. When the policy was produced after the death of insured it contained the additional name of Geo. O. Gatlin, a son of insured, as one of the beneficiaries, which latter named there was evidence tending to show was in the handwriting of the insured. Both the son and daughter were infants, and by their guardian brought this suit on the policy. The company pleaded the alteration in bar of the action. Held—If the application was in fact accepted by the company, and the policy issued with Gray A. Gatlin as the sole beneficiary, her rights then became fixed, and neither the insured nor the company could affect her rights except as provided in the policy, which provided that the insured might change the beneficiary with the consent of the company 670
20. on the trial of the action the court should have told the jury that they should find for the plaintiff, Gray A. Gatlin, alone, if the alteration of the contract was made by the insured after the policy was delivered and accepted, and without the consent of the company, but that they should find in favor of both the plaintiffs if the alteration was made before the delivery and acceptance of the policy, or with the consent of the company 670
21. where it is pleaded that insured had made false statements in his application for insurance as to his habits as to drinking whisky, the court should have set out in an instruction the questions and answers contained in the application in reference thereto, and should have told the jury that they should find for the plaintiffs if the answers were substantially true, but otherwise they should find for defendant, although there was no intention to mislead or deceive the company, and that the answers were not substantially true if the assured drank materially more than as stated .. 670

INSURANCE, LIFE—Continued.

Page.

INSURANCE INDEMNITY—

1. in an action on a policy of employees' indemnity insurance, which provides that the employee should be over twelve years of age, it is not necessary that the petition should allege that the person injured was over twelve years of age 658
2. a condition in a policy of employees' indemnity insurance that no action shall be maintained thereon unless it is brought within thirty days after payment of loss by the insured, is contrary to public policy and is void 658
3. the age of a member of a family may be proven by proof of declarations of other members since deceased 658
4. under a prayer for general relief interest may be allowed on a claim from the filing of the suit, although not specially prayed for in the petition 658
5. where the indemnity insurance company did not defend the suit of the insured against the appellee and appellee had to defend it, the court properly held the insurance company liable for the costs of the action upon its policy of indemnity 658

INTERESTS—See Sheriffs, 1, 6, 8—

1. the money collected by the sheriff upon taxes and penalties due the county, and taxes and penalties collectable, but not collected, are treated as a debt due by the sheriff to the county on January 1, after they become due, and upon their total amount the sheriff is liable to the county for interest at 6 per cent. from that date until paid, which interest is in addition to the 6 per cent. penalty upon the gross sum due and unpaid on January 1 67
2. while it is proper to charge the sheriff with interest on the penalty due the county by taxpayers who fail to pay their taxes by December 1 of the year in which such tax is due, there should be no interest computed on the additional penalty due by the sheriff to the county for his failure to pay over all the taxes collected or collectable on January 1 thereafter, said penalty against the sheriff, although a liability for which he is bound on his bond, is not a debt upon which interest can be computed 67
3. from the evidence it appears that $475 of payments was interest paid by the borrower, and as to it he was relegated by the statute for his remedy for double penalty for usury paid, and the evidence failing to support the bank's contention that any further part of the payments credited by the judgment appealed from was paid by the debtor as interest, without this specific appropriation, the lender had no authority to apply it except as was done by the court below 288

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—See Local Option, 1; Ordinances, 4—

1. section 3704, Kentucky Statutes, which is part of the charter of towns of the sixth class, provides that the granting of a license to sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be under the exclusive control of the board of trustees of such town, and where one has obtained a license from the board of trustees he is not required to have a license from the county court, but should pay or tender to the county court clerk the license tax due the State, and the refusal of the clerk to accept the money tendered made the clerk liable to the State therefor, but such refusal did not subject the defendant to prosecution for selling such liquors without a license 122
2. an instruction to the effect that a sale of whisky on a boat in Barren river at any point where the river is the boundary of Barren county is a sale in that county, is authorized by section 20 of the Criminal Code, and an instruction in substance advising the jury that defendant was guilty if he was interested in the whisky sold, and had a clerk or partner at the boat where it was sold, making sales in quantitles of less than five gallons, and that such sales were made with his approval, correctly states the law. 690

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—Continued.

Page.

3. an indictment which charges that the defendants unlawfully and willfully sold by retail a beverage liquid mixture, or decoction, which causes or produces intoxication, in territory in which the sale of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors is prohibited in accordance with the local option law, is good under Kentucky Statutes, section 2557a, which prohibits the sale of "any beverage, liquid mixture or decoction of any kind which produces or causes intoxication," in such territory, and it is not necessary to name in the indictment the mixture or decoction that was sold 712

JOINT ACTION—

1. under Civil Code, section 26, persons severally liable upon the same contract may be included in the same action at the plaintiff's option 40
2. where a joint action for personal injuries was filed against a foreign corporation and three of its resident employes, alleging that the injuries were caused by the joint and concurring negligence of the company and its codefendants, as its agents and employes, in the operation of a railroad train, on which plaintiff was a passenger, a petition by the corporation for removal of the cause to the United States Circuit Court, which alleges that its codefendants were joined with it, for the sole and fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal of the action from the State court, and that all the statements in the petition as to such codefendants are untrue, amounts to nothing more than a conclusion of the pleader, and does not state a single fact from which the court might determine that the cause of action is separable.. 807

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS—

1. section 132 of the Constitution provides that "the general assembly, when deemed necessary, may establish additional (judicial) districts, but the whole number of districts, exclusive of counties having a population of 150,000, shall not exceed at any one time one for every 60,000 of population of the State, according to the last enumeration." The last Federal census shows that the State had in 1900 a population of 2,147,174. This would have entitled the State to as many as thirty-one judicial districts, outside of the county of Jefferson, which had a population of 232,549. Section 128 of the Constitution provides that "the general assembly, having due regard to the territory, business and population, shall divide the State into a sufficient number of judicial districts to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution concerning circuit courts." Held—That the act of the general assembly of 1904, creating the Thirty-first Judicial District, composed of the counties of Floyd, Knott and Magoffin, was constitutional. 241
2. the inhibition in the Constitution is not against the size of the districts at all except where single counties may constitute a district, and the fact that the Thirty-first District contained only about 36,293 population does not affect the validity of the act creating it, as the population of the entire State by the last census was such as to empower the legislature to create an additional district. 241
3. any one elected to the office of Commonwealth's attorney takes it subject to the constitutional right of the legislature to make new districts as the necessities and population may require, and those affected by its exercise must yield to it as one of the conditions fixed by the Constitution upon which they took their office 241

JUDICIAL KNOWLEDGE—See Railroads, 64.

JUDICIAL NOTICE—See Contracts, 32.

JUDICIAL SALES—See Practice, 3—

1. where a sale of real estate is made by the commissioner of the court under a decree of the court, the purchaser is only a preferred bidder until his bid is accepted by the court by confirming the sale, and when the purchaser refused to execute bond and the sale was reported to the court, which decided not to confirm it, but treated it as though it had not been made, and ordered a resale thereof, if upon a resale the land shall sell for less than was offered by the first purchaser, he can not be held liable for the deficiency 4

JUDICIAL SALES—Continued.

Page.

2. under Kentucky Statutes, section 14a, providing "that in addition to notices now required by law to be posted, all public sales of any kind of property when sold under execution, judgment or decree shall, unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties to such execution, judgment or decree, be advertised in some newspaper published in the county of the sale." * * * Held—That the word "parties" in this section includes infants as well as adults, and in a decretal sale of the land of an infant, its guardian has the right, with the approval of the chancellor, to agree to dispense with the newspaper advertisement of the sale of such land, and such agreement is binding on the infant 239
3. while the rule of caveat emptor applies in all its strictness to judicial sales, it is not thought that when a purchaser, before confirmation, shows a failure of title in some material particular a court of equity may not relieve him of his bid where it was made under a clear misapprehension of fact or law inducing the bidding. 610
4. under Civil Code, section 490, providing for the sale of real property held jointly by two or more persons, if the property be in possession and can not be divided without injuring its value, such sale may be made where there are vested estates jointly held, though one of the parties is a life tenant and the remaindermen are infants. 632

JUDGMENTS—See Practice, 1—

1. where the entry of a judgment is ambiguous or so obscure as not to clearly express the exact determination of the court, reference may be had to the pleadings and other proceedings, and if with this light thrown upon the entry its obscurity is dispelled and its intended significance made apparent, the judgment will be upheld and carried into effect as it was intended 347
2. a judgment in an action upon certain coupons of a bond is not a bar to a recovery in an action on other coupons of the same bond, as each coupon is a separate promise and gives rise to a separate cause of action thereon. 31
3. the Code of Practice provides that a judgment shall not be reversed for any error of law not affecting the substantial rights of the adverse party, and as the appellant in this action obtained credit upon the trial in the lower court for everything he claimed, it is immaterial to him whether the claim was upon the equity or ordinary side of the docket. 741

JURISDICTION—See Appeals, 12; Damages, 5; Ordinances, 5; Partnership, 3; Practice, 3; Railroads, 9, 47; Telegrams, 6; Writ of Prohibition, 1, 2, 3, 4—

1. where Manders took his wife to Virginia temporarily on a visit, where she became insane and was committed to an asylum in that State, but he kept his residence in Kentucky, keeping her estate here, an action by the asylum for keeping her could only be maintained in this State, and, therefore, the limitation provided for by the Kentucky Statutes in such cases must govern, for a Virginia statute of limitation could not be applied to an action that could not be enforced in that State. 254
2. in an action by McKenna on an apportionment warrant against Craig and the city of Covington for $186, and to enforce a lien on Craig's property and for judgment against the city if the property is not liable, in which the court dismissed the petition against Craig, a judgment for McKenna against the city for the debt is a personal judgment, of which this court has no jurisdiction. 784

JURY—See Actions, 2, 10; Railroads, 18, 17.JURY TRIAL—See Constitutional Law.*LABOR PENALTY—See Municipal Corporations, 2, 3.*LANDLORD AND TENANT—

1. where the owner of a one-story building, which was leased for and occupied for printing a newspaper, employed an independent contractor, without the consent of the tenant, to put a second story thereon, the tenant is entitled to recover from the landlord the damage done to type, stationery, etc., by reason of its exposure to the rain, dirt and grit in the construction of the second story; that on the trial of the case the fact as to whether the tenant

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Continued.

Page.

consented to the erection of the second story was a question for the jury, as was also the extent of the damage done to the tenant's property thereby..... 887

2. in an action by a tenant to recover from his landlord damages done to his property by an independent contractor, in putting a second story on the building occupied by the tenant without the tenant's consent, a demurrer to a cross petition of the landlord against the contractor was properly sustained, as such action can not be properly litigated in the claim of the tenant against the landlord. 888.

3. where a tenant's lease on premises has expired, and the landlord agrees that he may continue in possession and use of the premises as tenant by the month, but to have one month's notice before being required to quit, he is not a tenant at will or by sufferance, but a tenant from month to month, which tenancy may be terminated by the landlord giving him one month's previous notice, which notice may be verbal..... 880.

LANDS—See Action to Settle an Estate; Adverse Possession; Conveyance by Deed, 1; Conveyance by Father to Daughter, 1; Lease, 1, 26, 5; Limitation, 4; Divorce and Alimony; Owner of Adjoining Tracts, 1, 12; Passway, 1, 8; Railroads, 33, 48, 57—

1. it appearing that the land in controversy was within a boundary known as the "forge line" or "three mile circle," which was embraced in a large body of land conveyed in 1849 by several claimants to Samuel C. Jackson and others, and that appellant owns it, it was error for the chancellor to dismiss his petition in which he sought to recover same..... 148.

2. appellee claims through John Clem, who testified that Mason, who gave him fifty acres of land outside of the "forge circle," explained to him that he owned no land in the circle, and the fifty acres must be selected outside, and that when he sold to Vaughn he explained to him that he only sold him so much of the land as lay outside of the circle, and that Vaughn fully understood this when he purchased the land. This occupation was not adverse to appellant's title and can not be included in the time required by appellee to make up his title by prescription..... 148.

3. in this action to recover for the value of timber cut, the question of title being in issue the evidence of certain witnesses read as depositions as to the location and boundary of the land was insufficient to overthrow the location of the land as determined by the actual calls of the patent... 164

4. the lot in controversy was properly adjudged to appellees, it having been shown they have the title and that appellants have neither pleaded nor shown one. 250.

5. in this case it appears that appellant announced in open court that she would not accept the money awarded her for her land, and this being true a tender was unnecessary, and appellee was excused when the money was deposited by it in open court 251

6. in an action to determine the location of a division line between two parties who claim the land from the same source, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to show that he derived title from the Commonwealth 277

7. S., who was a widower without children, but had reared a foster daughter who married O., induced O. to give up his trade and move to S.'s farm under a written contract stipulating that O. was to cultivate and control the farm, pay the taxes, and have all the proceeds thereof, with the right to sell it, and have all the proceeds of the sale in excess of $4,000, which S. reserved to himself. Held—That under the contract S. held the legal title to the land in trust for O. after paying himself $4,000 out of it .. 307.

8. after making some improvements O. sold the farm for $5,500, with the consent of S., who made the deed, and invested the proceeds in a Kansas farm, which he afterwards sold and invested the proceeds in another Kentucky farm, in both of which farms the legal title was taken to S. Held—That this did not destroy or annul the original equitable trust between the parties, the oral agreement for the two last trades being nothing more than a

LANDS—Continued—

Page.

- recognition of the trust created by the original written contract. The trust followed the property, and may be enforced as long as the subject of the trust can be traced and identified 807
9. the fact that O. before the death of S. procured a divorce from his wife, by her fault, and left the farm and went back to his former trade, was not an abandonment of his equitable trust in the property, and the further fact that on the death of S. he by his will devised the divorced wife of O. $4,000, and made no other devise except $200 for tombstones, was a recognition of his obligation to O. under the original contract 807
10. S. contracted to sell the last farm to C. for $7,000, on which C. paid $411 to S. In an action by O. to recover the proceeds of this sale in excess of $4,000 Held—That he was entitled to recover the excess of the purchase money over $4,000, less $411 paid to S. 808
11. in a controversy involving the title to unoccupied and uninclosed land an allegation of ownership which is denied will not authorize a recovery in the absence of the title papers being filed or other evidence showing title 828
12. where two parties claim title to a tract of land under the same grantor, one by deed and the other by title bond, neither of which is filed or proven, and neither the pleading nor the evidence tend to establish a title by prescription in either of the parties, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to exhibit a superior paper title in order to a recovery 828
13. in an action to enforce a purchase-money lien on a dwelling house and lot and two adjoining lots, the pleading described all three of the lots, and the judgment directed the sale of the dwelling house and the two vacant lots adjoining, but in giving the boundary the decree omitted the boundary of the dwelling house lot. The commissioner sold all three of the lots, but in his deed to the purchaser he gave the boundary of the vacant lots and omitted the boundary of the dwelling house lot. Held—That in an action by the former owner to recover the dwelling house that the purchaser at such sale was entitled to hold the entire property 847
14. where a right of way has been granted by a land owner for the building of a turnpike thereon, an agreement by the turnpike company to allow telephone poles and wires to be erected thereon being for a public purpose, is not an additional servitude on the land, for which the original owner can maintain an injunction or recover compensation from the telephone company 894
15. where a river is a boundary between counties and between two adjoining tracts of land the shifting of the channel of the river, after the counties were made, cutting off a strip of one of the tracts, leaving it beyond the thread of the stream, does not effect the ownership of the land, and does not affect the boundary of the counties, which remains where it was before the channel was changed 417
16. the evidence in this case establishes the fact that appellee made the deed herein from fright and to avoid a liability, and not in settlement of any claim appellants had against her 481
17. while a court of equity will not ordinarily aid a grantor to escape from the consequences of his own fraud, this rule has no application where the grantor is the dupe of the grantee and his weakness has been imposed upon by undue advantage 481
18. persons who are not surveyors may testify as to measurements of a lot made by them with a tape line 455
19. evidence that a deed has been changed is not competent unless it is shown to have been changed since its delivery 456
20. where lot No. 14 on a town plat is conceded to belong to the plaintiff, and the boundary alone was in controversy, the instructions should have been that if the defendant was over the line and held any part of said lot, they should find for plaintiff otherwise, they should find for defendant 456
21. in this action the evidence examined and held that appellees claim of adverse possession will not avail him, as he was not in the actual possession of the land, and had he been, appellants were infants, against whom the statute did not run. Moreover, it appears that before he purchased the land from Vincent he knew of the equitable claim of appellants, and was, therefore, not an innocent purchaser 489

LANDS—Continued—

	Page.
22. where two surveys have a corner and division line in common it is impossible that appellee's vendor could have owned any land between the two surveys. If there was a conflict in the surveys the elder title would prevail	489
23. where one entered upon and improved land upon a verbal agreement by the other party to convey land to him for his improvement, he is entitled to a lien on that part of the land which he improved for the value of his improvement	494
24. a lien for improving land, under a verbal contract to convey, can not be defeated on the ground that the land so improved is a part of the homestead of the contracting party	494
25. the court did not err in refusing to transfer this action to the ordinary docket, the claim being an equitable one	494
26. H. O. Hutton devised to his son a farm, describing it, with the provision that if the son should not live until his youngest child should reach the age of sixteen years, it should become a home for his wife and children until that period arrived. Held—The son could not have disposed of the farm in the lifetime of his wife so as to have affected her interest, or that of the children, and her death did not cause the children to lose their interest. All that the appellant can do is to convey subject to the interest of the children which the testator intended they should enjoy upon the happening of a contingency	504
27. where appellee and his brother jointly owned a tract of land and upon his brother's death his undivided interest was ordered sold to pay his debts, and at the request of appellee was bought by appellant at said sale for appellee's benefit, and after the time for redemption had expired appellant, against the objection of appellee, caused a deed to be made to himself for the land, in an action by appellee against appellant to set aside said deed, alleging that appellant held the title in trust for him, he having all the time been in the actual possession thereof, the court properly decreed the relief sought upon the repayment by appellee to appellant of the money he had paid in the purchase thereof	586
28. it was error to award judgment against appellant and enforcing a lien upon his land, there being not the slightest pretext that he had any lien for the payment of the debt sued on, no fact being recited in the pleadings that authorized such lien	571
29. where the husband took possession of a tract of land under a title bond, and held it adversely and continuously for thirty years, the fact that his widow after his death procured a patent for it from the Commonwealth does not affect the interest of the husband's children therein, who claim as his heirs subject to the widow's life estate; and a sale of said land by the widow passed to the purchaser only the use of same during the life of the widow	678
30. a purchaser of land from a widow who has only a life estate therein is not entitled to recover for improvements made thereon and make the heirs responsible therefor	678
31. in an action by the administrator and heirs of a deceased vendor of land to enforce against the vendee a lien for the unpaid purchase money due thereon, to which the defendant pleads a counterclaim for failure to get possession of part of the land purchased, evidence considered and held that defendant failed to sustain his plea, and is estopped by the admissions and averments of his answer to rely on the statute of limitations of fifteen years as a bar to the action	680
32. as Oberdorfer, a creditor of Margaret McGrath, in this action to settle her estate, did not set up his tax claim, the presumption is that he purchased the property for the protection of his claim as mortgagee, and as the sale was made within two years after the tax sale, his rights were barred before the expiration of the two years allowed for redemption, and the fee simple vested in him at no time under the statute; and a judgment barring his right is equally conclusive upon his wife because if the title did not vest in him she had no potential right of dower	723
33. where parties own adjoining tracts of land and without knowing the exact location of the dividing line between them verbally agree upon and fix a certain drain as such dividing line, and thereafter for many years continue to reside on and claim their

LANDS—Continued—

Page-

- respective lands up to such agreed line, such agreement is enforceable in equity, although the period of fifteen years has not elapsed since such agreed line was established 815
84. where it is apparent on the face of the papers that a patent was intended for 175 acres of land and not for 2,110, and this may be shown by reversing the calls, the actual intention of the parties making the survey should control 818
85. a petition for the recovery of land by persons claiming it as heirs of T., who is alleged to have been a lunatic at the time it was sold and conveyed by him to the defendants and their vendors, while it may not be sufficient to support an action in ejectment, is not demurrable, where the allegations, if true, would entitle the plaintiffs, under their prayer for all proper relief, to a cancellation of the deed, which would result in the restitution of the land, to be followed by an accounting for its detention on equitable principles 822
86. all deeds made by lunatics are not void, but voidable only. The fact that plaintiff's ancestor was properly adjudged to be a person of unsound mind, though conclusive evidence that such was his condition at the time of the inquest, is only prima facie evidence of his condition at the time he sold and conveyed the land, and being a mere presumption it may be rebutted by parol evidence 822
87. though it may appear that T. was of unsound mind at the time he conveyed the land to V., that fact can not divest V.'s grantee, or other subsequent purchasers, of their title to the land unless they had at the time of the conveyance to them respectively, notice that T. was of unsound mind at the time he sold and conveyed the land to V. 822
88. as the patent under which appellants claim title is superior to the patent under which appellees claim title, the title of the former is superior if it includes the land in controversy, but to compare the patent and survey the calls of the survey is duplicated in the patent, but it must be presumed that the patent was intended to follow the survey, and the repeating of the call in the patent is a clerical error 831
89. the proof shows that appellee Middleton settled upon the land in 1868, acquiring it under a title bond from the patentee, and that he and his co-appellee have been living upon and claiming it ever since, and appellant Hensley always acquiesced in the construction Middleton placed upon his deed, and where Hensley conveyed to Frost as being all of the land deeded to me by James Brittain to the foot of Black Mountain, containing 400 acres, the court only adjudged Middleton the land to the Frost line, the land in controversy being north of Black mountain, and this view of the chancellor seems to be correct 831
40. where there are erroneous calls and an omitted line in a survey of land, they should be corrected by the plat and the patent established. In ascertaining a boundary of a tract of land where there is an apparent lap of an adjoining tract, they should be corrected by the original plat and patent established, that the intention of the parties in making the survey may be effectuated, and the mere mistakes of the officer in transcribing the field notes should not be allowed to frustrate this intention if there is evidence by which they may correct it 840
41. in this action to enforce lien for unpaid purchase money for land the defense interposed was that the conveyance was without reservation, and that after accepting the deed it was ascertained that certain mineral rights in a former conveyance had been reserved and a counterclaim for their value was pleaded. Appellee admitted the defect of title, but pleaded that he had put appellant Joiner in possession, and that he had not been disturbed or evicted; that the land was conveyed to him by deed of general warranty, and that his vendor held by such deed, and that in these deeds there was no reservation of mineral rights; that he had no notice of such a claim for mineral rights, and offered to rescind the sale, and on final hearing the court adjudged a rescission of it. Held—The appellant is in no position to complain of the judgment. There was no fraud in the transaction, and no allegation of insolvency on the part of the grantor 844

LANDS—Continued—

Page.

42. the rule is that where the vendee has accepted a deed he can not, when sued for the price, defend on the ground that the grantor's title was defective, unless the grantor is insolvent or a nonresident, or has been evicted by a paramount title. In such cases he must look to the warranty for such damages as he may sustain. 844
43. one who pleads and relies upon the ownership of a tract of land, by having it cleared and fenced and attached to another tract on which he resides, and by showing that he has so held and claimed it continuously and adversely for more than fifteen years, is entitled to recover it independent of any other title. 1011
44. in an action involving title to land, which was tried by the chancellor, where there was a missing deed necessary to make out a chain of title, the evidence of the existence of which deed was conflicting, we must give some weight to the finding of the chancellor. Our rule is not to disturb the chancellor's finding on a disputed question of fact where the evidence is conflicting and leaves the mind in doubt as to the truth 1108
45. where a deed made by the appellee company was read on the trial without objection or exception, an objection that it does not show that it was acknowledged by the officers of the company can not be taken for the first time in this court 1108
46. in an action to recover balance of purchase money for a tract of land, the defense being that the purchasers bought the land and all that was on it, and the seller pleading in a reply that some of the timber had been branded as sold timber, and that while it was by mistake omitted from the deed, still the purchasers were aware of the fact that it had been sold and that the deed of sale was of record, the facts of the sale being such as to prevent a court of equity from enforcing the sale, it will be rescinded, and the purchasers will be adjudged in a lien for the purchase money and interest and be charged reasonable rent for the land while they held it 1115
47. under a lease of land for twenty years, with the privilege to bore for oil and other minerals, in which the lessor was to have a royalty of one-tenth of the product, the lessee agreeing to begin work within eighteen months, and a failure of lessee to complete one well to render the lease void, there was an implied condition that the lessee was not only to begin work, but to prosecute it with reasonable diligence after it was begun, and where the lessee began work within the eighteen months, and, failing to find oil, moved his machinery from the land, it was an abandonment of the contract, and the lease thereby became void 1138
48. the fact that the lessee re-entered the land against the objection of the lessor and was permitted to bore the well deeper, and, finding no oil, again moved his machinery from the land, while the acquiescence of the lessor would estop him from complaining of the re-entry if the lessee had then found oil, but when the lessee again abandoned the property the lessor was not estopped to deny his right to return a second time. 1138
49. in this action the evidence considered and held that the appellee, Mrs. Clay, is entitled to one-sixth of the land in controversy as an heir, and the appellee, D. M. Clay, is entitled to one-sixth as a purchaser from John Eakins, who was also an heir, there being six children, and the land was the property of the father at the time of his death. 1139
50. one who induces another to buy land and improve it is thereby estopped to assert a claim to it against such purchaser or his vendee. 1169
- LEASE—See Contracts, 16; Lands; Lubricating Oils, 1; Passways, 1. 8—where premises are leased for a drug store for five years, under a contract providing "that in the event the owner should desire to remodel the building so far as it would necessitate the tenant removing from the building, he is to receive a certain reduction of the rent, with the right to re-occupy the premises after the building is remodeled at the same rental until expiration of the lease," such tenant is entitled to hold the premises where they have been damaged by fire without his fault, where the damage is not such as to render them untenable, and such lessee may elect to retain them unless the lessor will agree that he shall re-occupy them after they are remodeled as specified in the written contract. 558

- Page.
- LEINS—See Contracts, 21; Lands, 41, 42, 43; Mortgages, 1, 2; Partnerships, 7, 8; Railroads, 48—
1. the lien provided for in section 2557, Kentucky Statutes, only affects the property of one who knowingly rents his property for the illegal sale of liquor, and in this action the property belonging to the seller, the demurrer to the petition was properly sustained in an action to enforce a lien upon it for the payment of fines assessed against him for the illegal sale of liquor 85
 2. sections 2500 and 2501, Kentucky Statutes, providing for the grazing of stock for compensation, provides that the lien shall not continue for a longer period than ten days after the removal of the stock from the premises with consent, and that in case of such removal the lien shall not be valid against a purchaser without notice. The statute thus recognizes the right of the keeper to retain possession of the property. Where a defendant did not detain stock without right, and they were taken from him under an order of delivery, they were properly ordered returned to him, to be held until his bill for grazing them was paid 295
 3. where a verdict is not copied in the record this court can not determine whether it was in proper form or not 295
 4. where appellant took no step in the prosecution of its action for taxes after filing it for more than fifteen years, and in the meantime appellee in good faith became a lender for value and without notice of the pendency of the suit or claim of appellant for taxes, a lis pendens did not exist in favor of the city at the time the interests of appellee intervened 896
 5. the rule is that a party claiming the benefit arising from the lis pendens must, in order to entitle himself to it against the bona fide purchaser, show that the suit had been prosecuted with reasonable diligence 896
 6. a lien created by deed continues in full force until released of record, discharged by payment of the lien debt, or barred by the statute of limitations. Although more than fifteen years have elapsed since the maturity of a purchase-money lien note the lien still exists if there has been payments on the note keeping it alive; and renewing the purchase-money lien note from time to time has the same effect 1144
 7. where usury is included in the renewal of a lien note such usury may be required by the payor to be deducted in the settlement of the note 1144
 8. where an executor of an estate, which was liable as surety on a note, causes the owner of the note to refrain from suing on it, or to postpone the filing of it before the commissioner within seven years from its maturity, he is thereby estopped to rely on the statute of limitations in favor of sureties as a bar to the collection of the note 1145
- LIMITATION—See Actions, 6; Forceful Entry, 2; Fraud or Mistake, 1; Fraudulent Conveyances, 4; Indictment, 5; Lands, 4; Liens, 1, 6; Life Insurance, 3, 16; Local Option; Passways, 1, 2; Real Estate, 2; Railroads, 39, 40; Street Improvement, 3, 64—
1. limitation can not be relied on by one holding land as a joint tenant against his co-tenants 227
 2. appellee having paid appellant's taxes in December, 1897, this action to recover the amount of the money paid for her was not barred on April 2, 1902, when it was instituted 291
 3. the plea of the statute of limitations as to the first item in this action must prevail, the period provided for by statute having elapsed and no reason sufficient to stay it having been shown. In the matter of the set-off relied upon in an amended answer it is apparent from a careful reading of the record that the due bills referred to were mere memorandums of money loaned and were settled in adjusting the accounts between the parties, and, therefore, the chancellor's finding will not be disturbed 854
 4. an unreleased lien on land for purchase money must be deemed to be barred by limitation against a decedent's estate after fifteen years 610
- LOCAL OPTION—See Actions; Intoxicating Liquors, 1, 3—
1. the fact that an order of a county court directing the holding of a local option election recited that the petition for the election was

LOCAL OPTION—Continued—

Page.

- signed by more than twenty five per cent. of the legal voters residing and living within the magisterial district in which the election was held, instead of following the language of the statute requiring a number of names to the petition equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes of each precinct cast at the last general election, etc., did not render the election void where it appeared the petitioners represented more than twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast at the last election, and that at the election 64 votes were cast in favor of the sale of whisky and 849 were cast against it; and where a case was made out for the violation of the local option law, it was error for the lower court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant. 16
2. where the contest board in a local option election considered the evidence and made an order adjudging that "the election be set aside, cancelled and held for naught; that no election was held, and that neither party is entitled to have any fact certified concerning said election," said judgment was a final order, from which an appeal lies to the circuit court 909
3. an affidavit filed by the appellees on an appeal from the contest board to the circuit court in a local option election contest, stating that "the appellees in nowise question the integrity of the presiding judge, and without imputing to him any personal hostility to appellees, but that he can not, and will not, afford them a fair and impartial trial of the matters of law and facts involved in the appeal because he has a pronounced bias to the sale and traffic in intoxicating liquors." is not sufficient to disqualify the said judge from setting on the trial of the case. 909
4. under section 2655, Kentucky Statutes, special officers are required to be appointed to hold local option elections, who shall be appointed by the election commissioners of the county in which the election is held 910
5. where the election officers have a doubt of the qualification of a voter, they may require him to make the affidavit required by section 1477a, Kentucky Statutes, and until the voter either qualifies or offers to do so by making the required affidavit he is not a rejected voter, and neither the voter nor any other person can justly complain that he was not allowed to vote 910
6. one who was born on June 9, 1883, was entitled to vote at an election held on June 8, 1904. In law a man is twenty-one years old on the day preceding his twenty-first birthday 910
7. a proposition "whether or not spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold, bartered or loaned within the corporate limits of the town of Calhoun, McLean county, Kentucky, and that the provision of this law and prohibition shall apply to druggists," submitted to be voted on under the local option law in this State, is an entirety, intended, if adopted, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors by druggists within said town. 910
8. while there is no authority for the use of a device or emblem upon the ballot in a local option election, the fact that such emblems were used by both sides in such an election, and that the one used by those favoring prohibition was an open book, with the words "Holy Bible" printed across it, ought not to be allowed to defeat the voters' will where it was fairly expressed and otherwise held in conformity to law 910
9. the local prohibition law commonly called the "Five Counties' Act," approved April 4, 1884, forbids the sale of liquor by retail in Laurel county it results, therefore, that in Laurel county the act of March 10, 1894, as amended, which constitutes chapter 81, Kentucky Statutes, must be construed as part of the act of 1884, regulating and controlling the former in the matter of procedure, the quantity of liquor to be sold, and the punishment. In other words, the act of 1884 is operative in Laurel county without the necessity of a vote by the people. Of the existence of the act of 1884 and the operation of the act of 1894 this court will take judicial notice 918
10. under subsection 4 of section 2757b, Kentucky Statutes, which is a part of the general local option act of 1894, as amended in 1902, providing that "all the shipments of spirituous, vinous or malt liquor to be paid for on delivery, commonly called C. O. D. ship-

LOCAL OPTION—Continued—Page.

- ments, into any county, city, town, district or precinct where said act is in force, shall be unlawful, and shall be deemed sales of such liquors at the place where the money is paid, or the goods delivered." Where intoxicating liquors are made and sold by a distiller in this State in quantities less than five gallons and sent to Cincinnati, O., to be shipped to the purchaser C. O. D., in a town where the local option law is in force, such shipment being for the purpose of imparting to it the quality of interstate commerce, is a mere device to evade the laws of this State, and is no protection to the seller, and for every such sale the parties so engaged are liable to the penalties prescribed by the local option law in this State 918
11. the local option law being in force in Laurel county under a special act of the legislature known as the "Five Counties' Act," which provides that "all shipments of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors to be paid for on delivery, commonly called 'C. O. D. shipments,' into any county * * * where said act is in force shall be unlawful, and shall be deemed sales of such liquors at the place where the money is paid or the goods delivered, the carrier or agent selling or delivering such goods shall be liable jointly with the vendor thereof," where a package containing four quart bottles of whisky was shipped from Cincinnati to Laurel county by the Adams Express Co., to be delivered to M., "C. O. D.," and which was known to the agent of the company to contain whisky, and which agent of the company in Laurel county agreed to hold for a week until M. could pay for it, and then delivered it and received the price, the express company did not at the time of delivery sustain to that package, or to the consignor and consignee, the relation of common carrier, but merely that of a bailee or warehouseman, and for that reason could not claim protection in the transaction by the law of interstate commerce, but it was a sale wholly made in this State by the bailee after it was received from another State. 1096

LOST RECORDS—See Practice, 5.LUBRICATING OILS—

- an indictment returned May 10, 1904, for a sale of lubricating oil made April 7, 1894, without having procured license to sell such oils from wagons, is not a bar to an indictment found September 28, 1904, for a sale made in June, 1904, and as the court upon the trial of the latter offense confined the inquiry of the jury to a sale occurring in June, 1904, this necessarily limited their scope of inquiry to a time not covered by the former indictment. 1181

LUNATICS—See Actions, 9—

1. a motion to dismiss an action by an asylum for the keeping a lunatic for want of demand upon the committee before suit brought was properly overruled, as this was waived by filing a demurrer to the petition 254
2. although the proceedings in the county court committing a lunatic to the asylum were void by reason of the absence of such lunatic at the inquest, the asylum may, by action against the trustee of the lunatic on a quantum meruit recover for her board while confined in the asylum. 649
3. in such action the lower court properly sustained a demurrer to all of the claim created more than five years prior to the commencement of the action 649
4. a creditor of a lunatic can subject an estate devised to her to the payment of its debt to the same extent that the lunatic could subject such estate to her own use 649
5. under a devise by the father of a lunatic to a trustee for the benefit of the lunatic with power to pay her only the income of the devise during her life for her comfort and support, unless in case of necessity the trustee may see fit and proper to expend more, she could have maintained an action against the trustee for the whole of the estate if her necessities required it. 649

MALICIOUS SHOOTING—

- in a prosecution against one charged with maliciously shooting another with a pistol with intent to kill, it is error in the court in giving an instruction on self-defense to qualify it by adding thereto: "Unless you believe from the evidence that the defend-

MALICIOUS SHOOTING—Continued.	Page.
ant brought on the difficulty," without explaining to the jury how or by what means the difficulty was brought on by the defendant.....	888
MARRIAGE—See Slaves, 1.
MARRIED WOMEN—
1. since the enactment of section 2128, Kentucky Statutes, married women have the same power to create liens upon their own property for its improvement as unmarried women or men.....	140
2. even though the property upon which material was furnished for the building of a house was the property of a wife, and she did not enter into a written contract with reference to its improvement, still where she accepted the material the law implies a promise to pay.....	140
MASTER AND SERVANT—
1. where an employe was killed by the falling of a defective scaffold erected by the master and used by the servant in the building of a depot, there being conflicting evidence as to the servant's knowledge at the time of its defective condition, it was a question for the jury to determine whether the servant was guilty of contributory negligence in using it, under proper instructions of the court.....	198
2. where a servant of a railroad company was put to work in a building where the floor had been removed, leaving nothing but the "sleepers" on which to stand and do the work, and in doing which he was compelled to turn a heavy boiler plate without assistance, and in doing so he slipped off the sleeper and was ruptured, a verdict for $1,250 damages will not be disturbed. . .	805
3. the question whether the danger in doing the work was so obvious to the servant that none but a reckless person would have undertaken it, having been submitted to the jury under proper instructions, their finding in favor of the plaintiff is conclusive. . .	805
4. where a servant of a railroad company was injured in being required to work in a dangerous place, and after his recovery was induced to sign a release of his claim for damages in consideration of $1 and a promise of continued employment by the company, and was discharged the next day, the fact as to whether the release was obtained by fraud and without consideration was a question for the jury under proper instructions of the court . .	805
5. in an action by a servant against the master for damages for injury sustained in mining coal, where it appears that the servant had full control of the room of the mine in which he was injured, working there alone at his own will, setting up props to support the roof when and where he pleased, and failed to allege or prove any duty on the master to inspect or keep the roof of the mine in safe condition, or that he did not know it was dangerous, he can not recover for an injury by some slate falling on him while so engaged at work.....	885
6. in an action for the death of appellee's intestate by negligence, where the evidence is conflicting and the case was fairly presented to two juries, who reached the same conclusion, the verdict will not be disturbed	428
7. in an action by a servant against his master for an injury by falling on a circular saw, where it is shown by the evidence that the injury was caused either by the servant falling on some loose scraps which he had negligently thrown on the floor, or by standing in the scrap box where he had no business to be, and no act of negligence is shown by the master, a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant was proper	580
8. in an action by appellant against appellee for damages alleged to have been sustained by injuries to him by sulphuric acid escaping from carboys which he was transporting and injuring him, instructions by the court submitting the duty of appellee to furnish appellant a reasonably safe place to work, and reasonable material with which to work, and that it was also its duty to apprise appellant of the dangerous nature of the thing he was handling, and that if the carboys were defectively stopped and this fact was known to appellee, or could have been known by the exercise of ordinary care, and that such defect was not known to appellant and he was not informed of it, the jury should find for the plaintiff, fairly embraced the law of the case. . .	825

MASTER AND SERVANT—Continued—

Page.

9. appellee was not required to insure the safety of the condition of the material with which its servant was put to work; it was merely required to exercise care and to take ordinary precautions to protect its servants from injury... 825
10. in an action by a servant against the master for injuries by the falling of a defective scaffold furnished by the master, for use in painting a building. Held—That while it was the duty of the master to furnish the servant with safe scaffolding, it was likewise the duty of the servant to use ordinary care to inspect the same so as to discover its defects and avoid being injured, and a failure to do so will prevent a recovery... 1012
11. if, however, the scaffold was defective and so constructed as that its defective condition was not known, and could not by ordinary care have been discovered by the servant, and by reason thereof it fell and injured him, the master is liable in damages for the injury... 1012
12. an instruction, No. 4, "should the jury believe from the evidence that at the time of the accident plaintiff knew, or by the exercise of ordinary observation and diligence in his line of service might have discovered or known, that the scaffolding was carelessly constructed, if such be the case, but failed to so inform or protect himself from danger, whereby he was precipitated to the ground and injured, they should find for the defendant," held to be proper... 1012
13. in an action by an employe to recover damages for an injury received in falling from a ladder because it was too short to enable him to do the work with safety, which was clearly patent to him when he ascended it, a demurrer to plaintiff's petition was properly sustained... 1089

MATERIALMEN—See Contracts, 21.MISCONDUCT OF COUNCIL—See Criminal Law, 28, 46; Claim and Delivery, 2, 3; Railroads 23, 37.*MORTGAGES—

1. where two mortgages were executed on land by the owner to two different parties on different dates, if the junior mortgage be first put to record in the county court clerk's office, without notice or knowledge by the mortgagee of the prior mortgagee, such junior mortgage thereby acquires priority over the senior mortgage subsequently recorded... 728
2. in a controversy between the two mortgagees as to whether or not the junior mortgagee at the time he accepted his mortgage had knowledge of the prior mortgage, where the evidence is conflicting some weight should be given by this court to the chancellor's acquaintance with the parties and witnesses... 728
3. in an action by B. against V. to recover a house and lot which B. had conveyed to V. for $141, and which V. had agreed to reconvey to B. at the same price, on which B. agreed to pay 8 per cent. interest, a part of which was paid, but which V. subsequently sold and conveyed to G. for $150, Held—That the transaction between B. and V. was a mortgage, and that V. should be charged with what he received from B., including the $150 he got for the property from G., and credited by the purchase price, with 8 per cent. interest and the balance was payable to B... 927
4. a father conveyed to his son 200 acres of land, including farming implements, teams, wagons, cattle and growing crop, "to be taken at the estimated price of $10,000, and the undertaking and agreement of the party of the second part to pay to the party of the first part the value of his interest and ownership in his estate, real and personal, as heir, devisee, legatee and distributee of certain named deceased persons." Held—That a deed of conveyance by the son to his father of all the estate, real and personal, legal and equitable, vested and contingent, to which the son as heir and distributee, legatee or devisee aforesaid is or may be entitled in law or equity," while in the form of a deed was only a mortgage to secure the purchase price of $10,000 for the 200 acres of land, etc., conveyed by the father to his son... 980
5. where appellee conveyed to appellant a tract of land for $1,500 paid in hand and at the same time a writing was given by appellant to appellee agreeing to reconvey the land to appellee for MORTGAGES—Continued.

Page.

$2,000, payable in one year, and if not so paid in a year said writing to be void. Held—That the transaction was simply a lending of money, and the deed was executed in place of a mortgage and the other writing was a disguise to conceal the real transaction and to secure a usurious rate of interest, and in such case the deed will be held to be a mortgage and redemption allowed, notwithstanding the form in which the parties have put the contract. 1076

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—

1. a city ordinance requiring resident attorneys at law, physicians, surgeons, oculists and opticians practicing their profession in the city to pay an occupation tax of $10 per annum is not unreasonable, and is not invalid, because no license is required of such as are temporarily in the city on specific professional business. 481
2. section 142 of the Constitution provides "that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace shall be co-extensive with the county, and equal and uniform throughout the State." Section 143 provides "that a police court may be established in each city and town in this State, * * * with such criminal jurisdiction as justices of the peace have." Section 1093, Kentucky Statutes, provides "that justices shall have jurisdiction exclusive of circuit courts in all penal actions the punishment of which is limited to a fine not exceeding $20, and concurrent with circuit courts of all penal cases the punishment of which is limited to a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding fifty days, or both." It will thus be seen that the Constitution does not place any limitation upon the jurisdiction that may be granted to justices of the peace by the general assembly, but does limit the jurisdiction that may be given police and city courts to whatever jurisdiction has been given the justice's courts, and as the general assembly has seen proper to limit the jurisdiction of justices to offenses where the penalty does not exceed $100 fine and fifty days in jail, therefore, the jurisdiction of police and city courts is within the same limits, and section 3148, and that part of section 3147, Kentucky Statutes, which gives to police and city courts jurisdiction in excess of the penalty stated, are void, being in violation of the State Constitution. 717
3. the language in section 3151, Kentucky Statutes: "Persons committed by said (police) court for default of surety for good behavior or to keep the peace and all others whom the city is bound to maintain when committed to jail," does not refer to persons convicted of crime, but includes idiots, insane persons and inebriates, and as to these persons, not in jail because of their conviction of offense, they can not be compelled to labor, for such would be involuntary servitude and in violation of both State and Federal Constitutions. 718
4. under subsections 23 and 25 of section 8058, Kentucky Statutes, cities of the second class have full and complete power to enact any and all ordinances, and fix fines and penalties to maintain the peace, good government and general welfare of the city, the only limitation being that the penalties for a violation of the ordinances shall not be less than that imposed by the statute, and not to exceed the jurisdiction of the police court as fixed by the statutes and Constitution, and not in conflict therewith. 718
5. so much of the charter of cities of the second class which deny a right to a trial by a jury where the penalty is $25 or less, is not unconstitutional, and neither is it in violation of the State or Federal Constitutions to inflict labor penalties on persons convicted of misdemeanors. 718

MUNICIPAL TAXES—

under sections 8003 and 8005, Kentucky Statutes, not only a lien may be enforced, but a personal judgment may be rendered under either section against the owner of the property or against the trustee, personal representative or agent in his fiduciary capacity for taxes due the city, and which became due more than five years before the filing of the petition. 875

NEGLIGENCE—See Actions, 15; Contracts, 25; Damages, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10; Druggists, 1, 7; Joint Action, 1; Master and Servant, 1, 2, 3, 4.

NEW TRIAL—

Page.

1. the basis for a new trial in the lower court in this action was the affidavit of Landrum as to what he would testify, which was that he was a passenger upon the train upon which appellee was injured and saw appellee when she got on the train and when she left; that she was then feeble and that the collision by which she claims to have been hurt was not unusual or violent. Appellee and her physician both testified to the contrary, and the affidavit of Landrum, therefore, did not authorize the court to grant a new trial. Moreover, his name was furnished by appellee to appellant's claim agent by him as having been a passenger at the time, yet he was not summoned as a witness 713
2. It is well settled that a new trial should not be granted upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence unless it be of a decisive character, and especially should this rule apply where the proposed evidence is in parol and relates to a point in litigation upon the former trial... .. 714
3. where a petition for a new trial shows, if the facts relied on are true, that with the slightest diligence those facts could have been ascertained before the trial, and where a homestead is sought to be reached and there is no allegations showing an abandonment of such homestead, a demurrer was properly sustained to the petition... .. 827
4. where an action for a new trial is brought by the defendant after the expiration of the term at which a default judgment was rendered on the ground of accident and surprise, it was as necessary for the plaintiff to establish his defense by proof, as a condition to obtaining a new trial, as it was to allege it, and failing to do so his position was properly dismissed 961

NONRESIDENTS—See Attorneys.NOON—See Contracts, 39.NOTE—See Assignment; Surety—

- where one assigns and delivers a note to his surety to be applied to the payment of a note owing by the pledgor on which the pledgee is surety, the pledgee is thereby charged with the duty of collecting the note in a reasonable time and applying the proceeds as directed, and if at the time of the delivery of the note the payors were solvent and thereafter became insolvent, the pledgee is liable to the pledgor for the amount of the note... .. 298

NOTICE—See Auditor, 2; Primary Elections, 5; Pleading, 14; Recording Deed; Schools, 10—NOTICE—

- the fact that the deed conveying the mineral rights had been recorded does not alter the question, because if the case turned upon that question either appellees would lose or Bright would lose, and in either event appellant would be the gainer, and it would be violative of equity to enter a decree to the effect that the appellees should have discovered that the conveyance to Bright had been made, or that the index to the record should have put them upon notice, and, therefore, adjudge specific performance 885

NUISANCES—

1. while we are not prepared to say as a matter of law that picnics, beer gardens, howling alleys and the like are per se nuisances, yet they may be so conducted as to become hurtful to the health and destructive of the comfort of the community in which they may be exercised, and when this happens the hurtful thing must be abated, for no one can have the legal right to do that which destroys his neighbor's property or health... .. 781
2. where private citizens suffer peculiar injury from nuisances apart from that of the general public they may maintain their action in equity to abate it, although the public, through the attorney general, may also have the right to proceed in the name of the Commonwealth to abate the nuisance 781

OCCUPATION TAX—See Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.OFFICE AND OFFICER—See Auditor; Bribery, County Board of Health; Primary Elections, 1, 2, 3, 4; Roads and Passways, 1, 2; Schools, 3—

1. the assessors of cities of the third class are by the provisions of the charter elected by the council, and under the provisions of

OFFICE AND OFFICER—Continued.

Page.

- section 3249 may be removed by the council at pleasure; and the fact that section 3254 provides for impeachment of other officers only accentuates and makes clear that those offices elected by the council are not intended to be removed by impeachment 109.
2. this proceeding for a rule to compel a county treasurer to pay into court money that he had collected from the sheriff, which money has upon a former appeal been held a trust fund for the benefit of the taxpayers, was properly refused where the proceeding was in rem, and was only an effort to obtain a personal judgment against the sheriff and his sureties. The treasurer received the money from the sheriff on an admitted debt owing the county by him, and the money not being in lien, and the deposit not having been stayed by garnishee process, the payment was not illegal. 454
3. where the sheriff of a county resigns his office the sureties on his bond for the collection of taxes are not authorized to nominate and require the county judge to appoint a person to collect such taxes in the place of the sheriff who has resigned; such right applies where the sheriff dies, but not when he resigns his office. 764
4. where a county judge accepts as surety upon a guardian's bond of an infant a person he knows to be insufficient as surety under the statute, he is liable on his official bond for whatever damage accrued to the infant by reason of this insufficiency 806.
5. to ascertain such deficiency the guardian should be charged with any balance of his ward's money remaining in his hands at the end of a year, which ought to have been invested or loaned out, and should be charged with interest upon interest in biennial rests during the period he so held it without investment. Where the mother of the infant is unable to support him from her own small estate she should be allowed a reasonable sum for his maintenance during his years of helpless infancy, but should not be allowed to charge where his labor for her was equal to the value of his maintenance. 806.
6. so much of the act of March 21, 1902, amending section 358, Kentucky Statutes, as provides that no allowance shall be made to any county judge or magistrate or police judge, or other officials authorized by law to hold examining courts, does not apply to such officials who were in office at the time of the passage of said act 813.
7. section 161 of the statutes provides that the compensation of any city, county, town or municipal officer shall not be changed after his election or appointment, or during his term of office 813.
8. an action can not be maintained by citizen and taxpayer to oust members of the city council from office on the ground that they had failed to take the oaths of office. Such action must be in the name of some person entitled to the office, or by the Commonwealth, and when by the latter must be brought by or upon information of the attorney general 1080.

OMITTED PROPERTY—See Taxation, 15.

OPTION—See Contracts, 6.

ORDINANCES—See Street Improvement, 7, 8, 9; Taxation, 19, 22—

1. under Kentucky Statutes, section 3059, part of the charter of cities of the second class, providing that "no ordinance shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title," an ordinance passed by the council of the city of Newport for the furnishing of the city with light, heat and power, by means of either gas, hot water or steam, relates to at least three subjects, and is, therefore, invalid 212.
2. under Kentucky Statutes, section 3638, part of charter of cities of the fourth class, which provides that "an ordinance shall be signed by the mayor, attested by the clerk, and published at least once in a newspaper in said city, * * * and shall be in force from and after the publication thereof," it appearing that the mayor of cities of the fourth class has no veto power, the council is the legislative body of the city, and an ordinance of such city is valid when passed by a vote of at least three members of the council and published, although it may not have been signed or approved by the mayor 695.
3. an ordinance of a city of the fourth class takes effect upon its passage by the vote of at least three members of the council and its publication, and it is not material at what date it was made

ORDINANCES—Continued.Page.

- up and regularly approved by the council. The will of the council can not be defeated by the tardiness of the clerk in making out the record on the books of the city council 695
4. an ordinance of a city of the fourth class making it unlawful for any physician to make or give a prescription for any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors in said city to enable him to purchase same, unless such person is sick, or such liquor is required as a medicine, and fixing a fine of from $25 to $100 for its violation, is not void because it undertakes to punish the physician for giving a prescription where he makes an honest mistake as to the whisky being required as a medicine. The rule is that a statute will not make an act criminal unless the offender's intent concurred with his act, and whether he acted in good faith or not is a question for the jury 695
5. the criminal jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals is governed by the Criminal Code of Practice. An appeal may be taken by the Commonwealth if a fine exceeding $50 might have been inflicted. 695
6. under Kentucky Statutes, section 8145, providing for the election of a city jailer by the voters of cities of the second class, and fixing his compensation at not less than $1,500, nor more than $2,500 per annum and allowing him a deputy jailer, an ordinance of a second class city fixing the salary of the city jailer at $1,320 per annum in full of all payments for cooks or other help, which the city jailer may see fit to employ, is invalid to the extent that it allows him less than $1,500 per annum, and denies him a deputy jailer 867
7. an ordinance of a second class city which provides that the jailer shall perform the duties of janitor of the city hall and the building adjacent thereto, in which is located the offices of the city engineer and the city street inspector is valid under section 8145, Kentucky Statutes, which provides that the jailer "shall perform such duties as the general council may by ordinance prescribe". 867
8. under an ordinance of a city of the fifth class, that "any person who shall within the city limits without license so to do sell or otherwise dispose of any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, shall be fined not less than $20 nor more than $100," and a further ordinance providing that "license to sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors in the city shall be $500 per annum, to be taken out either annually or semi-annually and paid for in advance," a wholesale dealer in such liquors who sold and delivered to a saloonkeeper in said city a quantity of beer in a wholesale lot, which was not drunk on the premises of the seller, is subject to the fine prescribed in said ordinance, whether the ordinance be regarded as an occupation tax, one for revenue purely, or whether as a police regulation incidentally affording revenue 984
- OWNER OF ADJOINING TRACTS—See Lands, 4, 5, 6—
1. appellant owned two adjoining tracts of land, and by reason of the mountainous condition of the country the only practicable way to the upper tract was through the lower tract. Appellee bought the upper tract at sheriff's sale, under execution, and brought this suit in the circuit court to restrain appellant from interfering with his right to use a natural and reasonable route over the lower to the upper tract, which the lower court granted. Held—That the circuit court had jurisdiction as this was not a proceeding to condemn a private passway, and the sale by the sheriff's deed passed the same easements over the servient estate as if the sale had been made by the owner 272
2. the fact that the purchaser did not reside on the tract bought at the sheriff's sale does not affect his rights under his title, as the sale made by a sheriff of a part of the owner's tenement for debt is an involuntary conveyance by the owner of such parcel, and the sheriff's deed includes easements and quasi easements appurtenant to the land sold 272
- PAROL EVIDENCE—See Bill of Exceptions, 1, 2—
- the rule is well settled that parol evidence is inadmissible to show the actual location of a patent, and that course and distance must give way to marks found on the ground, or the actual location of the patent. 164

PARTIES TO ACTION—See Attachments, 4, 8—	Page.
an action for damages to Rupert Head, an infant, for failure to deliver him a railroad ticket, ordered by a telegraph, should have been brought in his name, by his statutory guardian, Fred Head, and not in the name of Fred Head, statutory guardian of Rupert Head, suing for the use and benefit of Rupert Head.....	270
PARTNERSHIP—
1. in this action to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a contract of sale of an interest in a partnership between the parties, the instructions fairly presenting the law applicable to the case, and there being evidence upon which the jury was authorized to find a verdict for appellee, the verdict and judgment in his favor will not be disturbed.....	262
2. one partner can not maintain an action at law against his copartner on a claim growing out of the partnership transaction until the business and accounts are finally settled, therefore, it was erroneous in this action for the trial court to render judgment in favor of appellee upon the claim sued on	451
3. where the question as to whether there was a partnership is in controversy, this court has jurisdiction of the appeal though appellant's claim was less than $100.....	452
4. Seeley, being a surviving partner, brought suit against Robinson for a debt due the firm, and before the commissioner's report of indebtedness was confirmed the latter made a deed to Jones of his entire interest in his father's estate his father being deceased (partner of Seeley,) but paid the lawyers, who had a lien upon the judgment, their fee. Having done this he was entitled to credit to that extent upon the judgment which had been assigned by Seeley.....	702
5. the surviving partner holds the assets of the firm as the trustee of an express trust, and the assignee of such partner takes no greater rights than such partner, knowing that Seeley held the judgment as surviving partner.....	702
6. in an action by G. against H. to settle a partnership agreement, in which it was agreed that H. should take charge of five tracts of land belonging to G., clear them up, fence them and cultivate them, the old land to be sown in grass and clover, each to pay one half of the labor required, and each to furnish one-half the stock, tools and teams, H. to have the entire charge of the farms and hands and stock, to receive and pay out the money, the contract to continue for five years, and the profits to be equally divided, to which H. filed a counterclaim for damages, alleging that G. did not furnish his one-half of the stock to consume the provender raised, which was allowed to go to waste, evidence considered, and, Held—That while H. is indebted to G. on the settlement in the sum of $105, he is entitled to damages for G.'s failure to furnish stock to consume the provender raised, which was the main source of the profits of the partnership, and there being $1,079 of the firm assets in the hands of the court, H. is adjudged the whole of said sum in damages, and also to be relieved of his indebtedness to G. in the $105 due on settlement of the partnership, each party to pay one-half of the cost of the suit for settlement, and H. to recover his cost on his counterclaim for damages	970
7. where two men form a partnership as insurance agents, one quite young and inexperienced and the other older and a well-known active business man, with an established insurance business, the fact that the older man was elected city assessor at a salary of $2,400 a year, which was beneficial to the firm in procuring business, and by reason of his duties as assessor the younger partner was required to do most of the office work, would not justify the court, in a settlement of the partnership, to allow the younger partner a salary in addition to his half of the profits of the firm.....	1197
8. here in the business of the partnership an option was taken by one of the partners in the name of the firm, on the sale of which a profit was made, such profit was properly adjudged to belong to the firm	1197
9. in a settlement of a partnership business one-half of the attorney's fees paid out by either partner in the firm business should be charged to the other partner, also any other expense necessarily

- PARTNERSHIP—Continued. Page.
 paid out by either in the firm business should be paid by the firm, and one-half of any dividends collected by either on stock owned by the firm should be accounted for to the other member of the firm 1198
- PASSWAYS—See Easements, 1, 8; Lands, 14; Turnpikes—
1. the continued use of a passway as a matter of right for fifteen years unexplained, will create a presumption of grant, and when the passway has been used for more than a quarter of a century, it is unnecessary to show by positive testimony that the use was claimed as a matter of right, but that after such great length of time the burden is on the other party to show that the use was only permissive. 7
 2. while the continuous and uninterrupted use of a passway for fifteen years creates a presumption that the use was a matter of right, and adverse, such presumption may be overcome by proof that the use was permissive... 839
 8. where the owner of land over which a passway runs erected gates and kept them in repair for his own use, and as a favor to his neighbors allowed them to use the gates and the passway, such use was permissive merely 839
 4. where the weight of the evidence shows that appellant and his vendors have had the use of a passway over an adjoining tract of land as a matter of right adversely to the claimant of the land and all others, continuously for more than fifteen years, he is entitled to a mandatory injunction for the removal of all obstructions to his free use thereof..... 403
 5. a temporary or even permanent change in a part of a passway by the owner of the land over which it runs without the consent of the one entitled to its use, or with the understanding that he is to continue its use as changed, gives him the same right to its use as changed as he had before the change 403
 6. in an action for the obstruction of a passway claimed as a matter of right by prescription, the question of the convenience or necessity thereof to the plaintiff can not be considered, but only its adverse use as an easement for more than fifteen years 403
 7. a grant of way over one's premises will be understood to be a general way for all purposes, and where a right of way is granted or reserved without limit of use, it may be used for any purpose to which the land accommodated by the way may naturally and reasonably be devoted 613
 8. where the public has continued for any and every purpose suitable to their needs, in hauling and traveling, without let or hindrance, to use a passway for more than fifteen years, its public use can not be restricted even though one has accepted a deed containing an easement of a private grant of the way, for if the public then owned the right of way it was not appellee's to grant, nor could any member of the public exclude himself by estoppel from using a public highway that every other member of the public had the right to use..... 613
- PATENTS—See Lands, 1, 2, 3.
- PAYMENTS—See Contracts, 6— while there are rules of law that determine the application of payments of debtor and creditor, it may be a question of fact to be found by the jury as to the debt upon which the payment was made. It is the business of the court to direct the jury how the payment should be applied upon a state of facts which it may find to exist..... 217
- PENAL ACTION—
 section 4224, Kentucky Statutes, provides a different class of retailers of oil from peddlers, of which it has been held that "the unit of taxation is the wagon used in the business of transporting oil for sale," and in a penal action by the Commonwealth, under section 11 of the Criminal Code, to recover of the Standard Oil Co. a penalty for retailing oil without a license so to do, where the language shows that it was brought under section 4224, Kentucky Statutes, a demurrer thereto should have been overruled.. 1116
- PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTION—See Damages, 14; Railroads, 85—
 the giving of a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant is improper where there is any evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff..... 193

PERSONAL INJURIES —See Actions, 3, 7.	Page.
PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE —See Service of Process.
PHYSICANS —See Ordinances, 4.
PLEADING —See Actions, 1; Appeals, 3; Lands, 48; Life Insurance, 21; Railroads, 7, 10; Schools and School Districts; Street Railways, 10, 11, 12; Trespass, 1—
1. In these actions there is a variance between the proof and pleadings. The petition alleged a sale of land to one, and the proof showed a sale to another. The judgment was, therefore, unauthorized. Where a judgment sought to be opened had been obtained by one, he was a necessary party to the petition for a new trial. If there is a defect of parties that question must be raised by demurrer, and it not being raised is waived	154
2. upon the return of this case appellant offered to file amended petitions in two of the cases which were involved upon the first appeal, in which it sought to relinquish all claim to usurious interest. The court refused to permit them to be filed, but allowed them to be tendered and made a part of the record so as to obviate the necessity of a bill of exceptions. Held—The trial court ruled correctly in refusing to permit the amendments as tendered to be filed after the return of the case from this court	263
3. in a petition by a nonresident defendant, sued jointly with resident defendants, for the removal of the action from the State court to the United States Circuit Court, a denial therein of the alleged negligence of its codefendants, and an allegation of the purpose of the plaintiff in joining its agents and servants as defendants with it, was for the fraudulent and wrongful purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court, are conclusions of the pleader, and do not state a single jurisdictional fact	397
4. an allegation in a petition that a conveyance was made without a valuable consideration states merely the pleader's conclusion of the law, and is bad on demurrer	542
5. the verdict appealed from appears to be sustained by the evidence. Under our form of practice, while the pleadings are addressed to the court, either party may introduce those of the opposite party as evidence	573
6. an amended pleading tendered during the progress of a trial, or offered at the conclusion of the evidence to conform to it, is essentially different from a motion for a new trial, as the former presupposes the pending of a trial and the latter that the trial has ended	938
7. where a case has progressed on definite issues to final judgment, an appeal taken, those issues adjudicated by the appellate court, and the case remanded with mandate to enter a conformable judgment, an offer by either party to file an amended pleading containing charges or denials different from or in conflict with the issues on which the cause was originally tried, it would be a necessary requirement of the party so offering that he show to the court by accompanying affidavits why the matter contained in the tendered amendment had been delayed until that time	938
8. where a pleading is tendered by defendants, accompanied by affidavits purporting to be a motion for a new trial, no judgment having previously been entered, such affidavits may be considered by the court in determining whether such pleading should be filed as an amended answer	938
9. while great latitude is and should be allowed in the interpretation of the provisions of the Code, section 134, on amendments to pleadings, this section does not go to the length of authorizing, after trial, judgment, appeal and remanding, an amendment which tenders an issue directly opposed to the issues upon which the case had been tried	938
10. in an action by plaintiffs claiming title by patents to a large survey of land, which was adversely claimed by defendants under conflicting patents and surveys, which lands the defendants by their answer alleged were vacant and unappropriated lands, and the issues tried, appealed and remanded, with the directions for a conformable judgment, an amended answer tendered by defendants setting up a new defense of adverse possession of the

- PLEADING—Continued. Page.
- lands in controversy, which facts were known to the defendants before the former trial and judgment, such amendment was properly rejected by the lower court 938
11. under section 134, Civil Code, the court may at any time in furtherance of justice and on such terms as may be proper, permit a pleading of proceedings to be amended by inserting other allegations material to the case 1100
12. in an action for damages on a guaranty in the sale of machinery to be operated by appellant's boiler the appellant was bound to know the capacity of its boiler and the power it would furnish to operate the machinery..... 1100
13. where there are no averments in the answer to the effect that the agent who sold the machinery had authority to make any guaranty of it, it was not shown to be within the apparent scope of his authority to make such guaranty..... 1100
14. in an action on an alleged guaranty of machinery sold, an amended answer alleging the breaking of a cylinder by reason of defective material, occurring pending the action, no action would lie unless notice was given and a reasonable time to repair the defects. 1100
- PLEDGE—See Fire Insurance, 4.
- POISONOUS MEDICINES—See Druggists, 1, 7.
- POLITICAL PARTIES—See Primary Elections, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9— circuit courts have no power to intervene by writs of certiorari in the governing authorities of political parties in the settlement of contests over nominations, because they are not inferior courts in the sense in which these terms are used in the common law authorities in defining the writ 1041
- POOL TABLES—
 the revenue law of this State, which became effective March 29, 1902, does not include the statute requiring the payment of a license tax to keep pool tables, and, therefore, the latter statute was repealed by the enactment of the present revenue law. It follows, therefore, that a license for pool tables is no longer required..... 735
- PRACTICE—See Actions, 3, 4, 14; Affidavit for Continuance; Appeals, 1, 18; Attorney at Law; Construction of Statutes; Construction of Writing; Errors not Excepted to; Instructions; Judicial Districts, 1, 8; Jurisdiction, 1, 2; Pleading; Res Judicata; Setting Aside Verdict—
1. the fact that one of the judgments appealed from has been reversed does not affect this appeal. The case must be tried here as presented in the lower court, and sections 757 and 758, relied on by appellant, have no application here as they relate to new matter to be set up in this court..... 75
2. where appellant had been absent in South America and in England during the period of the litigation, and the letters of his attorneys had failed to reach him; apprising him of its condition and status, and reached this country just a few weeks after the submission, when he found papers and memoranda which were of vital importance to him in his case the ends of substantial justice require that the submission should be set aside, and that he be allowed time to take proof to enable him to prepare his case 102
3. where a judgment enforcing a lien upon land was rendered, the foundation for the action being a judgment from a magistrate's court, an allegation in the answer of no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether there was such a judgment did not make an issue, and in the absence of a denial of such a judgment the court was authorized to render judgment upon it. Such a judgment was a public record, and if it did not exist a denial of its existence should have been made in positive language 945
4. although there was an irregularity in an appraisal of land directed to be sold, yet where no exceptions to the report of the appraiser were filed until long after its confirmation and after the purchaser had paid the purchase price, it was too late to have the case redocketed for the purpose of setting the sale aside for the error named. 945
5. where the record in an action was lost and a substituted petition, which was in the nature of a reformed petition, was filed, after PRACTICE—Continued.

Issue was joined the record was found when the plaintiff moved to dismiss the so-called substituted petition. Held—The court properly overruled the motion as the petition showed on its face that it was a reformed petition

Page.

885

PREVIOUS CONVICTION—See Criminal Law, 35, 36, 37.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS—

1. the remedy of one claiming a nomination by a party of which he is being deprived, is to appeal to the authorities of his party and not to the clerks of the county courts, nor to the courts. 751
2. though it be conceded that a primary election was void in which one precinct of the county was deprived of an opportunity to vote by not having ballots furnished it, and if it be further conceded that there was no authority for completing the election in the missing precinct on a subsequent day, these facts are matters which pertain to the duty of the party governing authority, and lie back of its certificate of nominations. When the certificate is filed substantially in the form and manner prescribed by the statute it is not within the province of the county clerk to go behind it 751
3. while the clerk of the circuit court may, in the absence of the circuit judge from the county, grant a preliminary restraining order, without notice, upon a showing that irreparable injury would be sustained by the party moving, before he could give notice, such clerk has no jurisdiction in any event to grant a mandatory injunction. 752
4. in an indictment against a county clerk for knowingly and willfully refusing and failing to have the names of certain nominees printed upon the official ballot in the manner provided by the election law of this State, if his refusal was in obedience to an order of injunction made by the circuit clerk, and in an honest belief that such order was valid, then his omission was not willful, but if the proceedings for the injunction were not begun in good faith, but were the result of a collusion between the defendant and any other persons to wrongfully deprive the nominees of their legal right to have their names appear on the ballots as such nominees, then he could not justify his official action by his fraudulent conduct, and in such case the question of the good faith of the defendant should have been submitted to the jury 752
5. under section 1596a, subsection 12, Kentucky Statutes, primary election contests for members of the general assembly are governed by the former law, approved June 30, 1892, which requires only a fifteen days' notice of the contest. 1064
6. under the rule of the common law that no man may be a judge in his own case, and, if he acts, the judgment is void, a brother of one of the parties to an election contest is not qualified to sit as one of the committeemen in the trial of a primary election contest 1064
7. the fact that the seats of one or more members of the committee are contested does not disqualify them from acting in other contested cases, so long as they are members of the committee. If the contests are decided against them, then their powers cease, but until then their powers are not affected by a contest. 1064
8. the fact that certain members of the committee are friends of one of the parties to the contest and induced voters to vote for him in the primary, in the absence of any statute disqualifying them, are not disqualified on common law principles, as they act under oath, and are responsible if they do not act honestly and faithfully. 1064
9. this court has no authority to require the committee to recount the vote. They are the governing authority, and may determine the form and manner of the proceedings in the case. While the court may require them to act, the court can not control their discretion. This must be exercised under their oath and according to their honest judgment 1064
10. under section 1568, Kentucky Statutes, in reference to primary elections, in case of a tie vote or contest the committee has the power to hear and determine who is entitled to the nomination, but in case of a tie the question does not arise until, upon a

PRIMARY ELECTIONS—Continued.Page.

- count of the vote, it is ascertained that two candidates have received an equal number of the votes, and then under section 1551 it must be settled by the casting of lots as provided in section 1556a, subsection 11, for, under section 1551, the primary election must be held and conducted in the same manner and under the same requirements as the regular State election, and this includes not only the receiving of the votes, but the counting of them and the ascertaining of the result 1069
11. a contest can not arise in a primary election until it is instituted by the candidate defeated on the face of the returns. When it is instituted by him the proceedings must be in the same form and manner as the governing authority shall determine upon, but until it is instituted there is nothing for them to act upon . . . 1069
12. the governing authority of the party is given exclusive jurisdiction to determine the contest. The court can not review or correct the decision of the committee on the merits of the contest, but the court may require the committee to act, or it may restrain them from acting when they have no jurisdiction 1070
13. the time within which notice of a contest must be given is a matter not to be determined by the committee. By the statute in this State, for over fifty years contests for county offices have been required to be instituted within ten days after the final action of the canvassing board, and under the present statute the time limit is the same, and contests in primary elections being by section 1563, to be decided by the governing authority of the party holding the election, the grounds of the contest should be filed before it and notice given the contestee within ten days after the canvassing of the returns, otherwise the committee was without jurisdiction to proceed 1070
14. under section 1563, Kentucky Statutes, which provides that "in all cases of a tie vote or contest in primary elections the committee or governing authority holding such primary shall have the power to hear and determine such contest and decide who shall be entitled to the nomination," it is essential that notice of such contest be given to enable the committee to try the contest. The courts have no jurisdiction, directly or indirectly, to review the action of the committee or governing authority 1089

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—See Attachments, 5; Life Insurance, 4.PRIVATE CITIZEN—See Bribery.*PRIVATE CORPORATIONS—

1. a statute authorizing the formation of private corporations for mining, manufacturing, mechanical, quarrying and other industrial pursuits, and "for any other lawful business," is sufficiently broad to include the incorporation of the National Bond and Security Co. for the purposes indicated by its title 358
2. where an incorporated investment company, in placing its bonds on the market, printed on the back thereof the terms and conditions on which they are issued and upon which the "entire scheme" of the company is based, it can not be said to be doing an unlawful business because it was bottomed on a scheme that did not "finance out" but prove to be unprofitable 358

PROCESS—See Husband and Wife, 6

- a nonresident of this State, who has been appointed as administratrix of a decedent in this State, can not claim to be exempt from service of process on her in this State in an action against her as such administratrix, on the ground that she is in this State in obedience to a subpoena as a witness to testify on a trial 996

PROHIBITION—See Writ of Prohibition.PROOF—See Lands, 19*PUBLIC RECORDS—See Appeals, 9.*QUESTION FOR JURY—See Landlord and Tenant, 1.*RAILROADS—See Actions, 1—

1. there is no rule of law declaring what constitutes operating expenses of a railroad company. It is a matter of evidence, and determinable like any other fact, and where the witnesses differ in their testimony as to this matter, the preponderance on the point as to what constitutes operating expenses must control 21
2. the verdict and judgment in this action for $2,000 for damages against appellant for the killing of appellee's intestate will not

RAILROADS—Continued.

Page.

- be disturbed where the evidence shows that deceased was either on the crossing or near it, so near as for all practical purposes to be on it; that it was about dusk; that deceased stopped on a spur so as to allow a freight train to pass when the engine with the tender towards him, backing toward the public crossing, ran over him. If signals were given the noise occasioned by the passing train; its exhausting its steam; the ringing of its bell, were well calculated to drown whatever sounds were made in the way of warnings by those in charge of the engine which ran over deceased. Upon this state of case the court below was authorized to refuse an instruction asked by appellant, based upon the idea that deceased was a trespasser 91
3. where a viaduct was constructed by a railroad ten or twelve feet high in the center of a street, twenty-one feet from plaintiffs' dwelling, which was worth $1,250, a verdict allowing $425 damages is not so excessive as to authorize this court to disturb it where the proofs show that the ingress and egress to and from the property was seriously impaired 184
4. where there was no evidence that the presence of one who was injured by being struck by a moving train was discovered by those in charge of the train in time to avert the danger to him by the exercise of ordinary care, under the well-settled rule that he was a trespasser, the company was under no obligation to maintain a lookout for him, and is not responsible to him unless his danger was perceived and there was after this a failure to use ordinary care for his safety 142
5. an indictment which charges the defendant with having "willfully and unlawfully failed to furnish for the transportation of white and colored passengers on its line of railroad a separate coach, each compartment divided by a good and substantial wooden partition, with a door therein, and each bearing in some conspicuous place, in plain letters, appropriate words indicating the race for which it was set apart," is a good indictment, under Kentucky Statutes, section 795, known as the Separate Coach Act 176
6. on the trial of the defendant for a violation of the separate coach act (Kentucky Statutes, section 795,) the court should have instructed the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the operation of defendant's train February 19, 1903, without a separate coach or compartment car marked and provided with notices as set out in instruction No. 1, was caused by an unavoidable accident or casualty, which defendant, by ordinary prudence, could not reasonably have anticipated or guarded against, they should find the defendant not guilty 177
7. in an action for damages for being put off of a train at the wrong station, and having to walk in the night through the sleet and cold to her station, it was competent for the defendant company to prove by one Wilson and his wife that they invited the plaintiff to stay with them all night at the station where she was put off, as she is not entitled to recover for injuries she could reasonably have avoided, or enhance the damages by her own imprudent conduct 201
8. in this action by appellee against appellant for damages caused by appellant's servants in moving its cars, his statements while testifying to the jury that his physicians had advised him that an operation was necessary and would have to be performed, and in relating a dream that his hand would have to be amputated, and proof by other witnesses of what he had told them several months after his injury of the suffering he had undergone, were incompetent for any purpose. The testimony as to what the physician stated would have been competent had it been testified to by the physician, but coming from appellee it was mere hearsay, and the testimony as to the dream can not be justified upon any ground, nor should others have been permitted to relate conversations had with him in which he related the nature and extent of his sufferings 257
9. where statements of counsel are made outside of the record and were otherwise improper and calculated to inflame and excite the passions of the jury, and thereby induce them to disregard the

RAILROADS—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|--|-------|
| evidence and go to an extreme and unjustifiable length in arriving at a verdict, it was error in the trial court not to admonish the jury to disregard them | 257 |
| 10. where an examination of the railroad track the morning after stock were killed by the train showed that they ran on the track for 800 yards, it can not be presumed in the absence of proof that the horses left the track and then returned to it, and in view of the fact that the horses were not seen until they were struck and that the train ran out of the fog before it reached the point where the horses began running on the track, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, as the law presumes the killing was due to negligence of the railroad company. The fact that the engineer did not see the horses until after he had struck them, the jury was authorized to conclude that he was guilty of a want of care in not keeping a lookout. | 298 |
| 11. where the evidence shows that a brakeman abused a passenger in a caboose on a freight train, and threatened to "knock a lung out of him," the court properly refused to give a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the defendant | 329 |
| 12. on the trial of an action by a passenger against a railroad company for damages for abusive, insulting and threatening language used towards him while a passenger on the train, it was incompetent to admit evidence of statements made by the brakeman of the occurrence some days after it happened, as such statements were no part of the res gestæ and were prejudicial to the defendant | 339 |
| 13. the pleadings support the judgment rendered in this action, and the only question presented is whether the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction which was asked by appellant. Upon the facts it was manifest that the question was for the jury to determine whether proper care was exercised for the protection of the passengers, and the jury having found in favor of appellee, and it not appearing excessive, the verdict will not be disturbed. | 351 |
| 14. where defendant's servants in charge of its switchyard saw a drunken man helped off the train, and shortly thereafter found him lying in a drunken stupor between the tracks in the switchyard, in the night time, from which they aroused him, although he was a trespasser they owed him duty to either safely conduct him from the yard, or in subsequently moving their engine in the yard to keep a lookout so as to avoid injuring him, and in such case where the man was run over and killed in moving the engine in the yard, in an action by his administratrix against the company for negligently causing his death, the trial court properly refused to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant | 388 |
| 15. appellee having purchased a ticket to a station on appellants' line, contracted to take passage on a train scheduled to stop at that point, and in this action to recover damages against appellant for not taking on its fast train, which was not scheduled to stop at the station on its line for which he had purchased a ticket, a nonsuit was properly ordered by the trial court | 484 |
| 16. upon the trial of this action for damages against appellant the statement of the attorney for appellee, to the effect that appellant was not required to go into trial without its absent witness, but had the right to file an affidavit as to what its witness would testify, and that in default of this affidavit he had a right to conclude that the testimony of this witness would have been in favor of appellee. Held—That as the court instructed the jury to disregard this statement of counsel it must be presumed that the jury obeyed the orders of the court, and that no injury accrued to appellant by reason of this occurrence. | 449 |
| 17. the statement of counsel for appellee to the effect that it was the duty of the conductor to assist appellee in alighting from the car, while unwarranted, was not prejudicial, because at most it was but a mere expression of opinion, and had no weight in influencing the verdict of the jury. | 450 |
| 18. it is the duty of those operating trains through towns to keep a lookout for persons upon streets and especially at street cross- | |

RAILROADS—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|---|-------|
| ings, and it is negligence in the company to have its agents or servants throwing substances from a train into the streets as it passes along or across them | 459 |
| 19. it is not contributory negligence for a boy thirteen years of age to stand in a street near a railroad crossing while a freight train is passing, at a place where there is no danger of being struck by the train, and he is not required to anticipate that persons connected with the train will throw freight from the train as it passed across the street, that might strike or injure him | 459 |
| 20. it is a matter of common knowledge that property is transported on freight trains, and where the evidence excludes the idea that a brakeman intentionally hurled a cake of ice from a passing freight train that struck and injured a boy standing in a street near a railroad crossing, the presumption is that the ice was being carried as freight and was thrown out at its destination by the servant while acting within the scope of his employment. | 459 |
| 21. a petition which alleged that "an agent and servant of a railroad company, with gross negligence and carelessness, placed a torpedo on the sidewalk where it was found, or with gross negligence and carelessness placed it on the railroad track so that it could easily be removed or brushed away, and suffered it to be removed to the place where it was found; that one of these statements is true, but he does not know which one is true; that the agent or servant who placed it upon the sidewalk had been and was then charged by the defendant with the duty of safely keeping it; that he knew of its dangerous character; that if he placed it upon the track he had been and was then duly intrusted with its safe keeping, and that the plaintiff, a boy eleven years old, picked said torpedo up from the street in a populous part of the city and in childish curiosity struck it with a hammer, causing it to explode and put out his eye, stated a cause of action, and a demurrer thereto was improperly sustained. | 465 |
| 22. the defendant being a corporate entity it could only have the custody and control of the torpedoes through the instrumentality of agents or servants. The demurrer admits that the agent and servant was charged with safe keeping of the torpedo, and use of the same at the time it was placed upon the track upon the street, therefore, it was the act of the defendant in so placing it. | 465 |
| 23. where a master substitutes another in the care and control of forces or explosives calculated to endanger life, he is responsible for the negligent acts of such other, the same as if acting himself. | 465 |
| 24. where it was alleged in the petition that the agent and servant had the care and custody of the torpedo, it was not necessary to allege that the act of the servant was within the scope of his employment. | 465 |
| 25. it is shown by this record that the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. owns and operates a line of railroad from Louisville to Lexington, a part of which runs through Shelby county, from Anchorage to Christiansburg, a distance of 27.60 miles one of the most prosperous, fertile and thickly settled portions of the State; only 19.10 miles of this distance is operated for local public traffic, the remaining 8½ miles being entirely without such accommodation: that the public along said line has applied to said company for such local accommodation for its traffic, both passenger and freight, which has been refused, and that the railroad commission of this State, upon proper application to it, has directed and ordered that additional facilities be afforded to the public, which have also been refused and ignored by said company. In an action by the Commonwealth of Kentucky v. L. & N. R. R. Co. to compel it to grant such additional facilities. Held—That the citizens of Shelbyville and Christiansburg, and those of the communities contiguous thereto, are entitled to better facilities for the transportation of passengers and freight between the places named than have been afforded them, and that the powers of the court were properly invoked in their behalf. | 497 |
| 26. the fact that the appellee, L. & N. R. R. Co., has made a contract with the C & O. R. R. Co., leasing its road to said company under certain restrictions and privileges as to running of trains | |

RAILROADS—Continued.Page.

- over that part of the line in controversy, does not relieve it from affording the facilities necessary for the needs of the public..... 497
27. the fact that the C. & O. R. R. Co., as lessee of the L. & N. R. R., runs a train daily over said line of railroad, does not meet the requirements of the law and of the public, when such trains do not stop at the way stations or afford local accommodations. It is to accommodate the entire public that both through and local trains are operated by railroad companies..... 497
28. railroads are creatures of the law, invested with certain powers, to promote the public interest, for which reason they may be required to conduct their affairs in furtherance of the public objects of their creation, and it is because of this public character that courts assume jurisdiction to enforce the public duties required of them..... 497
29. a railroad company can not be permitted to escape the performance of any duty or obligation imposed by its charter or by the general laws of the State by transferring its road, or any part thereof to a lease, or upon the ground that its own operation thereof will occasion loss to it..... 498
30. under Civil Code, section 73, providing that "an action against a carrier for an injury to a passenger or to other person or his property must be brought in the county in which the defendant, or either of several defendants, resides, or in which the plaintiff, or his property, is injured, or in which he resides, if he resides in a county into which the carrier passes," a personal representative who resides in Hardin county, into which county the carrier passes, may bring an action in said county against the carrier for negligently causing the death of her intestate, though he was killed in Grayson county, and at the time of his death resided in Jefferson county..... 596
31. while plaintiff's intestate was guilty of negligence in taking his engine on the main track of the railroad in violation of the rules of the company at a station where there was at the time no telegraph operator, in order to supply his engine with water, and when he knew a fast through passenger train was then due to pass said station, and which was entitled to the right of way, it does not necessarily follow that he cut himself off from all right of protection, considering the steps and precaution he took to notify the approaching train of his situation..... 596
32. advertisements or professed tests of air brakes in the back of a book of instructions with reference to the use and operation of such brakes were incompetent as evidence in the case as they seem not to have been prepared and issued by the defendant company..... 596
33. where in an action for the condemnation of a right of way appellees filed exceptions to the commissioner's report and introduced proof, the burden was upon them and they were entitled to the concluding argument. Had they introduced no proof, manifestly they would have been defeated. Therefore, the burden was upon them..... 716
34. courts must take judicial notice of legislative acts incorporating railroads..... 716
35. a peremptory instruction should never be given where there is any evidence, however slight, tending to support the plaintiff's cause of action..... 730
36. evidence of an offer by the plaintiff to compromise her claim for damages for an injury received by her while a passenger on defendant's railroad train is incompetent..... 730
37. a statement made by plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury in an action against a railroad company for damages by a passenger, alleging negligence in defendant's servants in the operation of its train, to the effect that the statistics furnished by the interstate commerce commission show that during last year 60,000 persons were killed and crippled upon the railroads of the United States, can not be said to be improper when made in reply to a statement of counsel for the railroad company that "the railroads employ careful and competent engineers; that it is to their interest to do so to preserve its property and protect its passengers, and if they were not careful and competent men they would not be retained"..... 730

RAILROADS—Continued.

- Page.
38. where the evidence shows that a woman passenger who had just boarded a crowded car and was trying to find a seat was thrown down by another car suddenly and violently striking the one she was in, and injured about her hip and back so as to render her unconscious for a time, and causing her great suffering, which had continued down to the time of the trial, a verdict of $750 in damages can not be held to be excessive..... 730
39. upon the trial of this action, which was an action for damages for an alleged closing of appellee's passway, an instruction which directed the jury, if they found that by uniting the time that appellee had used the passway with that with which it had been used by her husband, it had been used for fifteen years before it was obstructed by appellant, they would find for her in such sum as would compensate her for such trouble, annoyance and inconvenience resulting from the maintenance of the fence, was misleading, and they should have been instructed that the measure of damages was the diminution of the value of the use of her house and land during the time the obstruction was continued, and that such recovery was limited to that measure 748
40. evidence offered upon the trial by appellee of the rental value of the property should have been allowed, for by it the jury might have been able to determine how far the value of the use of the property had been diminished by the obstruction..... 748
41. upon the trial in the lower court in this action against appellant for damages for obstructing appellee's passway, the statement of her attorney that "a more deliberate and barefaced attempt to steal this defenseless widow's passway was never seen," and again, that "after keeping it (the passway) for nine months, they sneaked back and fixed gates," and again, "a more high-handed stealing of a widow's passway was never perpetrated," was improper and calculated to prejudice the jury, and should not have been allowed. 748
42. as the place where it is charged no depot was provided is a village it obviously is embraced in the category of "other stations" mentioned in the statute (section 772, Kentucky Statutes), and as there is no allegation that the railroad commission had required appellee to have a passenger station at the place mentioned in the indictment, the company was guilty of no offense in failing to provide such station 763
43. where an employe of a railroad company was injured by falling from a hand car while in such employment, and by a compromise with said company in writing agreed, in satisfaction of his claim for damages, to accept $100 in money and the payment of his physician's bill for treating him for his injuries, he can not in an action thereafter brought, recover damages for such injuries where such writing is relied on as a defense, in the absence of an allegation of fraud or mistake in the execution of such writing.. 772
44. where a writing purports to be a compromise and settlement of a claim for damages, the presumption is that all matters pertaining thereto are embraced therein, and parol evidence is not admissible to vary its terms in the absence of a charge of fraud or mistake in its execution 773
45. in an action against a railroad company for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate at a private crossing of the railroad track, where there was evidence tending to show that deceased could not see the train until she reached the crossing, and that persons using said crossing depended on hearing the approaching train whistle at a public crossing three-fourths of a mile from the private crossing, and that the train that killed her was traveling at the rate of fifty miles an hour and did not whistle or ring its bell at said public crossing on that occasion, nor at the private crossing, it was error in the court to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant 778
46. by section 6, Kentucky Statutes, a corporation and its agents and servants causing the death of a person are jointly liable therefor. Where a petition is filed in a State court against a nonresident corporation and two of its agents who are residents of this State, alleging facts showing their joint liability for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, such cause of action is not removable to the Federal court on the petition of the nonresident corporation, alleging that the other two defendants were united as codefendants "solely for the purpose of preventing the petitioner from exercising the right guaranteed to it by the Constitution and laws of the United States, of removing this suit to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky"

RAILROADS—Continued.

Page.

801

47. where an action is properly brought in a State court the Federal court does not thereby acquire jurisdiction of the action, and although the plaintiff in the case should appear in the Federal court and try the case, any judgment rendered therein is void. The Federal court having no jurisdiction it can not be acquired or conferred by consent, and its orders and judgments are no bar to a trial of the action in the State court

801

48. a demand against a railroad company for the taking of property where judgment has been procured against it is a lien upon the corpus of the property superior either to a prior or subsequent mortgage, and can not be defeated by a sale of the road unless the lienholder is made a party to the foreclosure proceedings

875

49. in taking an appeal from the county court to the circuit court in proceedings to condemn land sections 839 and 840, Kentucky Statutes, are to be read together, and require the appellant to file the transcript of the orders of the county court, a statement of the parties to the appeal, and execute bond within thirty days after the judgment in the county court. Where a good appeal bond was filed and an imperfect transcript which contained an imperfect statement of the parties to the appeal, it was proper for the circuit court, under section 134 of the Civil Code, to allow the transcript to be amended so as to conform to the requirements of the statutes

952

50. on the trial of a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn a strip of land of 2 71-100 acres taken alongside the county road just outside the boundary of a town of the fifth class, the court instructed the jury that "in fixing the value of the land taken and the damages to the abutting property, the jury may consider its location and use to which the land was adapted, together with the change made necessary in, or discontinuance of, the county road over or in front of said property, if any. They will also find for the defendant such sum as they believe from the evidence they are entitled to for extra fencing, if anything." Held—That said instruction did not present to the jury the proper view of the case, as nothing was said about setting off the incidental damages against the incidental advantages

952

51. the court should have told the jury in the first instruction that in estimating the direct damages they should allow such a sum as they deem from the evidence is the fair and reasonable value of the strip of land taken, considering it in relation to the entire tract, also such other direct damages, if any, as directly result to the remainder of the tract by reason of the situation in which it is placed by the taking of the strip, and such additional fencing and other improvements, if any, as may be necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the remaining land by reason of the taking of the strip. But that their finding of direct damages should not exceed in all the amount which they may believe from the evidence is the difference between the actual value of the entire tract immediately before, and the actual value of the remainder immediately after the taking of the strip, excluding from the estimate any enhancement of the land by reason of the building of a new line of the railroad

952

52. by another instruction the court should have told the jury that they should also take into consideration all the advantages and disadvantages which may be reasonably anticipated to result from the proposed construction and operation of the proposed railway, and if the balance is against the owners of the land they should also find for them the incidental damages in addition to the direct damages referred to in the first instruction. But that if the incidental damages or enhancement of the land is value

RAILROADS—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|--|-------|
| from the prudent construction and operation of the railroad equal or exceed the incidental disadvantages or depreciation in value, they should find for the defendant only the direct damages as set out in the first instruction | 952 |
| 53. section 795, Kentucky Statutes, was intended to force the separation of white and colored passengers while traveling upon railroads in this State, but the legislature did not have in mind, at the time this section was enacted, the purpose of fixing a penalty for failure or neglect on the part of the railroad to furnish sufficient accommodation for the transportation of passengers | 939 |
| 54. where deceased was on the track of appellee, in the country, not on a public highway, he was a trespasser and those in charge of the train were not required to keep a lookout for him, and owed him no duty except to use every effort to avoid killing him after the discovery of his peril. There being no proof that they discovered him in time to have saved him from injury and death, a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the defendant was proper | 969 |
| 55. W. conveyed the defendant, L., A. and P. V. Electric Ry. Co., the right of way through her land in consideration that it would maintain a station thereon near the center thereof. In an action by W. for damages for failure to maintain such station, an instruction that if the jury find for the plaintiffs they should find such sum as would represent the difference in what would have been the fair market value of the residue of the plaintiff's land after the conveyance of the right of way if the station had been established, and the fair market value of such residue without the station, was proper | 977 |
| 56. in an action for damages by the owner of property for failure of a railroad company to maintain a station on land conveyed to the company in consideration thereof, where the damages consisted in the enhanced value of the property in selling it for building lots, the fact that one of the jury, while in charge of the sheriff viewing the property, asked a bystander how much hay was grown on the land, though improper, was immaterial, as the value of the property for building and not for agricultural purposes was the issue | 977 |
| 57. where it was provided in the original charter that a railroad company may consolidate with other railroad companies upon such terms as the directors may agree, and that certain other important contracts may be made by the directors without the consent of the stockholders at all, and this was subsequently amended so modifying it as to require the approval of the stockholders as to the management and disposition of the property, and power given the directors to sell or dispose of it subject to the ratification of a majority (in value) of the holders of stock, another and later amendment providing that no contract that the president and directors may make with the Louisville, Cincinnati & Lexington R. R. Co. shall be valid unless ratified by all the stockholders of the company, does not require a contract of sale to be ratified by the unanimous vote of the stockholders, but only by a majority of them | 986 |
| 58. to require the unanimous vote of all the stock of a railroad to unite with another railroad, or to sell its franchise to another road, is to render this method of development impracticable, as it gives an opportunity to a small number of stockholders to defeat control for selfish purposes and thwart control by the majority | 987 |
| 59. the expression "ratified by the stockholders of this company" is presumed to mean that the directors should bring all matters affecting the railroad before a stockholders' meeting for ratification, not by a unanimous vote, but by a majority | 987 |
| 60. it is a well-settled principle of statutory construction that repeals by implication are not favored by the courts, and will not be declared except it is impossible to permit both statutes to stand, and as the amendment in question is not repugnant to the other acts, but with them form a consistent whole, the contention that it repealed the foregoing amendment providing for a control of the property by a majority of the stockholders is not upheld | 987 |

RAILROADS—Continued.Page

61. where a condemnation proceeding was dismissed upon the execution of a contract providing for the straightening of the channel of a creek, after the lapse of thirty two years the presumption will be indulged that the work was done as provided for in the contract 1051
62. where the contract also provided for the building of a bridge, which was subsequently built by the city of Louisville, if there was any right of action against the railroad company it accrued when the city built the bridge, and as more than fifteen years elapsed from that time until the suit was brought the right of action to recover the land was barred 1051
63. the Illinois Central R. R. Hospital Association is a corporation organized under chapter 22, sections 879, 880 and 881, Kentucky Statutes, "to give proper care and treatment to the sick and wounded employes of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. in a certain territory. All officers and employes of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. in said territory are members of said association, and are subject to monthly assessments to support same. While appellee was in the service of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. his knee cap was broken and he was sent to said hospital for treatment. He claims that while there under the care of the physicians and nurses he was unskillfully treated and has brought this suit against the Illinois Central R. R. Co. for damages. Held—The mere fact that the board of directors of the hospital association are selected by reason of their connection with the Illinois Central R. R. Co. does not make them the agents or officers of the Illinois Central R. R. Co. in the performance of a duty for another and distinct corporation. The duties which they are required to perform are not such as are required in the execution of the purpose and objects of the organization of the appellant .. 1198
64. there is no evidence that the Illinois Central R. R. Co. made any contract with the appellee that he should be "properly and skillfully treated by proper and skillful surgeons and attendants." The fact that the hospital association was organized for that purpose does not tend to prove that appellant made such a contract with appellee. The Illinois Central R. R. Co. is simply the agent that collects the funds for the benefit of the hospital association 1198
65. the hospital association is a separate and distinct corporation from the Illinois Central R. R. Co., and the latter has no financial interest in the result of its management, and in no way is it liable for the conduct of its directors or the physicians or attendants at the hospital 1191

RATIFICATION—See Railroads, 60.READING EXTRACT FROM BOOK—See Criminal Law—

it was not error in the court to refuse to allow defendant's attorney, during his argument to the jury, to read to the jury an extract from "a book on the Guiteau trial," there being no avowal as to what his counsel intended to read from the book 219

REAL ESTATE—See Lands—

1. in an action to enforce a mortgage lien on the land of a married woman executed by her and her husband, in which the land was sold after the death of the wife under a judgment against her surviving husband and children, who were all served with process, at which sale one of her sons became the purchaser at the price of $2,730, which he paid into court under a written agreement with the city of Louisville that it would look to the fund in court for all unpaid city taxes, which order was entered and a deed made to the purchaser free of lien, and in a subsequent action by the city against the husband, who alone was served with process, to enforce a lien for taxes due the city on said lot, which were consolidated with the original action of appellant to foreclose the mortgage aforesaid, a judgment was entered against the husband for the taxes and interest, amounting to $1,490.64, and awarding the city a first lien on the fund in court for said judgment. Held—That said judgment was erroneous. The fund in court is the proceeds of the sale of the fee-simple title of the lot under the judgment of foreclosure where all the owners were parties, and before the court. The city had

REAL ESTATE—Continued.

Page.

properly assessed the property for taxation against the husband who was the life tenant, but as he alone was before the court in the actions for taxes, no interest of the remaindermen could be subjected to the payment of the taxes, and the city was entitled out of the fund in court only to the interest of the life tenant therein

588

2. formerly, under the common law the heir or devisee could alienate lands received by devise or descent at any time after the death of the ancestor, and pass a good title to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, but under the present statutes of this State this can not be done until after six months from the death of the ancestor. And the only way to prevent or defeat the creditors of the deceased from subjecting his land to the payment of their claims is by a voluntary alienation by the heir or devisee after six months from the date of the death of the ancestor.

1067

RECORDS—See Practice, 5; Transcripts—

where a record is taken from the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals by an attorney, to be used by him instead of a copy, his client is liable for the cost of a copy, although the clerk may have agreed with the attorney not to charge for the copy unless his client is successful, as the fees of the clerk's office now belong to the State and the clerk has no authority to make such an agreement

180

RECORDING DEED—See Notice—

where the grantee in a deed lodged his deed with the clerk of the county court of the county, where his land lies, and said deed was recorded by the clerk in the deed book kept in said office for that purpose, such recording is legal notice of and protects the grantee in his ownership of said land against any subsequent purchaser thereof. The fact that the clerk failed to index the deed book containing such record does not affect the grantee's ownership of the land

268

RELIGIOUS BELIEF—See Criminal Law, 22.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES—See Railroads, 46, 47.

RENEWAL NOTES—See Liens, 7.

RES JUDICATA—See Practice 1; Settlements—in this action by an infant and its statutory guardian to recover certain mense profits growing out of a house and lot, the petition averring that the real estate descended to the infant as the only child and heir at law of its mother and that his father became entitled to the use of one-third of it for life, it was further averred that appellee, his grandmother, brought a suit in the Jefferson Circuit Court against the infant and his father to recover the real estate mentioned, upon the alleged ground that she had furnished the money to pay for the property with the understanding that the property should be conveyed to her, which action was decided in favor of appellant by the Court of Appeals, which court directed that the action be dismissed, which was done. The accounting in this action being for rents of this property, the defense being the same claim set up in appellant's former action, the plea of res judicata interposed by appellees was properly sustained

51

RETAILERS OF OIL FROM WAGON—See Penal Action.

RIGHT OF WAY—See Lands, 14.

ROAD DISTRICTS—See Taxation.

ROADS AND PASSWAYS—See Railroads, 89—

1. where gates are erected upon public roads with the permission of the county court, the court can not abolish them by proceedings under section 4297, Kentucky Statutes
2. where the circumstances indicate a presumption that one in opening a passway and erecting gates upon it did so with the reservation that he should be permitted to maintain the gates, and this was done without objection or interference for several years, the passway being a private one, the court was without power under section 4297, Kentucky Statutes, to remove them
3. where $75 was appropriated by the fiscal court for the building of a bridge on a public road and a special commissioner appointed to let out the contract and superintend its construction, such

891

891

ROADS AND PASSWAYS—Continued.

Page.

commissioner is not liable in an action for damages to one who was injured by the falling of such bridge by reason of its defective construction, the provision of section 4820, Kentucky Statutes, referring to his bond and his liability, must be held to protect the county and not to include causes of action by persons damaged..... 484

4. the rule in Kentucky is that as a county is but an integral part of the State, and the fiscal court is a part of the machinery of the State government, no action lies against the county or the fiscal court, or the judge or justices composing it, for injuries done to a traveler by the falling of a bridge constituting part of a highway and under the control of the court, although guilty of gross negligence in failing to repair it..... 484

ROBBERY—

the indictment in this case containing all the necessary allegations to constitute the crime of robbery, and the evidence showing that appellant snatched from the person of Crowder his watch, while the latter was walking along a street with two companions, pulling the watch with sufficient force to break the chain, and taking it from the possession of its owner, the evidence bringing it within the rule announced in Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, page 834, the judgment of conviction will not be disturbed 512

RULES OF COURT—See Appeals, 10.SALE OF LAND—See Auctioneers; Auction Sale of Lots; Lands, 18, 24; Mortgages, 4, 5—

1. where land is sold under decree of court, in which certain interests have been conveyed to the claimant of the land by married women by deeds in which their husbands did not join, in paying the proceeds of the sale to such married women they should be required to account to their vendee for the money he paid to them in purchasing their interest, but no interest should be charged to them and no rents charged to their vendee..... 227
2. appellees having purchased a tract of land from appellant, and it appearing that prior to this sale appellant had sold the mineral rights in the land to Bright, appellees are entitled to a rescission of the contract because a perfect title to the land could not be conveyed as appellant had covenanted to do 385
3. in a sale of land as a whole for a division of the proceeds, where the heirs are by different parents and do not own a joint interest in each parcel, the fact that one of the heirs, who is an infant, owns an interest in a portion of the tract which is of a greater value than an average of the whole tract, is not cause for setting aside the sale, as this fact can be ascertained by the court before distribution, and the proceeds apportioned so as to give to such infant its equitable interest therein 610
4. a sale will not be set aside because the wife of one of the defendants is not a party to the suit, as she can still be brought before the court before distribution of the sale money, and her potential interest ascertained and paid to her out of her husband's share.. 611
5. where the land intended to be sold is manifest, the sale will not be set aside, because of a misdescription of the boundary caused by a resurvey by the officer making the sale, nor because said survey was not filed, nor because some taxes are due on the land which can be paid out of the sale money before distribution 611
6. the sale will not be set aside because one of the daughters of deceased is claimed to have died testate, devising all her property to her sister, and that her will is being contested, because if the will is probated her sister, who is a party to this action, will be bound by the decree, and if rejected, then all her heirs are parties to this action and are bound by the judgment and sale..... 611
7. a sale of land made and confirmed at a special term of the circuit court, regularly called, is valid... 611
8. sale confirmed the same day the report was filed, though unusual, is not invalid as to the purchaser, where it is not shown that the purchaser was not prevented by that act from filing exceptions of merit to the sale, and does not show to have been prejudiced thereby..... 611

SALE OF LAND FOR TAXES—See Lands; Taxes—	Page.
in a proceeding to enforce a lien on land for city taxes listed by the life tenant, it was error to sell the land for the taxes primarily owing by the life tenant, where process was only served on the owner of the remainder interest, although there was an allegation that the life estate was insufficient to pay the taxes. The life tenant should have been before the court, and his interest first sold so that the remainderman could protect himself by buying in the life estate	204
SALES OF MERCHANDISE—
where the evidence in this action showed that the goods were sold in the usual course of trade and without other warranty than the law implies in such sales; that the goods were retained by the purchasers for about seven months, before offering to return them; that one of the partners asked indulgence on the claim, never complaining of the goods or offering to return them, and most of the goods being sold, it is manifest that the defense is an afterthought and without merit.....	94
SALES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—
1. appellant can not complain that notice that the machine sold by it was not satisfactory was not given in accordance with the stipulation in its contract of sale where it waived its right and acted upon the notice it did receive and sent an expert to examine the machine.....	492
2. the verdict and judgment by which appellee was awarded $500 damages upon the sale to him of a thresher will not be disturbed where, though the evidence was conflicting, it showed the machine to be almost worthless for the purpose for which it was sold.....	492
SALE OF TIMBER—
1. the rule is that a sale of timber on a certain tract of land, to be removed in a given length of time, is only a sale of so much as is removed within the time	1110
2. while parol evidence is not competent to vary a writing it is competent to identify the subject-matter of the contract and to show what objects were at the time known by the terms used.....	1110
3. where by a written contract certain oak timber was sold on the Levi Jackson home place, parol evidence is competent to prove that when the parties in the contract designated the land as the "Levi Jackson home place" they did not understand that either the Walden, State Hill or Edwards tracts were included in the sale, and that the meaning of the contract is that all the land within the meaning of the contract is that all the land within the exterior bounds given, which was then known as the Levi Jackson home place, was included in the contract.....	1110
SCHOOL BOARDS—
1. the Louisville School Board, under Kentucky Statutes, section 2949, is a corporation, with power to contract, sue and be sued, and under section 2956 it had a right to employ a janitor and fix his salary, and by section 2954 it is its duty to pay such salary out of the fund which annually comes into its hands for educational purposes	508
2. the payment of the salaries of teachers and employes is one of the duties imposed upon the school board, and a suit against it for the employe's salary relates to the business for which such board was organized, and such suit is not against public policy.	508
3. a janitor of a school, appointed by the school board, has the right to assign his salary after it is earned, and such assignee has the right to enforce its collection by suit.....	508
SCHOOL FUND—
money paid into the treasury by foreign insurance companies on account of the tax of $2 upon each $10 of premiums collected by them is no part of the annual tax of 22 cents on each $100 of value of real or personal estate or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation, and is, therefore, not embraced by subdivision 5 of section 4870, Kentucky Statutes, specifying what shall constitute the school fund of the State	40

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—Page.

section 448, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "where an act is required to be done by three or more, when done by a majority of them it will be deemed the act of all." Section 4541 provides "that the secretary of state, with the assent of the governor, may appoint an assistant secretary, who, in case of absence or indisposition of the principal, may do the business of the office in his name." By section 4477 "the superintendent of public instruction, together with the secretary of State and the attorney general, shall constitute the State Board of Education," of which board, by section 4879, the superintendent is made chairman. Section 4424 requires "the publishers of school books to execute before the ex-officio members of the State Board of Education the bond therein required." In an action by the Commonwealth on the bond of appellees, Ginn & Co., school book publishers, to recover the penalty for its breach, which was filed with and approved and accepted by the superintendent of public instruction and assistant secretary of state, the presumption that at the time of such approval the secretary of state was absent or indisposed is not overcome by the filing of an answer by the appellees, Ginn & Co., that "the bond was approved on October 20, 1896, not later than 9:30 o'clock, a. m., in the city of Frankfort, and that the secretary of state left said city on that day at 9:50 o'clock, a. m., for a temporary purpose only, viz., to make speeches in a political campaign, and would certainly return in a few days, and there was no occasion in passing immediately on the acceptance of the bond; that the schools throughout the State for that year had begun, and the books for that year had been adopted and were being used at that time," the pleading must be taken against the pleader, and it must be presumed, from the facts stated, that the secretary of state was not at his office when the bond was accepted, but was preparing to leave Frankfort, and had absented himself from his office with the purpose of not returning for a few days, and a demurrer to this plea should have been sustained..... 486

SCHOOLS—

1. where a twelve-year old girl, who was a pupil of the city school, of the city of Nicholasville, was injured by falling from the stairway of the school building to the first floor, she is not entitled to recover from the city damages for the injuries sustained, as the duty of providing public education at the public expense by building and maintaining schoolhouses, and conducting public schools therein, is purely a public or governmental duty, in the discharge of which school districts act as the representatives of the State, and they are exempt from corporate liability for the improper construction of the houses or want of proper repair, or the wrongs of the servants employed..... 974
2. pursuant to section 4440, Kentucky Statutes, trustees of common school districts have the power, without the interposition of an election by the people, to levy an ad valorem tax not exceeding 25 cents on each $100 of taxable property, per school year, and a capitation tax not to exceed $1 for four years, and this yearly tax constitutes the income and revenue which the provision of section 157 of the Constitution forbids being exceeded except by a vote of the people..... 983
3. where the claim against a common school district for supplies furnished the district is within the annual revenue of the district as provided by law, it is the duty of the trustees to collect a sufficient sum to pay it..... 983
4. presumption that officers did their duty—it will be presumed that the trustees in drawing their warrant upon the school superintendent did their duty, and the claim that the petition is defective because it did not allege that the superintendent did not notify the trustees in writing of the necessity for the apparatus is not tenable..... 983
5. the Brooksville Graded School in this State is maintained by the State by taxation. It is open to all white children within certain ages, who, or whose parents, reside in the district. In opening this school every morning the following prayer was offered: "Our Father, who art in Heaven, we ask Thy aid in our day's SCHOOLS—Continued.

Page.

- work. Be with us in all we do and say. Give us wisdom and strength and patience to teach these children as they should be taught. May teacher and pupil have mutual love and respect. Watch over these children both in the schoolroom and on the playground. Keep them from being hurt in any way, and at last when we come to die may none of our number be missing around Thy throne. These things we ask for Christ's sake. Amen." Held—That such prayer is not "sectarian" either in form or substance within the meaning of section 5 or section 189 of the Kentucky Constitution, or of section 4368, Kentucky Statutes. 1021
6. though it be conceded that any prayer is worship, and that public prayer is public worship, where children, whose parents object, are not required to attend at such prayer service, the school can not be considered "a place of worship," nor are its teachers "ministers of religion" within the contemplation of section 5 of the Kentucky Constitution, although a prayer may be offered incidentally at the opening of the school by the teacher 1021
7. we believe the reason and weight of the authorities support the view that the King James translation of the Bible is not a "sectarian" book within the meaning of the Kentucky Statute, section 4368, which provides that "no books or other publications of a sectarian, infidel or immoral character shall be used or distributed in any common school, nor shall any sectarian, infidel or immoral doctrine be taught therein," and when used merely for reading in the common schools without note or comment by teachers is not sectarian instruction, nor does such use of the Bible make the schoolhouse a house of religious worship. 1021
8. that the Bible, or any particular edition, has been adopted by one or more denominations as authentic, or by them asserted to be inspired, can not make it a sectarian book. The book itself, to be sectarian, must show that it teaches the peculiar dogmas of a sect as such, and not alone that it is so comprehensive as to include them by the partial interpretation of its adherents. Nor is a book sectarian merely because it was edited or compiled by those of a particular sect. It is not the authorship, nor mechanical composition of the book, nor the use of it, but its contents that give it its character 1021
9. where a member of a board of trustees of a graded common school tendered his resignation, and it was accepted, he ceased to be a member and did not thereafter have power to withdraw it 1106
10. where a board of trustees consisted of five members, and three of them gave a written notice to the chairman requesting him to call a meeting at 10 o'clock at night of that day, which the chairman refused to call, a meeting of the three and action taken by them, without further notice to the other two, was invalid 1106
- SELF-DEFENSE—See Criminal Law; Homicide, 6, 14—the doctrine of self-defense rests both upon actual necessity and apparent necessity. An abandonment of a fight must, therefore, relieve the other party of both actual and apparent danger, and if the person assaulted thereafter renew the conflict or continue it, then the original assailant's right of self defense attaches as if he had not begun it. 115
- SEPARATE COACH—See Railroads, 54.
- SEPARATION OF WITNESSES— under section 601 of the Civil Code the trial court may, in its discretion, allow one of the witnesses for the Commonwealth to remain in the court room to aid the attorney for the Commonwealth during the trial. 333
- SERVICE—See Process.
- SERVICE OF PROCESS UPON NONRESIDENT— where an administratrix living in another State was only brought before the court on an appeal in an action which had been instituted by her deceased husband, section 542, Civil Code, has no application, and service of process in such case was proper in this State. The appeal being in effect a proceeding to set aside a judgment against her testator, she was a proper party to the appeal. 1113

SERVITUDE—See Actions, 9.	Page.
SETTING ASIDE VERDICT—See Practice, 2—where the evidence in a case is conflicting in its character we are not warranted in setting aside the verdict of the jury	233
SETTLEMENTS—
1. in an action against a trustee by the cestui que trust to surcharge a settlement and to obtain a complete settlement of the trustees accounts, everything that was litigated, or might have been, in that action is concluded by the judgment rendered in it, and the claim that the trustee failed to charge himself with certain sums is res judicata.	1003
2. such a judgment can not be attacked collaterally where the fraud complained of lay back of the trial, but only where it related to the obtention of the judgment.	1003
SHERIFFS—See Office and Officer, 3; Taxes, 8—
1. in an action by a county against the surety on the official and county levy bonds of the sheriff for failing to collect and account for taxes due the county, such county is not limited in its remedy to a proceeding under section 4146, Kentucky Statutes, which authorizes the fiscal court at its October term to appoint commissioners to settle with the sheriff, where the sheriff refuses to settle or absconds and fails to settle	66
2. where for some of the years it was shown that the sheriff had made settlement as required by Kentucky Statutes, section 4146, and that such settlements had not been appealed from or otherwise set aside, such settlements are binding on the county and are not subject to collateral attack	66
3. on all taxes not paid before December 1 of the year in which they are due a penalty of 6 per cent. is added, which penalty goes to the county under Kentucky Statutes, section 1885, and when collected or collectable the sheriff is liable for it to the county precisely as he is for the taxes	66
4. under section 4147, Kentucky Statutes, if the sheriff does not collect and pay over to the county all the collectable taxes in his hands by January 1 after the year in which they were due and payable, he is liable to the county for a penalty of 6 per cent. on the amount so collected or collectable by him and not paid over, which penalty is against the sheriff, and is calculated upon the total sum due the county by him on January 1, after it became due, whether for taxes and penalties against the taxpayer collected or collectable.	67
5. it was the duty of the sheriff to pay the railroad taxes which he collected to the treasurer of the sinking fund commissioners of the railroad taxes, who is shown to have demanded them, and by his failure to do so he has incurred the penalty fixed by the statute, and such duty is not in abeyance until he has settled.	67
6. when the whole of the sheriff's liabilities are ascertained it is competent to reduce them to a single sum and to render judgment for that sum which will bear interest from the date of the judgment, for then penalties and interest already accrued are merged into the judgment which must bear interest	67
7. a judgment against a sheriff for the collection of taxes in excess of the constitutional limit, is not such a judgment as will authorize an order awarding a capias ad satisfaciendum for its collection or enforcement.	297
8. an order of the county judge directing the sheriff to pay an attorney 25 per cent. of the sum collected by the sheriff from the railroad as franchise tax was void, and the sheriff was properly refused a credit for said payment in his settlement with the county commissioner.	319
SHOOTING IN SUDDEN AFFRAY—
an instruction under Kentucky Statutes, section 1242, for shooting in a sudden affray, etc., should follow the language of the statute	333
SLANDER—
1. the following words, viz.: "I bribed him in a railroad case; I know he was bribed and can do it again; he sold out in the railroad case and received a bribe," when spoken of one who, at the time the bribe was alleged to have been accepted, was not an officer, do not import a crime for which the accused may be indicted, and are not actionable unless special damages are shown.	326

SLANDER—Continued.

Page.

2. the rule in slander is that the plaintiff must prove the words as alleged by him, and not other words of like import, and for this reason the defendant is not allowed to plead that he used other words, and attempt to justify them 326

SLAVES—

under the act of the Kentucky Legislature of February 14, 1866, providing that the issue of customary marriages of negroes while they were slaves, a son of parents who were shown to have been married according to the custom among slaves in Kentucky, and who recognized each other as husband and wife, is held to be an heir of his deceased father, although the parents failed to appear before the clerk of the county court and make the declaration required by the statute as evidence of the existence of their marriage..... 899

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCES—See Lands—

appellees were devised certain real estate by the will of Lightfoot. To the widow the devise was for life and the daughters were devised the remainder, and by another clause of the will it was provided that the same should not be sold for any purpose until the death of his wife. Held—That appellant, who had bought the land, but who, when tendered a deed refused to accept it, denying the right of appellees to convey, could not be compelled to perform the contract, the accepted doctrine in this State being that restraints upon alienation may be imposed for a limited length of time. The manifest intention of the testator was to preserve the property intact during the life of his wife, and she being beyond middle life when the will was probated, her expectancy was not so great as to render the restriction placed upon the devisees unreasonable 218

STATE FAIR—

the act of March 29, 1902, does not create Kentucky Live Stock Breeders Association. That corporation was already in existence. The act makes an appropriation and directs that a State fair be held. The Breeders' Association is simply an agency to carry out the purposes of the legislature, nor does the act relate to more than one subject. The creation of the fair and the name of the agency are germane to the subject expressed in the title of the act..... 518

STATUTES, CODES AND CONSTITUTION—

Kentucky Statutes—

section 1162	113
section 3639	32
sections 1885, 4146	66
sections 3704, 4147	69
section 4870	46
section 2557	86
sections 3249, 3254	109
sections 1601 to 1623	153
section 567	170
section 1707	191
section 2128	140
section 795	177
section 2931	209
section 14a	239
section 3049	212
section 744	346
section 728	346
section 3003	375
section 3005	375
section 1242	333
section 4077	345
section 4820	367
section 734	345
section 530	447
section 448—Construction of Statutes	487
section 470—Contracts	480
sections 641, 658, 664, 679—Insurance	471
section 1128—Accessories	447
section 1147—Jurisdiction	443

STATUTES, CODES AND CONSTITUTION—Continued.	Page.
sections 2122, 2123—Alimony	437
section 3490—Municipal Corporations	483
section 4214—Revenue and Taxation	474
sections 314, 4820—Roads and Passways	485 sections 4377, 4424, 4541—Schools	487
section 4639	513
section 1113	561
section 2238	561
section 891	529
section 964	562
section 807	620
section 2949	508
section 2956	508
section 2954	508
section 4020	540
sections 149, 4258, Revenue and Taxation	711
section 304, Charitable Institutions	641
section 639, Insurance	672
section 1907, Fraudulent Conveyances	659
section 2030 Guardians	663
section 2360 Alienation	665
section 2514, Limitation	641
section 3058, subsections 23, 25, Municipal Corporations	721
section 3063, Municipal Corporations	719
sections 3147, 3148, 3151, Municipal Corporations	720
section 4023, Revenue and Taxation	667
section 4154, Revenue and Taxation	724
sections 4709, 4711, Trusts and Trustees	709
section 6, Actions	803
sections 153, 1460, Elections	755
section 772, Corporations	764
section 1130, Crimes, etc	772
section 1185, Forgery	739
section 1457a, Elections	759
sections 1531, 1526, Vacancies	766
section 4136, Revenue and Taxation	765
section 3145	867
section 4997	891
section 1478a	910
section 2555	910
section 2757b	918
section 795	932
section 788	932
section 839	959
section 940	952
section 470	979
section 4440	983
section 2032	1020
section 4368	1021
section 4368	1022
section 3896	1032
section 4077 to 4091	1084
section 1596a	1064
section 1551	1049
section 1563	1070
section 4201	1078
sections 4842 to 4848	1081
section 1563	1089
sections 1882 to 1885 and 4143, 4077, 4083 and 4091	1104
section 4224	1116
section 1596a	1137
section 659	1142
section 3644	1150
section 3638	1150
section 120	3
section 3	447
sections 31, 24, 448	447
section 218	449
section 20	691

STATUTES, CODES AND CONSTITUTION—Continued.	Page.
section 94.....	648
section 124.....	712
section 347.....	698
section 26.....	40
section 601.....	333
section 34, subsection 4.....	555
section 410.....	555
section 73.....	596
section 21.....	641
section 490.....	683
sections 489, 491, 492.....	666
sections 738, 749.....	769
section 724.....	850
section 731.....	850
section 738.....	908
section 48.....	929
section 134.....	938
section 88.....	1038
section 59.....	1038
section 745.....	1048
section 490.....	1057
section 134.....	1100
section 163.....	32
section 192.....	170
section 170.....	129
section 128.....	241
section 132.....	241
section 7.....	400
section 8.....	483
section 110.....	442
section 203.....	542
sections 142, 143.....	720
section 248.....	722
section 157.....	983
section 157.....	994
section 5.....	1021
section 189.....	1021
section 50.....	1137
STATUTE OF FRAUDS—See Constructive Trust, 1, 2—an agreement to become partners in dealing in real estate is not a contract to buy nor a contract to sell real estate as between the parties to it, and is not within the statute of frauds, and, therefore, need not be in writing if to be begun, and may not end within a year, although as a fact it may not be terminated for more than a year.....	505
STENOGRAPHERS—See Transcripts.
STOCK CERTIFICATES—
1. where a power of attorney appended to each of certain notes which were secured by lien upon certificates authorized a private sale of the stock certificates without advertisement or notice, but by clear implication precluded the holder of the notes from becoming the purchaser at such sale, the purchaser should be required to show that the sale was fairly made according to the terms of the contract at "public sale".....	522
2. it being evident that appellant made no effort to dispose of the stock with a view to benefit the appellees, but that his purpose was to obtain the property for himself at the lowest possible price regardless of the interest of those whom it was his duty to protect, the sale to him was contrary to law.....	522
3. it was improper for the court below to require so large a sum ($65,000) to be placed in the hands of its commissioner at the expense of the parties, and there held until the exchange of stock and notes were made or the litigation ended. The court should have fixed a day within a reasonable time for the exchange of money and stocks to take place.....	522
STOCKHOLDERS—See Corporations, 1, 2, 3; Railroads, 59, 60, 61.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—See Limitation; Taxation, 25— Page.

1. under section 2883, Kentucky Statutes, which requires the State to pay its proportion of the cost of the improvement of a public street in cities of the first class, on which property is situated which is owned by the State, or is held in trust for the public use of the State, where such street has been improved under the ordinance of the city and an apportionment warrant or statement of the costs thereof shall be certified by the board of public works of the city to the State auditor, it is the duty of the auditor to pay the same..... 129
2. the act supra is not in conflict with section 156 of the Constitution on the ground that it is local or special legislation, because Louisville is the only city of the first class in this State, nor is it in conflict with section 170 of the Constitution, by which it is provided that public property used for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation, as it is well settled that the sections of the Constitution relating to taxation do not apply to assessments made on adjoining property for the improvement of a highway.. 129
3. where a city loaned its credit to a lot owner for the cost of a street improvement paid for by the city, and which, at the implied request of the debtor, was payable in ten yearly installments, such debtor, after paying the two first installments and having knowledge that the city, in extending him the credit had acted upon the idea that he had requested it, will not be heard to say he had not requested it, and by a plea of limitation throw a loss upon the city which it would not have sustained but for his misleading it..... 286
4. section 2830, Kentucky Statutes, providing that changes of plans may be had upon the agreement of the board of public works by consent of contractor, it was no defense to the warrant that the grade was changed so as to lessen the cost of improvement after the contract had been let..... 437
5. where it is not contended that lots affected by the improvement is in territory defined by squares, it is not a defense that the territory in which appellant's lots are situated was divided into squares by principal streets, and that, therefore, the defining of a taxing district so as to bear one-half of the costs was unauthorized..... 437
6. although an ordinance may be inartificially drawn, yet where it is evident that the board of trustees intended that the abutting property should pay the expenses of an improvement to the street they should be required to pay for same..... 631
7. where attested copies of an ordinance is filed as evidence in a case the presumption must be indulged that they were regularly passed until their validity is impeached, and if the town clerk had failed to make a record of the passage of the ordinance that fact could be established by parol testimony..... 631
8. while the clerk of the board of trustees should have recorded the separate action of the board on different ordinances, although this is not shown, and although the board may have passed two or more ordinances at the same time, such action would not prevent a recovery by the appellees for the work which they did.... 631
9. where no apportionment warrant was issued against the owner of property no lien for street improvement exists, and the issual of such warrant against one person does not create a lien upon the property of a stranger..... 1001
10. where more than five years elapsed between the issual of the apportionment warrant and the filing of the amended petition making the vendor of appellee a party, the plea by him of limitation was conclusive against appellant..... 1001

STREET RAILWAY—

1. the driver of a wagon in a public street has the right to use any part of it, although occupied by the track of a street railway, and if while driving on the street car track he is struck by the car without negligence on the part of those in charge of the car, when his presence on the track could not be discovered by them in the exercise of ordinary care in time to avert the injury, he can not recover. But he is not a trespasser on the track, and has a right to anticipate that a proper lookout would be kept by those in charge of the cars, and that ordinary care would be exercised by them to avoid running into him..... 816

STREET RAILWAY—Continued.

Page.

2. in an action by a passenger against a street railway company for damages for being assaulted and thrown from the car by its conductor after tendering his fare, an amended petition filed after the expiration of twelve months from the time of the alleged assault, explaining plaintiff's mistake in presenting an improper ticket for his fare, is not a new cause of action and not barred by the one-year statute of limitation..... 836
3. a street car conductor has a right to eject a passenger from the car for a failure to pay his fare, but he has no right to use more force than is reasonably necessary to do so, and if he uses more force than is reasonably necessary to do so the company is liable for the damages to the passenger resulting from such excessive force 836
4. an instruction to the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the conductor in ejecting the passenger "was inspired to use excessive force, if he did so, by actual malice or ill will towards the plaintiff, the jury may, in their discretion, allow punitive damages," was more favorable to the defendant than it was entitled to. The court should have added after the word "plaintiff" the words "or wantonly or recklessly threw him from the car" 836
5. the granting of a franchise to operate a street car line over the streets of a city to any person except to the highest and best bidder, after due advertisement, is in direct conflict with section 164 of the Constitution, and is void..... 380
6. the rule as to discharge of passengers is different in the case of street railways from steam railways. The latter is required to furnish a safe place for such discharge, while the former is under no such obligation, but may discharge its passengers at convenient places along the streets it traverses. In this action, there being no averment in the petition that there was a defect in the street, nor an averment that the conductor knew of its being an unsafe place where the car stopped, and no averment the condition alleged was not known to appellant, a demurrer was properly sustained to her petition in this action for damages against appellee 737
7. where appellee was injured upon appellant's car by being thrown while the car was rounding a curve and falling against the controller box, and the evidence was conflicting as to how he happened to fall, the verdict of the jury in his favor will not be disturbed..... 811
8. an instruction on motion of appellee, to the effect that the jury should find for him if "the defendant failed to use the utmost care to prevent such electric current from being in the controller box," and on motion of appellant, to the effect that if they believed "that the defendant used the utmost care and skill ordinarily used by persons in the same or similar business of carrying passengers," to prevent injuries, they should find for defendant, must be read together, and when so read present the whole law of the case; and, moreover, appellant can not complain of an instruction given on its own motion... .. 811
9. the proof showing that appellee's doctor's bill was $200, appellant can not complain that the court by an instruction did not limit recovery for expenses to that sum as that was the amount alleged in his petition to have been expended for medical expenses 811
10. in an action by plaintiff for damages for an injury in a collision with a street car, in which the defendant pleads and exhibits a receipt for $25, signed by plaintiff as a settlement of his claim for damages, it was error for the court to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant where the plaintiff pleaded that the paper exhibited was procured by fraud, misrepresentation and duress, which was supported by his evidence that he understood when he signed it that it was only intended to secure him medical attention.... .. 965
11. where the evidence tended to show that the physician of the defendant was acting for the defendant in procuring the signing of the receipt, the court should have admitted the testimony offered by the plaintiff as to what the physician said and did before the paper was signed..... 965

STREET RAILWAY—Continuee.Page.

12. where an action for damages was brought against a street railway company upon the grounds that appellee, who was injured, attempted to board the car with a blind child and the motorman, after seeing her attempt to board the car, started it, throwing her to the street, injuring her, no one being in charge of the car except the motorman, instructions authorizing the jury to find for the appellee if the car was not properly officered, and if the injuries were received in the manner complained of, were properly given, and an instruction directing the jury to find for the railway company if the appellee boarded the car and attempted to alight while it was in motion was not authorized because the instructions given emphasized the fact that a verdict should be returned in favor of appellee only upon the theory upon which she claimed a right to recover.....1084

SUBROGATION—See Partnerships, 4—

- this being an action to recover of appellee bank the amount that the agent of an ice company had procured from the bank by fraudulent means, which amount appellant was compelled to pay, a demurrer to the petition was properly sustained. Appellant for a valuable consideration had guaranteed the fidelity and honesty of the agent, and it is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the ice company as against the bank..... 893

SUICIDE—See Life Insurance, 10.SUPERSEDEAS—

- where a supersedeas bond was executed before the clerk of the circuit court within the time allowed for filing the transcript of the record in the office of the clerk of the Court of Appeals, as provided by section 738, Civil Code, the appeal did not thereby abate, but was still pending in the Court of Appeals until dismissed by said court, and it was the right and duty of the clerk of the circuit court to issue the supersedeas at any time before the dismissal of the appeal and as the appeal was then pending the supersedeas was not void 769
2. upon the affirmance of a judgment by this court which has been superseded, it is error of the clerk of this court to enter a judgment giving the appellee 10 per cent. damages upon the amount superseded, unless there was a personal judgment in the lower court against the appellant which might be enforced by execution, and which was also superseded, and the motion to correct the error may be made at subsequent term of this court..... 886
3. by the supersedeas all proceedings by the parties to enforce the judgment appealed from are stayed. Any attempt to change the status of things existing just before the judgment was rendered will be a contempt of the supersedeas, and will be so treated by this court 909

SURETY—See Indemnifying Bonds, 1; Forcible Entry; Liens; Office and Officers, 3, 4, 5—

- in an action against a surety on a note, an answer by a surety that he signed it upon the condition that P. was also to sign it as surety and that plaintiff had knowledge of this fact when he accepted it, presented good defense, and a demurrer thereto should have been overruled1077

TAXATION—See Abatement; Appropriations; Foreign Corporation, 1, 2; Municipal Taxes; Schools, 2; Taxes—

1. this action to recover taxes due appellant having been instituted before the lapse of the five-year statute, it prevented the statute of limitations from running. A purchaser before its termination was a pendente lite purchaser, and the plea of the statute in such a state of case is not available, the fact that the five years had expired before such purchase will not operate as against the claim for taxes upon which the action was instituted against the real owner before the lapse of that period 175
2. the appellee not being embraced by section 4077, Kentucky Statutes, and being authorized by its charter to transact an entirely different character of business from the companies named in that section, it is not subject to assessment for a franchise tax. The fact that it is required to set aside a part of its capital stock by the provisions of section 734, Kentucky Statutes, as a guarantee fund for certain investments, does not result in a special priv-

TAXATION—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|--|-------|
| illeg. It is intended as a benefit to those to whom it has given guarantees, and is, therefore, to that extent a burden upon it.... | 345 |
| 3. in an action by the city against the life tenant and remainderman to subject a house and lot occupied by the life tenant for the payment of taxes due thereon, Held—That the lien thereon was properly enforced except to so much as was barred by the five years' statute of limitation..... | 472 |
| 4. in a proceeding by auditor's agent in the county court, in which he filed a statement alleging in substance that defendant had failed and refused to list for taxation for the year 1900 notes, bonds, securities, investments and cash owned by him on September 15, 1899, which were of the cash value of $50,000, at the price they would bring at a fair voluntary sale, on which summons was issued and served on defendant, who appeared and entered a plea that he was "not guilty" of the matters and things set forth in the statement, which plea, on the motion of the Commonwealth, was stricken out and defendant declined to plead further. Held—That there was nothing of a criminal nature in the proceeding, and the plea of "not guilty" was properly stricken out, and defendant not having made a motion that the statement be made more specific, and failing to file an answer controverting same, the county court properly entered a judgment against defendant for the taxes on the $50,000, and 20 per cent. damages thereon..... | 473 |
| 5. under section 170 of the Constitution, exempting "institutions of purely public charity" from taxation, a hospital which is an adjunct to a medical school is subject to taxation, although patients who are not able to pay for treatment therein are admitted free for the purpose of the education of the students of the medical school in their profession | 635 |
| 6. the appellant on the 28th of July 1902, having contracted with appellees for land which they conveyed under the contract, by the provisions of section 4093, Kentucky Statutes, he was liable for the taxes thereon for the year beginning September 15, 1902. He did not own the legal title at the time of the making of the contract, but its effect was to vest him with the equitable title..... | 666 |
| 7. appellees were not obliged to pay the taxes because they conveyed in terms of general warranty, because a lien then existed upon property for the taxes, and it was appellants' duty to discharge it. | 666 |
| 8. under Kentucky Statutes, section 4020, providing that "all real and personal estate within this State, * * * shall be subject to taxation, unless the same be exempt by the Constitution," railroad cross ties owned by a foreign corporation which were piled on a river bank in this State for the purpose, when a boat was secured, of being shipped by the owner out of the State, are liable to taxation in this State, both for State and county purposes, and there is no constitutional provision, State or Federal, which forbids it..... | 540 |
| 9. when one comes into equity to enjoin the collection of a tax which has been officially ascertained to be due by the assessor or by the retrospective assessor, the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, and to do this he is required to allege and prove, if controverted, every fact, whether it be negative or affirmative, necessary to show the invalidity of the tax assailed | 591 |
| 10. it is incumbent on the taxpayer in listing his property for taxation to make, under oath, a full and fair disclosure, by items, of all his property subject to taxation, and if he does this and the assessor places a valuation on it that is too low, the city or State is bound by it; but if he fails to do this, and gives its valuation in a lump without being sworn and without disclosing the items, to the extent that the property is thereby underestimated it is omitted property in the meaning of the law, and the negligence of the officer in not requiring such disclosure will not avail the delinquent taxpayer..... | 591 |
| 11. in an action to enjoin the collection of a tax made by an officer who is required to make retrospective assessments, it is not incumbent on such officer to show that he has given notice to the taxpayer of the assessment. As the law presumes the officer did | |

TAXATION—Continued.

- | | Page. |
|---|-------|
| his duty, if such notice was necessary, it will be presumed to have been given. | 591 |
| 12. assuming that the city ordinance establishing a back-tax collector is valid, there is nothing in the ordinance which indicates that he shall be more than an additional aid to the regular assessor, whose duty it is to retrospectively assess omitted property, just as it is made the duty of the sheriff and auditor's agent to look up and have assessed omitted property for State taxation | 591 |
| 13. the rule is that when one comes into equity asking relief against taxation, it is incumbent on him to show clearly that he has paid, or is willing to pay, all that he justly owes toward the public burden; he must make a full, fair and complete disclosure of the property he has, or that his ward has, subject to taxation, so that the court may judge whether he is unjustly taxed; he must come not only with clean, but with open hands | 591 |
| 14. under the provisions of the revenue laws of this State a license tax of $5 is imposed on "each wagon" used in transporting or retailing lubricating or other oils for one year. Section 4201 Kentucky Statutes provides that "any person who shall engage in the business, or sell or offer to sell any article on which a license is required before procuring the license and paying the tax thereon * * * shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $1,000 for each offense unless otherwise specifically provided," the tax is on the wagon and the offense of operating the wagon is a continuous one, and only one fine can be imposed for the violation of said statute in any one year | 1073 |
| 15. in a proceeding in the county court to list omitted property for taxation, Held—First, it is not necessary to its validity that the judgment should state the rate of taxation, as the rate for each of the years is fixed by law; second, the property is sufficiently described as "notes, mortgages and cash;" and, third, in reciting that appellant had failed to properly list his personal property for the years involved to the extent of $7,000, and then adjudging that it be listed for these years, amounts to a judgment that the property had been "omitted" for the years mentioned ... | 1080 |
| 16. Kentucky Statutes, sections 1882, 1883, 1885, 4143, 4077, 4083 and 4091, when considered together are construed as follows: Sections 1882, 1883 and 1885 apply to county taxation on tangible property and not to taxation of franchises of corporations assessed by the State Board of Assessment and Valuation. | 1104 |
| 17. the provisions of section 4091, in so far as damages and interest are concerned, by the force of its own terms applies alone to State revenue, and not to that of counties or municipalities, and as section 1885 has reference alone to the taxes regulated by sections 1882 and 1883 and not to those provided for by section 4091, it follows that the judgment imposing a penalty of 10 per cent. in damages and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the taxes due to the county of Henderson by the Henderson Bridge Co. upon its franchise assessed by the State Board of Valuation and Assessment for the years 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896 is erroneous | 1104 |
| 18. under subsection 3, section 3637, and section 3644, Kentucky Statutes, cities of the fifth class have an express grant of power to levy and collect ad valorem taxes on all property within the city not exceeding 75 cents on the $1 of its assessed value, and to provide a system of taxation and assessment, and no system of assessments is complete or just that fails to provide for listing omitted property | 1150 |
| 19. the fact that an ordinance of a city of the fifth class for the collection of a tax on omitted property is retrospective does not render it invalid, but to the extent that it imposes a penalty it is void | 1150 |
| 20. the fact that such ordinance does not provide for an appeal does not invalidate it, but if the assessing tribunal acts without warrant of law, or assesses to the taxpayer property that did not belong to him, or if for any reason the taxpayer is not legally liable to pay the tax, the courts are open to him notwithstanding the assessment. | 1150 |
| 21. the act of a city council in assessing omitted property is purely ministerial although it has mixed certain discretion as to find- | |

TAXATION—Continued.

Page.

- ing values and the like, which is not reviewable, and which quality is sometimes called judicial 1150
22. the fact that Kentucky Statutes, section 3638, requires that all ordinances be published, it does not follow that it would devolve upon the city, when its tax levy ordinances are called into question, to prove that they had been published. The presumption of law that public officers have done their duty applies, and it is upon the one attacking the ordinance to show affirmatively and satisfactorily that it has not been published 1150
23. in this action it is held that the passing by the legislature of the act of May 5, 1893 (Kentucky Statutes, section 4136), had the effect to amend the act of May, 1890, in relation to creation of road districts in Kenton county for traction turnpikes, and the two acts must be construed and considered as one consistent whole. And when any liabilities were created and assumed after the act of May 5, 1893, took effect, it must be presumed that they were created and assumed under the act of 1890 as modified by the general act of 1893 1173
24. Kentucky Statutes, section 4136, was not intended to be retrospective in its operation, but was intended to change the effect and operation of the act of 1890 from that date. Whether or not the general assembly has the power to enact a law shifting the liabilities owing by one person and placing them upon another without his consent is expressly not decided. Section 4136 is not in conflict with section 171 of the Constitution, and the costs of constructing roads in Kenton county should be paid for as required by the aforesaid acts. The legislature had the power to pass this act, and, to the extent named, it is valid 1173
25. three suits were pending by appellee against the owners of a certain lot, the object being to enforce its lien for taxes. A judgment was rendered in one and appellant at the sale thereunder purchased the property. Afterwards the city amended its petition in the other two cases making appellant a party and praying for a judgment for the enforcement of the lien. Held—The provision in the judgment that "said sale shall be made subject to the liens for unpaid State taxes, and unpaid taxes due or to become due the city of Louisville on said property, and not recovered by this judgment, rendered the property subject to the lien for unpaid taxes 514
26. section 3005, Kentucky Statutes, which provides that "when an action heretofore or hereafter brought under this or the following sections is still pending or undetermined, a new action upon subsequent accruing taxes may be brought, and either action may, in the discretion of the court, be carried to judgment separately, and a sale may be had under the judgment therein of sufficient property to satisfy the same, giving the purchaser a title free from tax liens set up in other causes," will not relieve appellant of the liens in the other actions in which he was made a party because he can not claim both under and against the judgment at the same time, and having made his purchase subject to the lien of the city he can not afterwards claim that he holds free of that lien 514
27. under Kentucky Statutes, section 4143, providing that a penalty of 6 per cent. shall be collected by the sheriff of persons failing to pay their tax by the first day of December, after it is due, it is the duty of the sheriff to collect such penalty as well as the principal, and such penalty is the property of the county, and the sheriff must account for it on his official bond 623

TELEGRAM—

1. the fact that a telegram announcing a son's illness was unreasonably delayed in its transmission and delivery will not entitle the father to damages for mental suffering in not seeing his son before his death where the evidence fails to show that he could have reached his son before his death if there had been no delay. 244
2. in an action for damages for delay in the transmission or delivery of a telegram announcing the illness of a son, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove not only the negligence in its transmission and delivery, but that such negligence was the proximate cause of the failure of the parent to reach the son before his death. 244

TELEGRAM—Continued.

Page.

3. in an action in this State for the negligent transmission or delivery of a telegram from another State to this State, damages for mental suffering may be recovered in this State, although the laws of the State from which it was sent do not allow a recovery for mental suffering unless accompanied by physical injury 244
4. where, in an action against a telegraph company, the petition alleges that the plaintiff addressed a telegram to a lumber dealer, offering to sell him lumber at $35 per 1,000 feet, and by negligence of the company the telegram transmitted read $25 instead of $35, and that the lumber was delivered to the purchaser before the mistake was discovered, whereby the plaintiff lost $494.10, the difference in the price of the bill of lumber at $25 instead of $35 per 1,000 feet, for which difference the plaintiffs ask judgment against the company. The petition states a cause of action for which the company is liable..... 340
5. the question of proper diligence in the delivery was properly submitted to the jury 430
6. the contract for the nondelivery of a telegram must be construed under the law of the State where it is received..... 430
7. two telegrams when read together, meant: Father is dead. Can you come. Answer must have been so understood by appellee's agent and by appellant, and by reason of the delay in appellee's agent in their prompt delivery appellant was prevented from seeing her father before his burial, for which she was entitled to recover damages for injury to her feelings 569
8. where a telegram is sent for a sick person summoning medical aid for him, the meritorious cause of action is in the sick person for the negligence in the sending. He may recover for his pain and suffering endured by reason of the negligence in sending the message, but no recovery can be had by his father or other relatives by reason of such suffering 659
9. in an action for damages for failure to deliver a telegram sent from Radnor, W. Va., to Catlettsburg, Ky., thirty miles away, between 12 and 1 o'clock p. m. and not delivered until 8 o'clock of the same day, on which the company relied on the free limits rule as a defense, the sendee residing two and one-half miles from Catlettsburg, it was error in the court to submit to the jury the question as to the reasonableness of the free delivery rule. The facts being undisputed the reasonableness of the rule was a question for the court, and the rule was certainly reasonable as to one who lived two and one-half miles away 975
10. in an action for delay for failure to deliver a telegram for a casting to run a sawmill, by which the operation of the sawmill was delayed several days, the measure of damages is the profits which the plaintiffs would have earned by ordinary diligence in the operation of the mill if the telegram had been delivered in proper time 975
11. where there was evidence from which the jury might have inferred that plaintiffs could have done all their sawing notwithstanding the delay by the time their lease expired, in about twelve days thereunder, the jury should have been instructed that if the plaintiff, by ordinary diligence, could have gotten the casting in time to have done all their sawing before the end of their lease, then no loss of profits should be recovered 975
12. in an action against a telegraph company by an aunt of deceased, to recover damages for mental suffering caused by having to keep the corpse two days and nights by reason of the delay of the company in sending telegrams to relatives of the deceased, while the court properly struck out so much of the petition as sought to recover for mental suffering, leaving alone the question of nominal damages, it was error in the court to then sustain a special demurrer to the petition for want of jurisdiction of the amount in controversy, as the plaintiff was entitled to have the question adjudicated, although the court is of the opinion that there is no merit in her claim 999

TELEPHONES—See Contracts, 27.

TELEPHONE COMPANIES—

section 163 of the Constitution prohibits the erection by telephone companies of "poles, posts, etc., along, over, under or across the streets of a city or town without the consent of such city or town." Section 8699, Kentucky Statutes, part of the charter of towns of the sixth class, provides that "no order or resolution granting any franchise shall be passed by the board of trustees within five days after its introduction, nor at any other than a regular meeting." At a special meeting of the board of trustees of the town of Hartford, Ky., September 1, 1898, the following resolution was passed: "The Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. made application for the privilege to set their posts and run their telephone lines through the streets of Hartford, Ky., which privilege was granted." Held—That this resolution is void, first, because it was not required to lay over five days from the time it was introduced; second, because it was passed at a special meeting of the board of trustees, and, therefore, conferred no right whatever upon the appellee.....

TELEPHONE COMPANIES—Continued.

Page.

82

TENANT IN POSSESSION—See Lands—

a tenant in possession of real estate, whether holding for life or claiming the fee, is bound for the taxes thereon, and the possession of such tenant is not adverse to the remaindermen who claim under the will after the death of the life tenant.....

124

TIMBER—See Lands, 3—

where a written contract is made for the sale of all the timber on a tract, to be removed therefrom in fifteen months, the purchaser acquired no right to cut or remove any timber from said land after the expiration of fifteen months from the date of the contract.....

838

TIME—See Contracts, 38.

TITLE—See Lands, 1; Pleading, 1.

TRADE-MARK—

1. in an action by a distilling company for damages for an infringement of its trade-mark as a manufacturer of whisky, and for an injunction and accounting of profits alleged to have been made by the defendant thereby, it was proper for the lower court to require the plaintiff to elect whether it would prosecute its action for an injunction and profits, or for damages, as an injunction and profits could be had in an equitable proceeding, while damages for the simulation of its whisky is properly a common law action as in other cases for fraud.....

625

2. where a partnership was formed by E. H. T., Jr. & Sons, for distilling whisky, which was advertised and known as the "Old Taylor" whisky, and said firm made an assignment, and was succeeded by the same parties, under the corporate name of E. H. T., Jr. & Sons. Co., which continued to make and advertise their product as the "Old Taylor" whisky, it must be presumed, nothing to the contrary appearing, that the debts of the firm were settled, and that the "brand," as the property of the partners, reverted to them, and they had the right to use it in the name of the corporation which they subsequently formed.....

625

3. where an application was made by the firm which appellants succeeded to register its trade-mark, "Old Taylor," was rejected by the patent office because of a prior use of the brand, and later the firm made another application which was granted, in which they said: "Our trade-mark consists of the arbitrary word—symbol 'E. H. Taylor, Jr. & Sons,' being a script fac simile of the signature of our firm name by the senior member thereof," the trade-mark of the firm did not consist in the words "Old Taylor," but it was abandoned for the one registered, and as it is not claimed that defendant has infringed the registered trade-mark, so much of the action as sought an injunction to restrain the defendant from infringing plaintiff's trade-mark, or on account of profits therefor, was properly dismissed by the circuit court.....

625

4. it appearing from the evidence that appellant (defendant) was not a distiller, but a blender of whiskeys, and that he intentionally labeled and advertised his whisky as "Old Kentucky Taylor," but not as blended goods, and as the whisky of appellant (plaintiff) had attained a high reputation as a pure Kentucky distilled whisky, the selling by appellee of his blended whisky was a violation of appellant's rights which can not be sanctioned. The appellee may properly sell his brand of "Old Kentucky Tay-

- TRADE-MARK—Continued. Page.
- lor," provided he so frames his advertisements as to show that it is a blended whisky but he can not be allowed to impose on the public a cheaper article, and thus deprive appellant of the fruits of its energy and expenditures, by selling his blended whisky under labels or advertisements which conceal the true character of the article. So much of appellant's action as sought damages having been dismissed without prejudice, the only remedy to which it is entitled is an injunction as indicated 625
- TRADE NAME—See Fire Insurance, 3.
- TRANSCRIPTS—
- the settled rule of this court is that the clerk of the circuit court must furnish the appellant with a transcript of the record where he is a poor person and unable to pay for it, and it is the duty of the circuit judge to direct the stenographic reporter to furnish appellant a transcript of his notes of the testimony heard on the trial where it is shown that such appellant is a poor person and unable to pay for it, and a failure to do so is subject to review in this court 1170
- TRESPASSER—See Railroads, 55.
- TRESPASS—
1. in an action by a land owner against a city to restrain it from digging a ditch across his land, a defect in the petition in failing to specify the officers and agents of the city who had entered upon the land, was cured by the answer of the city claiming a prescriptive right to the land over which the ditch was to be constructed 1086
 2. while the city had been in possession of a narrow ditch used for carrying water from the city for many years as a claim of right, gave it the right to clean it out and maintain it in its previous condition, it has no right to double its width and depth and thus take from the plaintiff additional property 1086
- TRIAL COURT—
1. a judgment was rendered on April 9, 1904, on a trial by the court without a jury, which concluded with the words: "The defendant excepts and prays an appeal to the Court of Appeals, which is granted." On April 11 the defendant filed grounds and moved the court for a new trial, which was overruled and sixty days' time given to file bill of exceptions, but no appeal was then granted. The bill of exceptions was filed on July 9. On August 5 defendant executed an appeal bond and a supersedeas was issued. On September 1 an administrator was appointed for defendant, who had died after the execution of the appeal bond. On January 16, 1905, an order of revivor was entered in the circuit court in the name of the administrator, and he was then granted an appeal to this court from the judgment. On March 21 he filed the transcript with the clerk of this court and an appeal was granted him and the appearance of the appellee was entered. On April 26 an agreed order of revivor was made in this court, appellee entering her appearance and consenting thereto. On May 9 appellee filed notice and entered a motion to dismiss the appeal granted by the circuit court because the record was not filed in this court twenty days before the second term after the granting of the appeal. Held—That though defendant had been granted an appeal on April 9, the entry of his motion for a new trial was an abandonment of the appeal which had been granted, and the appeal bond and supersedeas executed on August 5 were void, as the evident purpose of the defendant was not to appeal from the judgment, but from the order refusing him a new trial. The circuit court had lost jurisdiction over the case in January, 1905, and, therefore, appellant properly filed his record with the clerk of this court and had an appeal granted here. Appellee having entered her appearance to the appeal the case stands regularly on the docket for hearing, and the motion of appellee to dismiss, with damages, the appeal granted by the circuit court is overruled. 1059
 2. the bill of exceptions was filed within the time allowed by the court, the appeal which had been previously granted had been abandoned by the motion for a new trial, the court had power under the Code when it overruled the motion for a new trial to

TRIAL COURT—Continued.	Page.
give time for the filing of the bill of exceptions not beyond a day in the next term, and the time given was not beyond the limit thus fixed, and appellee's motion to strike out the bill of exceptions is overruled	1059
TRIAL BY JURY—See Municipal Corporations, 5.
TRUSTEES—See Schools, 9, 10.
TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES—See Lunatics, 5; Wills, 19, 22, 31, 32; Partnerships, 5.
TURNPIKES—See Taxation—
1. where parties owning bonds issued by a turnpike company for its construction sued the turnpike company and the county, after a sale of the turnpike to the county under the free turnpike act of March 17, 1896, asking to subject the road to the payment of such bonds, and more than five years after such sale and transfer filed an amended petition, alleging that the turnpike company, while indebted to plaintiffs and insolvent, without valuable consideration and with intent to defraud plaintiffs in the collection of their debt, conveyed to the county, by writing, all the property of the company, which the county has received and has since used and operated, such amendment was an abandonment of the original action, and sets up a new action, which shows on its face that it is barred by the five years' statute of limitation	542
2. a sale of a turnpike road made under the free turnpike act of March 17, 1896, where a majority of the voters and taxpayers have voted in favor of such sale, is not in violation of Kentucky Constitution, section 203, prohibiting a corporation from selling or leasing its franchise so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from corporate debts.....	542
USURY—See Interest, 3; Liens, 7; Mortgages, 5—
the contract having been adjudged to be a mortgage and not a sale, appellant is entitled to only 6 per cent interest on his debt.....	231
VARIANCE—See Account, 4—in the settlement of complicated accounts a variance between the pleading and proof of certain items is not material where the form of the plea is not objected to unless the party complaining was misled thereby to his prejudice.....	400
VENUE—
on trial of defendant for murder where the trial was held in the city of Louisville and the evidence showed the offense was committed at the Louisville & Nashville railroad depot, on the corner of Tenth and Broadway streets, in said city, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the offense was committed in Jefferson county.....	219
VERDICT—See Actions, 15; Criminal Law; Master and Servant, 6—
1. if the verdict of the jury be so inadequate in form or substance, or its language so indefinite or ambiguous as to make its meaning uncertain, the jury should be required to perfect it, and this may be done by them in the presence of the court and under its direction, or after returning to the jury room, or it may be done by the court in the presence of the jury and with their approval.	171
2. a verdict of a jury in a criminal case for maliciously striking with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, which reads as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, fix his punishment three years in pen." though awkwardly expressed, is not so defective as to affect its validity.....	171
3. where one was assaulted in the night time and knocked unconscious at his front gate with a weapon, on the trial of his assailant for malicious striking with intent to kill it was not error in the court to admit evidence that after the injured man regained consciousness he discovered that $42 in money had been taken from his pocket after he was stricken, as such taking was a part of the res gestæ	171
4. a verdict as follows: "We, of the jury, find for the plaintiff $1,800. Morris Sheets, Foreman," was sufficient to support a judgment for $1,800 for the plaintiff, where the bill of exceptions shows it to have been read by the clerk as of that amount; that the jury reported they had agreed, and informed the court that it was their verdict, there being no objection as to the form of the verdict at the time it was returned, nor any motion made to correct the order book until the day after it was signed by the judge....	1055

VERDICT—Continued.Page.

5. the verdict was in such form that the court could tell from its contents the intention of the jury, and it being assented to by the jury was ample warrant for entering judgment upon it.....1055

VERIFICATION—See Actions, 14.VICIOUS DOG—See Actions, 2—

1. where a vicious dog known to be so by the owner was allowed to run at large, went upon the premises of another and bit and mangled a child, which suffered great pain therefrom for thirty-five days, when she died from the injuries the cause of action for her pain and suffering survived to her administrator and not to her parents, and a plea by the defendant of a settlement and compromise with the parents of the child for the damages is no defense to an action by the administrator 167
2. while the parents of the child had a cause of action against the owner of the dog at the time of the alleged compromise for nursing and medical bills bestowed and incurred in endeavoring to cure the child, they had no claim for compensation for her pain and suffering caused by the injury to her by the dog..... 167

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER—See Criminal Law, 17—

where the defendant relied upon insanity as his defense and there was no evidence tending to show any angry altercation between defendant and the deceased at the time of the killing, or that deceased said or did anything tending to insult or assault defendant, the court did not err in failing on the trial to give the jury an instruction on voluntary manslaughter..... 220

VOTES—See Local Option, 6.WAIVER—See Sales of Personalty, 2.*WARNING ORDER—

where the affidavit for a warning order was made on the 27th of January, and the order made on the 30th of January, following, the delay of three days was not an unreasonable one, and it should not be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that a resident of Chicago, who was at home on the former date, should be in this State on the latter..... 723

WARRANTY—See Contracts, 30; Lands, 42—

in an action for damages for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse, where the uncontradicted evidence shows the sale was made, it was proper for the court in the instruction to the jury to assume that the sale was made, and to submit only the question whether or not there was a warranty.....1018

WILLS—See Conduct of attorney; Lunatics, 4—

1. Mrs. Belle Lee's will bequeathed her property to her four children, naming them; which estate was left her in trust by her father, with power to dispose of it by will. She provided that the property should be equally divided among her children and be kept in trust by the Fidelity Trust Co., or any other trust company preferred by them, and she further provided that if any of her children die without issue then the portion of the one so dying shall revert to her estate for the benefit of her living heirs. Held—From the instrument it is clearly apparent that she intended the property to be kept in trust that her children should have the privilege of selecting the trust company, and that should any of them die without issue such shares should revert to the estate for the benefit of the living heirs. The instrument is so clearly expressed that there is little room for the application of the technical rules of construction 64
2. the evidence of one that testator stated before she made her will that she would never tie her property up as her father tied his up, can not be considered in construing the will. The rights of the parties must be determined from the will itself, and not from testator's oral statements as to what kind of a will was intended to be made 64
3. where a will provided that the remainder of an estate should be equally divided among the descendants of Bullock at the time of his death, the judgment in this action decreeing a division and settlement among his descendants (he is still living), was erroneous, because it is impossible at this time to know which of his children will survive him 161

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

4. by the will of John B. Carpenter the following trust was created:
 "6. I direct the share of my son, E. A. Carpenter, to be paid into the hands of a trustee to be appointed by the Hart County Court, to be used for his benefit and to keep him from want, but that it be not paid into his hands." A trustee having been appointed under the will, the cestui que trust has instituted this action to vacate the trust, alleging that it was made by his father under a misapprehension of plaintiff's physical and mental condition, etc. Held—That the case at bar presents an active trust, where the trustee has the sole management and control of the estate, and the question involved is whether evidence allunde can be introduced to establish for a testator a motive for his action when he has expressed none in his will, and where his language is perfectly plain and unambiguous. This we hold can not be done, and the opinion of this court in Webster v. Bush, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 565, is no longer to be regarded as authority..... 206
5. while it is proper for the attorney for the will to conclude his statement to the jury of the facts relied on to sustain the will, before the contestant's attorney makes his statement the fact that the court permitted the attorney for the will to make an additional statement after the opposing attorney had made his statement is not a reversible error..... 275
6. a statement made by counsel for the will in his argument to the jury, that "the proof fails to show, for twenty years, one act of kindness to the testator by any one of the contestants," and "that only four of the children have appeared in the action, the others having washed their hands of the transaction," are legitimate conclusions from the evidence and not objectionable..... 275
7. T. J. Smith by his will, among other devises, made the following: "I also give to my wife 100 shares of bank stock in the Farmers National Bank of Richmond, Ky., at her death this property goes to my son and his children. I also give to my wife during her life 140 acres of land upon the Irvine pike, and known as the Collins place, at her death to my son and his children." Held—That the word "children," as here used, must be construed as a word of purchase and not limitation, and by the will the testator's wife was given the "bank stock" and "Collins place" during her life, and at her death to the testator's son for his life, and at his death to his children 362
8. Kentucky Statutes, section 4820, provides that no will shall be valid unless it is in writing, with the name of the testator subscribed thereto, and section 468 provides that when the law requires any writing to be signed, it shall not be deemed to be signed unless the signature be subscribed at the end or close of such writing. Where a testatrix in making her will placed her signature at close of the substantial provisions of the document, and the writing as signed is sufficient to effectuate the intention of the party signing it the statute is substantially complied with although there may be words following the signature which are unessential to the validity of the will 367
9. Anna Maria Schwer owning an estate of something like $15,000 died leaving it all to a daughter except $150 each to the four children of her deceased son, and $100 to their mother. The daughter and the four grandchildren were her only heirs at law. The paper was admitted to probate, but upon appeal to the circuit court the jury found it not to be her will. The son's widow and children had nothing but a home worth $1,000, and it not fully paid for. There was proof showing the testatrix to be seventy-five years of age; that she was childish and had to be looked after like a child; that she did not realize what was going on about her, and was not deemed by her family as competent to be trusted on the street some time before her death. There was other evidence sufficient to support the will, but the question was for the jury. There was no sufficient reason shown for giving the bulk of the estate to the daughter, to the exclusion of her dead son's children, and there being no error in the admission or rejection of the evidence the verdict will not be disturbed. 386
10. the will in controversy is silent as to the period of distribution except it is provided that "when the eldest child attains the age

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

- of 21 years, or, being a daughter, marries, I authorize the trustees for the time being, acting under this will, to appoint three competent persons to appraise and value the whole of my property, and to partition and divide the same among such of my children as may be then living," the trust will endure until it has been terminated by act of the parties, or a court of competent jurisdiction, and, therefore, the contract and deed for the mining property sold appellant by the trustees was not beyond the power conferred upon them by the will..... 526
11. it is as necessary in order to have testamentary capacity for one to have such sensibilities as will enable him to know the obligations he owes to the natural objects of his bounty, as it is for him to have the capacity to know the nature and value of his estate and a fixed purpose to dispose of it 607
12. on the trial of a will contest, though the evidence showed that the testator had the mind to know his estate and the nature and value of it, but had a fixed purpose to give his children as little interest in it as possible, and that his aversion to his children was such that he did not know the obligation he was under to them, there was abundant evidence tending to show a lack of testamentary capacity to justify the court in submitting the case to the jury, and a verdict of the jury against the will is not flagrantly against the weight of the evidence..... 607
13. the testator by his will directed that his farm be sold and the proceeds divided between his three children, after the payment of a named sum to his widow, and concluded with the following words: "The estate so willed above, should any of the heirs die without heirs, is to be divided amongst the survivors; and should they all die without heirs, it is to be divided amongst my brothers and sisters, or their children." Held—That this must refer to the death of the devisees without children before the division of the estate..... 642
14. in a devise of the remainder of his estate to his three children Thomas A. Courtney, Paulina Smith and Orma E. Courtney, the will provides: "Paulina Smith may use the estate so willed to her but at her death it is to go to her bodily heirs." Held—That this can not refer to her death in the testator's lifetime, or before the division of the estate, but as the estate devised was money, the testator intended that his daughter should use the money as she pleased, and if any of it was left at her death, which could be identified, it was to go to her children 642
15. W. F. Norton, Jr., by his will devised to his two cousins, Mary Morton and Gabriel Morton, his "family home," on Fourth street, in Louisville, Ky., and everything contained therein, also two stores in Paducah, Ky., the income from the stores to be used in paying taxes on the stores and on the family home, and the remainder of said income for the maintenance of the family home, and, if deemed necessary by his executors, said Paducah stores should be sold and the proceeds deposited as a fund to be used only for the maintenance of said family home, and in the event of the death of either of the devisees, Gabriel Morton or Mary Morton, the interest of the one dying to belong to the other, and if Gabriel should be the last to die, said home should go to his daughter, Gabrielle, and if Mary Morton should be the last to die, said home should go to her half-sister, Aldine Morton. In an action by Mary Morton, one of the two devisees, against Gabriel Morton, Aldine Morton, Gabrielle Morton, who is an infant under fourteen years of age, and the Fidelity Trust and Safety Vault Co., guardian for Gabrielle Morton, for a construction of the will and a sale of the real estate devised, Held—That under the will Mary Morton and Gabriel Morton took a joint life estate in the property devised, the interest of the one first dying to go to the other for life only, with the remainder in fee as to the whole, to Aldine Morton in case Mary Morton should survive Gabriel Morton, but to Gabrielle Morton if Gabriel Morton should survive Mary Morton..... 661
16. where the testator further provided in his will that the "said family home must never be mortgaged or sold" if he intended thereby to forever prevent alienation by any of the devisees, or

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

- by those who may take it as heirs at law of any of them, such provision is violative of Kentucky Statutes, section 2360, against perpetuities, and is to that extent void, but as it was manifestly the purpose of the testator to prevent the alienation of the family home and the Paducah stores as well (unless an earlier sale of the latter should become necessary for the maintenance of the family home) during the life tenancy of Mary Morton and Gabriel Morton, to that extent it was reasonable and should be upheld. 661
17. as the will does not authorize a sale of the Paducah stores except upon the ground that it should become necessary in order to provide a fund for the maintenance of the family home, and its sale for any other purpose is forbidden by the will during the life tenancy under Civil Code, section 492, subsections 3, 4 and 5, such sale can not be made. 661
18. by the will of Margaret Nevill this devise was made: "I desire that $300 be paid to my executors and held in trust by them for the use and benefit of John William Nevill, son of John and Mary Nevill, to be used in educating said John William Nevill." The executors named were residuary legatees under the will. Nothing was paid to John William Nevill, or on account of his education. He was under fourteen years of age when the will was probated, and died about three years thereafter. In a suit brought by his administrator to recover the legacy, Held—That the devise, though made to trustees, was expressly for the use of John William Nevill; that the primary purpose of the will was to give the money to the boy, and that it might help him to get an education seems to be secondary. The testatrix did not intend that the legacy should lapse or that it should go to the other legatees. His education was not made as a condition precedent or subsequent to the gift. The demurrer to the petition should have been overruled 678
19. where a testator by his will directs that certain real estate in the city of Louisville shall be conveyed by his executor to a trustee to be selected by his daughter, who is the beneficiary, and who under the will is to have the income of such real estate and other property devised during her life free from the debts, liabilities or control of her husband, with remainder in fee as she may by will appoint, and in default of such appointment then to her heirs at law, where the daughter selected her husband as such trustee, who was a nonresident of this State, the executor of the will properly refused to convey or turn over the property to him unless he executed bond with security, and procured an order of the court directing the property to be conveyed to him as trustee. 708
20. testator died in 1899, leaving a wife and seven infant children. His will was written January 24, 1887, and at that time he had but three children, one by a former marriage and two by his last wife, all boys. At his death he owned his home place of 297 acres, and a tract of 40 acres, known as the "Hall Place." His personal estate was not sufficient to pay his debts. He devised the 297 acres to his wife until her two sons became of age, when it was to go to them. By another clause one-third of his personal estate was to be held in trust for his wife and at her death such as remained was to go to her two sons and such other children, if any, he might have by her, and all of his personal estate not given to his wife to go to her two sons and such other children, if any, which he might have by her. In another clause he gave to his son M., who was a child by his first wife, the 40 acres, known as the "Hall Place," and if said son died before he was twenty-one years of age it should go to testator's other children. After the will was probated the widow renounced its provisions as to her, and dower was assigned her in the land, and the executor brought this suit for a construction of the will, making the widow and all the seven children parties. The chancellor rendered a judgment holding that the four children born to decedent after the date of the will were "pretermitted," and entitled under Kentucky Statutes, section 4848, to participate in their father's estate, as if he had died intestate. From this judgment M., the son by testator's first marriage, has appealed. Held—That the will clearly indicates that testator's afterborn

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

- children were in his mind when his will was made, and he made such provision for them as he then thought proper, and under the language of Kentucky Statutes, section 4848, only "such afterborn children as are not provided for by any settlement, and neither provided for nor expressly excluded by the will, are pre-termitted" 699
21. the word "pretermitted" means "to pass by," "to omit," "to disregard." The statute (section 4848) was enacted not to control the right of the testator to dispose of his estate according to a plan of his own, but to guard against carelessness and oversight in those who, having written their wills, afterwards have children born unto them and fail to make provision for them. But if there be in the language of the testament a clear indication that there has been no oversight or omission, and that the testator has chosen to distribute his estate unequally among his children, or even to exclude some of them entirely, it is not the policy of the law to interfere with his right to do so..... 699
22. under a devise to his daughter in-law the testator gave her during her life, or so long as she remained unmarried, certain property to be used for herself and her children, as long as any of them live with her, but in the event she marries before the children are of full age, the property shall pass to the children. Held—The children took subject to the rights of their mother as expressed in the will, the residue going into her hands as trustee for the children..... 715
23. in this action attacking testator's will on the ground of mental incapacity, evidence examined and held that it does not create a suspicion of mental incompetency to make and execute the will. 742
24. where Allard was devised by his father the latter's estate, but under an agreement a contest of the will should be disposed of by consent that it should be established and he should convey the one-half of the estate to two grandchildren, which he did an action upon his death by his widow to have dower in the lands thus conveyed can not be maintained for the reason that under the agreement Allard held the property one-half for himself and one-half for the contestants, the purpose of the agreement being not only to settle the will contest, but to obtain a division of the land, and under it he merely held the one-half in which dower is claimed as trustee, and, therefore, his widow was not entitled to a right of dower in that part of the estate. 750
25. a fund of $5,800 was willed to the appellee to be held in trust to pay the income to M. W. during her life, the object being not only to make provision for her, but to enable her to assist in the support of her father and mother. The trustee invested $5,000 of it in a house in Louisville, which was occupied by M. W., and her parents until she became of age, when in an action by her against the trustee for an accounting she recovered and was paid $450. The house was then sold by the trustee for $6,000, and M. W. claimed the $700 excess. Held—That it was the duty of the trustee to keep the house in repair; that the excess in the value of the house was due to a rise in property in that neighborhood, and that appellant was not entitled to it..... 800
26. P., who died in June, 1902, by his will devised to his wife all his personal estate absolutely, and certain real estate during her life. At his death there were unpaid taxes assessed against his real and personal estate amounting to $826.50. His widow died September 16, 1902. Held—It was the duty of the personal representative of the widow to pay said taxes, as under our statutes the taxes were a lien on the lands, and it is the duty of one to whom land is devised for life to pay the taxes and keep it free from lien as against the remaindermen 946
27. P. owned two tracts of land and by his will, dated September 8, 1894, devised to his wife all his personal estate absolutely, and all his real estate during her life, and by a codicil, dated November 18, 1899, directed that the "home tract" be sold at his death and the proceeds divided among the children of his two sisters, and on July 30, 1901, after the date of the will and codicil, leased the other tract of land for the term of three years at $800 per year, for which he held the three notes of the lessee at the time

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

- of his death in June, 1902. Held—That the will speaks as of the date of the death of the testator, and the three notes were payable to the testator and were his personal property, and passed with his other personal estate under the will to his widow..... 946
28. appellee's wife in 1892 made a will devising a certain estate to him in fee, and subsequently she executed two others by which he was left a life estate in the property. Upon her death the three wills were offered for probate and the county court admitted the first one to record, but upon appeal to the circuit court the jury found the last one to be her will. Appellee qualified as executor of the first will, and Green, one of the appellants, as executor of the last one. Appellee appealed from the judgment of the circuit court, and while that appeal was pending appellant instituted this action, setting up his executorship and that he was entitled to the possession of the property, alleged a wasting of the estate by appellee and asking that appellee be compelled to settle his accounts and turn all of the estate over to appellant, and also asked that a receiver be appointed. The prayer of the petition was properly refused as it had not then been settled who was the executor. The appointment of a receiver was properly refused because it was not alleged that appellee or his surety was insolvent, and there was no proof to support these allegations 894
29. where a testator conveyed a certain described boundary by will, it will not be held that he intended it to be reduced in quantity that an adjoining part of the land should contain a certain number of acres, and the statement in his will that the part directed to be sold contained such a number of acres, when it shows that he was in error as to the number of acres such part contained ... 949
30. where a testator specifically devised a tract of land to a son, directing that the remainder of it shall be sold, his executor under a clause in the will, to the effect that "they are directed to dispose of my property as they think best," have not the power to sell that specifically devised 950
31. in an action to obtain a sale of real estate left by will where all of the heirs at law, who are the devisees under the will, are all parties to the action and properly before the court, they only having any interest in the estate sold, the widow never having sold any of the estate, nor encumbered it, what she left went to her children and heirs at law as provided by the will, and it is unnecessary to decide whether she took a fee simple or a life estate in the property devised to her by her husband.....1057
32. where an estate sold under an order of court was a vested estate and in possession it was such an estate as could be sold under section 490, subsection 2, Civil Code, and a purchaser of such an estate need not look to the distribution of the proceeds.....1057
33. where a lot was misdescribed in the judgment and notice of sale, but was correctly described in a supplemental decree and its actual dimensions given, and the purchaser does not complain that he was misled in any way by the incorrect description of the property, and he got what he purchased, takes by the deed of the court's commissioner a good title to the property.....1057
34. where testator by his will directed that "all the residue of my estate be equally divided among my four daughters in kind, so far as the same can be done, and in case same can not be divided in kind I direct my son-in law, William Finley, shall sell and convey in behalf of my estate all that can not be divided in kind, and divide the proceeds among my four daughters equally." Held—That in the absence of language refuting the idea the testator intended to vest complete discretion in the matter to his executor, and where the proof shows that the property could not be divided in kind without impairment of its value, its sale by the executor was authorized under the will1072
35. where a testator by his will devised his estate to his wife for life, and at her death to Rachell Young and the heirs of her body, there being nothing in the instrument to show that the words "heirs of her body" were not used in their ordinary sense, a fee simple estate in the land passed to Rachel Young upon the death of testator's widow1079

WILLS—Continued.

Page.

86. testator died in 1900. His daughter and only child, Caroline (appellant), was born in 1893. By his will, written in 1892, testator devised all his estate, real and personal, to his wife to do with as she pleased, and further provided: "If my wife has any children at my death, I desire that this will be the same, or that she have full control of all money arising from my property that I may have at my death." Testator's widow, after his death, married John E. Bean, and soon thereafter died. The infant child, Caroline, by her guardian, set up claim to testator's land, on the ground that she was not born at the time this will as written and was not provided for or mentioned in the will. Held—That under Kentucky Statutes, sections 4842 and 4848, the appellant, Caroline, was "mentioned" in the will, and, therefore, took no interest in the property under the statute 1081
87. upon the trial of this case, which involved the validity of the will of Samuel Lancaster, deceased, the evidence establishing the fact that for several years prior to his death the testator claimed that his brother, Robert, had robbed him of large sums of money in matters growing out of his assigned estate, and that testator had made statements showing a determination not to leave him anything by his will, the judge should have instructed the jury that if the deceased at the time of the execution of the paper in contest was under an insane delusion that his brother, Robert, had grossly wronged him; was of unsound mind on this subject, and by reason of such mental unsoundness made a different disposition of his property than he otherwise would have made, they should find the paper not to be his last will, although his mental capacity was sound on other subjects..... 1127
88. an instruction to the "objects of his bounty" should be modified by prefixing the word "natural" before such expression..... 1127
89. where a witness was testifying as an expert on the subject of testator's mental condition, it was incompetent for him to state the relative merits of the testimony of other witnesses 1127
40. the testimony of Willett, a witness to the will, should not have been admitted over appellant's objection, the purport of it being to detail a conversation had with one then deceased who had been testator's attorney and confidential adviser, the effect of this being to introduce hearsay evidence upon an important question to appellant, and for this reason incompetent..... 1127
41. by a devise of "all my property to W. E. M. for her lifetime", and at her death to go to Mary Jane Slemmons and her heirs, "a fee simple in land owned by the testator passed to Mary Jane Slemmons upon the death of the life tenant, W. E. M 1165

WITNESS—See Process.

WITNESSES—See Impeaching Witness, 1; Separation of Witnesses.

WRIT OF PROHIBITION—

1. section 110 of the Constitution of Kentucky, which provides, among other things: "That the Court of Appeals shall have power to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it general control of inferior jurisdictions," confers the power and jurisdiction upon this court to intervene by the writ of prohibition to stay the inferior courts of the State from proceeding out of their jurisdiction, and such writ may issue whether or not there is an appeal; whether or not it ought to issue in advance of the decision of the lower court, or whether the party will be left to his remedy by appeal, will depend on whether that remedy is given, or whether it is adequate or not ... 441
2. where two counties have concurrent jurisdiction of parties charged as accessories before the fact to a murder, and such parties upon their own instigation, or that of some of them acting for all, procure a fraudulent proceeding, by having themselves arrested in one of the counties and executing bond, with the design not to have a trial of the charge there, or elsewhere, but as a cloak to prevent a trial elsewhere, such proceeding is void and no protection to the parties procuring it, against a prosecution subsequently instituted in good faith in the other county..... 441
3. the fact that the fraudulent proceeding was put in operation by the legally constituted officers of the county acting therein, does not bind the Commonwealth, as the courts which administer the

WRIT OF PROHIBITION.—Continued.

Page.

- law may protect their own jurisdiction from mere subterfuges intended to defeat their jurisdiction..... 441
4. where, in a homicide, the wounding occurred in one county and the death in another county, the fact that the accused accessories before the fact all resided in the county where the wound was inflicted and all their alleged acts are admitted to have been done in that county, does not give that county the sole jurisdiction to try them for the offense charged 441
5. Feltner was under bond for his appearance, charged with the commission of a felony in Breathitt county, and upon the calling of his case for trial in that county it appeared that he was in jail in Clark county, where he had failed to execute bond in a contempt case against him in that county. The appellant, the jailer of the latter county, acting upon the advice of his attorney and the circuit judge of that county, refused to surrender Feltner to the authorities of Breathitt county upon the order of the circuit judge of the latter county. Held—It is apparent that the appellant was acting in good faith and meant no disrespect under the circumstances, and should not be punished for contempt in acting in disobedience to either of the courts. The error, if any, was not upon the part of appellant 828
6. where one is charged with two offenses, one a misdemeanor and the other a felony, the proper practice in the administration of the law is to waive for the time being the trial of the misdemeanor in order that the felony charged may be investigated and tried, and as the Breathitt Circuit Court was in session at the time, it would have been in keeping with the orderly administration of the criminal laws of the State for the prisoner to have been surrendered to that county 828
7. it is unnecessary to consider the question of jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals at this time as the Breathitt Circuit Court is not in session, and while the Clark Circuit Court may try the prisoners for contempt, it should surrender them to the Breathitt Circuit Court when it is in session and upon demand 828

WRONGDOERS—

- it is a well established rule that for an injury inflicted by two or more wrongdoers an action may be maintained against one or all of them. The liability is joint and several, and the injured party can elect whether he will proceed against one or all of them..... 398

The Kentucky Law Reporter

VOL. 27.

FEBRUARY 1, 1905.

No. 1

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

LOCKE & ELLISON v. LYON MEDICINE CO.

(Filed January 4, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. In an action upon a contract to sell patent medicines where the defense was that the written contract did not correctly reflect the contract between the parties, an instruction was erroneous which excluded from the consideration of the jury all evidence that conduced to support the contention of the defense as to the mistake in the writing.

2. Same—Where the language of a contract is indefinite or ambiguous, or it is averred that some provision was omitted and parol evidence is required to establish what was meant by the parties, it is the province of the jury to determine its meaning from the evidence.

Herman Morris for appellants.

W. M. Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This is an appeal from a judgment for $347.26 recovered by appellee of appellants in the court below, which judgment was entered upon the verdict of a jury whereby appellee was awarded that sum.

The entire amount claimed in the petition was $358, alleged to be due appellee by appellants upon an account for a patent medicine known as "Lyon's Laxative Syrup," which it was averred appellee had sold and delivered appellants at their request, and upon their promise to pay therefor the amount named. The answer of appellants denied any indebtedness upon their part to appellee, but admitted that the "Lyon's Laxative Syrup" mentioned in the petition was received by them of appellee under a contract whereby they agreed to become its distributing agents for the sale thereof in the county of Barren and contiguous territory, but that all sales of such syrup were to be made by a traveling agent of appellee whom it would furnish to travel in the territory named for the purpose of securing orders therefor, which orders were to be sent to appellants and by them filled from the stock of syrup furnished them by appellee for that purpose, and that for all sales thus made by appellee's traveling agent the money was to be collected or received by appellants and remitted to appellee, less their commission, that the "Lyon's Laxative Syrup" mentioned in the petition was consigned to appellants to be sold by them upon orders secured through appellee's traveling salesman in the territory named, and for no other purpose; that soon after the contract with appellee was made the latter sent one of its traveling salesmen to Glasgow, appellants' place of business, and he made a few trips through a part of the agreed territory and took some orders for the syrup, which were filled by appellants, and they, by check, forwarded to appellee the moneys received therefor, less their commission, but the check was rejected by appellee and returned to appellants, and appellee thereupon set up the claim that the syrup sent appellants had been sold them and demanded of them the market value thereof, and refused to again send its traveling salesman to sell the "Lyon's Laxative Syrup" in the territory agreed upon.

The further averment was in substance made in the answer that by its failure to send and keep a traveling agent in the agreed territory to sell the syrup consigned to appellants, appellee violated its contract, prevented the sale of the syrup in appellants' hands, deprived them of the commission they would have realized from its sale, and thereby damaged them in the sum of $250, to recover which the answer was made a counterclaim.

The reply filed by appellee specifically denied the alleged contract relied on by appellants, and in addition averred that the syrup in controversy was purchased by appellants, and that the only contract made between them in regard thereto is contained in the following writing:

"Lyon Medicine Co., Incorporated, Louisville, Ky. :

"Please ship the following order which is not subject to countermand, nor to any agreement not specified hereon, and of which we have a duplicate:

"Name: Locke & Ellison.

"Postoffice: Glasgow.

"County: Barren; State, Ky.

"Shipping point: Glasgow.

"Positively no goods consigned.

"Check doz.

"60 Lyon's Laxative Syrup, 25c. size, at $2 per doz $120

"60 Lyon's Laxative Syrup, 50c size, at $4 per doz 240

$360

"36 doz. 25c free. You are to furnish man to go over territory and turn orders over to us.

"Date sold Oct. 14, '02. Sold by: D. B. McBee. Salesman's number 77.

"Terms 4 mos. or 50c. 80 days. House No. 1449.

"Packed by M. Date shipped: Oct. 16, 1902.

Folio.

"Paste label on back of this order.

"Ship through _____

"Signature of purchaser, Locke & Ellison."

The reply contains the further averment that by the terms of the above-written contract appellee only undertook to furnish a man to go over the agreed territory and turn over orders to the appellants for the purpose of introducing the syrup in such territory, and that it fully complied with this undertaking.

Appellants by rejoinder admitted that they signed the written contract, and alleged that the entire contract is not expressed in the writing, but that the undertaking of appellee to keep an agent in the territory agreed upon to sell all the syrup they shipped appellants, as set forth in the answer and counterclaim, was by mistake of the draftsman of the written contract omitted therefrom, and that it was signed by them in haste and without reading it or hearing it read, for which reason the omission was not noticed by them at the time. The affirmative matter of the rejoinder was controverted of record. Numerous grounds were urged in support of the motion for a new trial, but we think the only one necessary to consider is the contention that the trial court erred in instructing the jury.

The following were the only instructions given:

"1st. The court instructs the jury that they should find for the plaintiff in the sum of $358, with interest from the 1st day of June, 1908, less $10.70, freight charges, unless they shall believe from the evidence that the plaintiff failed or refused to send a man to the defendants to introduce the medicines sold defendants in accordance with the terms of the contract between the parties.

"2d. If the plaintiff did so fail, the law is for the defendants, and the jury should so find."

We think the instructions failed to properly present for the consideration of the jury the law of the case. In the first place, instruction No. 1 required the jury to construe the written contract, yet furnished them no guide as to the manner of arriving at its meaning, and in addition excluded from their consideration all evidence in appellants' behalf that conduced to support their contention as to the mistake in the writing. Where a written contract is so explicit in terms as to be susceptible of but one construction, it is the duty of the court to advise the jury as to its meaning and effect; but when, as in this case, its language is indefinite or ambiguous as to one or more of its provisions, or it is averred by one of the parties that by mistake some provision of the contract was left out of the writing, and parol evidence is required to explain what was intended by the parties, it is the province of the jury to determine from the evidence its meaning.

It seems to be well settled that where there has been a defective attempt to put in writing the terms of an agreement actually made, parol evidence is admissible to establish that fact, and to show what the true agreement was. (A. & E. Ency. of Law, volume 15, 638-9.

It was contended by appellants, and the evidence introduced by them conduced to prove, that the true agreement between them and appellee was that the patent medicine received by them from appellee was to be sold exclusively by an agent of the latter in the agreed territory to be canvassed by him, and that it was the duty of appellants to furnish to purchasers from the supply or syrup consigned to them by appellee all that was sold by such agent in such territory; and further, that this agreement was by mistake of the draftsman of the written contract omitted therefrom, and that owing to the haste in which the contract was written, and the immediate departure of the draftsman, appellants were not afforded an opportunity to discover the mistake.

Upon the other hand, the testimony in behalf of appellee tended to prove that the writing contains the entire contract between the parties; that it was read to and understood by appellants, and that an addition was made to same at the suggestion of the appellant, Locke, after it was read to him. The evidence was conflicting, but that did not authorize the court to relieve the jury of deciding the issues of fact as to the questions of mistake in the contract, and the damages, if any, sustained by appellants from appellee's violation of the contract, if there was such mistake. The meaning of the language "you (appellee) are to furnish a man to go over territory and turn orders over to us," found in the contract, is by no means clear. What territory was included is not stated, nor does the language indicate whether the man to be furnished by appellee was to go over the territory once or oftener, or whether he was merely to introduce the syrup for appellants, or sell it all. Yet in the instructions it was assumed by the court that he was to go over the territory only to introduce the syrup, and but one time.

The court should have further instructed the jury, in substance, that if they believed from the evidence that appellee agreed with appellants to furnish a man to travel in Barren and contiguous counties to sell the syrup furnished them by appellee, and that the syrup was to be delivered by appellants to purchasers thereof upon the orders of appellee's traveling salesman, the money therefor to be collected by appellants and remitted to appellee, less appellants' commission, and that this provision of the contract, if such was the contract, was by mistake of the draftsman of the writing omitted from the writing without the knowledge of appellants; and should further believe from the evidence that appellee violated the contract by failing to furnish a man to sell the syrup in the agreed territory, and that by reason thereof appellants were prevented from selling the syrup sent them by appellee, they should in that event find for appellants the damages, if any, the evidence may show they sustained thereby, not to exceed $250 or the commission they would have received upon the whole of the syrup received by them of appellee if it had been sold in such territory by appellee's traveling agent.

For the errors indicated in the instructions the judgment is reversed, with directions to the lower court to grant appellant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CONRAD v. HUMPHREY.

(Filed January 4, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Arbitration—Where the contract for the building of a house provided for arbitration, in case of disagreement between the parties, there being nothing in the record showing that appellant dissented from the decision of his architect upon any of the matters in dispute, or that appellant ever asked arbitration before the bringing of this action by the contractor, or asked it in his answer, the lower court was not without jurisdiction, and the judgment for the balance of the contract price was properly rendered.

M. A., D. A. & J. G. Sachs for appellant.

R. C. & J. J. Davis for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court for the sum of $455, recovered of appellant by appellee for the balance of the contract price in the erecting of a house, and $88, the price of extra work performed, and material furnished and used in the erection thereof.

Appellant admitted that there was a balance of the contract price which had not been paid appellee, to wit, $867, and denied knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief that the appellee, under the order of the architect, did extra work or furnished extra material to the amount of $88 in the erection of the house. Appellant alleged that appellee, by his contract, agreed to erect and complete the house by the 1st day of August, 1902, but did not complete it until the 31st day of December, 1902, to his damage in the sum of $750. By an amended answer appellant alleged in substance that appellee violated his contract in the erection of this house by using bad material, and his work was carelessly, negligently, unskillfully and defectively performed; that by reason thereof both the plumbing and roof leaked, to the damage of plastering, wall paper and building in the sum of $500.

Appellee, by reply, controverted the allegations of the answer and amended answers, except as to the time of the completion of the building, and stated that the reason he did not finish the building by the 1st day of August, 1902, was by reason of bad weather and the fault of appellant and other contractors in failing to perform their duties within a reasonable time as per contract.

The appellee agreed to furnish the material and erect the house in accordance with the plans and specifications as prepared by the architect, Adolph Hallenberg, at the price of $7,667. The house was erected under the immediate supervision of Hallenberg, the architect, who acted as the agent of the owner, appellant. The appellant also pleaded in his answer, and contends in his brief, that appellee can not maintain this action because the differences between them were not submitted to arbitration; that a submission to arbitration was a condition precedent to the bringing of this action. As the differences between the parties were never submitted to arbitrators, it becomes necessary to settle this question first, for if appellant's contention be correct, it necessarily results in a reversal. We quote from the contract what is said on the subject of arbitration:

"Article 8. No alteration shall be made in the work shown or described by the drawings and specifications except upon a written order of the architect, and when so made the value of the work added or omitted shall be computed by the architects, and the amount ascertained shall be added to or deducted from the contract price. In the case of dissent from such award by either party hereto the valuation of the work added or omitted shall be referred to three (3) disinterested arbitrators, one to be selected by each of the parties to this contract, and the third by the two thus chosen. The decision of any two of them shall be final and binding, and each of the parties hereto shall pay one-half of the expense of such reference."

Again, in article 7 the extension of time for the completion of the work shall be fixed by the architects or by arbitration as provided in article 8 of this contract.

And in article 8, if the contractor delays "the material progress of the work so as to cause any damage for which the owner shall become liable (as above stated), then he shall make good to the owner any such damage. The amount of such loss or damage to either party thereto shall in every case be fixed and determined by the architect or by arbitration, as provided in article 8 of this contract."

These are the only sections of the contract bearing on arbitration, and in each of them it was agreed that the architect should be the judge of the questions, with an appeal from his decision by either party who might feel aggrieved. It appears from the record that Hallenberg, the architect, the agent of appellant, under positive authority as stipulated in the contract, approved the request of appellee for an extension of time on account of delays caused by bad weather, and delays of other contractors, not employed by appellee. The architect also authorized and approved the doing of the extra work, amounting to $88. There is not an intimation in the record that appellant dissented from the action or decision of his architect on any of these matters until about the time of the bringing of this action, which was long after the architect had passed upon these questions. Appellant does not show that he ever asked arbitration, nor did he ask it in his answer. Conceding, for the purposes of this case, that such an arbitration clause in a contract was binding upon the parties, and a condition precedent to the institution of an action on the contract, which question is not decided here, yet under the facts as they appear in this record we are of the opinion that if appellant was dissatisfied with the decisions of his agent and architect, it was his duty, in a reasonable time after the questions were passed upon by the architect, to make known his dissatisfaction and call for arbitration, and in the absence of such a demand the court would not be ousted of its jurisdiction. The proof showed that appellee was delayed in the erection of this building by bad weather and other causes provided for in the contract, which delay was consented to and approved by the architect, as provided in the contract. The same consent and approval is true as to the item of $88 for extra material and labor furnished.

The proof also shows that the plastering and wall paper were damaged in a portion of the building after its completion by reason of leaks in the roof and the bursting of a water pipe. The appellee did not have anything to do with the water pipe; the plumbing was let to another contractor by appellant; the leak in the roof was caused by a collection of water freezing in a valley, and by expansion caused a seam in the valley to burst or part, which was repaired immediately after notice of it. Appellant introduced one tinner by profession, who testified to the manner in which the roof was put on, and stated that there was a better way to fix it or put it on, but neither he nor any other witness stated that the plans and specifications by which appellee was guided in his work required the roof to be put on in any other manner than the way it was put on. Appellee's witnesses stated that it.

was put on in accordance with the plans and specifications. The plans and specifications are not copied in the record, and we are unable to tell whether the defect, if any, in the roof was caused by defective plans and specifications, or defective workmanship. The instructions given by the court to the jury were proper.

Perceiving no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant the judgment is affirmed.

WATHEN v. HOWARD.

(Filed January 4, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Passway—Presumption—The continued use of a passway as a matter of right for fifteen years, unexplained, will create a presumption of grant, and when the passway has been used for more than a quarter of a century, it is unnecessary to show by positive testimony that the use was claimed as a matter of right, but that after such great length of time the burden is on the other party to show that the use was only permissive.

J. P. Thompson and S. A. Russell for appellant.

W. J. Lisle and I. H. Thurman for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Appellant owns a farm containing over two hundred acres, situated near the town of Lebanon, abutting and north of the Danville turnpike. Appellant and appellee own in equal parts seventeen acres of land adjoining and north of appellant's survey. Appellee owns two hundred acres or more adjoining and north of this seventeen acres, extending back to Cartright's creek.

Appellee and his vendor, Dr. Maxwell, have continuously, for more than thirty years, exercised the right and used a passway out from their tract through the seventeen acres, and on through appellant's land to the Danville turnpike; thence to Lebanon, a distance of about one and one-fourth miles. Appellant claims that their use of this passway was merely permissive. Appellee contends that its use was a matter of right. The tract of land owned by appellant, including the seventeen acres, was owned by one David Phillips. He devised it to one Ben P. Doom, Laura and Foster Ray, the Rays taking the seventeen acres, and Doom the tract now owned by appellant. In the deeds of partition this passway was reserved through the Doom tract to and for the benefit of the seventeen-acre tract. Appellant agrees that this passway must remain open, subject to be used by those owning the seventeen acres; that appellant has the right to use the passway for the benefit of his half interest in the seventeen acres, but that he has not the right to use it for the benefit of his two hundred-acre tract. Appellant is correct in this contention unless the right to the use of this passway for his farm has been obtained by the long and continued use thereof as a matter of right, and by prescription.

The case of Riley v. Buchanan, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 863, Talbot v. Thorn, 91 Ky., 417, and many other cases not necessary to cite, in substance hold that the continued use of a passway as a matter of right for fifteen years, unexplained, will create a presumption of grant, and that when the passway has been used for more than a quarter of a century, it is unnecessary to show by positive testimony that the use was claimed as a matter of right, but that after such great length of time the burden is on the other party to show that the use was only permissive. We do not think it necessary to refer to the evidence in detail, but it conduces to prove that appellee and his vendor used this passway as a matter of right continuously and without interference or objection for more than thirty years. There is some evidence that this right was obtained by oral contract, and evidence that the use of this passway was by permission only. Considering all the evidence, and giving proper effect to the judgment of the chancellor, we are unwilling to disturb the judgment.

Therefore, the judgment is affirmed.

UNDERWOOD v COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 5, 1905.)

1. Homicide—Affidavit for a continuance—It was not error for the court to overrule the motion for a continuance where it appeared that one of the persons named in the affidavit was beyond the jurisdiction of the court and the other in the county, and his attendance could be procured, which was afterwards done. While section 120 of the Criminal Code requires that the names of the witnesses before the grand jury shall be placed on the indictment, there is no rule of law which prevents the Commonwealth from calling additional witnesses upon the trial of the case.

2. Evidence—Where the clothing of the deceased had been carried out of the State by his widow, it was competent to prove the condition of the clothing just after the homicide occurred. The witnesses testified to physical facts of which they were cognizant.

3. Same—Upon the trial of appellant upon motion of the Commonwealth's attorney the court permitted the jury in charge of the sheriff to go upon the premises where the tragedy occurred, the judge, the accused and his counsel all being present. When at the scene one of the jurors requested the court to have the accused point out to them the particular spot where he had testified he had hidden his pistol. The judge having some doubt about this took the accused and his counsel aside, and no objection being made, permitted the accused to point out to the jury the spot. Upon the return of the jury objection was made by appellant for the first time as to what had taken place. Held—This was not error, and no reason appears why the court should have not tried the whole case at the place where the tragedy occurred if it had suited his convenience.

E. H. Johnson and Sam C. Hardin for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellant, William Underwood, was indicted by the grand jury of Laurel county, charging him in several counts, first, with conspiring with Ab. Early and Joe Harp to murder Ed. Jones, in furtherance of which the latter was killed; second, with the murder of Ed. Jones, and, third, with aiding and abetting Ab. Early and Joe Harp, and each of them, in the murder of Ed. Jones. To this indictment he pleaded not guilty, and a trial resulted in his being found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and his punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for four years.

The facts are substantially these: On the day of the killing Ab. Early, Joe Harp and William Underwood were engaged in playing at a game of dice or craps, which it, perhaps, would be more than flattery to call a game of chance. There were a good many others engaged in the game, and it is not clear who owned and controlled it, although there is evidence conducing to show that Underwood and his companions were its operators. Ed. Jones and a man by the name of T. J. McQueen, Sr., were standing near, watching the play. Jones asked McQueen to drop a quarter into the game for him, which was done, and the money lost, it being taken by Early; McQueen then said, substantially, "come away, boys, they are playing with loaded dice;" whereupon Ab. Early sprang to his feet, and, with a pistol in his right hand, commenced to strike McQueen in the chest with his left, and pushing him about, holding the pistol in easy range, and in a threatening manner. Jones, who seems to have been a friend of McQueen, interfered, and told Early that he ought not to treat an old man in that way. Early then transferred the assault he was making upon McQueen to Jones, holding his pistol in the same manner, and striking Jones in the chest with his left hand. The latter protested that he had no weapon, and was not prepared to fight, and asked Early to desist from his attack, pulling up the skirts of his coat to show that he was unarmed. The men were separated at this point, and Jones taken some fifteen to twenty feet away and given a pistol by one of his friends, said to have been T. J. McQueen, Jr. Early and Underwood left the game and followed Jones to where he had been conducted by his friends, and the quarrel was renewed, resulting in Early firing upon Jones, and Jones returning his fire. Early was shot in the wrist or forearm, and Jones through the chest; whereupon Early commenced to retreat, firing as he ran, while Jones pursued him, firing upon him as he retreated. At this point several shots were fired by other parties from behind Jones, one bullet entering his back, killing him instantly.

Early and Harp were each tried for the murder, found guilty, and sentenced to the penitentiary, where they are now serving their terms. Upon the trial of this case several of the witnesses of the Commonwealth testified that they saw appellant shoot at Jones at the time he was killed, and others as to acts done, and language spoken by him, which abundantly showed him guilty of aiding and abetting Early and Harp in the homicide, if the evidence was true. The testimony, however, on this point was very conflicting. Several of the witnesses, who claimed to be present during the trouble, testified that he did no shooting, nor was in any way concerned in the killing. Under this state of case it is sufficient to say that there was evidence which authorized the submission of the case to the jury, and we will not revise their determination on the facts, but will content ourselves with reviewing the several questions of law raised by counsel for appellant.

Upon the calling of the case appellant moved for a continuance because of the absence of two witnesses, and filed an affidavit in support thereof.

This motion the court overruled, it appearing that one of these witnesses was in the United States army, and out of the jurisdiction of the court, and that the other was within a short distance of London, and his attendance could be easily procured. This was afterwards done, and the witness testified for appellant, and he was, therefore, not prejudiced by the adverse ruling.

During the trial the Commonwealth called as witnesses two brothers by the name of Barnes, and two by the name of Jones, the latter being brothers of the dead man, who testified to having seen a small hole through the pants and drawers worn by the deceased at the time he was killed. The names of these witnesses were not included in the subpoena issued for the Commonwealth, and appellant objected to their evidence, and at the conclusion of the Commonwealth's testimony filed his affidavit, to the effect that he was surprised by the testimony of these witnesses, and asked that the jury be discharged and the case re-assigned for trial, or if that could not be done, that their evidence be excluded from the jury as incompetent. Both of these motions were overruled. Section 120 of the Criminal Code does require the names of the witnesses who testify before the grand jury to be placed on the indictment, but we know of no rule, and the learned counsel for appellant has cited us to no authority, holding that the Commonwealth may not call such additional witnesses as may be able to furnish evidence material to the prosecution. The record does not show any request of the parties that the witnesses should be sworn and excluded from the court room; but even if this were otherwise, the fact that these witnesses had been in the court room while other witnesses for the Commonwealth testified, would not have been prejudicial under the circumstances, as no witness for the Commonwealth but themselves testified on the particular subject upon which they deposed, and, therefore, what they may have heard could not have affected their evidence. Counsel insists that it was incompetent for these witnesses to testify about the hole in the clothing of the dead man, as it was the best evidence of what it showed. These witnesses testified to the physical facts of which they were cognizant. It was shown that the clothing was not within the jurisdiction of the court at the time of the trial, it having been carried out of the State by the widow of the deceased; but there was no more necessity for producing the clothing as the best evidence of its containing bullet holes than for producing the dead body as the best evidence of the wounds appearing on it. Moreover, "there was no suggestion in the affidavit of appellant that the testimony of the witnesses was in anywise untrue, or that if he were given an opportunity he could contradict it. The affidavit simply recites the fact that the names of the witnesses were not on the subpoena; that they had never been called before, and that no such evidence had ever appeared in any of the former trials of the case; but it wholly fails to impeach the truth of the evidence itself. The surprise which will authorize the court to continue a case or discharge the jury is not the mere mental emotion of a party upon being confronted with evidence he hoped would not be produced, but must be the result of a practical injustice to his substantial rights; he must show that he has been, in some way, injured or misled by what has happened, and that if a reasonable opportunity is afforded him he can remedy the evil.

After the evidence was all heard the court, upon motion of the Commonwealth's attorney, permitted the jury, under the charge of the sheriff, to go to the place of the tragedy and view the premises, the judge, the accused and his counsel, and the prosecuting attorney, all being in attendance. When at the scene one of the jurors requested the judge to have the accused point out to them the particular spot where he had testified on the stand that he had hid his pistol. The judge having some doubt as to his right to do this, took the accused and his counsel aside, and, after some discussion, no objection being made, he was permitted to point out to the jury the spot. When the jury returned to the court room his counsel, for the first time, entered an objection to what had taken place, and this is now insisted upon as a ground for reversal. We are able to see no reason why the judge should not have tried the whole case at the place where the tragedy occurred, if it suited his convenience so to do. There is no peculiar sanctity about the court room which requires trials to be held there. The court room is for the convenience of the court, but there is no reason that forbids the judge, in hot weather, for instance, to hold his court out in the yard under a tree, or any other place which better suited his convenience and the comfort of the jurors and the parties litigant; nor are we able to see in what way the interest of the appellant was prejudiced by being allowed to give additional testimony in his own favor to the jury. The Commonwealth's attorney might have objected to this, but there is no ground for complaint of it by appellant.

The court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial based upon the newly-discovered evidence. Most of it would have been incompetent as hearsay, and the balance was merely cumulative. Besides, under section 281 of the Criminal Code, we have no jurisdiction to reverse a criminal case for an error of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial. Counsel for appellant earnestly insists that the court should have given the jury an instruction embracing the principle that, although the accused might have wrongfully begun the affray in which the killing was done, yet if he afterward in good faith had withdrawn from it, and made it apparent to his antagonist that he had so withdrawn in the interest of peace, then his right of self-defense returned to him, and if his antagonist afterwards attacked him, he might then kill him in his apparent necessary self-defense. Instructions must be based on evidence, and while the abstract principle contended for by the counsel for appellant is unquestionably correct, there are no facts in this record upon which it could have been predicated. Jones never knew that he had but one antagonist—Ab. Early; and while Early, after firing, retreated, this was not a withdrawal in the interest of peace, because he fired as he ran. If Underwood shot Jones at all, he shot him from behind, and without Jones' knowledge. There was never any withdrawal by Underwood in the interest of peace, and, therefore, there was no evidence which would have authorized the trial judge to give the instruction, for the absence of which appellant complains.

Taking a survey of the whole case, we are impressed with the fact that the accused had a fair trial in every particular. The instructions, as given by the court, seem to contain the whole law of the case, but if they are subject to any criticism whatever, it is that they are too favorable to appellant. The jury, under the facts as shown by this record, were more than lenient in their verdict, and this should be a matter of congratulation rather than complaint on the part of the accused.

Perceiving no error in the record the judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. PARK'S ADM'R.

(Filed January 5, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Contracts — Peremptory instruction — Pleading — Where the petition alleged, in this action upon a contract for services rendered as overseer, that appellant performed the labor at the special instance and request of the deceased; that he looked after her farm and stock, collected her debts, paid off her indebtedness and transacted all of her business, and the evidence conducing to substantiate these allegations and the further allegation that deceased agreed and promised to pay for these services, it was error for the lower court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for defendant.

2. Devise—Pleading—Where decedent devised so much to appellant, but such devise was not equal to the whole debt claimed by him, a demurrer was properly sustained to a plea of the devise. If the money was due by contract the deceased had no right to attach conditions to its payment as was done. Moreover, the will contains express provisions as to the payment of debts, and this fact negatives the idea that the bequest was intended as a payment

R. H. Tomlinson and R. L. Greene for appellant.

W. I. Williams and R. L. Davidson for appellee.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellant, George W. Smith, instituted this action to recover of the appellee a debt of $1,925, which he claimed to be due him from the estate of Margaret H. Parks, deceased.

Mrs. Parks was an old, feeble lady, who owned a farm of about 200 acres of bluegrass land in Garrard county, Kentucky. The appellant seems to have been her overseer from the year 1888 until her death in August, 1901. During this time he lived with her on the farm, acted as overseer, attended to all her affairs, looked after the stock, saw that the laborers performed their duties, made sales of the produce of the farm, collected the money, hired the servants and paid them off; in fact did everything that an overseer is expected to do. After her death he presented this claim to her administrator for services rendered, being at the rate of $150 per year. Payment being refused, this action was instituted. The answer contains, first, a traverse; second, a plea of the statute of limitation; third, the allegation that the services performed were gratuitous, the claimant being a member of the family, and the decedent having no idea that his services were to be paid for; and, fourth, payment by devise of $500 by the decedent to appellant.

Upon the trial of the case the court sustained a demurrer to the plea of payment by the devise, and a trial being had upon the issues remaining in the record, the court, after the conclusion of the appellant's (plaintiff's) testimony, sustained a motion for a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the appellee (defendant); and of this the appellant now complains. There was no such relationship between the appellant and Margaret H. Parks as warrants the assumption that the services, which the record shows that he performed for her in her lifetime, were to be gratuitous. On the contrary, they were only distantly related, and the services are of that character, both in kind and value, for which those who receive them usually have to pay. It is true where personal services are rendered by one member of a family to another, as by a child to a parent, no implication of a promise to pay will arise; but where no such relationship exists, and the parties stand as strangers towards each other, so far as duty is concerned, the rendering by one, and the acceptance by the other, of such services as are involved in this case raises by legal implication a promise to pay on the part of the recipient. If the evidence for appellant is true, the decedent, Margaret H. Parks, who was utterly unable to manage her farm herself, received for many years his whole services, which were devoted to the care and control of her farm; and these services were just such as men usually seek from the overseers whom they employ to manage their affairs.

Appellant was faithful and loyal in the discharge of his duties, and very kind and attentive to the little wants of his invalid employer, and it was but natural that there should spring up a warm affection between them. Because Mrs. Parks rewarded the fidelity of her employe by her friendship and esteem is no reason for not paying him the value of his services, if the claim is just.

The petition contains allegations which constitute an express contract of employment and promise to pay. So much as bears upon this particular point is as follows: "Plaintiff states that at her special instance and request, he performed labor for her on her farm, looking after her stock, cultivated her land, collected her debts, paid off her indebtedness and transacted all business for her in any way connected with or pertaining to the management of her farm for and during the period of time mentioned, and also waited on her during that time; all of which was done at her special instance and request, and for all of which she agreed and promised to pay him."

The evidence for appellant conduced to substantiate this allegation, and the court erred in granting a peremptory instruction. The rule we are seeking to state is nowhere more clearly set forth than in the case of Cloud, &c. v. Clinkinbeard's Ex'ors, 8 B. M., 899. In the opinion in that case it is said: "It appeared in proof that Mrs. Cloud was a relative, and had lived in the family of the testator, and had been treated more like a child than a servant or dependent. If during the time she lived with him the testator believed himself under no legal obligations to pay for the services rendered by her, and she did not intend to demand compensation therefor, or expect to receive it except as an act of his bounty, then the law will not imply a promise to pay on his part. Unless, however, such an understanding of the parties is fairly deducible from their attitude and conduct, the law does, in the absence of all circumstances to repel such an inference, imply a promise to pay a reasonable compensation for the services rendered. This question the jury had to determine, and in the event of its decision in the plaintiff's Yavor they had also to estimate and ascertain the value of the services." (Green's Ex'or v. Green, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 1007, and cases there cited; Galloway v. Galloway, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 857.)

The trial court correctly overruled the demurrer to the plea of the statute of limitation, thus limiting the right of appellant to recover so much of his claim as accrued within five years next before the time when his right to sue accrued. The judgment sustaining a demurrer to the plea of payment by devise from the decedent to appellant must also be sustained as a correct exposition of the law. The devise was not equal to the whole debt claimed by the appellant from the estate of the decedent, even after the application of the statute of limitations, therefore, the rule that where a party is in debt and devises to his creditor a sum equal to or greater than the amount of the debt, it is to be construed as a payment, has no application here. Moreover, the fact that the decedent devised the sum of $500 in trust to be paid appellant as he needed it, refutes the claim that she intended it as a payment of a debt. If it was money due by contract, she had no right to attach conditions to its use, and would not have done so. The will, in addition, contains an express devise for the payment of her debts, and this fact negatives the idea that the specific devise of $500 was intended as a payment, the rule being that where a testator in his will directs all his just debts to be paid, if then he owed to his devise a just debt, he virtually directs its payment as well as the payment of the legacy. (Cloud, &c. v. Clinkinbeard's Ex'or, 8 B. M., 399; Lisle v. Tribble, 92 Ky., 308.)

The exceptions to the depositions of Higginbotham and Lusk should have been overruled.

For the reasons indicated the judgment on the cross appeal is affirmed and the judgment on the direct appeal is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH v. ROBINSON.

(Filed January 6, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Resisting an officer—Instructions—Upon the trial of appellee upon an indictment charging him with feloniously striking and wounding an officer with a deadly weapon, it appearing that appellee was resisting arrest by the officer, an instruction to the effect that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused had committed a public offense in the presence of the officer and knew the officer to be the marshal of the town where the offense was committed, and the officer attempted to arrest him, it was his duty to submit to the arrest; and if he refused to do so and assaulted the officer, the latter had the right to repel the assault and compel the defendant to submit to the arrest, correctly stated the law, and should have been given by the lower court.

A. L. Kendall, Ed. Daum, N. B. Hays and L. Mix for appellant.

R. J. Babbitt and J. B. Cumber for appellee.

Appeal from Fleming Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, John Robinson, was indicted in the Fleming Circuit Court for maliciously and feloniously striking and wounding Mat Bramble with a deadly weapon with the intent to kill him, but of which wound the latter did not die.

The trial resulted in the conviction of appellee for a lower degree of the offense charged, and his punishment was fixed by the jury at a fine of $85 and imprisonment in jail sixty days. The lower court granted appellee a new trial, and the Commonwealth appeals from the ruling of the court in refusing an instruction asked by it upon the trial.

By sections 335-337, Criminal Code, an appeal may be taken by the Commonwealth before final judgment to have the law of a case settled by this court, but the appeal can not interfere with the action of the lower court in granting a new trial. (Commonwealth v. Hourigan, 89 Ky., 505.) It appears from the record that there was evidence conducing to prove that Bramel, who was deputy marshal of the city of Flemingsburg, received information from the family of appellee that the latter had committed a felony by maliciously striking and wounding one of his own children with a deadly weapon with intent to kill her, and that appellee was somewhere in the city.

Bramel, upon receiving this information, started out to find and arrest appellee for the alleged felony, without taking time to secure a warrant, and found him at a livery stable. Appellee refused to submit to arrest upon the charge preferred, and being drunk, commenced to threaten the officer, and to curse and abuse him in his presence. The officer then left him, secured his pistol and returned to arrest appellee without a warrant for the felony and the offense of which he was guilty in his presence, that is, being drunk and disorderly, threatening the officer and using profane language in his presence. Upon being again approached by the officer, appellee again refused to be arrested, and in resisting the officer struck him with a club, breaking one of his ribs, and in the difficulty was shot by the officer.

Upon the trial of appellee for wounding the officer, the Commonwealth, upon the conclusion of the evidence, asked the following instruction: "The court further instructs the jury that if they believe from all the evidence that Mat Bramble was deputy marshal of the town of Flemingsburg, a town of the fifth class in Fleming county, Kentucky, at the time of the striking and wounding alleged in the indictment herein, then it was his duty to suppress any disturbance of the peace or any disorderly conduct committed in his presence in said town, and to arrest any person guilty of such offense, where the offense was committed in his presence, and this he had a right to do without a warrant, and it was likewise the duty of the said Mat Bramble, acting as marshal, to arrest any person who was guilty of a public offense in his presence, such as using profane language or being drunk in the presence of the officer, and this it was his duty to do without a warrant; and if the jury further believe from all the evidence, to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt, that a public offense was committed in the presence of the said marshal by the accused, John Robinson, and the said Robinson knew that the said Mat Bramble was a marshal, then said Mat Bramble, acting as a marshal, had the right to arrest the said John Robinson without a warrant, and if the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the accused had committed a public offense in the presence of said Mat Bramble, the marshal aforesaid, and knew that the said Mat Bramble was marshal, and said Bramble attempted to arrest the accused, John Robinson, in the town of Flemingsburg, for such offense committed in his presence, then it was the duty of the said defendant to submit to the arrest, and if he refused to do so, and assaulted the said marshal, with a club or stick or deadly weapon, then said marshal had the right to repel said assault, and to compel the defendant to submit to the arrest."

This instruction was refused by the court, which we think was error. In Helm v. Commonwealth, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 165, it appeared that the appellant, Helm, was misbehaving at a picnic near Whitesville, in Daviess county, information of which is given the marshal of the town, who went to the picnic grounds to arrest him. Upon his finding Helm the latter committed an offense in his presence, and in resisting arrest cut and wounded the officer with a knife. Upon the trial of Helm for cutting the officer the lower court gave to the jury an instruction precisely like the one offered in this case. Helm objected to the instruction, and being convicted, appealed. This court, however, held that the instruction was proper, and approved it. Regarding that case as conclusive of the correctness of the instruction refused in this case, we hold that the instruction asked by the Commonwealth should have been given in this case.

Wherefore, this conclusion is certified to the lower court.

COMMONWEALTH v. JONES.

(Filed January 6, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Local option—Peremptory instruction—The fact that an order of a county court directing the holding of a local option election recited that the petition for the election was signed by more than twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters residing and living within the magisterial district in which the election was held, instead of following the language of the statute requiring a number of names to the petition equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes of each precinct cast at the last general election, etc., did not render the election void where it appeared the petitioners represented more than twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast at the last election, and that at the election 64 votes were cast in favor of the sale of whisky and 849 were cast against it; and where a case was made out for the violation of the local option law, it was error for the lower court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant.

J. G. Lovett and N. B. Hays for appellant.

Appeal from Marshall Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, J. A. Jones, was indicted by the grand jury of Marshall county for the offense of selling unlawfully spirituous, vinous and malt liquors by retail in territory where the local option law was in force.

Upon the trial in the circuit court it was proved that he sold within a year next before the finding of the indictment to one Charles Bolin in Magisterial District, No. 2, of Marshall county, where the local option law was in force, seven bottles of beer at ten cents per bottle, and the intoxicating quality of the beer was demonstrated by the fact, also established by the evidence, that Bolin became intoxicated from drinking it. The Commonwealth introduced in evidence several orders of the county court showing that an election was held in the magisterial district in question under the provisions of the local option law, and that a majority of the votes in said election were cast against the sale of liquor.

No evidence was introduced in behalf of the appellee, yet he was declared not guilty by the verdict of the jury, they having been directed to so find by a peremptory instruction from the court to that effect. The appellant, Commonwealth of Kentucky, excepted to the giving of the peremptory instruction, and filed motion and grounds for a new trial, but the motion was overruled by the court, to which an exception was likewise taken by appellant, and this court is now asked to review the several rulings of the lower court complained of. It appears that the ruling of the trial judge in giving the peremptory instruction was based upon what he considered a fatal defect in the order of the county court in the matter of directing the holding of the election under the local option law in the magisterial district; that part of the order containing the supposed defect is as follows: "And this being the next regular term of the Marshall County Court after receiving said petition by the judge of the Marshall County Court, which petition was filed with the clerk of the Marshall County Court and noted of record by him in his office, and same is now ordered filed of record; and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that said petition was signed by more than twenty five per cent. of the legal voters living and residing within Magisterial District, No. 2, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Kentucky, and more than twenty-five per cent. of the legal votes cast at the last preceding general election in and for said Magisterial District, No. 2." * * *

It will be observed that the order quoted in part above does not recite that the petition for the election was signed by legal voters in each precinct of the territory to be affected, equal to twenty-five per cent. of the legal votes of each precinct of the Magisterial District, No. 2, cast at the last preceding general election, and as the statute (section 2554) provides that an order directing the holding of an election under the local option law in a magisterial district may be granted by the judge of the county court, "upon application, by written petition, signed by a number of legal voters in each precinct of the territory to be affected equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast in each of said precincts at the last preceding general election," * * * it was assumed by the lower court that the election held under the order was void, and that consequently the local option law was not in force in Magisterial District, No. 2, at the time of the sale of the beer for which appellant was indicted. In other words, it was the opinion of the trial judge that the order of the county judge should recite all the jurisdictional facts authorizing him to direct the holding of the election.

It is stated in the order filing the petition for the election, which was entered at a regular term of the county court preceding that at which the order directing the election was entered, that the petitioners, Charles Smith, and others, constituting a number "equal to twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters of the various voting places (precincts) in Magisterial Precinct, No. 2. in Marshall county, Kentucky," appeared and filed with the county judge the petition requesting that the election be held. The order directing the holding of the election entered at the following term declares that the petitioners were "resident citizens and legal voters of Magisterial District, No. 2," and that they constituted more than twenty-five per cent. of the legal votes cast in the magisterial district at the last preceding general election in and for such district. The two orders, therefore, establish the facts, first, that those signing the petition were residents and legal voters of the magisterial district; second, that they constituted more than twenty-five per cent. of the legal votes cast at the last preceding general election in the district; and, third, were in number equal to twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters of the various voting places in the district.

According to Webster the word "various" means "different," and "several" means "separate," "distinct." Therefore, to say of persons whose names appear to the petition in question that they equal in number twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters of the several voting places in the magisterial district, is equivalent to saying that they equal twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters in each precinct, and if equal to twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters in each precinct, equal also to the same per cent. of the legal votes cast in each precinct at the last preceding general election. It is true that the statute says the petition for such an election must be signed by a number of legal voters in each precinct of the territory to be affected, but it does not say that it must be signed by twenty-five per cent. of the legal voters residing in each precinct. It is only required that the number of legal voters of each precinct signing the petition shall be equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast in each precinct in the last preceding general election.

It is shown by the petition for the election under consideration that at the end of many of the names signed thereto appears the word and figure "No. 5," and at the end of others "No. 4," indicating, doubtless, that these numbers refer to the precincts respectively of the magisterial district; it would seem, therefore, that the fact that the petition was signed by legal voters of each precinct of the magisterial district is to be inferred from the appearance and language of the petition which was introduced in evidence.

The several orders of the county court considered together show that the election was held as directed; that the votes were canvassed and counted, and the result ascertained by the election officers, and the result was by them certified to the county judge and spread upon the records of his court; and further, that 64 votes were cast in favor of the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors and 349 against its sale, making a total of 413 votes cast in the magisterial district, and a majority of 285 against the sale of liquors.

A comparison of the total vote cast at the election with the names upon the petition will show what proportion of the voters of the district joined in the request for the holding of the election. The petition contains 152 names, equalling about thirty-seven per cent. of the votes cast in the entire district. A careful examination of the orders and other record evidence from the county court introduced by the Commonwealth upon the trial will show but one irregularity in the proceedings leading to and resulting in the election, and that is the failure to have the order of election contain an express recital of the fact that the petition for the election was signed by a number of legal voters in each precinct of the territory to be affected equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast in each of the precincts at the last preceding general election.

We are not prepared to say that this single omission ought to invalidate the election, for we think the orders altogether, in connection with the statements of the petition, establish the jurisdictional facts, and that they were regarded by the county judge as existing is shown by the following statement contained in the order directing the holding of the election: "It further appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the said petitioners have in all respects complied with the law, it is now ordered and adjudged by the court that an election be held," etc.

Where, as in this case, the validity of the proceedings under which the election was held are attacked collaterally, if a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is shown, by the petition therefor and the orders entered of record by the county judge, the election will not be declared void. We are of opinion, therefore, that the lower court erred in giving the peremptory instruction directing the jury to find the appellee not guilty, but as under the statute the offense of which appellee was guilty may be punished by imprisonment in jail not less than ten nor more than forty days, as well as by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $100, we can not reverse the judgment of the lower court and require him to be retried, and must be content to certify to the court below the law as herein expressed, which is accordingly done.

LAUGHLIN'S EX'TX v. BOUGHNER, &c.

(Filed January 6, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Former appeal—Where a former appeal settled all questions between the parties and nothing remained except to state the claims between them and calculate the interest, it was not error to refuse an allowance to the executrix of commissions, or attorney's fees, but the lower court erred in fixing the date from which interest must be computed, May 8, 1888, being the date from which interest must run.

W. S. Pryor for appellant.

B. F. Graziani, G. F. Boughner and George Doniphan for appellees.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion in the first appeal is published in 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1167, and the response to the petition for rehearing can be found in 25 Ky. Law Rep., 869. This opinion settled all the questions between the parties, and nothing remained to be done except to calculate the interest on and stating the claims of the parties named in the opinion, and render a judgment for the party in whose favor the balance might be found. On the filing of the mandate in the lower court the appellant in this appeal moved the court to refer the case to the master commissioner to take proof and report the state of accounts or claims existing between the parties. The court refused this motion. There was no error in this. The court had the right to refer the matter to the commissioner, or to make the calculations itself, which was done. The court by its calculation ascertained that there was due from the appellants to appellees on the 25th of March, 1904, the sum of $3,756.60, and rendered judgment for that sum with interest from that date. Appellants appeal from this judgment, and claim that there was an error in this calculation and judgment to their prejudice; also that the court erred in refusing to allow the executrix of Laughlin the statutory allowance or commissions on her collection of the debt of the Cummins note, and also for refusing to allow her $250, the amount she had paid as executrix to the attorney for his services in the collection of this Cummins note.

We are of opinion that the court did not err in refusing her an allowance or commissions as executrix in the collection of the Cummins debt, and refusing her credit for the alleged attorney's fee paid, for two reasons: First, the former opinion of this court is a bar to her claim in this respect. That opinion or judgment settled all matters of claims between the parties that were or might have been therein presented. The second reason is that the Cummins claim did not belong to the estate of Laughlin. The commission or allowance fixed by statute for compensation to personal representatives of decedents is for the purpose of paying them for the collection and disbursement of money belonging to the decedent, and as this Cummins claim belonged to the appellees, Boughners, she was, therefore, not entitled to the statutory allowance. If she had made this collection of the Cummins debt for the benefit of the Boughners, there would be equity in her claim for fees paid to attorneys in the collection thereof. But the collection was made for the benefit of the Laughlin estate. She denied the right of the Boughners to any part of that claim, which was the main and real matter litigated in this action from its inception. The appellees were only made to surrender this claim to Boughners after long and expensive litigation. It would be inequitable to cause the appellees, Boughners, to pay large fees in the recovery of this Cummins claim from Laughlin's estate, and also pay the fee expended by her in recovering from Cummins and getting the money into their hands.

We are of opinion, however, that the court erred to the prejudice of appellants in the calculation of interest and the statement of the accounts between the parties. The court should have fixed May 8, 1888, the date that the executrix purchased the Cummins real estate, as the date for the ascertainment of the state of accounts and fixing the balance due to one party or the other, instead of December, 1887. A careful calculation shows that on May 8, 1888, the appellants herein were indebted to appellees in the sum of $1,868.50, after giving appellants all the credits to which they were entitled, and the court should have rendered a judgment for that sum, with interest at 6 per cent. from that date until paid.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a judgment in conformity herewith.

SCHMIDT, &O. v. LOUISVILLE, CINCINNATI & LEXINGTON RY.
CO., &O.

(Filed December 18, 1904.)

1. Action on mortgage and coupons—Accounting—Net earnings—In an action by a mortgage of the bonds and coupons of the net earnings of a railroad company for an accounting, it does not devolve upon the plaintiff to aver that there was such earnings; all that is required is to set forth the bonds and the coupons and to aver nonpayment and ask for an accounting, and any supposed conditions precedent are defensive matter.

2. Judgment—Bar—A judgment in an action upon certain coupons of a bond is not a bar to a recovery in an action on other coupons of the same bond, as each coupon is a separate promise and gives rise to a separate cause of action thereon.

3. Railroads—Operating expenses—There is no rule of law declaring what constitutes operating expenses of a railroad company. It is a matter of evidence, and determinable like any other fact, and where the witnesses differ in their testimony as to this matter, the preponderance on the point as to what constitutes operating expenses must control.

Pirtle, Trabue & Cox, Simrall & Doolan, W. S. Pryor and J. H. Hazelrigg for appellants.

Helm, Bruce & Helm for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity Division.

Opinion of the court by Special Judge Morrow.

STATEMENT OF CASE.

On the 2d day of July, 1879, the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio R. R. Co. executed and delivered to Joshua F. Speed, as trustee, its deed of mortgage, by which it conveyed to him all and singular its property, franchises, etc., to secure the payment of three hundred and fifty of its bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each, payable in twenty years, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent., the latter represented by coupons payable semiannually.

On the 28th of July thereafter the said Northern Division, as lessor, executed a deed to the L., C. & L. Ry. Co., by the terms of which it leased to the latter for the period of thirty years its unfinished road, etc., upon certain terms and conditions therein expressed, inter alia, "that the stockholders of said Northern Division would execute to the lessee a deed of mortgage upon all its property, franchises and resources, except private subscriptions."

It also provided that it is further agreed and understood that in the operation of said line of railway said party of the second part will make to said first party quarterly returns, giving full details of earnings and operating expenses, including the expense of keeping the roadbed in order, and the net earnings arising therefrom shall be applied to the payment of the interest and providing a sinking fund and retiring said bonds; but out of the gross earnings shall be deducted annually the sum of $1,000, which shall be paid to the first party with which to pay expenses of keeping up its organization; and if the net earnings do not prove sufficient to pay the interest and provide for the sinking fund on said mortgage bonds, then second party, if all other sources of raising money of said first party prove insufficient, will supply the deficiency, so far as may be done, by appropriating the net earnings, or so much thereof as may be necessary, on its own lines which may accrue to it by reason of business coming to it from or over said party of the first part's lines. It was further agreed that the second party "should be indemnified out of the earnings for the cost of printing the bonds and issuing same or incidental thereto."

On the same day the L., C. & L. executed and delivered to Speed, as trustee, a deed of mortgage, containing a covenant, putting in lien the net earnings mentioned in the lease to it.

The bonds, with coupons attached, were printed, issued and sold by appellee. Each bond had printed on its face: "The holder of this bond, together with the holders of the others of this series, is entitled to a first lien for the equal security of principal and interest, of each respectively, on all the property, rights and franchises of the said Northern Division of the C. & O.; as also a first lien on the net earnings of the L., C. & L., duly pledged thereto, which may accrue to it by reason of business coming to it over the lines of the mortgagor, the Northern Division of the C. & O." The mortgage referred to is the mortgage to Speed of July 2, 1879.

None of the coupons which fell due subsequent to December 31, 1883, having been paid, the appellants on October 12, 1885, brought this action in equity to recover on the coupons and to enforce the lien. The foregoing matters were substantially set forth and the various writings filed as exhibits. The petition, in substance, avers that the coupons were unpaid; that the defendant denied all responsibility for the payment of any of them, and had so informed plaintiffs; and that sufficient earnings had accrued to pay same. It further avers that defendant, though requested, had wholly failed to make any of the quarterly returns as provided for; that plaintiffs were ignorant of the exact amount of the net earnings, and that this information was exclusively within the knowledge of defendant; and that defendants "claim that beside the net earnings on its own lines coming to it over the line of the Northern Division, all other sources of raising money of said Northern Division have proved insufficient to pay said interest or to provide for such sinking fund." The prayer of the pleading is "that this action be referred to the commissioner of this court to take proof and report concerning the net earnings, and that the defendant be required to pay into court all such earnings, and that same be applied to the payment of the coupons." By an amendment filed December 7, 1885, the word "exclusive" was stricken from before the word "knowledge," in the petition. The defendant filed its answer February 8, 1886, in which it denied that there had been any net earnings; that any demand had been made; and a denial that it had exclusive knowledge as to the net earnings.

January 28, 1890, plaintiff filed another amendment in which they say: "It is true that all other sources of raising money of said first party, the N. D. of the C. & O., had and has proved insufficient, and there are no net earnings from said Cumberland & Ohio road or company."

The plaintiffs, January 6, 1891, filed an amendment, in which the allegation is made "that all the coupons falling due since the institution of the suit and up to that date were unpaid, etc., * * * wherefore plaintiffs pray as in their original petition, * * * and that all the net earnings as they may hereafter accrue be applied to the payment of the coupons now due, and as hereafter fall due, and also to the payment of the interest on said coupons from their respective maturities, and that any surplus net earnings be set apart as a sinking fund for the payment of the bonds as they mature."

This was the last pleading filed in the case. Upon the issues thus formed the action, after a reference to, and a report by, the commissioner, was dismissed by the chancellor. On appeal the judgment of the lower court was reversed, with directions to find for plaintiffs on the coupons due up to June 30, 1890. The action has continuously since that time remained on the docket. Treating the proceeding as one for an accounting for the purpose of raising a fund, not only to meet the coupons then due and such as might become due during the litigation, but also to create a fund to retire the bonds at maturity, the chancellor on the 21st of July, 1899 (the cause having remained on the docket pending certain appeals), referred it to the commissioner, with directions "to ascertain and report the net earnings of the defendant coming to it from or over the said Northern Division since the time of the last earnings reported herein in report R. E. S., No. 2, * * * said net earnings to be ascertained in the same way as in said report."

The report of the commissioner, without reporting any finding as absolute, submitted for the consideration of the court four aspects of the proof:

1st. On the basis of excluding from "operating expenses," construction, rents and taxes the amount which plaintiffs ought to recover would be $139,961.90.

2d. Upon the basis of construction, rents and taxes, but deducting at the end of each six months' period losses incurred in that period, it should be $128,431.76.

3d. On the basis of including rents and taxes, but excluding construction, it should be $54,637.21.

4th. Including in operating expenses, construction, rents and taxes, the finding should be for defendant.

The chancellor adopting the last view dismissed the petition, from which judgment the plaintiffs appealed, and the case is now before us for review.

There is no difference of opinion as to the meaning of the contract. That a fund was to be raised from the net earnings of the appellee road to pay off the coupons and the bonds themselves, if there was a sufficiency for the purpose, stands agreed. What constituted net earnings, and whether there has been such, are the evidential propositions involved in this controversy. The appellee concedes that the net earnings were to be applied, but insists that there can be no recovery in this suit in its present status because there have been no net earnings; but if there has been, the action was properly dismissed for the reason:

1st. There is no pleading which alleges (1) that for a period subsequent to the 1st of July, 1890, the net earnings of the Northern Division of the C. & O. were insufficient to pay in whole or in part the coupons; (2) or that all sources of raising money of the Northern Division had proved insufficient; (3) that the net earnings of the L., C. & L. had proved sufficient, and that appellee had collected them and failed to account for them.

2d. That all matters now in litigation are res judicata.

3d. If not res judicata, that Schmidt v. L., C. & L., in 95 Ky., —, is to be followed as a precedent, and under the principles therein announced there have been no net earnings.

4th. No cause of action is stated against the L. & N.

The appellee concedes that the pleadings up to 1891 were sufficient, but its contention now is that additional pleadings should have been filed covering the time now in controversy; that appellants are in the position of a plaintiff without written pleading in a court where written pleadings are required. In this we do not concur. The allegations and the prayer for relief contained in the petition and in the amended petition of January 28, 1891, seek to recover on not only the coupons then due, but to compel the paying into court of the net earnings as they might thereafter accrue to meet subsequent coupons, and to provide a fund to meet the bonds at maturity. The action is one for an accounting, and the prayer that the case be retained on the docket for all purposes, the bonds then having only about eight years to run. It was asked that the money be paid into court for the equal benefit of all the bondholders. Such action is clearly within the lines of good equity pleading. Whether there had been net earnings could only be known to appellants from the reports that were to be furnished to them by appellee. Failing to furnish such reports, the information as to whether there had been such earnings was exclusively within the knowledge of appellee, and it did not devolve on appellants to aver that there were such earnings: all that was required was to set forth the bond, the coupon and aver nonpayment and ask for an accounting. This has been done, the prayer being laid in the continuendo. The averments in the pleadings that the net earnings of the Northern Division had proved insufficient; that all other sources of raising money of said Northern Division had proved insufficient; and that sufficient earnings had accrued to the L., C. & L. were sufficient, were not necessary averments in order to set forth a cause of action. These supposed conditions precedent are defensive matter. The appellee must pay if there is sufficient from any one or more or all the sources. If the appellants had averred that there was a sufficiency of the net earnings derived from the L., C. & L., would a denial as to this constitute a complete defense? All the resources were in lien, and to have made the defense good denials should have been made as to the insufficiency of the other sources. The appellee assumed to pay the bonds, and the Northern Division, in consideration of its so doing, turned over to it all of its franchises, rights, subscriptions, etc., thereby denuding itself of every source of raising money. In fact it had to be paid out of the gross earnings $1,000 per annum to keep alive the organization. No effort on the part either of the bondholders or the Northern Division was expected. All effort in that direction was to be made by appellee. It was with it to make earnings out of the Northern Division, and to use the sources of raising money of it. The verbiage of the writing is conclusive on this point. The preposition "of" preceding the words "the said Northern Division shall prove insufficient, etc.," is used in its general and primary sense, "off," "from," "out of," not in the obsolete sense "by." The verb "prove" means "after trial." It was the duty of appellee, to the extent pointed out in the various writings, to pay the coupons; the funds and means with which to do so were in its possession and under its complete control; it devolved on it to make the trial from the sources mortgaged to it; it undertook to do so. It was not obligatory on appellants nor on the Northern Division to take any step in that direction; nor is it on them to aver the inability of appellee. Such seems to have been the contemporaneous understanding of the parties. As it appears in the statement of the case, the bonds were issued and sold by the appellee. It, therefore, had full notice of the contents and by the sale and receipt of the proceeds ratified the terms thereof and were bound by omissions, if any. The bonds do not pledge the net earnings of the Northern Division, nor do they contain the supposed condition "that if all other source of raising money of the Northern Division prove insufficient," etc. The language in the face of each bond is "that it and the other bonds and the coupons are secured by * * * a first lien on the net earnings of the L., C. & L., duly pledged thereto, which may come to it by reason of business coming to it over the lines of the Northern Division." The appellee was the ostensible, if not the real, owner of the bonds; they were printed, issued and sold by it; it received the proceeds of sale and appropriated them to an enterprise from which it anticipated the reaping of profits. There was neither gratuity nor friendship in the contract. The combination of these facts and circumstances, constitute a pledge on the part of appellee that to the extent of its net earnings arising from business coming to it over the Northern Division the bonds and coupons attached would be promptly paid. The holders of these bonds are innocent purchasers for value. The terms of the bonds do not put the purchaser on notice of modification of its terms to be elsewhere found; nor is he given to understand that he must exhaust other securities before he can look to these found in the bond. Upon any other theory than the one we hold the bonds would have been worthless on the market; no purchaser could have been found for them had it been suggested that payment could be obtained only through the labyrinthal process contended for by appellees and the object of their issual would have been frustrated. The pleadings are sufficient to maintain and uphold a judgment for appellants if there have been net earnings.

The claim that the matters in issue are res adjudicata is not tenable. The case was heard below as to a different set of coupons from these in controversy when the decision in 95 Ky., —, was rendered. The U. S. Supreme Court in Neebit v. Riverside Independent District, 144 U. S., —, held that "each coupon is a separate promise, and gives rise to a separate cause of action. * * * So while the promise on the bond and the coupons in the first instance are upon the same paper, and the coupons are for the interest on the bonds, yet the promise to pay the coupons is as distinct from that to pay the bond as if the two promises were placed in different instruments and different paper."

This view is sustained in Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S., 423; Cromwell v. County of Sac, ibid, 351-60. These enunciations are in harmony with the Kentucky authorities.

In Board of Commissioners v. Sutliff, 97 Fed. Rep., 270-82, it was held that a judgment upon certain coupons did not prevent an action from being brought upon other coupons of the same series, holding that estoppel applied only as to points and questions actually litigated and determined. In this action a new question is presented, one that could not have been determined in the other, and that is whether the cost of constructing the Shelbyville Branch is capital or operating expense. An additional fact is thereby put into the litigation which makes it a new question. "The litigation of the effect of one fact alone does not preclude in a second suit an inquiry and determination of that fact in conjunction with others." (144 U. S., 619.)

The opinion in 95 Ky.,—, is not res judicata under the Kentucky authorities, nor is this court absolutely bound by it as precedent. (Bank Tax Cases; Barker v. Southern Construction Co., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 796; Tennessee Paving Co., &c. v. Barker, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1069-1419; L. & N. R. Co. v. Offutt, 99 Ky., 427.)

In Barker v. Southern Construction Co. it appeared that the appellee had recovered judgment below on certain apportionment warrants issued to it in payment for the construction of certain sidewalks in the city of Somerset, the contract having been let under an ordinance of the city council. The case was brought to this court on alleged errors of the trial court, prominent among which were the facts that no engineer had either been elected or appointed by the council; that the work had not been done under the inspection or supervision of the engineer; and that the plaintiff had not before commencing the work, or at all, executed the bond required by the terms of the contract letting the work. This court reversed the case on all the points and on the further ground that the statute was highly arbitrary, and should be construed strictly in favor of the lot holders. The mandate was not that the case should proceed on principles consistent with the opinion, but directed the absolute dismissal of the petition, which was done by the circuit court on the return of the case. That suit was brought on only a part of the work, the city having been laid off into sections, but the entire work was let under one and the same letting or contract. While the case was pending the residue of the work was completed. After such completion of the Southern Construction Co. transferred its claim for the entire work, including claims then in litigation, to the Tennessee Paving Co. The paving company uniting with it, the construction company brought suit on all the warrants. A demurrer was filed to the petition because it failed to allege either that there was a city engineer or that the contractor had executed the bond required. The circuit court holding that it was bound by the opinion of this court in the construction company case, sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition, from which an appeal was taken to this court. So far as the action on the warrants that had been sued on in the first case an estoppel was relied on as a complete bar, and the opinion of this court either as a bar or as a binding precedent as to the work subsequently done. This court on a review of both cases held that there was no estoppel, and refused to follow the principles announced in the construction company case. This court, on the last appeal, held that it was not necessary that there should have been an engineer; that the failure of the contractor to execute the required bond did not affect the validity of the warrants, and that the statute should be liberally construed to carry into effect the object intended by the statute, which was to beautify and ornament the cities of the Commonwealth. The reason given why the cause was not adjudicated was that the first one was heard on the merits, and second on demurrer. It was a narrow but sufficiently wide fringe; it did, however, overrule every principle enunciated in the construction company opinion.

In Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Offutt, 99 Ky., 427, it was held that "this court, on a second appeal in the same case, will treat the opinion of the Superior Court on the former appeal as the law of the case whether that opinion be erroneous or not; but it would not be proper for the court to follow such an opinion unless the law as therein held applies to the facts in the record on a second appeal."

The doctrine laid down in the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Offutt and the construction company cases is sound in principle, and following them we must hold that the "claim of matters determined" contended for by appellee is not available. The law on this point, if there be such, in 95 Ky., —, does not apply to the facts of this case. Full weight has been given in the consideration of this appeal to the able and exhaustive briefs of the learned attorneys for appellee; but the vice, as it seems to us, in the argument on this particular phase is the assumption that we held in 95 Ky., —, as a matter of law that "taxes, rents and cost of construction" were operating expenses. In that case, construing the opinion most favorably to appellee, this court only held that on what was then before it, Report R. E. S., No. 2, most nearly approximated correct results. The court did not mean to be understood as holding that under all and every state of case that these items were chargeable to operating expenses. It is in proof that there are some kinds of construction, some kinds of rents and some taxes that ought not to be so charged. If this be not true, then proof is useless; the parties will be bound by the manner in which appellee saw proper to keep his accounts, and by its view as to what is necessary to bring construction within the lines that make it chargeable to capital. There is no rule of law declaring what constitutes operating expenses; that is to be determined by the testimony as to each item of expenditure; it is a matter of evidence and determinable like any other fact. There can in this view be no sort of inconsistency in this court holding now, if the proof warrants, that these matters, or any of them, are not operating expenses, and its having held on a different state of facts with different testimony that they were of that description. In the view we have taken it is not necessary that we should affirm or overrule 95 Ky., —. If, however, that issue were presented, we should overrule so much of it as is supposed to hold that all descriptions of construction, rents and taxes are operating expenses of a railroad.

As to the point that no pleading is filed against the L. & N. it is sufficient to say that no judgment is sought against it; that it is not a party is due to its own successful resistance. If to be held responsible at all it must be in the capacity of dominus litis. It has no ground of complaint that it has not been made a party. That there have been sufficient earnings coming to appellee by reason of business coming to it from and over the said Northern Division to satisfy at least a portion of the coupons in suit admits of no doubt. The contract provides that appellee should make quarterly returns as to this, and would appropriate the net earnings for the purpose of meeting the interest as it fell due. In equity that will be considered as done which should have been performed. We must, therefore, treat these earnings as having been set apart, appropriated by the appellee at the end of the first six months' period as a fund to pay the coupons that had then matured, and so as to the other periods as they should successively arise. We are of the opinion that it would not be competent for appellee to make default and then claim at a subsequent time that losses had occurred, and set the latter off against previously due coupons. It would be to allow it to take advantage of its own wrong. The sum so appropriated, on equitable principles, ceased on such appropriation to be longer the property of appellee. The contention of appellee on this point is not maintainable. The appellants have not been guilty of laches, as claimed by appellee. The original action was instituted in 1885, and the amendment of 1891 in the prayer asked that the net earnings should be paid in as they might accrue or be found to exist at the termination of each and every six months. The proof shows that there were net earnings up to June 30, 1895, and from July 1, 1896, up to February 5, 1898. From July 1, 1895, to June 30, 1896, there were no net earnings. The proof in that respect showing that, even excluding construction, rents and taxes from operating expenses, there had been no earnings. We not only hold that the earnings up to June 30, 1895, can not be swallowed up and absorbed by losses, if any, in the year above mentioned, but that such losses can not be set-off against subsequent earnings.

On the subject as to whether "rents, taxes and construction," as claimed by appellee, should be charged to capital or to operating expenses, the depositions of five witnesses were taken, four for appellants and one for appellee. Baird, Krebs, O'Brien and Dunbar, for plaintiff, swear that taxes (with a few exceptions) should be charged against capital; also rents, with like exceptions; as also the construction account. Sewell, Auditor for the L. & N. R. R. Co., the only witness for appellee, swears as pointedly to the contrary, basing the opinion alone on his own idea. Appellants' witnesses rely on as sustaining their theory "The American Railway Association of Accounting Officers," "The Interstate Commerce Commission," and the Louisville & Nashville R. R. up to 1894-5. That these parties are quoted correctly is not denied by Sewell. His deposition was taken after those of the appellant. In it he admits that such was the practice of the L. & N. up to the period mentioned; he also says there was a change made by that road in this respect. This change was made a short time before the extensive improvements on the Shelbyville Branch. That improvement was made to enable appellee to make a favorable lease to Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. Co. It is so extensive in its nature that there can be no doubt as to its expense being chargeable to capital and not to operating expenses. The cost of that work can not be deducted from gross earnings as a part of the operating expense of the appellee. O'Brien says, speaking of the Shelbyville Branch, "It is an entirely different road—except so far as to the fact of the road existing, it is the same roadbed." This is corroborated by the other witnesses for appellants, and as a matter of fact is not disputed by Sewell, except his claiming that anything short of building a new road outright should be charged to operating expense. All of the witnesses are expert railroad men. Crediting each, which from their honorable positions we should do, we must declare that the preponderance on the point as to what constitutes operating expenses is with the four rather than with one, especially when the four witnesses are endorsed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the American Association of Railway Accountants and the L. & N. R. R. Co.

Entertaining these views, we are constrained to reverse the action of the lower court, with directions to set aside the judgment dismissing the petition, and to render a judgment for plaintiffs for the sum of $128,481.75 as of date February 21, 1908. A mandate will issue in accordance with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

COMMONWEALTH v. AMERICAN TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE COMPANY.

(Filed January 18, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Construction of statutes—The common law remedy for the obstruction of public roads has not been supplanted by chapter 110, Kentucky Statutes. (20 Ky. Law Rep., 606.)

2. Indictments—Sufficiency of—Where an indictment charged in substance that appellee had created and maintained a nuisance by unlawfully, wrongfully and injuriously cutting down and felling a large tree in the public road, leaving it there for a period of three months, it properly charged a nuisance.

N. B. Hays, Lorraine Mix and W. H. Hester for appellant.

Trabue, Dolan & Cox, Robbins & Thomas and Robert L. Greene for appellee.

Appeal from Ballard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Appellant appeals from the action of the lower court in sustaining a demurrer to the following indictment: "The grand jury of the county of Ballard, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. of the offense of creating and maintaining a common nuisance, committed in manner and form as follows: The said American Telephone and Telegraph Co., in the said county of Ballard, on the 1st day of December, 1903, and up until the 22d day of April, 1904, and on all the days and times between said days in the county aforesaid, and within twelve months before finding this indictment, is, and was, a company duly incorporated by the laws and the Constitution of this State, to build and maintain and operate telegraph and telephone lines and poles for stringing its wires, in and through Ballard county, Ky., did unlawfully, wrongfully, injuriously and unnecessarily cut down and fell a large tree in and across a public road of said county, and did wholly obstruct all public travel in, along and upon said road, same being known as the Wickliffe and East Cairo road. Said obstruction has been suffered and permitted by said company to remain down, in and across said public road upon all the days and times aforesaid, and said road being a public and common highway upon all the days and times aforesaid, to the common nuisance of all good citizens passing and repassing, going and returning in and along said public road and common highway, against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

We gather from the briefs filed in the case that the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer was upon the ground that chapter 110 of Kentucky Statutes, on the subject of roads and passways, has repealed and supplanted the common law remedy for the obstruction of public roads, and has vested exclusive jurisdiction of such offense in the county and quarterly courts. In this the court erred. (20 Ky. Law Rep., 606.) There are other cases not necessary to cite, as appellee in its brief concedes this point. Appellee contends that the demurrer was properly sustained for the reason that the indictment does not charge a common law offense, and cites the opinion of this court supra as sustaining its position. In that case the Illinois Central R. R. Co. was indicted for obstructing a public highway. It was alleged in the indictment that it had taken down a bridge that had been erected over its highway, leaving it down for about three months. There was no allegation that it wrongfully or unnecessarily took it down, or that it remained down for an unnecessary length of time, or that they failed to replace it in a reasonable time. The court in this case said the inference was, there being nothing stated to the contrary, that it was proper to take it down for the purpose of rebuilding it and making it a good one, and that they did not leave it down for an improper length of time. But in the case at bar the allegation in substance is that appellee created and maintained a nuisance by unlawfully, wrongfully, injuriously and unnecessarily cutting down and felling a large tree in the public road, describing the road, leaving it remaining there for a period of three months or more.

We are of opinion that the indictment charged a nuisance. It is stated in the brief that appellee could not remove the tree from the public highway by reason of back water from the river. If this is true it should be made a defense. We can not consider that upon this appeal as it does not appear in the record.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

THE MT. CARMEL TELEPHONE CO. v. THE MT. CARMEL AND FLEMINGSBURG TELEPHONE CO.

(Filed January 13, 1905.)

Corporations—Organization—Rights of subscribers to organize—Majority to control organization—Thirty-six persons subscribe various sums for the purpose of organizing a telephone company, and appoint a committee of nine of their number to prepare articles of incorporation, five of whom agree on articles which the other four refuse to accept, and which the remaining subscribers also refuse to accept, and the five members proceed to organize a corporation under one name, while the other thirty-one subscribers also organize under another name, the latter holding the subscription list and money paid in, for which the corporation composed of the five members has brought this suit. Held—That the subscribers for the stock of a proposed corporation, before they are incorporated, are partners in the business which they have in hand, and a committee appointed to prepare articles of incorporation are merely agents of the larger body, and it is not obligatory on the larger body to accept the articles prepared by such agents, and the larger body had the right to reject the same, and adopt articles of their own, and having done so the larger body are entitled to the assets of the partnership.

McCartney, Dearing & Grannis for appellant.

E. L. Worthington, J. R. Power and O. B. Bright for appellee.

Appeal from Fleming Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Thirty-six citizens of Fleming county desiring to incorporate themselves into a telephone company and to build and operate a telephone line between Mt. Carmel and Flemingsburg, subscribed various sums, from $25 to $5 each, for the capital stock of the corporation afterwards to be organized, the total amount of subscription being $480. The stock was to consist of ninety-six shares of the par value of $5 each. Before the articles of incorporation were prepared the subscribers seem to have obtained a right of way along the turnpike between the two towns, purchased and erected poles thereon and sufficient wire and insulators to complete that part of the proposed line.

At this stage of their organization they appointed nine of their number a special committee to prepare the proposed articles of incorporation. This committee seems to have been unable to agree as to the articles, and, as a result, four of them refused to go on with the organization, and reported back to the subscribers, who agreed with the minority of the committee. The remaining five prepared articles of incorporation under the name and style of the Mt. Carmel Telephone Co., which they signed and acknowledged, had recorded, as by law required, paid to the State the organization tax due, and fixed a time, some three months off, for the purpose of electing directors. The thirty-one subscribers, repudiating the action of the five members of the committee, had articles of incorporation prepared, the name and style of which was the Mt. Carmel and Flemingsburg Telephone Co., which they acknowledged and subscribed, as by law required, elected directors and officers, and were proceeding to carry into effect, so far as they could, the original contract between the subscribers. These latter had possession of the original subscription list and money paid in, and other property, including the wire, insulators, etc.

Deeming themselves the original company, the five subscribers who had incorporated themselves as the Mt. Carmel Telephone Co. instituted this action against the thirty-one subscribers incorporated under the name and style of the Mt. Carmel and Flemingsburg Telephone Co. to recover possession of the personal property held by them as before stated. And the question presented by this record is the mutual rights of the respective parties to this property. The subscribers for the stock of a proposed corporation before they are incorporated are partners in the business which they have in hand. (Cincinnati Cooperage Co. v. Bate, 96 Ky., 356; Warring v. Arthur, 98 Ky., 84.) The committee of subscribers appointed to prepare the articles of incorporation were merely the agents of the larger body for the purpose for which they were appointed, and it is an elementary doctrine of agency that the principal may at any time, due regard being had to the rights of third persons, withdraw the authority of the agent. Although this committee were authorized to prepare for the majority articles of incorporation, it was not obligatory upon the latter to accept or agree to them, and the principals in this case having refused to sign and acknowledge the articles prepared, this in law amounted to a repudiation of the action of the agents. The fact that a majority of the agents saw proper to adopt their own work, and sign and acknowledge the articles prepared by themselves, did not incorporate or bind the principals, or entitle the corporation so created to the property of the original partners who refused to incorporate with them. After refusing to ratify the work of their agents, the majority of the subscribers incorporated themselves by signing and acknowledging other articles under the name and style of the Mt. Carmel and Flemingsburg Telephone Co., and this corporation became the owner of the assets of the partnership.

In a partnership composed of numerous individuals bound loosely together by subscription to the stock of a proposed corporation, for all the purposes of the organization, a majority must have the right of control so long as they act within the purview of the contract of subscription, and it would be an anomalous proposition if such a body, having appointed a committee of their number as agents to prepare articles of incorporation, should find themselves irrevocably bound to agree to any articles which their agents might see fit to prepare, or of having the alternative presented to them, either of adopting the unacceptable articles or of losing all the property belonging to the partnership, provided the agents had the temerity to organize themselves under the rejected articles, and to claim the property of the partnership. And yet this is the very proposition which appellant is here seeking to maintain.

Counsel for both litigants have discussed at great length the question as to what point in the process of organization an action may be maintained by the corporation. The decision of that question does not seem to us necessarily presented by this record. Conceding the appellant to be a properly-organized corporation, and, therefore, to be empowered to maintain any action involving its property rights, the facts herein recited are admitted in the pleadings, and show that the plaintiff (appellant) had no right to the property it sought to recover. This belonged to the partners, and as a large majority of these organized themselves into the defendant (appellee) company, the title thereto became invested in it. One partner can not maintain detinue for the recovery of the partnership assets from his partners.

The trial judge correctly sustained the demurrer of appellee and dismissed appellants' petition, and this judgment is affirmed.

ROUGH RIVER TELEPHONE CO. v. CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CO.

(Filed January 17, 1905.)

Telephone companies—Rights in cities and towns—Consent of towns—How granted—Section 163 of the Constitution prohibits the erection by telephone companies of "poles, posts, etc., along, over, under or across the streets of a city or town without the consent of such city or town." Section 8619, Kentucky Statutes, part of the charter of towns of the sixth class, provides that "no order or resolution granting any franchise shall be passed.

by the board of trustees within five days after its introduction, nor at any other than a regular meeting." At a special meeting of the board of trustees of the town of Hartford, Ky., September 1, 1898, the following resolution was passed: "The Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. made application for the privilege to set their posts and run their telephone lines through the streets of Hartford, Ky., which privilege was granted." Held—That this resolution is void, first, because it was not required to lay over five days from the time it was introduced; second, because it was passed at a special meeting of the board of trustees, and, therefore, conferred no right whatever upon the appellee.

Glenn & Ringo for appellant.

R. E. Lee Simmerman and G. B. Likens for appellee.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellee, a corporation, was operating a telephone line over and along one of the public streets of Hartford, Ky., a city of the sixth class. The appellant, also a corporation, in placing poles along the same street for the purpose of erecting a telephone line, so stationed one of the poles, in the language of the petition, "that it displaces plaintiff's wires and jamps and bunches them together, so that plaintiff's exchange and system of telephone are greatly disarranged and their service greatly hindered and rendered worthless to many of plaintiff's subscribers, and will result in the loss of many of plaintiff's patrons if the wrongs complained of are allowed to be continued." The issues being made up, the court, by final judgment, awarded a perpetual injunction in accordance with the prayer of the petition. From this judgment appellant has appealed.

In the pleadings the right of appellee (plaintiff) to operate its line over the public highway of Hartford was placed in issue, and the view we have taken of this question renders unnecessary the consideration of any other question in the case. Section 163 of the Constitution prohibits, among other things, the erection by a telephone company of "its poles, posts or other apparatus, along, over, under or across the streets, alleys or public grounds of a city or town without the consent of the proper legislative bodies or boards of such cities or towns being first obtained." * * * Section 3699 of the Kentucky Statutes (charter of cities of the sixth class) provides as follows: "No order or resolution granting any franchise shall be passed by the board of trustees within five days after its introduction, nor at any other than a regular meeting." * * *

Whatever right appellee had in the streets of Hartford were obtained under the following resolution of its board of trustees, as appears from exhibit "A," filed by it:

"Special meeting of the Board of Trustees of the town of Hartford, Ky., September 1, 1898.

"The Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. made application for the privilege to set their posts and run their telephone lines through the streets of Hartford, Ky., which privilege was granted.

"Attest: W. G. HARDWICK,

"Clerk Board of Trustees,

"Town of Hartford, Ky."

It will be observed that this resolution violates the charter of the municipality in two ways: First, it was not required to lay over five days from the time it was introduced before its passage; and, second, it was passed at a special meeting of the board. It was, therefore, void, and conferred no right whatever upon appellee. (East Tennessee Telephone Co. v. Anderson County Telephone Co., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 418; East Tennessee Telephone Co. v. Anderson County Telephone Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2358; Maraman v. Ohio Valley Telephone Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 784.) In the second case cited, after quoting section 163 of the Constitution, the court, speaking through Chief Justice Burnam, said: "This section of the Constitution is mandatory and highly important, and as the Anderson Telephone Co. failed to comply with its provisions, or the statute passed pursuant thereto, it is clear that they had no right to use the streets or highway of the city of Lawrenceburg for the conduct of their business." Then, after discussing numerous authorities, it is said: "In this action they (the Anderson County Telephone Co.) can only recover upon the ground that they were prevented by an injunction sued out by appellant from exercising a lawful right to occupy the streets of the city with their plant; as it is conclusively shown they had no such legal right, but were mere trespassers, they have no standing in court."

The infirmity in the title to the franchise in each of the cases above cited was the same as in the case at bar. Originally, the East Tennessee Telephone Co. had enjoined the Anderson County Telephone Co. from operating a telephone line in Lawrenceburg, Ky., and had executed bond, according to law, as a condition precedent to the obtention of the order. This injunction was dismissed for the reason given in 22 Ky. Law Rep., 418. Thereupon the Anderson County Telephone Co. instituted an action on the bond to recover damages for the wrongful suing out of the injunction, and its right to maintain it was disposed of in the opinion contained in 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2358, the court holding that it could not recover damages on the bond for the wrongful suing out of the injunction, because it possessed no lawful franchise to operate a telephone line along the streets of Lawrenceburg, and, therefore, was not entitled to damages for being prevented from doing what it had no right to do, it being a mere trespasser. No practical difference can be discovered between the effect of preventing a telephone company from operating its franchise by a wrongfully obtained injunction, and from preventing its so doing by the wrongful erection of a pole which merely bunches its wires without otherwise injuring them. The injury arises in both cases from depriving the corporation of the power to earn money by the operation of its franchise. A mere trespasser can not complain that he is prevented from continuing his wrongful act. No injury is claimed to the corporeal property of appellee. The sole injury is the prevention of the full exercise of its invalid claim of a franchise in the streets of the city. It follows, therefore, under the authorities cited, that, as it has no such franchise, it can have received no injury of which equity will take cognizance.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

VAUGHN v. HULETT.

(Filed January 4, 1905.)

1. Road overseers—Compensation—Kentucky Statutes, section 4810, fixes the compensation of road overseers by exempting them from jury service and from poll tax for road and bridge purposes, and this excludes the idea that they can legally be allowed anything in addition thereto for their services as overseers.

2. Fiscal court—Authority to allow compensation—The fiscal court has no authority to allow road overseers $50 per year, or any compensation for their services as overseers, and an order of said court making such allowance is void.

W. D. O'Neal, Jr., for appellant.

M. S. Burns for appellee.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

At a special term of the fiscal court of Lawrence county, held in the month of June, 1903, the following order was entered: "It is ordered by the court that the road overseers of this county be paid a reasonable compensation per year as a salary for their services as such, but in no event to exceed $50 per annum, beginning on and after July 1, 1903, and provided the number of overseers in the county is not to exceed twenty."

In pursuance of this order the county court caused the county to be divided into seventeen road precincts, and fixed the boundaries of the same and allotted all the able-bodied male citizens within the boundary between the ages of eighteen and fifty years to work on the roads in their respective precincts, and appointed for each precinct an overseer. Before the expiration of a year from the date of the appointment of these overseers the fiscal court made to them an allowance for their services as such overseers, and directed the treasurer of the county, who is the appellee, to pay them. The appellant, a citizen and taxpayer of the county, who sued for himself and the other taxpayers, brought this action against appellant to enjoin him from paying these orders upon the ground that they were void; that the law did not authorize the fiscal court to appropriate the funds of the county to pay overseers a salary or any compensation for their services as overseers of roads. It appears that the roads of Lawrence county are maintained by both taxation and by hands allotted to work thereon. The county has a supervisor of roads in addition to the seventeen overseers.

The only question necessary to be determined on this appeal is whether the fiscal court was authorized by law to allow overseers a salary or compensation for their services as such overseers. This is evidently what the fiscal court intended to and did do by its orders referred to. While the statutes on the subject are not clear, we have arrived at the conclusion that the court did not have any authority to make the orders, and that its action in the matter was void. The fiscal court is a court of limited powers, and has no jurisdiction to appropriate county funds except as it is authorized by law to do so. (22 Ky. Law Rep., 211; section 1840, Kentucky Statutes.)

The section of the statute referred to provides that the fiscal court shall have jurisdiction to appropriate county funds authorized by law to be appropriated. We construe this to mean that the fiscal court has not the jurisdiction to appropriate the funds of the county for any purpose unless the law authorized the appropriation. The county court appoints the overseers and the fiscal court the supervisor. The statute, section 4310, fixed the compensation of overseers, wherein it is provided that they shall be exempt from service on juries, and from poll tax for road and bridge purposes. This language excludes the idea that they can legally be allowed or receive anything in addition thereto as compensation for their services as overseers.

The makers of the statutes on this subject contemplated that, in consideration of the benefits received under section 4310, the overseers would cause the roads to be worked by the road hands, as provided in section 4308, that is, not exceeding six days in any year, and in cases of unusual emergency. The overseers are required, for the consideration named, only to perform the work and labor required of them by the statutes in counties wherein the roads are not maintained by taxation. For their services performed by direction of the fiscal court, under section 4315, when there is no supervisor, and if appointed as assistant supervisor as authorized by sections 4344 and 4346, the fiscal court is authorized and directed to fix and appropriate money to pay a reasonable compensation to them for their services rendered by direction of the fiscal court other than for their services for which they are paid by reason of the exemptions and benefits provided for them by section 4310, Kentucky Statutes.

It appearing from the orders of the fiscal court that the allowance to the overseers was for the purpose of paying them a salary for their general services as overseers, under their appointment by the county court, and not for the purpose of paying them for special services rendered or to be rendered, under direction or by appointment of the fiscal court, by virtue of sections 4315, 4344 and 4346 we are, therefore, of the opinion that the orders of the fiscal court allowing to the overseers compensation or salaries for their services are void, and the court erred in dismissing appellant's petition.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded to the lower court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

TAYLOR v. ADAIR COUNTY.

(Filed January 4, 1905.)

1. County board of health—Health officer—Appointment—Action for services—Sufficiency of answer—In an action against the county by a county health officer for his services for one year in inspecting localities and persons thought to be infected with contagious diseases and for treating such diseases, an answer by the county denying, upon knowledge or information, that the plaintiff had been appointed health officer, or a member of the board of health, was an sufficient denial, as these boards are not required by statute to keep records of their proceedings.

2. Power of board to delegate its duties to health officer—The county board of health has not the power to delegate its duties to the county health officer in the matter of looking after epidemics of contagious diseases. It is to the county board and not to the health officer that is committed the duty of examining into these nuisances and conditions of filth and infection that tend to spread contagious diseases, and it must act as a board on each case or epidemic as it arises.

3. Fiscal court—Fixing compensation—The fiscal court of a county can not fix the compensation of a county health officer in advance of rendering the service as it can not then be known what service he may be required to render.

4. Petition—Necessary allegations—A petition for services by a county health officer which fails to show that the patients were not able and willing to pay for the service rendered them, or that they were indigent persons, or that any of them were treated in the county pest house or other place where they were confined, by order of the board of health, or that they were treated by order of the board of health, is demurrable.

J. F. Montgomery and W. W. Jones for appellant.

James Garnett, Jr., and Jas. Garnett for appellee.

Appeal from Adair Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant alleges in his petition, against appellee that he as a member of the county board of health of Adair county; was appointed health officer by that board, and that while so acting he rendered services to the county in one year in inspecting localities and persons thought to be affected with contagious diseases, and treated quite a number affected with smallpox, and some who had scarlet fever. He presented a bill amounting to $245 for the services, which the fiscal court refused to allow or pay.

The answer denied, upon knowledge or information, that appellant had been appointed health officer, or had been appointed a member of the board of health. This was a sufficient denial, because these boards are not required by statute to keep records of their proceedings. (Bardstown v. Nelson County, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1900.) Therefore, these acts, though official, are not presumed to be known of every one. It also denied that he rendered the services charged for, or that they were worth the sums charged. In addition, the defense was that prior to the time when appellant claims to have been appointed health officer, and to have rendered the services sued for, the fiscal court of Adair county had, by an order of court, fixed the salary of the health officer at $40 per annum, and that appellant accepted the appointment and rendered the services with knowledge of that fact, and had for a time acquiesced in it by accepting payments based on that allowance.

A demurrer having been overruled to the last-named plea, appellant declined to plead further, and his petition was dismissed, hence this appeal. The county's position is that as the salary or compensation of appellant was fixed before his term of office began, it could not be either increased or diminished during his term. (Constitution, section 161.) The statute (section 2060, Kentucky Statutes) reads: "Physicians appointed as health officers for cities, towns and counties shall receive reasonable compensation for their services, to be allowed by the councils, trustees or county (fiscal) courts of the cities, towns or counties, and to be paid as other city, town or county officers are paid, and such officers may be removed at any time by the local boards appointing them." * * *

County judges and treasurers are to be paid annual salaries, to be fixed at reasonable amounts by the fiscal courts. (Sections 1072, 984 Kentucky Statutes.) The fees allowed to certain officers as compensation in lieu of salaries are subject to the same constitutional limitation. (Bright v. Stone, Auditor, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 817.) But here it is not known what services may be rendered. They are of a nature that may vary considerably in value and extent in different years. Some years no services may be rendered. Again, an epidemic of smallpox or yellow fever might take all the health officer's time for a great part of a year. For that reason it seems that the legislature has not seen proper to require a salary to be fixed and paid to such officer, but that for such services as he may render he shall be paid reasonable compensation. That can not be determined in advance, if for no other reason, because their nature and extent are impossible to be known before the emergency happens calling for them. If it is intended to fix in advance the pay for such services, a reasonable schedule of rates might be adopted. A salary of $40, which should cover all possible services that may be required of the health officer in a year, while in some instances it might be enough, or even too much, yet in others it would be manifestly and grossly inadequate. The result must be, if it be allowed, to deter qualified physicians from accepting such appointments. In this way fiscal courts might overthrow the legislative provision in its practical application, by which it was intended that the treatment of these deadly contagions might be controlled or stamped out by the employment of skilled and competent physicians. The action of the fiscal court in attempting to so fix a salary in advance was not binding, under the circumstances shown, upon the health officer, for it was his duty to do what the law required of him, under direction of the board of health, in stamping out and preventing the spread of contagious diseases, and he has the right to claim adequate pay for his services, which the fiscal court must allow, if the services were in fact rendered as required by the law.

We are of the opinion, however, that while the demurrer should have been sustained to that defense, yet it should have been carried back to the petition in this case. The petition alleges that the county board of health when appointing appellant health officer gave him general authority and direction to look after epidemics of contagious and infectious diseases appearing in the county, and to make all necessary inspections and visitations called for by the situations that might arise. We are of opinion that the county board of health had not the power to delegate its duties in such matters, and that it could not, by an attempt to do so, create any right in the health officer that did not already exist. The powers given to these boards are extraordinary, seemingly justified by the most serious exigency affecting the public health. More than one person is required by statute to be appointed upon the board. The legislature was evidently unwilling to leave to one person the determination of such important and drastic measures as are given to the county boards. In the judgment and fidelity of a greater number acting together is the greatest security against abuse of extraordinary power. It is to the county board of health, not to the health officer, their creature and executive, that is committed the duty of examining into those nuisances and conditions of filth and infection that tend to spread the contagious diseases: to establish quarantines, and to bring the population of an infected or suspected community into prescribed treatment and disinfection. This power is given by the statute to the board, and it must act as a board on each case or epidemic, as it arises, determining the necessities of each situation from the facts then existing. (Sections 2055, 2057, Kentucky Statutes.) The petition shows on its face that this was not done in Adair county, but that appellant, acting alone under the deputation of the county board, undertook to determine all such matters, and for his services in so doing the bill sued on is in large part made up. For other services, waiting upon smallpox patients, he charges the county. There is nothing to show that the patients were not fully able and willing to pay for the services rendered them; nothing whatever to show that they were indigent persons; nothing to show that any of them were treated in the county pest house, or other place where they were confined by order of the board of health, and nothing to show that they were treated by direction of the county board of health. (Hudgins v. Carter Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1980.) For some of these charges there may be a right to recover. The circuit court should allow the petition to be amended, if it can be, so as to state a cause of action.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

KENTUCKY LIVE STOCK BREEDERS' ASSO'N, &c. v. MILLER, &c.

(Filed January 5, 1905.)

1. Indemnity—Promoting stock fair—Subscription to cover loss—Liability of subscribers—An action was brought by the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders' Association and the Citizens National Bank, which had advanced money to the association against the subscribers to the following paper: "The Kentucky State Fair, to be held by the Live Stock Breeders' Association during the week beginning September —, 1903, for the purpose of having the above described fair in or near the city of Owensboro, and of providing a fund to cover possible loss in giving said fair, the undersigned hereby subscribe the sums set opposite their names on condition that not less than — are subscribed. The loss, if any, be divided among the subscribers to the fund in proportion that each subscription bears to the whole amount subscribed." Held—That to the extent that the receipts of the association holding the fair at that point failed to pay the expenses thereof there was a deficit which in business parlance represented "a loss."

2. When liability attached—Condition precedent—It was not contemplated by the parties that the association should have to suffer judgment and sequestration of its property as a condition precedent to the liability of the subscribers on the obligation sued on.

3. Construction of writing—The paper sued on limits each subscriber's liability to a pro rata proportion of the total amount subscribed. No one guarantees the solvency of another, or that any other subscription will be paid. The association risked the solvency of each subscriber, and where any are insolvent the association will bear that loss.

4. Trading partnerships — Corporations—Ultra vires undertaking — The question as to whether a trading partnership or corporation who subscribed the paper is bound thereon, because the undertaking was contrary to the charter, or not within the original scope of the partnership, is not decided under the pleadings. If all the partners agreed to it or ratified it, and the association has thereby been induced to act upon it, between the copartners and the association it ought to be binding, and if a street railway induced the association to locate its fair at a certain point where it could get a monopoly of carrying visitors to and from the fair it would be liable.

40 KY. LIVE STOCK BREEDERS' ASSO'N, &O. V. MILLER, &O.

5. Joint action—Separate liability—Under Civil Code, section 26, persons severally liable upon the same contract may be included in the same action at the plaintiff's option.

6. Who are subscribers—Those who never became bound are not subscribers, and the pro rata liability of those who are bound will be measured without reference to those who escape because they were not bound.

J. A. Dean and W. O. Harris for appellants.

La Vega Clements, C. S. Walker, Miller & Todd and J. D. Atchison for appellees.

Appeal from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

To induce the holding of the annual fair of the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders' Association at or near the city of Owensboro for the year 1903, certain persons of that community gave to appellant association a writing, obligating the subscribers to make up any loss that might be sustained by the association. The paper, omitting signatures, is as follows: "The Kentucky State fair to be held by the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders' Association during the week beginning September —, 1903, for the purpose of having the above described fair in or near the city of Owensboro, and of providing a fund to cover possible loss in giving said fair, the undersigned hereby subscribe the sums set opposite their names on condition that not less than —— are subscribed. The loss, if any, to be divided among the subscribers to the fund in proportion that each subscription bears to the total amount subscribed."

This suit was brought by the Kentucky Live Stock Breeders' Association and by the Citizens National Bank, which had advanced money to the association upon assignment to it of the obligation first quoted, and against all the subscribers save two or three, one of whom was alleged to be dead and the other two insolvent. The petition setting out the interest and benefit to the subscribers, defendants, by the holding of the State Fair at Owensboro, charged that it was located and held at that point on the faith of the paper sued on, and that as a result the association had disbursed and expended in holding the fair the sum of $33,420.78, while its receipts had been but $21,594.49, leaving a deficit of $11,826.29. It was averred that some of the subscribers were corporations and others trading firms, whose subscriptions were being denied or questioned because not within the scope of their charter privileges or partnership enterprises; that others were insolvent; that at least one was claiming that he had not in fact signed nor authorized the signing of the agreement. Plaintiffs asked a reference to the commissioner and the adjustment of the several liabilities of the subscribers, and for judgment against each in the pro rata sum so found against him.

A demurrer was sustained to the petition as amended, and the action was dismissed by the court. In an opinion delivered by the learned chancellor who sat in the case it is disclosed that the court construed the writing sued upon to be a contract of indemnity against loss, several in nature, upon which no cause of action could be based until the obligee had actually sustained loss and had paid it. The petition disclosing that some part of the loss claimed was represented by the debt it owed the bank for borrowed money, and other parts by unpaid bills or accounts against the association, the trial court was of the opinion, and so held, that there was in fact no loss, inasmuch as it had not been definitely ascertained and actually paid. It was also thought by the trial court that a joint action in equity could not be maintained upon the obligation.

A very able and interesting discussion has been indulged by counsel concerning the nature of the obligation, whether it is a guaranty, a promise to pay or an indemnity. It seems to be conceded that if it be a guaranty or promise to pay, in the first instance, it is not necessary to show that the obligee had actually paid the liabilities incurred. On the other hand, it may be assumed that upon a contract of indemnity against loss the liability of the indemnitor is not complete till the indemnitee has sustained the loss, which includes its payment. Without tracing the lines of distinction between the classes of obligation, we come at once to determine the meaning of the words used by the parties to this agreement. The word "loss" is used twice in the paper. A fund is to be provided by the subscribers "to cover possible loss in giving said fair;" and "the loss, if any, to be divided among the subscribers to the fund in proportion that each subscription bears to the total amount subscribed." It is the presence of this word "loss" that alone suggests the idea of indemnity as determining the character of the paper. In seeking the meaning of the term, as intended by the parties, the etymology of the word will not be exclusively studied, but rather the situation and surroundings of the contracting persons. The obligors desired the appellant association to hold the State Fair at the city of Owensboro, in order to draw to that city the large and unusual crowds which it was believed the event would attract. These crowds were expected to expend considerable sums of money in the city, by which the merchants, street railway, transfer companies, and other business concerns, anticipated unusual profits and increase of income and business. All of the subscribers are alleged to have belonged to these classes, merchants and trading partnerships and corporations, and transfer and street railway companies doing business in Owensboro, Ky. On the other hand, the breeders' association evidently had misgivings as to the probability of its receipts from holding the fair at that point paying its expenses. To the extent that they did fail there would be a deficit. This deficit in business parlance represented "a loss." To induce the breeders' association to hold its fair at Owensboro, the subscribers agreed that they, to the extent of their subscriptions, would take the chance of there being a deficit of income over expenditures. So they agreed "to provide a fund to cover possible loss," that is, to cover the loss that might occur. Their subscriptions were not alone to pay back to the association money it paid out in conducting the fair over and above its income from the fair, but to provide a fund from which the "possible loss" was to be paid, in the first instance, if need be. It was not contemplated by the parties that the breeders' association should have to suffer judgments and sequestration of its property, or liquidation of its affairs, destruction of its credit, annihilation of its corporate existence, or total bankruptcy as a condition precedent to the liability of the subscribers on the obligation sued on. Just the opposite must have been in mind, as if the association should fail to make expenses by locating and holding its fair at Owensboro, it was intended that not it, but the subscribers to the extent indicated, should carry all the burden of the failure. The "fund" to be provided under the agreement was the aggregate of the subscriptions. It was not necessary, nor was it contemplated, that the subscriptions were to be paid in advance. On the contrary, the "loss," that is, the deficit of receipts apportioned to cost of conducting the fair, was to be made up by pro rata assessments on the subscriptions. The expression, "the loss, if any, to be divided among the subscribers to the fund in proportion that each subscription bears to the total amount subscribed," means nothing else.

There is a class of liabilities that do not entail loss unless and until they are paid. Contingent and inchoate liability for the debts or doings of another may be so classed. But where one in his own business had expended more than the business had produced, whether the expenditure represented capital invested or borrowed means, or property and labor bought upon the credit of the concern, the deficit is in fact and in commercial understanding a loss. If appellant association had borrowed all the money it expended it would be no more a loss than it is now. Or if it had been settled by an assessment upon its stockholders it would be the same thing. The fact is, the very contingency contemplated by the parties as a "possible" result of the venture has occurred. It follows that the undertaking of the subscribers to bear the failure to the extent indicated has become absolute.

The next question is, what is the extent of each subscriber's liability? The paper in terms limits it to a pro rata proportion of the total amount subscribed. No one guarantees the solvency of another, or that any other subscription will be paid. The appellant association risked the solvency of each subscriber, and where any are insolvent the association will bear that loss. The question whether all whose names appear on the paper as subscribers are in fact bound thereon is not yet fully presented. Some who are apparently bound may be able to show that they were never bound, because, for example, they did not execute the paper. Others may be held never to have been bound, because their undertaking was contrary to the purposes of their charter, as in cases of certain corporations, and the act would be, therefore, ultra vires. On what may on the face appear an ineffectual attempt to bind a trading partnership or corporation, may be shown by acts of estoppel to be binding. The street railway corporation, for example, may not have had authority generally to become a party to a scheme to raise a fund to indemnify some other corporation against loss in the conduct of the latter's business. Yet the street railway company could make a valid contract to increase its own business. If it induced the fair company to locate at a certain point where the railway company would get a monopoly practically of carrying to and from the fair grounds all the visitors attending the fair, and it got all the benefits obtainable under its contract, there is ample authority and undoubted principle for holding it liable on its undertaking, for it is not every ultra vires undertaking that is unen-forcible. So where a trading partnership signed the paper, it may or may not be invalid, for, although beyond the original scope of the partnership enterprise, still, if both or all the partners agreed to it, and ratified it, and the association has been induced to act upon it, as between the copartners and the association it ought to be binding, whether or not as a partnership liability, as a personal one against the individual members.

From what has been said the trial court can fix the liability or determine the nonliability of the putative subscribers. Those who never became bound are not subscribers, and the pro rata liability of those who are bound will be measured without reference to those who escape because they were never bound. Under the Civil Code of Practice (section 26) persons severally liable upon the same contract may be included in the same action at the plaintiff's option. The nature of this case presents circumstances of great complication, and other difficulties in the way of adequate relief at law, sufficiently indicated by the facts above recited, that makes it more appropriate that it should be determined and the relief apportioned and applied by a court of equity. (Pomperoy's Equity, sections 1420, 1421; O'Connor v. Henderson Bridge Co., 95 Ky., 643.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition as amended and for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

DEPPEN, &c. v. IMMOHR'S EX'OR.

(Filed January 10, 1905.)

Appeals—Death of appellant pending appeal—Decision without revivor—Effect—Where the appellant dies after his appeal has been filed in the appellate court and the appeal is decided in said court without an order of revivor, the decision of the appellate court is not void, but is erroneous, and the error can be corrected only in the Court of Appeals, and until so corrected is binding upon the parties and the lower court.

J. W. Clemmons and S. J. Boldrick for appellants.

H. H. Nettleroth and E. J. Bacon for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellee's testate, H. F. Immohr, Louisville Banking Co. and one Hess, in the year 1900, recovered a judgment in the lower court against these appellants for the amount of several notes, and the enforcement of a mortgage lien on the real estate of appellants for the satisfaction of same. They appealed from that judgment without executing a supersedeas bond, and before this court passed upon the case the appellees caused that judgment to be executed, and the land sold to satisfy their judgment.

This court in the year 1902 reversed that judgment, and declared the notes and mortgage void, except to the extent of $1,600, for the reasons stated in the opinion. (24 Ky. Law Rep., 1110.) When the mandate issued in that case was filed in the lower court the appellants learned for the first time that appellee's testate was dead. He died after the appeal referred to had been taken and perfected, but before the submission of the case for trial. The court and appellants were not informed of his death, and consequently the case was submitted and opinion rendered reversing without any suggestion of his death or revivor against his personal representative. After the filing of the mandate in the lower court appellants filed an amended petition making Drexler, the executor of Immohr, a party, and sought to revive the action against him for the purpose of carrying the reversal into effect by recovering from the estate of Immohr the value of the land of which they had been deprived. The appellee filed a demurrer to this amended and supplemental petition, which was sustained. In this amended pleading appellants stated the facts that no revivor was had in the Court of Appeals; that appellee Drexler was not a party to that appeal, and that H. F. Immohr died before the case was submitted in the Court of Appeals.

Appellee contends that this reversal was absolutely void as to him, and that it was the duty of the lower court to take notice of this fact, and to hold it ineffectual so far as appellee was concerned. The court so held. The appellants claim that this was error; that the reversal was not void, at most it was merely erroneous. The question at issue is, was the reversal by this court merely erroneous and irregular, or was it absolutely null and void? If only erroneous and irregular, it was the duty of the lower court to give it full faith and credence until vacated or modified by the court which rendered the decision. If it was void, the action of the lower court must be affirmed; if merely irregular and erroneous, reversed.

We have examined with care the able briefs of counsel and the authorities therein cited, and we are of the opinion that the contention of appellants is the correct one. The decisions in most of the States hold that the death of a party after appeal is granted, without any revivor against his personal representative, does not render the decision of the appellate court void, and many of them hold that it is not even error.

The case of Spalding v. Wathen, 7 Bush, 661, sustains our view of this question. In that case a negro man named "John," in the year 1858, sued Wathen for his freedom. The case was tried in the year 1863, and "John" was defeated. He then went into the army, and died at Paducah, Ky., in the year 1864. About eight months after his death the attorney who represented him, not knowing of his death, appealed his case to this court, which reversed that judgment and directed the lower court to grant John his freedom, which was done, and a judgment rendered by the lower court in his favor against Wathen for the value of his services from the time he brought his action. Upon this judgment an execution was issued and levied on the land of Wathen, which was sold.

Wathen then filed an action, alleging that he had just discovered the fact that John had died several months before the appeal of his case to this court, and there was no revivor therein, and that by reason thereof all the proceedings had in this court and in the lower court after the death of John were void. The lower court sustained Wathen, but on an appeal this court, in an opinion by Judge Lindsay, reversed the judgment, and said: "Unless the granting of the first appeal, the judgment of this court reversing the action of the court below, and the mandate of this court directing the subsequent proceedings in the lower court are void, we do not well see how the decision of the common pleas court can be sustained. The judgments of all courts of competent jurisdiction are binding upon the parties thereto until reversed or vacated in the manner prescribed by law, notwithstanding irregularities in the proceedings through which the same are obtained. The Union Circuit Court had jurisdiction of the persons and the subject-matter of the controversy between John and Wathen; and from the judgment of said court in that action an appeal to this court was authorized by express statute. The death of John after judgment in the circuit court, and before the appeal was prosecuted, did not take away from this court the right to entertain it. Regularly a personal representative should have been appointed and the appeal prosecuted in his name, but we are not prepared to say that the want of a personal representative renders void the appeal and all the proceedings had under the same."

In the same case, when deciding the fact that the want of a personal representative did not render void the appeal and the proceedings had thereunder, the court said: "Such a conclusion might be insisted upon with some degree of plausibility in cases of the death before judgment of the defendant in the court below, or of the appellee in this court, as in such cases there would be no person in esse upon whom a judgment in personam could be made to operate, nor whose title to property could be divested by a judgment in rem; but even this proposition is by no means free from doubt."

We agree that in that case it might have been argued with great plausibility that the rule might have been different if Wathen, the appellee, had died before the appeal was taken, for in such case this court would not have obtained jurisdiction of the appellee, Wathen. But the intimation of the court in that case, to the effect that it might be argued with plausibility that the rule therein applied might not apply to an appellee, because there would be no one in esse against whom the decision could operate. This was an expression of an opinion outside the case, and one of great doubt as therein expressed. If the reason given for the doubt, to wit, there being no one in esse against whom the decision could operate," is sound, and applicable to the case at bar, then it would conflict with many decisions of this court, for it has been universally held, which is conceded by appellee, that if either party to an appeal in this court dies after a submission of the appeal and before opinion rendered, that it does not even amount to an error, and that same is as valid and binding as if the parties had survived until after the final decision. The reason stated would have the effect to conflict with these cases, for in them there was "no one in esse at the time the decisions were rendered upon whom they could operate."

This court does not in the ordinary sense render judgments, but reviews the action of the lower court, and determines whether it was correct or erroneous. In our opinion the reason for the necessity of a revivor on an appeal is to give the parties an opportunity to be heard upon the question involved on the appeal. But when the court has once obtained jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, it may decide the case without giving either party a hearing, and its action would not be void, but would be flagrantly erroneous. The error could be corrected in this court only, but until so corrected the decision would be binding upon the parties and the lower court.

This court, in the case of Spalding v. Wathen, supra, after expressing the doubt of the applicability of the principle therein enunciated as applicable to appellees, quoted with approval the following language from an opinion in 1 J. J. M., 80: "Errors of fact or law may, and frequently do, occur in trials which can not be corrected by writ of error to this court. If, for instance, a judgment be rendered in favor of or against a feme covert suing or defending as a feme sole, or in favor of or against a dead man, which would be manifestly erroneous, as soon as the fact shall be made to appear the error could be corrected only by the court which rendered the judgment."

This answers the doubt expressed in the opinion, and shows conclusively that the rule applies equally to appellant or appellee, for it says "or a dead man," but the court continues to settle the doubt as follows: "John's death, if known, should have been taken advantage of in this court by a plea under the provisions of section 898 of the Code. As it was not known to Wathen prior to the reversal of the judgment appealed from, and as the judgment of reversal upon its face was regular, and its validity not a question which could be properly inquired into in a collateral proceeding, the only means by which Wathen could obtain relief against it was by an application to this court, upon the discovery of John's death, for the correction of its judgment, for the reason as held in the opinion cited above. It was an error which 'could be corrected (if at all) only by the court which rendered the judgment.' This conclusion is fortified by the sixth subsection of section 576 (now 518) of the Civil Code, which provides that the death of one of the parties before judgment shall be ground for the vacation of the judgment by the court in which it was rendered. It would have been an act of folly for the legislature to have enacted that the existence of a fact should constitute valid ground for the vacation of a judgment, which fact of itself rendered such judgment absolutely null and void."

The following authorities tend to support the principle above stated: Hopkins v. Hopkins, 91 Ky., 312; section 518 of the Code, subsection 6; Freeman on Judgments, sections 140 and 1153. The appellee cites as sustaining his position 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1; 83 Ky., 898; 89 Ky., 580, and 24 Ky. Law Rep., 704. These cases in effect decide that in the event of the death of a party to an appeal before submission it is necessary and proper to revive against the personal representative of the decedent. This is not in conflict, but in harmony, with the conclusion we have reached, that the revivor is necessary and proper to make the decision perfect or free from error, but even without a revivor the decision is erroneous only, and not void.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded to the lower court for proceedings consistent herewith.

FUQUA, SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION v. HAGER, AUDITOR.

(Filed January 10, 1905.)

School fund—Taxation of foreign insurance companies—Money paid into the treasury by foreign insurance companies on account of the tax of $2 upon each $100 of premiums collected by them is no part of the annual tax of 22 cents on each $100 of value of real or personal estate or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation, and is, therefore, not embraced by subdivision 5 of section 4370, Kentucky Statutes, specifying what shall constitute the school fund of the State.

J. H. Hazelrigg and N. B. Hays for appellant.

Lewis McQuown, E. H. Brown, Jr., and H. R. Prewitt for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

By the statutes of this State foreign insurance companies are required on the 1st day of July in each year to return to the auditor of public accounts a statement under oath of all premiums received since their last report and at the same time pay into the State treasury a tax of $2 upon each $100 of premiums received. The superintendent of public instruction conceiving that a part of the funds arising from this tax should be paid into the school fund, brought this action against the auditor, charging that something over $180,000 was due on this account to the school fund for the present fiscal year, and praying judgment therefor. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition and the superintendent appeals.

By section 4019, Kentucky Statutes, an annual tax of 50 cents is levied upon each $100 of value of all property assessed for taxation, 22½ cents for the ordinary expenses of the government, 22 cents for the support of the common schools, 5 cents for the use of the sinking fund, and one-half of one cent for the agricultural and mechanical college. In section 4370, Kentucky Statutes, in specifying what shall constitute the school fund, after other provisions not here material, are the following:

"5th. The annual tax of 22 cents on each $100 of value of all real and personal estate and corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation.

"6th. Such portions of fines, forfeitures and licenses which may be realized by the State as the amount of taxes for common school purposes bears to the whole State tax other than for the benefit of the Agricultural and Mechanical College."

The money paid into the treasury by the foreign insurance companies on account of the tax of $2 upon each $100 of premiums collected by them is no part of the annual tax of 22 cents on each $100 of value of real or personal estate or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation, but is an entirely different tax, and, therefore, subdivision 5 has no application. But it is earnestly argued that this tax is included by the words "fines, forfeitures and licenses," in subsection 6, and, therefore, the portion of the tax indicated in this subsection should be paid into the school fund. It is not contended that the tax is a fine or forfeiture, but it is insisted that it is in effect a license tax, and is, therefore, included within the statute. But it will be observed that the statute does not use the expression "license taxes;" its language is "licenses."

The statute provides for a number of licenses, such as for retailing liquors, selling playing cards, bowie knives; licenses to pawn brokers, bowling alleys, circuses, oil depots or wagons, standing a stud, jack or bull, peddling, rectifying, etc. In all these cases the license must be taken out in advance, and is required to be then paid for. A penalty is imposed if the business is carried on without license. The word "licenses" in the statute before us would aptly refer to this fund, but the fund paid in by the insurance companies is paid in at the end of the year, and is directly a tax upon their receipts or income; and while it is in one sense a license tax we are satisfied it was not contemplated by the legislature when it used the word "licenses" in the statute above quoted. This mode of taxing foreign insurance companies has been in vogue in this State for about sixty years, and during all that time no part of the tax had ever been paid to the school fund. This has been the rule followed under several revisions of the statutes and was necessarily familiar to the legislature, and if it had contemplated a change of a rule so well understood it must be presumed it would have used language more clearly indicating such an intention. The present act was passed on July 6, 1898, and has been so construed by all the departments of the government from that time until the present controversy arose. The contemporaneous construction of the statute through several administrations is not without force. And besides all this, the present revenue act was passed by the general assembly in the year 1902, and in fixing the amount of the school tax and the tax for the general expense fund presumably the legislature acted in view of the construction of the statute then in force. As shown by the last auditor's report there was a considerable deficiency in the general expense fund, and if the money were now taken from the treasury and put into the school fund, as sought by appellant, the fiscal affairs of the State would be put in inextricable confusion and there would be a large deficiency in the general fund, perhaps for the whole time not less than a million dollars. It can not be presumed that the legislature in fixing the tax for the general expense of the government intended to fix an amount so inadequate as appellant's contention would require us to conclude.

Judgment affirmed.

COWPER v. WEAVER'S ADM'R, &c.

(Filed January 10, 1905.)

Judicial sale—Real estate—Purchaser—Refusal to execute bond—Failure of court to confirm bid—Resale—Liability of first bidder for deficit—Where a sale of real estate is made by the commissioner of the court under a decree of the court, the purchaser is only a preferred bidder until his bid is accepted by the court by confirming the sale, and when the purchaser refused to execute bond and the sale was reported to the court, which decided not to confirm it, but treated it as though it had not been made, and ordered a resale thereof, if upon a resale the land shall sell for less than was offered by the first purchaser, he can not be held liable for the deficiency.

Hendrick & Miller and J. C. Hodge for appellant.

C. H. Wilson, J. W. Bush and C. C. Grassham for appellees.

Appeal from Livingston Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

D. B. Weaver died a resident of Livingston county, and his administrator brought this suit to sell the land owned by him for the payment of debts and for the settlement of his estate. At the April term, 1903, a judgment was entered directing a sale of the real estate. The sale was made on June 1, and at it appellant, R. B. Cowper, bid in lots 67, 68, 69, 70, and a part of lot 17, for $265. After the sale he seems to have concluded that the title of the intestate to the land was not good, and refused to execute a bond for the price. The commissioner on September 9 filed his report of sale, stating that Cowper had purchased the property at the sale and had refused to execute a sale bond. On this report, on September 25, the court, without taking any proceedings against Cowper or confirming the sale, entered the following order: "It appearing to the court by report of the master commissioner, W. I. Clarke, that he sold to R. B. Cowper lots 67, 68, 69, 70 and 71, and a part of out lot No. 17, as appears on the town plat of Smithland, Ky., and said Cowper having failed and refused to execute bonds therefor, and said fact being made known to this court as aforesaid, the said commissioner is here directed to treat said sale to Cowper as if it had not been made and re-advertise said property for sale and sell same in the full way and manner set out and directed in the judgment filed herein, and will in all respects comply with said judgment in taking bond, making report and so forth, and so on, as herein set out, and this cause is continued."

The resale was made on November 2, 1893, and at it the property brought the sum of $32. Thereupon at the December term of the court the court awarded a rule against Cowper to show cause, if any he could, why he should not pay the difference between the bid made by him and the bid made at the second sale, which the court then confirmed. Appellant Cowper in response to this rule set out that the intestate had no title to the property, and also relied on various irregularities in the proceedings. He also set up the order above quoted by which the sale to him was ordered to be treated as a nullity, and pleaded it in bar of the rule in connection with the subsequent orders of the court confirming the second sale and conveying the property to the purchaser thereat. In Makeson v. Brawn, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 584, the commissioner sold a tract of land and the purchaser failing to execute bond re-advertised the property and made a second sale at the next county court. He then reported to the court both the sales. The court confirmed the second sale and ordered the property conveyed to the purchaser. After this a rule was taken out against the purchaser at the first sale to show cause why he should not pay the deficiency. It was held that he was not liable. The court said: "While an accepted bidder at a judicial sale who fails to comply with his bid may, by proper proceedings, be required to pay the damage resulting from such failure, which would include the difference between the bid, if any, and the amount realized on the final sale, if the property sold for less on that sale than at the former sale, yet where the commissioner has elected to treat the bid as a nullity, and has proceeded to advertise and resell the property, and the second sale has been confirmed without objection, it is then too late to proceed against the first purchaser for failure to comply with the terms of the sale."

The commissioner in making the sale is the agent of the court. His powers are limited by the orders of the court. He has no power to treat a sale as a nullity, and in the case cited the judgment of the court turned not on the action of the commissioner, but on the order of the court confirming the action of the commissioner, for the act of the agent amounted to nothing.

until it was ratified by the court. The commissioner is simply ordered to sell the property. He is without power to release the purchaser from his obligation. The liability of the purchaser depends upon the action of the court. In the case at bar the court ordered the sale to be treated as a nullity; he directed the land to be resold, and when that sale was made he confirmed it and directed the property to be conveyed to the purchaser. The purchaser at the first sale was only a preferred bidder until his bid was accepted by the court by confirming the sale. The contract was not complete, and when the court decided not to confirm the sale, but to treat it as though it had not been made, the purchaser stood simply as any other person who makes a proposition which is not accepted. When the purchaser fails to execute his bond it may be that the parties prefer another sale, thinking that the property will sell for more, and in this event the court may so order without taking any proceedings against the purchaser. But if it is desired to hold the purchaser, then his bid must be accepted by the court, and if he still refuses to give the bond a resale may be ordered or the purchaser may be dealt with as in cases of contempt, and in this state of case, if the land on the second sale sells for more than on the first, the surplus will belong to the purchaser. The court can not, however, treat the sale as a nullity and thus keep the surplus, if the land on the second sale sells for more than on the first, and at the same time hold the purchaser responsible for the deficiency if on the second sale it sells for less.

In Shirley v. Shewmaker, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 452, the first sale was confirmed by the court and a rule was taken against the purchaser to show cause why he should not give bond, which was made absolute. Brassfield v. Burgees, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 660, is in effect the same, and so is Tyler v. Guthrie, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 693. But in none of the cases is the court allowed to treat the sale as a nullity and still proceed to hold the purchaser liable.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to discharge the rule against appellant.

WHITT V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Criminal law—Evidence—Impeachment of witness—Under section 596 of the Code, which applies to criminal trials as well as civil, a party introducing a witness may impeach him by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony, but such evidence must be limited in its effect upon its impeachment of the witness, and in this prosecution the failure of the trial court to admonish the jury that testimony tending to prove that one of the prosecuting witnesses had made statements different upon the examining trial to those testified to by him upon the trial in the circuit court, should be considered solely as affecting his credibility and not as substantive testimony against the accused, was error.

A. F. Byrd for appellant.

N. B. Hays and D. D. Sublett for appellee.

Appeal from Magoffin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant, charged with the murder of Willie Reed, was convicted of manslaughter. There were a number of eyewitnesses, the weight of whose testimony seems to show a case of justifiable homicide. Only two witnesses gave testimony prejudicial to the accused, and they were so impeached as to raise not unreasonably a serious doubt of their story. In addition to them, the prosecution introduced one Clarence Harper, also an eyewitness, whose testimony showed clearly that appellant shot in his necessary self-defense. On cross-examination he was asked if he did not on the examining trial before the county judge testify to a materially different version of the affair, and if he had not then testified that appellant ran up to deceased and shot him while he was walking away from a fight he had been engaged in with Andy Whitt, brother of appellant, and Bud Brown. Harper denied having so testified. The witnesses were then introduced by the Commonwealth, who proved that they were present at the examining trial and heard Harper's testimony, and that he had then testified as last indicated. The court was asked to admonish the jury that the testimony was admitted solely as affecting the credibility of Harper as a witness, and not at all as substantive evidence against the accused. The court refused to so instruct or admonish the jury, which was error. Unless the two prosecuting witnesses first named, Burgett and wife, were corroborated, it looks like the case of the prosecution had failed. If, then, it were made to appear that another eyewitness had seen the occurrence as those two did, it was a most material point for the prosecution. The admission of the evidence showing that Harper had so testified on another trial, without admonition to the jury of the legal effect of such evidence, might have been construed by the jury as substantiating Burgett and wife's testimony. But when the court expressly declined to limit it to that effect, it went to the jury impressed with what was equivalent to an affirmation by the court that it was substantive evidence as to how the killing occurred.

Under section 596 of the Code of Practice, which applies to criminal trials as well as to civil, a party introducing a witness may impeach him by showing that he has made statements different from his present testimony. But such impeaching evidence must of necessity be limited in its effect to the impeachment of the witness, as otherwise it would result in admitting evidence of what one said out of court, when maybe he was not under oath. (Champ v. Commonwealth, 2 Met., 17; Mosely v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1811; Loving v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky., 511.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with direction to award appellant a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

SMITH'S GUARDIAN v. HOLTHEIDE.

(Filed January 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Former appeal—Res judicata—In this action by an infant and its statutory guardian to recover certain mense profits growing out of a house and lot, the petition averring that the real estate descended to the infant as the only child and heir at law of its mother and that his father becam entitled to the use of one-third of it for life, it was further averred that appellee, his grandmother, brought a suit in the Jefferson Circuit Court against the infant and his father to recover the real estate mentioned, upon the alleged ground that she had furnished the money to pay for the property with the understanding that the property should be conveyed to her, which action was decided in favor of appellant by the Court of Appeals, which court directed that the action be dismissed, which was done. The accounting in this action being for rents of this property, the defense being the same claim set up in appellant's former action, the plea of res judicata interposed by appellees was properly sustained.

2. Attorney's fee—The claim of appellants for an attorney's fee in this action was properly rejected. Whatever may have been the rule anciently, by our present statute the attorney's fee allowed to be taxed in favor of the successful party in cases involving the title to land is all that can be recovered in a case like the one at bar.

Win. Furlong and John Roberts for appellant.

Wilson & Gifford for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This action was instituted in the lower court by the appellant, Frederick K. Smith, an infant, and the Louisville Trust Co., his statutory guardian, against the appellee, Eliza Holtheide, to recover two-thirds of the mesne profits upon a certain house and lot in the city of Louisville, described in the petition, of which he claims to have been wrongfully deprived of the possession by appellee from March 1, 1899, to November 1, 1903.

It was in substance averred in the petition that the real estate in question descended to the infant as the only child and heir at law of his mother, Lula Smith, who died in 1899, and that his father, R. T. Smith, Jr., became entitled to the use for life of one-third in value of the property. It was further averred in the petition that the appellee, who was the mother of Lula Smith, and is, therefore, the grandmother of the infant appellant, in September, 1901, brought suit in the Jefferson Circuit Court against appellant and his father to recover the real estate mentioned, upon the alleged ground that the property had been paid for by her through her daughter, Lula Smith, then Lula Holtheide, and with the understanding that the title to the property would be conveyed appellee by the vendors, but that without her knowledge or consent the daughter caused the deed thereto to be made to herself; that the recovery sought of the property by appellee in that action was resisted by the infant and his guardian and also by his father, R. T. Smith, Jr., and they by answer denied her right to the property and alleged ownership in themselves, notwithstanding which it was adjudged by the lower court that appellee was entitled to the same, and it was given her. Thereupon appellants took an appeal from the judgment depriving them of the property, and upon the hearing of the appeal it was decided by this court that the judgment giving appellee the property was erroneous, and consequently reversed and remanded the cause, with directions to the lower court to dismiss appellee's petition, which was accordingly done. (Smith's Guardian, &c. v. Holtheide, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 125.)

The accounting demanded by the infant appellant in this action is for the rents covering the time intervening between the death of his mother and the determination of the controversy over the title to the property in the Court of Appeals, and in addition an attorney's fee of $500, which the infant was compelled to pay his attorney for his services rendered in the former case in the lower court and Court of Appeals. The answer of appellee denied the claim of appellant for an attorney's fee and rents, except to the amount of $275, rents collected between the date of the decision in the former action of the lower court giving her the property and the date of the filing in that court of the mandate of this court depriving her of it; but it is averred in the answer that she should be credited upon the $275 of rents with certain taxes and insurance paid by her upon the property during that time, amounting to $114.69. The answer, by way of counterclaim, further seeks the recovery of the money claimed to have been paid by the appellee for the house and lot conveyed her daughter, Lula Smith, and which this court in the former action held to have been a gift to her daughter. Appellants, by reply, interposed the plea of res judicata to the last claim, which the lower court sustained.

The evidence heard upon the trial conclusively showed that the infant appellant and his father were living on the property with the appellee from the death of Lula Smith until the time of the decision by the lower court of the action brought by appellee to recover the property. Appellants appealed from that judgment without superseding it, and voluntarily left the property and remained out of its use until the mandate of this court reversing that judgment was entered in the lower court. During this time the appellee collected $275 of rents upon the property and expended thereon in taxes, insurance and repairs $114.69, as fully shown by the evidence. We think the court properly sustained the plea of res judicata, as the same demand set forth by the counterclaim was settled and rejected by this court in the former action. We also think the lower court properly rejected the claim for an attorney's fee set up by appellants. Whatever may have been the rule of law anciently, by our present statute the attorney's fee allowed to be taxed in favor of the successful party in cases involving the title to land is all that can be recovered in a case like the one at bar. We are also of opinion that the instruction given by the court presented the entire law of the case after eliminating, as was done, all false, immaterial and unsupported issues.

The instruction was as follows: "The court instructs the jury to find for the plaintiff a sum equal to two-thirds of the difference between $275, the amount of rent collected by the defendant from the property involved herein, and the amount the jury believe from the evidence was reasonably expended by defendant during the time she collected said rent, for taxes, insurance and repairs on said property, and commissions for collecting said rent, this latter amount not to exceed the sum of $114.69, the amount claimed by defendant to have been expended by her for said taxes, insurance, repairs and commissions. The jury may allow interest on the sum found by them from November 1, 1908."

Under this instruction the jury returned a verdict in appellee's favor for $106.85, which was proper. We are further of opinion that the court did not err in overruling the motions of appellant and appellee respectively for a new trial.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed on both the original and cross appeal.

LOUISVILLE RAILWAY CO. v. DeGORE.

(Filed January 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Affidavit for continuance—Grounds for new trial—A motion for a new trial in this action upon the ground that appellee made an affidavit for a continuance on the ground that an absent witness would swear to certain facts, if present, when after the trial was over appellant learned that the witness would have sworn to the reverse, was properly overruled in view of the ruling of this court in Gibson v. Sutton, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 868, where it is held that after admitting what an absent witness would prove as set out in an affidavit, it can not be seriously contended that a new trial should be granted after an adverse verdict was rendered on the ground that the witness would have made statements different from those recited in the affidavit, if the witness had been present.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh and R. L. Greene for appellant.

Edwards & Ogden, Loraine Mix and Sam D. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment for $4,000 in favor of appellee on account of alleged injuries she sustained by reason of the negligent management and operation of one of appellant's cars by its agents and servants in charge.

In her petition she alleged, in substance, that the employes in charge of the car brought it to a stop on the west side of Sixth street for the purpose of allowing her to alight, and that while she was attempting to get off the appellant's agents and servants in charge of and operating the car wrongfully, recklessly, carelessly and negligently put the car in motion, thereby throwing appellee with great force to the street; that by reason of her fall she was painfully and severely bruised and injured about her body and limbs, and suffered great mental and physical pain and anguish; that her hip and left limb were so bruised and injured that she would forever be lame; that her left lung was so injured that she suffered pain continuously, and frequent hemorrhages resulted therefrom.

The appellant controverted the petition and plead contributory negligence on her part, which was denied by appellee. The proof, without contradiction, shows that early on the morning of June 4, 1903, appellee fell on the street in alighting from one of appellant's cars at the crossing of Sixth and Market streets. Appellant's evidence conduces to show that her fall was caused by her own negligence in attempting to alight before the car had come to a stop, and that her injuries were only slight. Appellee's evidence tended to show that the car had stopped, but at the moment of alighting was suddenly started, which caused her to fall or be thrown to the street, and that her injuries were very severe, and permanent. The grounds presented for a new trial were few:

1st. That the verdict was flagrantly against the evidence.

2d. The damages awarded were excessive.

3d. The court erred in refusing a new trial on the ground that the affidavit of appellee for a continuance stated that one Dolan, an absent witness, would swear, if present, to certain facts, when after the trial was over appellant had learned that Dolan, if he had been present, would have sworn precisely the reverse of the statements contained in the affidavit.

This court in the case of Gibson v. Sutton, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 868, settled the last proposition against the appellant. In that case this court said: "And certainly it can not be seriously contended that, after admitting that an absent witness would prove the facts recited in an affidavit for a continuance in order to secure a trial, after an adverse verdict a new trial would be granted on the ground that the absent witness would have made statements different from those recited in the affidavit if he had been present."

Appellant admits this to be the rule under ordinary circumstances, but says that it should not be applied in this case for the reason that appellee knew when she swore to the affidavit for a continuance that Dolan would not make the statements as stated by her. If this were true, appellant's position would be correct. Such fraudulent practice and conduct should have been condemned by the court, and no judgment obtained in such manner should be permitted to stand. A party obtaining a judgment by such fraudulent conduct and impositions should not be permitted to reap any benefit therefrom. But the evidence on this point is overwhelming that appellee was entirely innocent of any wrongful or fraudulent conduct in the matter. The contention of appellee was that the car was negligently put in motion while she was alighting therefrom, and by reason thereof she was precipitated into the street, and injured. Appellant contends that she negligently attempted to alight from the car before it was stopped, and by reason thereof she was thrown to the street. Both parties introduced evidence tending to prove their respective versions. It was the province of the jury to weigh the evidence and determine upon which side the preponderance of the evidence is, and the jury in this case found it on the side of appellee. As to the extent of appellee's injuries, this is a more complicated and difficult question.

Appellee, her mother, and three ladies, who lived near neighbors and saw appellee almost daily, stated that from the time of her injury up to the time of trial, a period of about seven months, she suffered intense pains in the back on the left side of the spine and in the left hip; that she had not, during that period, been able to labor or care for herself, but was confined to her bed during most of that time, under the treatment of physicians. They, with other witnesses, proved that prior to her injuries appellee had been in good health, and labored daily for the support of herself and mother. The two physicians first called to see her testified in substance that appellee complained of many pains and much suffering, but could not detect the cause of the pains; that it was reported by appellee and her family that she had repeated hemorrhages; that they were shown the blood said to have been discharged by her, and that from its red and frothy appearance it looked as if it might have come from the lungs, but that they could not understand, nor detect, the cause of it.

Two other physicians followed them in the treatment of her. Both of these stated that they had seen the blood which was reported to have been ejected by appellee. One of the two physicians stated that he was present on one occasion when she had a hemorrhage. They gave it as their opinion that from the appearance of the blood it emanated from the lungs. They also testified that she claimed to suffer excruciating pains at the places located by the other physicians. They made repeated examinations and could not detect the direct cause of the pains, but were of the opinion, from examination and her appearance, that she suffered as she claimed. They found the left hip and limb slightly smaller and less firm than the other. One of the physicians, Dr. Samuels, gave it as his opinion that it was very probable that one of her ribs had been fractured near where it was attached to the spinal column, and that it had ruptured or torn the pleura, the description of which, in the language of the physician, is as follows: "The pleura is the thing that covers the lungs, a thin membrane; it also covers the chest wall, and where it is injured or torn it adheres to the structures thereabout, and those adhesions remain throughout life, and that may result in a chronic form of neuralgia, a painful condition."

"Q. Were the symptoms at that point such as to indicate that condition of affairs?"

"A. Yes, sir. That is, she had a pain on inspiration and pain on expiration. At least she complained of pain on inspiration and expiration. I determined that by making her take a very long breath. When she was breathing normally she did not complain of pain, but on taking a very deep inspiration, so as to bring the auxiliary ribs into play, it was painful, and she had the same pain in the same region that I pressed."

If appellee was not malingering, she is entitled to all that she recovered. The jury heard and saw all the witnesses and the appellee, and they were in a better position to judge of the fact whether her injuries and sufferings were real, or whether she was only feigning.

The judgment is affirmed.

ANNIS, &c. v. FERGUSON, &c.

(Filed January 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Fraud and deceit—Rescission—Appellee inserted an advertisement in a newspaper for the sale of land and a house and lot, and appellant seeing the advertisement and desiring to buy such property as it was represented to be, went with appellee to see the place, and after showing her what he represented as the garden and outbuildings, etc., belonging to the premises, took her to the house, which was occupied by a tenant and which was locked, the tenants being absent. He represented to her that the house was in good condition on the inside and well finished, and that the schoolhouse was only a short distance away (indicating a nearby house as the schoolhouse), and that there were no negro families living nearby, etc., and she paid the money to the attorney who drew the deed, who was to keep it until some liens were released, when the remainder was to be paid to appellee. Held—That appellant finding out the next day after the purchase of the property that the tenants were negroes; that the garden and other places pointed out as belonging to the premises did not belong to it; that the house indicated as the schoolhouse was not the schoolhouse, but that it was a mile further away; that the adjacent property owner was a negro, and that the property did not descend as it was represented to have done by appellee, it was error for the trial court to adjudge that the money be paid to appellee, the appellant is entitled to have the sale rescinded.

Turner & Turner, Wm. Carroll and N. C. Cureton for appellants.

R. D. Jackson and H. K. Bourne for appellees.

Appeal from Henry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee, M. H. Ferguson, wishing to sell a tract of fifty-three acres of land lying near Jericho, Ky., and a town lot near by, but not adjoining, published in the Henry County Local the following advertisement:

"FARM FOR SALE.

"Fifty-five acres at Jericho, Ky. All in grass except fifteen acres. Some of it has not been plowed for sixty years. Good five-room frame house; two barns; other outbuildings; two good wells; good pool; nice young orchard, grape arbor, etc.; on railroad and turnpike, in fine community, near school, etc. This farm must be sold. It shall go at $950; it is easily worth $1,500.

"Call on or address me at Lockport, Ky.

"M. H. FERGUSON."

Appellant, E. M. Annis, saw the advertisement, and desiring to buy such a property for a home, arranged with Ferguson to go with him to look at the property on Sunday, October 11, as they returned from church. They first looked at the fifty-three acres of land, and then came back to the lot to look at it, and the house. When they got close to a hog pen they stopped and he said it was a good piece of land, and would bring anything she wanted to put on it. Next they went into the yard. She asked him about the well, and he said it was a good well, pointing it out to her. She asked him about the garden, and he said: "Can't you see the nice green things growing in it. You know it is a good garden." He then tried to get in the house, but it was locked, as the tenants were absent. She then asked how it was fixed on the inside, telling him that she did not want to make any repairs on the house, but wanted to move right in. He said the rooms were all celled with nice ceiling except the walls of one room, and the floors were nice upper and lower, good bed rooms above, and he wished she could get in so she could see how nice he had it fixed inside. She asked if there were any negro neighbors, saying that she wanted property located in a white neighborhood. He said that there were but three negro families living any way near there, and they lived way down the railroad. She asked him how about the school, saying that she had a little girl to send to school, and would not buy property located away from a school building. He pointed out a house about a quarter of a mile away, and said that was the schoolhouse.

On the following Tuesday the parties met at New Castle, Ferguson having said to her that he had several other offers for the property and would not wait any longer than that to close up the trade. When they met there the lawyer whom Mrs. Annis employed to examine the title reported that the title to the fifty-three acres was all right, but that he could find no title to the house and lot except a deed from Jacob Lieber to Ferguson. Ferguson said that Lieber inherited the property from an old aunt and was her only heir at law. The lawyer told Mrs. Annis that he did not know about this, and if she took the property she would take the risk, but that Ferguson looked like an honest man. She then said she would take the property on his statement, and the lawyer drew the deed, which Ferguson took home to be signed and acknowledged by his wife. This was done at once, and the deed was returned to the attorney, Mrs. Annis giving the attorney her check for $950. On Tuesday evening she and her husband returned to New Castle and got the deed from the attorney. They stayed at New Castle that night, and Friday morning went out to look at the property. When they got there Mrs. Annis knocked, and a negro woman opening the door, asked for the lady of the house. The woman replied that she was the lady of the house. Mrs. Annis then told her of her purchase of the property, and said that she wished to examine it. The woman invited her in, and she found the interior of the house different from what it was represented. There were two rooms below, with a loft above, and a kitchen. The floors were rough, and the only ceiling on the walls was heavy paper tacked on the studding. There was no ceiling above. Mrs. Annis then said something about the well, and the woman told her that the well was not on the lot, and neither was the cabbage patch or garden or hog pen, but that these belonged to a negro named Reed, who owned all the land adjoining the lot on three sides, the situation being shown in the following plat:

When Ferguson was there with her he told her the lot contained an acre or an acre and a half, and he also told her that the statement in the advertisement that there were two barns was a mistake. The negro woman says that after Mrs. Annis examined the house she told her that with a little fixing up she could make it a good house and that she wanted possession by the first of the month, when she would ship her goods down and take possession. Mrs. Annis denies this, and says that she would then have gone back to New Castle and sought a rescission of the contract, but her husband, who was with her, refused to take her, saying that they had gone too far and could not get out of it. They then went on to Eminence and stayed all night. The next morning, Saturday, they returned home, and on Sunday Mrs. Annis started with her son-in-law to New Castle, trying to reach there before the banks opened Monday morning, and stop her attorney from paying over the money. There were some liens on the property, and the agreement was that the attorney was to first pay these off, and then pay the balance of the money over to Ferguson. When they reached New Castle he had paid off the two liens, but had not paid over the balance of the money to Ferguson, amounting to something like $600. Ferguson met her there, and she demanded of him to rescind the trade because he had sold her property that he did not own and had misled her as to the condition of the house and the situation of the property. The house which he pointed out to her was not the schoolhouse. The schoolhouse was a mile and a quarter away. Jacob Lieber did not inherit the property from an old aunt, nor was he the sole heir at law. Ferguson refused to rescind the trade, and the attorney declining to pay over the money against the orders of Mrs. Annis, he filed this suit to recover the amount, and on final hearing the court entered a judgment in his favor, from which she appeals.

The evidence leaves no doubt that the property was not as represented by Ferguson. He led Mrs. Annis to understand that the well was on the lot which he sold her. He pointed out the things growing in the garden, and referred to the hog pen, thus necessarily leading her to understand that she was buying the strip of ground on which the well, garden and hog pen were located, and this strip when added to the lot itself would make about an acre and a half. He had advertised fifty-five acres of land for sale, and as it was not claimed that there were more than fifty-three acres in the other tract, she had a right to understand that there was at least an acre and a half in the lot. He had advertised that there were two wells on the property. There was one on the fifty-three acres, and if the well which he showed her was not on the lot, it was incumbent on him to tell her so when he undertook to correct the other error which he said the editor had made in the printed advertisement. The fact that the house was occupied by a negro family, and that another negro owned the land all around the lot, with his garden and hog pen right by it, and owned the well which was pointed out to her, were all carefully concealed from her. The finishing of the house on the inside was also not what it was represented to be, and a house was pointed out to her as the schoolhouse which was a mile from the schoolhouse. Few persons would have bought the property if the real facts had been made known to them, and it is hard to believe that Ferguson did not know this, and, therefore, misled the woman as he did. But, however this may be, it was incumbent on him to know that his statements to her were in substance true, and if he in fact misled her by assertions which he did not know to be true, and which he made without taking care to inform himself, the sale can not be permitted to stand. There is no effort to show that his statement as to Jacob Lieber's being the only heir was correct, and the evidence fails to show any such title in Lieber or Ferguson as a vendee should be required to accept.

It was held by the learned circuit judge that the sale must be permitted to stand because Mrs. Annis, after learning from the negro woman of the condition of the house and premises, demanded possession by the first of the month, and said she wanted to move in and get straightened up before cold weather. 1 Bigelow on Frauds, 436, is relied on: "Any defrauded party to a contract has but one election to rescind the same. If he once determines his election it is determined forever. Hence, if it be shown that he has at any time knowledge of the fraud, and either by express words or by unequivocal acts confirmed the contract, his election is irrevocable."

We do not see that this principle should be applied. It is applied where the purchaser pays the price after he has knowledge of the fraud, or if he takes possession of the property thereafter, or does other unequivocal acts, showing that he intends to stand by the contract. Nothing of that sort was done here. If we accept as true the testimony of the negro woman, and disregard the testimony of Mrs. Annis, as to the conversation between them, still the proof is not sufficient, and the fact that something of the same tenor was said by her husband in her presence at Eminence that night is also insufficient, for her husband was under the impression that she had no right to rescind the contract, and it would seem that Mrs. Annis herself was in doubt as to her rights on the subject. An election to be binding must be made with knowledge of the legal rights of the person, or at least after a reasonable opportunity to learn his rights. While Mrs. Annis was at the house and talking to the negro woman about giving her possession, she had not learned that the well was not on her property, nor about the garden or hog pen. She had not learned about the schoolhouse, nor does it seem that she had then learned about the negroes owning the land on three sides of the lot. She had not then learned about the weakness of Lieber's title. She did not see the woman any more, and she never took possession of the property, but, on the contrary, she had a meeting with Ferguson on the following Monday, in which her position was clearly disclosed to him and a rescission demanded. She did not mislead him in any way. The statements relied on were made to strangers, who had no interest in the matter, and before she understood all the facts or was informed as to her legal rights.

Although she accepted the deed, if she was induced to accept it by fraud she may have the contract rescinded just as any other written contract may be rescinded for fraud. She promptly tendered Ferguson a deed to the property when she learned the facts. She is not required to resort to an action of damages. She has her election to ask a rescission of the contract.

On the return of the case the circuit court will adjudge Mrs. Annis the relief above indicated, decreeing her a lien on the land for the amount paid out by her on the incumbrances, with interest and costs.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment and further proceedings consistent herewith.

HOLTBEIDE v. SMITH'S GUARDIAN, &c.

(Filed January 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Former appeal—Res judicata—The opinion of this court upon a former appeal (Smith's Guardian v. Holtheide, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 125) contains an elaborate statement of the issues made by the pleadings and the facts declared by the record from which it appears that every material averment of fact contained in the petition in the case at bar was put in issue in that case, and this being true the chancellor properly sustained the demurrer to the petition because the cause of action relied on in this case is defeated by the plea of res judicata.

Wilson & Gifford for appellant.

John Roberts and Wm. Furlong for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This action in equity against the appellees, R. T. Smith, Jr., Frederick K. Smith, the Louisville Trust Co., his statutory guardian, and the Aetna Indemnity Co., was instituted by appellant, Eliza K. Holtheide, in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Second Chancery Division.

The petition is quite voluminous, but it is in substance averred therein that the appellant on August 14, 1889, authorized her daughter, Lula Holtheide, to purchase for her a certain house and lot in the city of Louisville of A. F. Payne and wife, at the price of $5,300, which purchase was made by the daughter, and $3,800 of the purchase price being required in cash by the vendor at the time of the sale, $2,000 thereof was paid by the appellant, and $1,800 by her daughter, Lula Holtheide, as an accommodation and temporary loan to appellant; that for the remaining $2,000 the daughter, also for the accommodation of appellant, executed to the vendor two notes of $1,000 each, bearing 6 per cent. interest from date and payable one and two years after date respectively.

It is also averred in the petition that the $1,800 advanced by Lula were repaid her by the appellant, who likewise paid and discharged the two notes for the remainder of the purchase money, but that the daughter, Lula Holtheide, without the knowledge or consent of appellant, caused the deed conveying the house and lot in question to be made by the vendors to her, thereby wrongfully investing herself with the title to the property; that the daughter, Lula Holtheide, thereafter became the wife of the appellee, R. T. Smith, Jr., and the infant appellee, Frederick R. Smith, is the only child born of their marriage; that Lula Smith died in 1899, intestate, and her husband, the appellee, R. T. Smith, Jr., soon thereafter was appointed by the Jefferson County Court and duly qualified as the administrator of her estate, and the Louisville Trust Co. was, by the same court, appointed statutory guardian of the infant, Frederick K. Smith, and duly qualified as such. It is further averred in the petition that the appellant did not discover until after the death of her daughter, Lula Smith, that she had taken to herself the deed and title to the house and lot purchased of the Paynes, and that upon her discovery of that fact she brought an action in the same court in which this one was later instituted, in which the appellees herein were made defendants, setting forth the facts in regard to her purchase of the house and lot of the Paynes, and the wrongful taking by Lula Smith of the title thereto to herself, and averring that in so doing Lula Smith became the holder of the title as trustee for appellant, and in the prayer of the petition the lower court was asked to substitute appellant's name in the deed from the Paynes for that of Lula Smith, nee Holtheide, or cause the property to be conveyed to her and quiet her title thereto; and if neither could be done, to give her a lien upon the house and lot and adjudge its sale for the entire purchase price of $5,800 appellant claimed to have furnished and paid the Paynes therefor; that notwithstanding the defense interposed by the appellees to the claim set up by appellant in that action to the house and lot in controversy, upon the submission of the case in the lower court, appellant was by its judgment granted the relief asked, and the title to the property conveyed her, but an appeal was taken from that judgment by the appellees, and upon the appeal it was decided by this court that the house and lot in controversy, and whatever part of the purchase price had been paid by appellant therefor, were gifts from appellant to her daughter, Lula Smith, and that she was not entitled to the relief sought, consequently the judgment of the lower court was reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to set aside the judgment appealed from and dismiss her petition. (Smith's Guardian, &co. v. Holtheide, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 125.) And such was the judgment of the lower court entered after the filing of the mandate.

It is further averred in the petition that until the decision of this court to that effect was announced appellant did not understand that the transaction between the Paynes, herself and her daughter amounted to a gift from her to the latter, and that it was not so intended upon her part; that she and her daughter, Lula, were at that time living together, and after the purchase of the house and lot of the Paynes they together occupied the same until the death of the latter, during which time the daughter was entrusted by appellant with the management of her business and financial affairs, as appellant was advanced in years, had but little education, and was physically unable to manage her affairs, and her daughter was an intelligent, educated young woman, capable of attending to the business confided to her, by reason of which she had and exercised great influence over appellant; that at all times after the property in controversy was purchased, and until the death of Lula Smith, appellant claimed it as her own, in the presence of Lula, and without objection from her, and she expended large sums of money in repairing the house after it was greatly injured by a cyclone, and at other times in keeping it in repair. The prayer of the petition is as follows: "Wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against defendants for the cancellation of said gift and a return to her of said property, or the amount expended by plaintiff in the purchase price thereof, namely, $5,800, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from August 14, 1899, until paid, and she prays that the court direct its commissioner to make a deed in behalf of defendants conveying to her said property, or else that she be adjudged to have a lien on said property for said purchase price, with interest aforesaid, and that if the said Aetna Indemnity Co. has any lien on said property it be required before enforcing said lien to enforce its lien on the other lots of property mortgaged to it by the said R. T. Smith, Jr.; and further, she prays for her costs and all equitable relief."

Demurrers were filed to the petition by appellees, R. T. Smith, Jr., the infant, F. R. Smith, and his statutory guardian, and sustained by the lower court, and appellant failing to plead further her petition was dismissed, from which she has appealed. It appears from the briefs of counsel that the demurrers were sustained by the chancellor upon the ground that the relief sought by appellant in this case was refused by this court upon the former appeal. In other words, it was the opinion of the chancellor that the cause of action presented by the petition was res judicata. Ordinarily the defense of res judicata is required to be presented by plea, but it may be raised by demurrer when the pleading demurred to presents, as in this case, the facts showing the former adjudication.

The petition states with great particularity practically all the facts that appellees would have been required to plead in setting up the defense of res judicata by answer, for it shows the time of the institution of the former action; that it was brought in a court of competent jurisdiction; that appellant and appellees were parties thereto; that the cause of action in that case was based upon the same facts pleaded in this, and the relief sought substantially the same as asked in this case; and further, that the relief prayed for in the first case was granted by the lower court and upon appeal was refused by this court; and finally, that after the reversal by this court of the judgment of the lower court appellant's petition was dismissed as directed by the mandate of the higher court.

On this subject it is said in Freeman on Judgments, section 249, title "Extent of the Estoppel:" "There is no doubt that a judgment or decree necessarily affirming the existence of any fact is conclusive upon the parties or their privies whenever the existence of the fact is again in issue between them, not only when the subject-matter is the same but when the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter in the same or any other court, except on appeal, writ of error or other proceeding provided for its revision."

Further on in the same section it is also said: "The judgments of appellate courts are as conclusive as those of any other court. They not only establish facts, but also settle the law so that the law as decided upon any appeal must be applied in all the subsequent stages of the cause. * * * An adjudication is final and conclusive not only as to matter actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated and have had decided as incident to or essentially connected with the subject-matter of the litigation, and every matter coming within the legitimate purview of the original action both as to the matters of claim and defense." (McDaniel v. Stum, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1935; Bennett v. Ohio Valley B. & T. Co., 99 Ky., 115.)

The opinion of this court upon the former appeal (Smith's Guardian v. Holtheide, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 125) contains an elaborate statement of the issues made by the pleadings and of the facts declared by the record upon the former appeal, from which it appears that every material averment of fact contained in the petition in the case at bar was put in issue in that case. We think of the claim of appellant as now urged that it is, as was said in the opinion supra, a stale claim, and she is no more entitled to subject the house and lot to the payment of the money which she claims to have furnished her daughter to pay for them than she was to recover the house and lot in the former action. At any rate she has had her day in court, and will not be allowed in this action to resurrect a claim against the estate of her deceased daughter which the court has, after full investigation, heretofore rejected as being not only stale, but otherwise without merit. The court did not err in sustaining the demurrers to the petition, and as the appellant's action is defeated by the defense of res judicata, raised by the demurrers, it will not be necessary to determine the question of limitation attempted to be urged upon our consideration.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

COCHRAN, &c. v. LEE'S ADM'R, &c.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Willis—Construction of—Mrs. Belle Lee's will bequeathed her property to her four children, naming them, which estate was left her in trust by her father, with power to dispose of it by will. She provided that the property should be equally divided among her children and be kept in trust by the Fidelity Trust Co., or any other trust company preferred by them, and she further provided that if any of her children die without issue then the portion of the one so dying shall revert to her estate for the benefit of her living heirs. Held—From the instrument it is clearly apparent that she intended the property to be kept in trust that her children should have the privilege of selecting the trust company, and that should any of them die without issue such shares should revert to the estate for the benefit of the living heirs. The instrument is so clearly expressed that there is little room for the application for the technical rules of construction.

2. Oral statement—The evidence of one that testator stated before she made her will that she would never tie her property up as her father tied his up, can not be considered in construing the will. The rights of the parties must be determined from the will itself, and not from testator's oral statement as to what kind of a will was intended to be made.

R. L. Page for appellants.

McDermott & Ray for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Mrs. Belle B. Lee died a resident of Jefferson county in November, 1903, leaving an estate worth about $38,000. She owned real estate worth about $6,000, and the balance of the property consisted of stocks and bonds. She left surviving her four children: A son, Wm. B. Lee, who was unmarried; two daughters, Margaret Cochran and Anna Belle Young, each of whom were married, and had three children, and a son, Philip Lee, who was married, and had one child.

The property which she had was received by her from her father, James Bridgeford, and was held in trust for her by the Fidelity Trust Co. of Louisville under the terms of her father's will, which, so far as material, is as follows: "The net annual income from the part allotted to Mrs. Lee shall be, during each year during her natural life, paid to her for her sole and separate use, free from any interest therein or control thereof by any husband that she may have. At her death, if she should die intestate, leaving issue surviving her, the said fund shall pass and belong to her descendants, they taking per stirpes: if she should die intestate and without issue surviving her, the said fund shall go to and be equally distributed among my then surviving descendants, they taking per stirpes; but said Belle shall have power to dispose of said estate by last will and testament."

On April 3, 1903, Mrs. Lee wrote with her own hand her will, which was admitted to probate after her death, and is in these words:

"I bequeath to my four children, Margaret, Annabel, William and Philip the estate left me by my father, to be equally divided among them and to be kept in trust by the Fidelity Trust Co., or any other trust company they may prefer. If any of my children die without issue of their body, his or her portion shall revert to my estate for the benefit of the living heirs. I wish my children to be allowed the privilege of conferring with the trust company in regard to their estate, and to receive a statement of their affairs whenever they desire it.

"Signed by my own hand.

BELLE B. LEE.

"April 3, 1902.

"State of Kentucky."

The four children claim that they take under the will the property devised to them in fee simple, and that the words "die without issue of their body" refer to a death in the lifetime of the testatrix. The guardian for the infants, however, maintains that they take under the will only a defeasible fee, which will be defeated by their death at any time without issue of their body. The circuit court held that they took in fee simple, and the guardian appeals for the infants.

The deposition of John T. Malone, an officer of the Fidelity Trust Co., which was the trustee under the father's will, was taken, in which he testified that Mrs. Lee told him that if she ever made a will she would never tie her property up; that her father tied his up, and that she did not get any benefit from it when she needed it. This talk occurred before she made a will, and not at the time the will was made. This evidence, however, can not be considered in construing her will. The rights of the parties must be determined from the will itself, and not from the oral statements of the testatrix as to what sort of a will she intended to make, for the meaning of the writing must be determined from its own language, otherwise the rights of the parties would not be settled by the written will which the law authorized to be probated, but by the parol declarations of the testatrix.

The meaning of the will must be determined from all its provisions, for the object of all construction is to enforce the intention of the testator as shown by his entire will. In the will before us it will be observed that the testatrix uses the words "the estate left me by my father," thus referring to her father's will by which the estate had been placed in the hands of a trustee, and then she adds: "To be equally divided among them, and to be kept in trust by the Fidelity Trust Co., or any other trust company they may prefer." The word "kept" here is material. The estate had been in trust, and she directs that it shall be equally divided and kept in trust, thus clearly indicating an intention to continue the holding of the estate in trust after her death, and for this reason it is added that if the children prefer it some other trust company may act. Then follow these words: "If any of my children die without issue of their bodies, his or her portion shall revert to my estate for the benefit of the living heirs." The words "revert to my estate" are very material. Revert means to come back or return and so by this provision the testatrix directed that if any of the children died without issue of their bodies his or her portion should return to her estate for the benefit of the living heirs. This can not refer to the death of one of her children in her lifetime. The reversion provided for must be a reversion to her estate after her death; that this is her meaning is also shown by the concluding words of the will by which she directs that the children are to be allowed the privilege of conferring with the trust company in regard to their estate, and to receive a statement of their affairs whenever they may desire it. They would have no estate until she died, and if only an executor was contemplated to settle up the estate and divide the property among the children, there was no need for such a provision. From the whole will it is, therefore, apparent that she intended the property to be kept in trust; that the children were to have the privilege of selecting the trust company, if they preferred another to the one that she had named, and that they were also to have the privilege of conferring with the trust company in regard to the estate, and to receive a statement of their affairs whenever they desired it; but that if any of them died without issue of their bodies, that share should revert to the estate for the benefit of the living heirs. The instrument is clearly expressed and its meaning as a whole so definitely appears from its face that there is little room for the application of technical rules of construction.

The rule laid down in Birney v. Richardson, 5 Dana, 424, and Wren v. Hynes, 2 Metc., 129, is recognized as sound as applied by the court to the cases then before it, but has no application to a case like this, where the language used by the testatrix forbids the inference that she referred to the death of the legatee in her lifetime. (Harvey v. Bell, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 381.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment as herein indicated.

FIDELITY AND DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND v. LOGAN COUNTY.

(Filed January 10, 1905.)

1. Sheriffs—Action on official and county levy bonds—Liability of surety—Remedy—In an action by a county against the surety on the official and county levy bonds of the sheriff for failing to collect and account for taxes due the county, such county is not limited in its remedy to a proceeding under section 4146, Kentucky Statutes, which authorizes the fiscal court at its October term to appoint commissioners to settle with the sheriff, where the sheriff refuses to settle or absconds and fails to settle.

2. Settlement with fiscal court—Effect—Collateral attack—Where for some of the years it was shown that the sheriff had made settlement as required by Kentucky Statutes, section 4146, and that such settlements had not been appealed from or otherwise set aside, such settlements are binding on the county and are not subject to collateral attack.

3. Penalties—On all taxes not paid before December 1 of the year in which they are due a penalty of 6 per cent. is added, which penalty goes to the county under Kentucky Statutes, section 1885, and when collected or col-

Acceptable the sheriff is liable for it to the county precisely as he is for the taxes.

4. Additional penalty against sheriff—Under section 4147, Kentucky Statutes, if the sheriff does not collect and pay over to the county all the collectable taxes in his hands by January 1 after the year in which they were due and payable, he is liable to the county for a penalty of 6 per cent. on the amount so collected or collectable by him and not paid over, which penalty is against the sheriff, and is calculated upon the total sum due the county by him on January 1, after it became due, whether for taxes and penalties against the taxpayer collected or collectable.

5. Interest—Upon what computed—The money collected by the sheriff upon taxes and penalties due the county, and taxes and penalties collectable, but not collected, are treated as a debt due by the sheriff to the county on January 1, after they become due, and upon their total amount the sheriff is liable to the county for interest at 6 per cent. from that date until paid, which interest is in addition to the 6 per cent. penalty upon the gross sum due and unpaid on January 1.

6. Same—While it is proper to charge the sheriff with interest on the penalty due the county by taxpayers who fail to pay their taxes by December 1 of the year in which such tax is due, there should be no interest computed on the additional penalty due by the sheriff to the county for his failure to pay over all the taxes collected or collectable on January 1 thereafter, said penalty against the sheriff, although a liability for which he is bound on his bond, is not a debt upon which interest can be computed.

7. Ex parte settlement—An ex parte settlement made by commissioners after the sheriff's term of office had expired, and after he had left the State, and of which he had no notice, though filed in the county clerk's office and recorded, can not be treated as a confirmed settlement made under the statute.

8. Railroad taxes—Settlement by treasurer of Sinking Fund Commissioners—A settlement made by the treasurer of the commissioners of the sinking fund of the railroad taxes received by him from the sheriff, although confirmed by the county court, is not conclusive, and does not bind the county.

9. Same—It was the duty of the sheriff to pay the railroad taxes which he collected to the treasurer of the sinking fund commissioners of the railroad taxes, who is shown to have demanded them, and by his failure to do so he has incurred the penalty fixed by the statute, and such duty is not in abeyance until he has settled.

10. Whole liability—Judgment therefor—When the whole of the sheriff's liabilities are ascertained it is competent to reduce them to a single sum and to render judgment for that sum which will bear interest from the date of the judgment, for then penalties and interest already accrued are merged into the judgment which must bear interest.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh and Browder & Browder for appellant.

S. R. Crewdson and James H. Bowden for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

M. A. Neely was sheriff of Logan county for the years 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901. Having executed bonds, he was the collector of the county levy for those years. He also executed bond each year as collector of a railroad tax levied to pay the interest and to create a sinking fund to pay a railroad bonded debt owing by the county. Appellant was sole surety upon each of these bonds. Neely defaulted. This suit was brought by the county against the surety to recover on the several bonds the sums alleged to be due as balances of the taxes for each of the years named. The suit was to recover $28,445.81 in the aggregate, but the judgment was for $17,414.81. Both parties have appealed.

Appellant contends that the petition is insufficient to uphold any judgment. This argument rests upon the assertion that until the sheriff has settled his accounts with commissioners appointed by the fiscal court, and until such settlement is confirmed, no action will lie against the sheriff; that the county is limited in its remedy to a proceeding under section 4146, Kentucky Statutes, which authorizes the fiscal court at its October term to appoint commissioners to settle with the sheriff, and provides that such settlement shall be filed in the county court clerk's office, and then lie over for exceptions to be tried by the county court, with right of appeal to the circuit court to either party. But this section is not exclusive of all other proceedings where the sheriff refuses to settle at all, or absconds and fails to settle. Excepting two of the years in suit, the circuit court found, and we think correctly so, that there had been no such settlement and no settlement whatever by the sheriff. He had left the State and kept beyond its jurisdiction. This suit, brought against the surety to have the circuit court determine and adjudge the true amount due by the sheriff, was a proper proceeding. The petition stated fully every essential of a cause of action on the bonds.

The record shows the amount of taxable property assessed in Logan county for each of the years, and the number of tithes. The rate of levies made by the fiscal court for each year makes it a simple matter of calculation to find the total sum chargeable to the sheriff for each year. Exonerations and delinquents allowed are also shown, which deducted from the total of taxable property assessed, leaves the sum upon which the sheriff's statutory commissions are calculated, except where he collects penalties from taxpayers, or is being charged with them as being collectable, in which event he ought of course to be credited with commission for collecting them, as if they were taxes. Deducting the credits named leaves the sum payable by the sheriff, not counting penalties and interest chargeable to him for his own failure to pay over the taxes as required by the statutes. Receipts from the treasurer or other persons to whom the fiscal court had ordered the money paid deducted from the last named remainder show the net amount of taxes collected and collectable for any one year for which the sheriff and his surety are liable to the county, if the sheriff pays it over when due.

The foregoing is the basis upon which the circuit court proceeded. For the years 1898 and 1899 it appears that the sheriff actually made settlements with commissioners, or committees, appointed by the fiscal court concerning the county levy and poll taxes, but not including the railroad tax. For the year 1898 the settlement was filed in the county court clerk's office, where it was excepted to by the sheriff. The sum finally found due upon that settlement the sheriff paid to the county to the persons as ordered by the fiscal court. The same is true as to the year 1899, except the record does not show the settlement made and filed in the county court clerk's office.

But it is shown by the record that the fiscal court, by an order entered upon its order book, recited that such settlement had been made and recorded, and directed the sheriff to pay the balance stated as having been found due the county, and the sheriff paid it. The circuit court found that the settlement had in fact been made and recorded, as required by the statute (section 4146), and as it had not been appealed from or otherwise set aside in any suit or proceeding appropriate for the purpose, was binding on the county. We think the circuit court gave to this statute its true meaning. It is necessary that these settlements concerning the fiscal affairs of the county be conducted in some forum where expedition in closing them may be had. Unless when so completed they are to have some other effect than mere memoranda, subject to be ignored or collaterally attacked by either party at any time, they are worse than useless. While the settlements might be subject to be re-opened and surcharged for fraud practiced, or other ground for a new trial after the expiration of the term of the court adjudging them to record, if asserted within seasonable time, yet after the time allowed for a review, upon appeal they are final. Although it is shown that the commissioners making the settlements for the years 1898 and 1899 allowed errors against the county, the settlements when so recorded are not subject to the collateral attack attempted by this suit.

For the year 1900 no such settlement was made and filed, though a settlement was made and filed in the fiscal court. But it was ordered by the court to be withdrawn on the same day it was filed, and was never filed in the county court for exceptions, nor ordered to record by that tribunal. The legislature has provided an expeditious and simple method of carrying such settlements into a concluded state. Where the proceedings stop short of the course fixed by the statute they can have none of the benefits or presumptions accorded to them as are to those which do conform to the statute. The public, as well as the county, as a corporation are interested in the prompt collection and honest and legal disbursement of the county revenues. These settlements, when so recorded, are valuable checks upon the fiscal agents of the public, as well as constituting conclusive evidence of fixed indebtedness or of discharge from liability. To give to other settlements, though completed as between the parties, but not recorded as required by the statute, the same effect would be to thwart the good purpose of the statute by rendering it useless. For the year 1900 the circuit court, therefore, proceeded as if no settlement had been attempted. For the year 1901 there was no settlement. Thus the original indebtedness of the sheriff to the county on account of the county levy and poll taxes for the years in suit was fixed by the circuit court upon the proper basis. In addition to the foregoing was the question of penalties and interest.

For the year 1898 the commissioners had charged penalties against the sheriff for taxes not collected and paid over within the time fixed by statute. The sheriff filed exceptions in the county court, where the judgment was against him. Upon appeal to the circuit court it was adjudged that the sheriff was not liable for the penalties. In this action the trial court held that inasmuch as that judgment on the appeal had not been reversed or vacated, it was binding upon the county as res adjudicata. In this we concur. But the circuit court adjudged that for other years the question of the sheriff's liability for penalties was not affected by the judgment alluded to. In that conclusion we concur also. If the taxpayer does not pay his taxes on or before December 1 of the year in which they are due a penalty of 6 per cent. is added against him, which must be collected by the sheriff as the taxes are. The penalty goes to the county (section 1885, Kentucky Statutes), and when collected or collectable the sheriff is liable for it to the county precisely as he is for the taxes.

By section 4147, Kentucky Statutes, if the sheriff does not collect and pay over to the county all the collectable taxes in his hands by January 1, after the year in which they were due and payable, he is liable to the county for a penalty of 6 per cent. on the amount so collected or collectable by him and not paid over. This last-named penalty is against the sheriff, and is calculated upon the total sum due the county by him on January 1 after it became due, whether for taxes and penalties against the taxpayer collected, or for taxes and penalties collectable, but not collected. The money collected by the sheriff upon taxes and penalties due the county, and taxes and penalties collectable, but not collected, are treated as debt due by the sheriff to the county on January 1 after they become due. They constitute then an obligation to pay money, and upon their total the sheriff is liable for interest to the county at 6 per cent. per annum from that date until paid. The interest is entirely different from and is in addition to the penalty of 6 per cent. upon the gross sum due and unpaid on January 1. The penalty is a cumulative remedy, imposed by statute as additional incentive to the prompt payment of the county revenues by the collecting officer. So far the trial court proceeded in accord with what has just been said in entering judgment herein. In addition, the court adjudged interest at 6 per cent. per annum upon the penalties adjudged against the sheriff for his nonpayment of the sums due January 1 of each of the years in suit as to the railroad taxes, and like interest upon the penalty adjudged upon the county levy for the year 1901. The penalty of 6 per cent. against the sheriff is not a debt, though it is a liability covered by the bond. The statute does not make it bear interest, and the general rule is that statutory penalties do not bear interest.

Counsel for appellee urge that the interest upon the penalties is too small to justify a reversal of the judgment, for, he says, payments were made in so short a time after the penalties against the sheriff attached which more than satisfied them that the amount of interest accumulated is inconsiderable. Payments applied by operation of law must first go to extinguish interest-bearing liabilities. As the payments made were not sufficient to discharge the interest-bearing obligation of the sheriff, it follows that by adjudging interest upon the penalties, where all were calculated as of the same rank, and added together when payments were credited, the effect is that the interest continues even until now upon the penalties, under the form of the judgment. The penalties amount to several thousand dollars, and the interest carried into the judgment on their account is too considerable to pass unnoticed.

For the year 1900 the court did not adjudge a penalty against the sheriff for his failure to pay over the county levy and poll taxes to the county, because there was no person to whom he was ordered to pay them, there-being no treasurer at that time. This was in accord with the decisions in: Bates v. Knott County, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 73, and Pence's Adm'r v. Nelson County, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 724.

After the sheriff had made default, and after the expiration of his term of office and probably after he had left the State, the fiscal court appointed commissioners, Clark and Milliken, to make settlement with the sheriff for all the years of his term. They proceeded to do so, ignoring all the previous settlements. They charged the sheriff with all the penalties and interest herein discussed, calculating the interest to the date of their report, which was the 1st day of June, 1902. The court corrected the report as indicated above as to the years 1898, 1899 and 1900, as well as allowed the credit for 1901, discussed below, but in other respects adopted the report as the basis of the judgment, bringing the whole indebtedness, including that for railroad taxes collected and hereinafter discussed, down to that date, June 1, 1902. Interest at 6 per cent. per annum on this total sum was then calculated to the date of the judgment, 23d February, 1904, and judgment entered for that gross sum, and interest from the last-named date till paid.

We are of opinion this was error. Not only was it improper to adjudge interest upon the penalties against the sheriff for nonpayment of what he owed, but it was not proper to compound interest. The Clark and Milliken settlement was made after the sheriff left the State, or at, any rate, after his term of office expired and after the time fixed in the statute. This attempted and ex parte settlement was no more than a carefully prepared estimate by capable accountants of what they deemed to be due the county by the sheriff. It was not a settlement as contemplated by the statute, where both sides were represented, in an effort to arrive at the true amount of the indebtedness. It can not, though filed in the county clerk's office and recorded, be treated as a confirmed settlement made under the statute. The sheriff not being a party to it, can not be cut off without "his day in court," from presenting his side of the account. (Commonwealth v. Moren, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1635.) The circuit court took this view of the Clark and Milliken settlement.

For the year 1900 the sheriff is shown to have paid to various persons to whom allowances had been made by the fiscal court sums aggregating $6,654.50, represented by 111 fiscal court warrants, or orders of allowance. The evidence is uncontradicted that the sheriff paid these sums for the county. Their validity is nowhere questioned. For that year, there being no county treasurer, it was the sheriff's duty to have paid them out of the county levy funds in his hands, and he should have been credited accordingly. The circuit court properly allowed the sheriff credit for them.

The railroad taxes form a separate basis of contention in this case. The tax was levied originally by virtue of a special statute applicable alone to Logan county, approved April 7, 1886. (1 Acts of 1885-6, pages 1212-1217.) That act provided for the selection of three sinking fund commissioners by the county court of claims, the one of whom whose term of office was shortest being ex-officio treasurer of the sinking fund. It directed the levy of a tax sufficient to pay the interest semiannually, and to create a sinking fund for the ultimate payment of the bonds which had been executed by the county in settlement of a railroad subscription made by it. The act provided that the sheriff should be collector of this tax, for a settlement by the sheriff with the sinking fund commissioners, and that he should pay the taxes collected by him on account of the railroad debt to the sinking fund treasurer at certain intervals. What happened is, the sheriff collected these taxes and paid them over, some part of them for each year, to the treasurer of the sinking fund. But he never paid all collected or collectable by him for any one year within the time specified in the act, or at all. Nor did he ever settle his accounts for those taxes with the sinking fund commissioners, nor were commissioners appointed for that purpose by the fiscal court. He made no settlement whatever of his railroad tax with the fiscal court. If he settled with the treasurer of the sinking fund, such settlement is not produced nor accounted for, though various settlements of the treasurer's accounts made annually, stating that he had received so much from the sheriff on account of taxes collected by him, and indicating some sort of settlement or accounting between him and the sheriff by which the amount due by the sheriff for such years was arrived at, are shown in the record. It is the contention of appellant that these treasurer's settlements—of his own accounts, not the sheriff's—when received by the fiscal court and ordered to record, were conclusive against the county of the state of the sheriff's accounts for each of the years for the railroad taxes collected or collectable by him. The treasurer of the sinking fund did not charge the sheriff with any penalties or interest in his so-called settlements. These alleged settlements between the treasurer of the sinking fund and the sheriff are not binding upon the county, nor conclusive in any sense of the state of the sheriff's accounts. In the first place, there was no authority, statutory or otherwise, for the treasurer of the sinking fund to make such settlements. If the commissioners were authorized to do so, they did not. In the next place, the treasurer's settlement of his own accounts, which was confirmed by the county court and approved by the fiscal court, merely recited what sums he had received from the sheriff. The further statement that the sheriff owed so much and no more in addition, was wholly outside of the scope of the treasurer's own accounts, and formed no part of his settlement. The confirmation of the report on this point meant no more than that the treasurer had received only the sums charged against him in the settlement as having been paid by the sheriff.

Appellee contends, and the circuit court so adjudged, that the act of 1886 was superseded by the Constitution of 1891, and sections 1833 to 1885, passed in conformity thereto, creating the fiscal court, and regulating the matter of levying and collecting county taxes.

Prior to the Constitution of 1891 the county court, or the county court of claims as it was sometimes called to distinguish it from the county court presided over by the county judge alone, had jurisdiction of the fiscal affairs of the county. Under the present Constitution, and sections 1833-1894, Kentucky Statutes, sole and exclusive jurisdiction is given the fiscal courts of the several counties of the levy and collection of the county taxes for whatever purpose they may be imposed. If the debt were created under a previous general or local act, it remained an obligation of the county till discharged. No subsequent statute could impair its validity. Yet it was within the power of the legislature to change the method and time of collecting taxes for paying the debt. It was also competent to change the rate of taxation, and regulations affecting penalties for nonpayment of taxes, as well as all matters pertaining to tax collectors' liabilities and duties, so long as the change did not impair the obligation of the contract by which the original debt was created. When the legislature, by sections 1838 to 1885, Kentucky Statutes, made it the duty of the fiscal court to levy the tax, and to provide for its collection and proper application, as well as the manner and time of its collection, those provisions must be deemed as creating a new and comprehensive system of law on the subject, superseding preceding general and local statutes covering the same subject. Although section 1882 of Kentucky Statutes, as compiled by Carroll, contains what might seem to be a prohibition against the levying of taxes to pay off railroad bonded indebtedness and interest, yet it must be read in connection with section 1839, which does authorize the levying of taxes to pay off all debts existing prior to September 28, 1891, the date of the adoption of the new Constitution. Section 1882 was adopted first, by several months, though both it and section 1839 were adopted by the same legislature. Section 1882 limits the imposition of a tax to not more than 50 cents on the $100, and $1.50 poll for county purposes. No part of this tax, it seems, was intended to be applied to the payment of railroad bonded debts and interest. But section 1839 permits, as does section 157 of the Constitution, the levy of an additional sum for the purpose of discharging all debts incurred prior to September 28, 1891.

Section 1884, Kentucky Statutes, makes the sheriff the collecting officer of all county taxes, if he execute bond therefor. It fixes his compensation, though it increases it as compared to that allowed by the special act of 1886. Section 1885, Kentucky Statutes, applies to the collection of county taxes the same penalties for nonpayment both as to the taxpayer and the collecting officer, as pertain to State taxes. It also makes county taxes due at the same time as State taxes. The local act of 1886 had different provisions on these subjects. The taxes were due at different periods, and the penalties were not the same for their nonpayment, so far as the act applied to the collecting officer. We think the Kentucky Statutes were intended to cover all these matters, and to do away with the irregular and special proceedings previously existing. One of the most prominent features of the new Constitution is its effort to establish a uniformity of the law throughout the State. One of the main abuses that brought the convention into being was the great confusion arising from the mass of special and local statutes which had been passed under the old Constitution. This manifest purpose should be given full effect in the construction of laws passed to carry it into force. There is no part of the act of 1886, concerning the collection of the railroad tax in Logan county, not covered by the present general law. The appointment of sinking fund commissioners, and the exercise of duties to be performed by them, are not prohibited by anything in the general law. But if it be thought that there was anything in the local statute that gave the county the right to avail itself of the service of commissioners for its sinking fund, which by the general law is not given, then by the closing sentence of section 1840, Kentucky Statutes, concerning the jurisdiction and powers of the fiscal courts, generally, it is provided: "And (the fiscal court) shall have jurisdiction of all such other matters relating to the levying of taxes as is by any special act now conferred on the county court of levy and claims."

The existence of a valid debt owing by the county, and the express authority to levy taxes to pay it, involves and allows the right to create a sinking fund to meet the debt when it matures. If it be deemed expedient by the fiscal court to avail itself of the services of other persons as commissioners to hold and employ such funds unto the day when they may be required to discharge the debt for which they have been raised, we see nothing in the statute to prohibit it. On the contrary, it seems to be well within the expression in section 1840, Kentucky Statutes, concerning the jurisdiction of fiscal courts, "to regulate and control the fiscal affairs and property of the county, * * * and to execute all of its orders consistent with law and within its jurisdiction."

The act of 1866 making it the duty of the sheriff to settle his accounts with the sinking fund commissioners is superseded by sections 1884 and 4146, Kentucky Statutes, making it his duty to settle once each year, at the October term of the fiscal court, and as often as that court may require. By section 1884, Kentucky Statutes, the sheriff is required to pay over all taxes and penalties collected by him "in due time to the proper party as directed by the court." Where there is a county treasurer, this must be done every sixty days without demand. (Section 932, Kentucky Statutes.) By section 4147 the sheriff is required to pay a penalty of 6 per cent. on taxes collected or collectable, which "shall not have been paid by him on proper demand to the parties or funds entitled thereto, on the first day of January in each year after he was required to collect such taxes."

In this case it appears that the sheriff's bond required him to pay over the money collected by him as stipulated in the special act of May, 1866, which was a sufficient designation by the fiscal court, so far as the sheriff and his surety are concerned, of the person to whom to pay it. The annual election of a sinking fund commissioner of railroad taxes is also shown. The treasurer of the sinking fund says he demanded of the sheriff the payment of the taxes. There being a person designated by the county to receive the money for it from the sheriff, it was his duty, under the statute, to pay it over on demand after it was due. By his failure to do so he has incurred the penalty fixed by the statute. The sheriff's duty to pay over the taxes collected by him is not in abeyance till he has settled. The settlement might precede or follow the payment.

The circuit court in its judgment seems to have proceeded upon the foregoing basis in the adjustment of the sheriff's liabilities for the railroad taxes. When the whole of the sheriff's liability is ascertained under the foregoing principles it is competent to reduce them to a single sum, and to render judgment for that sum, which will bear interest from the date of the judgment. (Section 2220, Kentucky Statutes.) For then penalties and interest already accrued are merged, as is the principal adjudged, into the judgment for money, which must bear interest.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed on the cross appeal, but is reversed on the direct appeal. The cause is remanded that a judgment may be entered in conformity herewith.

CAMDEN INTERSTATE RY. CO. v. LEE, & CO.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Corporations—Merger of—Judgment against—In this action appellee seeks to recover against appellants the amount of judgments recovered by them against the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. which, after these judgments were rendered and a return of no property found, was merged in appellant company. The fact that the former company was insolvent when the transfer was made is not a material inquiry. The rule is that where one corporation goes out of existence by being merged into another, the liabilities of the old corporation are enforceable against the new one, just as if no change had been made.

2. Practice—The fact that one of the judgments appealed from has been reversed does not affect this appeal. The case must be tried here as presented in the lower court, and sections 757 and 758, relied on by appellant, have no application here as they relate to new matter to be set up in this court.

J. R. Brown for appellant.

J. A. Scott, Scott & Dinkle and P. K. Malin for appellees.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee, Warfield Lee, filed suit in the Boyd Circuit Court, on March 17, 1900, to recover judgment against the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. for injuries sustained by him in attempting to board one of its cars, and on February 16, 1901, recovered judgment against it for the sum of $1,000 and costs, and on June 20, 1901, had an execution issued on the judgment, which was returned no property found. Appellee, Rosa Hoffman, filed suit against the railway company on May 27, 1899, to recover damages for ejection from a park by the agents of the company, and on February 13, 1901, recovered judgment against it for $500 and costs. On this judgment execution was also issued, and returned no property found.

While these suits were pending Senator J. M. Camden bought a controlling interest in the Ashland Electric Light and Power Co., which owned a majority of the stock of the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co., and in the summer of the year 1900 he bought about $15,000 of the remaining stock of the street railway company at 50 or 60 cents on the $1, and made an arrangement with the other stockholders by which they agreed to take stock in the Camden Interstate Railway Co., share for share, for the stock they held in the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. All the stock in the street railway company being thus controlled by Camden in December, 1900, a deed was made by the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. to the Camden Interstate Railway Co. of all its property and franchises in consideration of $1. After this deed was made the stock of the Camden Interstate Railway Co. was delivered to the stockholders of the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co., who had not sold to Camden, share for share, as had been agreed. The result was that when Lee and Miss Hoffman obtained their judgments against the street railway company their executions against that company were fruitless, and they thereupon filed this suit against the Camden Interstate Railway Co. and the stockholders in the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co., seeking in equity upon their returns of no property found to compel them to pay their judgments. After preparation of the case the circuit court entered a judgment against Camden Interstate Railway Co., from which it appeals. No final judgment has been entered as to the stockholders, and they are not parties to the appeal.

At the time the conveyance was made by the street railway company of all its property and franchises to the Camden Interstate Railway Co. the capital stock of the street railway company amounted to $50,000, and it owed debts amounting to over $70,000. It had made a mortgage on its property and issued bonds to the extent of $75,000, but these bonds had not been sold; they had been used only as collateral for the debts the company owed. After the purchase of the property and franchises Camden spent something like $30,000 in extending the line to connect at Huntington, W. V., with a line running from Guyandotte to Huntington, the purpose being also to extend it across the Ohio river to certain towns in Ohio. It is insisted that the judgment against the Camden Interstate Railway Co. is wrong, because the Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. was in fact insolvent when the transfer was made, and must have failed but for the new arrangement. We do not think this is a material inquiry. Camden paid for all the stock which he bought in the street railway company 50 or 60 cents on the $1. and for the stock which he did not buy he issued stock in the interstate railway company share for share. The sum of the transaction was that Camden either owned in his own right all the stock of the street railway company by way of purchase, or controlled it under contracts by which the stockholders agreed to take stock in the new company for the stock which they held in the old, and while he thus controlled all the stock in the street railway company, he caused that company to deed all of its property and franchises to the Camden Interstate Railway Co., and thus the stockholders in the street railway company became stockholders in the interstate railway company. In this way the stockholders in the street railway company put all of their property and franchises in the hands of the interstate railway company, and became stockholders in that company in lieu of the street railway company. By this means the interstate railway company swallowed up or absorbed the street railway company.

While there was no stipulation in the deed that the new company should answer for the liabilities of the old, the law will not allow the stockholders in a corporation thus to change the name in which their property is held and defeat the claims of creditors. The rule is that where one corporation goes entirely out of existence by being merged into another, the liabilities of the old corporation are enforceable against the new one, just as if no change had been made. (Thompson on Corporations, section 372; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 818; 10 Cyc., 306, 314.)

It is held by some authorities that one corporation can not become a permanent shareholder in another, unless the right is conferred by statute, and, therefore, the more usual form of merging one corporation with another is for the new corporation to issue its own shares to the stockholders of the old company in exchange for their stock in that company. For this reason the agreements with the stockholders of the old company were all made in the name of Camden, and the agreement was carried out in his name, he being apparently the owner of the controlling interest in the new company. But the law will not look merely at the form of the transaction: it looks through the form to the substance of it. The sum of it here was that Camden controlling the stock of the old company, transferred its property to the new and issued the stock in the new to take the place of that in the old company. This was not a purchase of the stock of the old company: it was simply an absorption of the old company into the new, and the new became answerable for all the liabilities of the old company which it absorbed, and will not be heard now to say that the assets of that company were worthless, or that the stock, which was selling at 50 or 60 cents on the $1, was of no value.

The question of the liability of the stockholders in the old company is not now presented, as they are not parties to the appeal, and no final judgment has been rendered on that branch of the case.

Since the judgment has been rendered in the circuit court appeals pending in this court from the original judgments in favor of Lee and Miss Hoffman have been determined. The judgment in Lee's case was affirmed; the judgment in Miss Hoffman's case was reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. Our attention is called to this by a plea filed in this court setting up the reversal of her judgment against the street railway company. By section 757 of the Code of Practice, when the appellant's right to prosecute an appeal has ceased to exist, the appellee may move the court to dismiss the appeal, and by section 758, if the facts relied on are not shown by the record, the appellee may plead them by a verified answer. These are the only provisions in the Code allowing new matter to be set up in this court, and they have no application in this case as Miss Hoffman is the appellee. The case must be tried here upon the record as it was presented to the circuit court, and the affirmance of the judgment here adds nothing to its force, and presents no obstacle to its being opened in the circuit court on account of a defense arising since the judgment was rendered.

Judgment affirmed.

PREWITT, COMMISSIONER v. SECURITY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

THE TRAVELERS INSURANCE CO. v. PREWITT, COMMISSIONER.

(Filed January 19, 1905.)

Majority opinion in 26 Ky. Law Rep., 1239.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, N. B. Hays and Henry R. Prewitt for Insurance Commissioner.

Wm. Marshall Bullitt for Security, & Co., Ins. Co.

Pirtle, Trabue, Doolan & Cox and Wm. Bro. Smith for Travelers Ins. Co.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Judge Barker delivered the following dissenting opinion:

Believing that the conclusion reached by the majority of the court in these cases can not be justified either by reason or upon authority, I feel it my duty to present my views in a dissenting opinion. I do this with great modesty and with great reluctance; the first from solicitude lest I fail to do justice to the importance of the subject, and the second from my disinclination to differ from the opinions of those whose attainments I hold in so high esteem.

The question presented by these records is whether a State may enact a valid law, which shall present to a foreign corporation the alternative either of surrendering its right, under the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States, to remove to the Federal court an action instituted against it by a citizen in the State court, or of not being permitted to do business in the State. The proper solution of this question is essential to the orderly adjustment of the conflicting spheres of our dual system of jurisprudence—National and State.

When our complex form of government was established the national Constitution, and the laws enacted in pursuance thereto, were made the supreme law of the land (U. S. Constitution, article 6); and it must necessarily follow, as a logical and legal sequence, that whenever a State law comes in conflict with a national law the former must give way, it is void. The statutes of the United States, in pursuance of a settled national policy of affording to citizens of each State the means of escaping the dangers of local prejudice in favor of home litigants, prescribe the conditions and terms under which such actions may be removed to the Federal courts. This is done in the interest of fair and impartial trials, or, in other words, in the interest of justice.

The laws of our Commonwealth bearing upon the question under investigation are divided into two branches, although the intent of each is the same, the divergence being merely in the particular manner of enforcing the same principle against different classes of corporations. Sections 572 and 573 of the Kentucky Statutes apply to all foreign corporations doing business in the State, except insurance companies, and are as follows:

"Section 572. If any foreign corporation shall, without the consent of the adverse party, remove to the Federal court any action pending against it in any court of this State, or institute an action against a citizen of this State in a Federal court of this State, such action on the part of the corporation shall forfeit its right to transact or carry on any business in this State; and such corporation, and any officer, agent or employe thereof, who shall thereafter transact or engage in any business or employment for such corporation in this State shall be severally guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction in the circuit court of any county in which such corporation, or any officer, agent or employe thereof transacts or engages in any business, be fined for each offense not less than $500 nor more than $1,000.

"Section 573. The provisions of all charters and articles of incorporation, whether granted by special act of the general assembly or obtained under any general incorporation law, which are inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter concerning similar corporations, to the extent of such conflict, and all powers, privileges or immunities of any such corporation which could not be obtained under the provisions of this chapter, shall stand repealed on September 28, 1897; and if the officers, managers or agent of such corporation shall, after said date, exercise any powers, privileges or immunities repealed by this section or inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter, relating to similar corporations, or which could not be obtained under this chapter, the officer, manager or agent so offending, and the corporation for which he acts, shall each be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined for each offense not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and upon the conviction of the corporation the trial jury may, at their discretion, direct the forfeiture of its charter or articles of incorporation, in which case the court shall so adjudge. After the 28th day of September, 1897, the provisions of this chapter shall apply to all corporations created or organized under the laws of this State, if said provisions would be applicable to them if organized under this chapter."

The statute applicable to foreign insurance corporations is to be found in sections 631 and 633 of the Kentucky Statutes, and is as follows:

"Section 631. Before authority is granted to any foreign insurance company to do business in this State it must file with the commissioner a resolution adopted by its board of directors, consenting that service of process upon any agent of such company in this State, or upon the commissioner of insurance of this State, in any action brought or pending in this State, shall be a valid service upon said company; and if process is served upon the commissioner it shall be his duty to at once send it by mail, addressed to the company at its principal office; and if any company shall, without the consent of the other party to any suit or proceeding brought by or against it in any court of this State, remove said suit or proceeding to any Federal court, or shall institute any suit or proceeding against any citizen of this State in any Federal court, it shall be the duty of the commissioner to forthwith revoke all authority to such company and its agents to do business in this State, and to publish such revocation in some newspaper of general circulation published in the State.

"Section 633. Licenses to agents of foreign companies must be renewed annually in the same manner as original licenses, upon a finding by the commissioner that the company represented by the agent has fully complied with the law, and maintains its required capital or reserve; and whoever solicits and receives application for insurance on behalf of any insurance company, or transmits for any person other than himself an application for insurance, or a policy of insurance to or from such company, or advertises that he will receive or transmit the same, or who shall, in any manner, directly or indirectly, aid or assist in transacting the insurance business of any insurance company, shall be held to be an agent of such company within the meaning of this article, anything in the policy or application to the contrary notwithstanding; and any person acting as the agent of any company within the meaning of this section, without first procuring and having a license from the commissioner to act as such agent, or, after such license has expired, been suspended or revoked, or who shall procure any premium or obligation therefor by fraudulent representations, shall be deemed and held guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction for such offense shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100 for each offense."

The question involved here was presented for adjudication in this State for the first time in Commonwealth v. East Tennessee Coal Co., 97 Ky., 238, and Commonwealth v. Jellico Coal Co., Id., 246. These cases arose under section 572 of the Kentucky Statutes, the two corporations, as their names import, being coal companies. The opinions in both were delivered by the court through Judge Eastin, and contain a learned and thorough discussion of the question at bar. In both section 572, which, as said before, applies to foreign corporations (except insurance) doing business in the State, was held to be void, because in contravention of the Constitution and laws of the United States. These cases are both practically overruled by the opinion of the majority, although this has not been done in express language; the court, as it seems to me, unsuccessfully seeking to distinguish them from the cases at bar, and in so doing inadvertently, of course, misstating the question involved in them. The following is the language of the opinion with reference to the case containing the reasoning on the constitutional question: "The case of Commonwealth v. East Tennessee Coal Co., 97 Ky., 238, did not involve the revocation of a license granted by the State, but was in effect similar to Barron v. Burnside, above cited, being a proceeding to impose a fine on the defendant after it removed a case from the State court."

Judge Eastin commences his opinion with the following language: "This appeal involves the constitutionality of section 572 of the Kentucky Statutes, which is in these words, to wit:" * * * Then, after citing section 572, he said: "Under this provision of the statutes this action was brought by appellant in the Whitley Circuit Court for the purpose of having it judicially declared that appellee had forfeited its right to carry on business in Kentucky, and of enjoining it from doing so. In the petition it is alleged that appellee is a foreign corporation, created by the laws of the State of Tennessee, but engaged for several years past in carrying on business in Whitley county in this State, and that on May 14, 1894, it had, by proper proceedings, procured the removal from the Whitley Circuit Court, of an action therein pending against it, to the Federal court sitting at Frankfort, Ky., on the alleged ground that said suit involved a controversy between citizens of different States, and that this was done without the consent of the adverse party to said action. It is further alleged that by this action appellee has forfeited its right to carry on business in this State, but that, notwithstanding this fact, it is still engaged in carrying on its business in Whitley county, Kentucky, and the court below is asked to decree the existence of the alleged forfeiture and to enjoin appellee from further continuing its said business in Kentucky."

So that the court are mistaken in supposing that the case explained simply involved the imposition of a fine. It was nothing more or less than a proceeding to revoke the license or right to do business in Kentucky of a foreign corporation for the sole reason that it had exercised its privilege of removing an action, instituted against it by a citizen of this State, to the Federal court. In principle the questions involved there and here are identical. With this question before it the court there held that section 572 was unconstitutional, after a review of all the Federal decisions on the subject. The opinion concludes in these words: "From this review of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States it would seem that there is no longer any question as to the invalidity of legislation such as this act we are now considering. Those decisions establish the doctrine that this right of removal is a constitutional privilege conferred by the Constitution, and laws of the United States upon every citizen of a State, foreign to the State in which the suit is brought, which would clearly embrace all foreign corporations; and any legislation on part of the State, by which it is proposed or designed to take away that privilege, even under the power of the State to fix the terms upon which the corporation may enter that State, for the purpose of doing business, is unconstitutional and void. In accordance with these views we adjudge that section 572 of the Kentucky Statutes is unconstitutional, and that the demurrer of appellee to the petition filed, against it by appellant was properly sustained."

The case of Commonwealth v. Jellico Coal Co. did involve the right to fine a foreign corporation for removing an action instituted against it by a citizen of the State to the Federal court, and the right to impose this fine was denied upon a simple question of procedure under the statute; however, the court did not rest here, but, after deciding the case adversely to the Commonwealth on the first ground, said: * * * "But, in addition to this, and for the reasons fully set forth in the opinion this day delivered in the case of Commonwealth v. East Tennessee Coal Co., ante, page 246, with which this appeal was heard, it is the opinion of this court that the section of the statute above referred to is in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and, therefore, void."

So that it is plain that this court, as then constituted, were of opinion that section 572 was unconstitutional, and under its provisions neither a fine could be imposed for a violation of its terms, nor the right to do business by a foreign corporation prevented in a direct proceeding had for that purpose.

These cases, and especially the first one, so far as the principle involved is concerned, are identical with that in the case at bar. Of course I recognize the inutility of pointing out a conflict between older and later opinions of the same court on the same question; the last is always the law. But I deeply regret that an opinion showing such painstaking labor and learning, as does that in Commonwealth v. East Tennessee Coal Co., should receive no better fate at the hands of the court, as at present constituted, than to be silently ignored, or, worse still, should only have been thought worthy of a casual line, which wholly misstates the question involved. But there are cases which can not be so lightly thrust aside, being the utterances of the Supreme Court of the United States, which is the final expositor of all questions arising under the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

The question in hand, so far as I am advised, was adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States for the first time in Insurance Co. v. Morse, 87 U. S. (20 Wall.), 445. This case went up from the State of Wisconsin under a statute, the pertinent part of which is as follows: "It shall not be lawful for any fire insurance company, association or partnership, incorporated by or organized under the laws of any other State of the United States, or any foreign government, for any of the purposes specified in this act, directly or indirectly to take risks or transact any business of insurance in this State unless possessed of the amount of actual capital required of similar companies formed under the provisions of this act; and any such company desiring to transact any such business as aforesaid by any agent or agents in this State shall first appoint an attorney in this State on whom process of law can be served, containing an agreement that such company will not remove the suit for trial into the United States Circuit Court or Federal courts, and file in the office of the secretary of state a written instrument, duly signed and sealed, certifying such appointment, which shall continue until another attorney be substituted."

The question arose in this way: The Home Insurance Co. of New York having been sued in Wisconsin by a citizen of that State, undertook to remove the action under the Federal statute to the Federal court. This was resisted because the company had agreed, in compliance with the statute above quoted, not to remove such actions to the Federal courts, and this fact being established, the State court refused to permit the removal, and entered judgment on final hearing against the company. The Supreme Court of the United States, on writ of error, reversed the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, and returned the case, with directions to grant the removal in accordance with the prayer of the petition. This was done on two grounds: First, that the agreement was void at common law; and, second, it was void because it was in contravention of the national Constitution, and statutes passed pursuant thereto, permitting the removal in question. The court said (page 458): "We are not able to discover in this case any countenance for the statute of Wisconsin which we are considering.

"On this branch of the case the conclusion is this;

"1st. The Constitution of the United States secures to citizens of another State than that in which suit is brought an absolute right to remove their cases into the Federal court upon compliance with the terms of the act of 1789.

"2d. The statute of Wisconsin is an obstruction to this right, and is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the laws in pursuance thereof, and is illegal and void.

"3d. The agreement of the insurance company derived no support from an unconstitutional statute and is void, as it would be had no such statute been passed."

The case of Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co. afterwards went up from the Supreme Court of Wisconsin to the Supreme Court of the United States on a different phase of the same statute. In that case the insurance company removed the cause, and the State authorities undertook to revoke the license to do business in the State for this violation of the statute. The company instituted a suit in equity for an injunction restraining the secretary of state from this alleged wrongful act. A temporary restraining order was entered, and upon final hearing was made perpetual. On appeal the Supreme Court held that the foreign insurance company was without remedy under the circumstances, and that the State could revoke the license even under an unconstitutional law. There can be no doubt that the opinion in this case fully sustains that of the majority in the case at bar, and if it still expresses the law my brethren are correct in the conclusion they have reached in the cases under consideration. But afterwards the case of Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S., 186, came on for adjudication, and involved a still different phrase of a similar statute. This case arose in Iowa, under a statute not differing in principle from any of the statutes hereinbefore stated or discussed. The law denounced a fine against any foreign corporation doing business in Iowa without a permit or license sections 8 and 4 being as follows:

"Section 8. Any foreign corporation sued or impleaded in any of the courts of this State upon any contract made or executed in this State, or to be performed in this State, or for any act or omission, public or private, arising, originating or happening in the State, who shall remove any such cause from such State court into any of the Federal courts held or sitting in this State, for the cause that such corporation is a nonresident of this State or a resident of another State than that of the adverse party, or of local prejudice against such corporation, shall thereupon forfeit and render null and void any permit issued or authority granted to such corporation to transact business in this State; such forfeiture to be determined from the record of removal, and to date from the date of filing of the application on which such removal is affected, and whenever any corporation shall thus forfeit its said permit no new permit shall be issued to it for the space of three months, unless the executive council shall for satisfactory reasons cause it to be issued sooner.

"Section 4. Any foreign corporation that shall carry on its business and transact the same on and after September 1, 1886, in the State of Iowa by its officers, agents, or otherwise, without having complied with this statute, and taken out and having a valid permit, shall forfeit and pay to the State for each and every day in which such business is transacted and carried on the sum of $100, to be recovered by suit in any court having jurisdiction. And any agent, officer or employe who shall knowingly act or transact such business for such corporation when it has no valid permit as provided herein shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each offense shall be fined not to exceed $100, or imprisoned in the county jail not to exceed thirty days, and pay all costs of prosecution."

The Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co. was an Illinois corporation doing business in Iowa without the permit or license required by the statute. One of its engineers was arrested and fined for carrying on the business of the corporation when it had no permit to do business in the State. When this case came to the Supreme Court both of its former adjudications on this subject were reviewed, and the conclusion reached that the whole statute was void, because of the unconstitutionality of that part which undertook to prohibit foreign corporations from removing causes against them to the Federal court. On the subject of Doyle v. Continental Insurance Co., after thoroughly discussing it, the court said (page 199): "The point of the decision seems to have been that, as the State had granted the license, its officers would not be restrained by injunction, by a court of the United States, from withdrawing it. All that there is in the case beyond this, and all that is said in the opinion which appears to be in conflict with the adjudication in Insurance Co. v. Morse, must be regarded as not in judgment."

I differ from the majority in construing this language of the opinion. It seems to me that it was meant to overrule the opinion then under review.

Any other conclusion would make it meaningless. There is no doubt but that the Iowa statute applied to the foreign insurance company involved in the litigation. Mr. Justice Blatchford opens his opinion with the following sentence: "The statute manifestly applies to the Northwestern Railway Co. as an Illinois corporation;" so that if the statute was valid the proceeding against the offending engineer was also valid, as there was no question in the opinion as to the commission of the acts which contravened the statute. The court concludes its review of the two cases in the following language: "In both of the cases referred to, the foreign corporation had made the agreement not to remove into the Federal court suits to be brought against it in the State court. In the present case no such agreement has been made, but the locomotive engineer is arrested for acting as such in the employment of the corporation, because it has refused to stipulate that it will not remove into the Federal court suits brought against it in the State courts, as a condition of obtaining a permit, and consequently has not obtained such permit. Its right, equally with any individual citizen, to remove into the Federal court, under the laws of the United States, such suits as are mentioned in the third section of the Iowa statutes is too firmly established by the decisions of this court to be questioned at this day; and the State of Iowa might as well pass a statute to deprive an individual citizen of another State of his right to remove such suits. As the Iowa statute made the right to a permit dependent upon the surrender by the foreign corporation of a privilege secured to it by the Constitution and laws of the United States, the statute requiring the permit must be held to be void."

The inherent infirmity of the majority opinion lies in the effect it gives to an unconstitutional statute. The Supreme Court, in the case of Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. Rep., 442, on this subject, says: "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no right; it imposes no duty; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed."

In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (page 188) it is said: "When a statute is adjudged to be unconstitutional it is as if it has never been. Rights can not be built up under it; contracts which depend upon it for their consideration are void; it constitutes a protection to no one who has acted under it, and no one can be punished for having refused obedience to it before the decision was made."

If this be the law, then so much of the statute under consideration as is admitted to be unconstitutional is as if it had never been enacted by the legislature. Where, then, is the warrant of the insurance commissioner for the revocation of the licenses in these cases? It is no answer to say that if a State may refuse to permit a foreign corporation to do business in the State, or to arbitrarily revoke its license so to do (or, in other words, revoke it for no reason), that, therefore, it may do this for an invalid reason, or under the authority of an unconstitutional statute. A State can only speak through its laws, and if the law is invalid, then the State has not spoken at all. The Commonwealth has not undertaken to prevent foreign corporations from doing business in the State, or to revoke their license so to do "for no reason," or arbitrarily; it has said to its insurance commissioner that he must grant foreign insurance companies license to transact business

In this State when they comply with certain requirements, and that he must revoke this license if they remove to the Federal court a suit against them by a citizen of the State. Now this latter part of the statute is conceded to be void, being in contravention of the laws of the United States, therefore, in reading the statute it must be omitted, and when this is done we find no warrant for the action of the commissioner. To illustrate this, take a pen and erase from the face of the statute those parts which are admitted to be invalid, and then it will present its legal attitude towards foreign corporations; and nothing will be left which authorizes the revocation of the license. Of course this view is predicated upon the theory that the statute is separable, and that the valid part may be segregated from the invalid. If this can not be done, then the whole statute is void, and there is no law whatever on the subject, and, as a consequence, still less authority (if that were possible) for the revocation.

No practical difference can be pointed out between the statutes of Wisconsin, Iowa or Kentucky on the subject under discussion. They were all enacted for the same purpose, and even the verbiage is remarkable in its similarity. In the case at bar the corporations bear the same attitude towards the laws of the State of Kentucky as did the corporation toward the laws of the State of Iowa, and the analogy is complete when the license is revoked by the commissioner, for a corporation whose license is revoked is in precisely the same relation towards the law as one which never had a license. If this be so (and it seems axiomatic), of what avail is the conclusion of the majority, if it results that the revocation of the license is a mere brutum fulmen, and that the State is unable to invoke the vindicatory part of the statute because of its invalidity? Is so fine a distinction worth the drawing? It seems to me this must be answered in the negative. And yet this is the precise result of the revocation of the insurance commissioner in these cases if the opinion in Barron v. Burnside expresses the law.

The opinion of the majority, as said heretofore, is not only contrary to authority, but also to reason. The policy of the national law under discussion is to place, as far as possible, a citizen of one State engaged in litigation with a citizen of another State on a plane of equality before the law; in other words, to make it possible that the stranger may defend his property or rights, free from the bias of local prejudice or passion. No disinterested mind will deny that this is a just policy. The question then is, whether this beneficent policy, in the interest of a fair and impartial trial to the foreign citizen, may be nullified by a statute enacted for the selfish purpose of giving the citizen the advantage of a trial close to his home (to put the most favorable construction on it), without any regard to the still greater distance of the stranger from his home, and his inconvenience on that score, or of the danger of his suffering from local prejudice or passion in a suit with the citizen. The State statute considers only the convenience of the citizen as measured by the additional distance to the place of trial after removal of the case to the Federal court, and ignores the danger to the foreigner of a miscarriage of justice, on the merits of the controversy, arising from local prejudice or passion in the State tribunal. The existence of such a statute, in itself, affords a justification of the national policy, as expressed in the removal statutes, if such justification were needed.

It may not be altogether impertinent to the subject in hand to say, in conclusion, that it would be well to remember that it is a narrow and provincial view, to regard these national laws as harsh and severe edicts imposed by a foreign suzerain, instead of benignant laws imposed by ourselves in the interest of a broad and national justice; and that in their practical operation many more of our own citizens are benefited by them in their litigation in other States than are inconvenienced by them in favor of citizens of foreign States litigating in our Commonwealth.

For the foregoing reasons I dissent from the opinion of the majority of the court in these cases.

COMMONWEALTH v. DUNCAN, &c.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Lien—The lien provided for in section 2557, Kentucky Statutes, only affects the property of one who knowingly rents his property for the illegal sale of liquor, and in this action the property belonging to the seller, the demurrer to the petition was properly sustained in an action to enforce a lien upon it for the payment of fines assessed against him for the illegal sale of liquor.

J. N. Sharp and N. B. Hays for appellant.

T. Z. Morrow for appellees.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Fines amounting to $1,550 were assessed in favor of the Commonwealth against the appellee, Joe Duncan, under indictments charging him with selling liquor in violation of an act approved May 15, 1884, which prohibited the sale of spirituous, vinous and malt liquors in the counties of Knox and Whitley. The appellee failing to pay the fines, this, an action in equity, was instituted in the name of the Commonwealth, in which it is averred that there is a lien upon the real property of the appellee where the liquor was sold to secure the payment of the fines and costs. A demurrer was sustained to the petition, and this appeal brings here for review that action of the court.

It is urged that section 2557, Kentucky Statutes, gives the lien sought to be enforced in this case. In the first part of this section the penalty is denounced against one who sells, barter, loans, etc., liquor in violation of law. There is another part of the section which reads as follows: "And any person who knowingly furnishes or rents a house, room, wagon, or any conveyance or thing, in which spirituous, vinous or malt liquors are sold, bartered or loaned, in violation of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $60 nor more than $100, and the house, wagon, vehicle, land or other thing in which the liquors were sold, bartered or loaned shall be liable for all fines adjudged against the person selling, bartering or loaning the same."

From the averments of the petition the house where the liquors were sold belonged to the seller, therefore, he was not a renter of the premises. The clause quoted was for the purpose of preventing persons from knowingly furnishing or renting a house or room to one for the purpose of selling liquors in violation of law. There is no lien created by statute upon property, except that of the person who knowingly rents his property for the illegal uses mentioned. The court would be adding a clause to the section if it should hold that there was a lien upon the property of one who illegally sold liquors thereon. The court is not concerned with the purpose of the legislature in not inserting a provision in the statute which would give a lien for the fines sought to be recovered. The legislature thought it wise to give such a lien against the property of one who knowingly furnished or rented property for the illegal sale of liquor for only the fines assessed against the seller. Without deciding the question, we have assumed the section of the statute quoted applies to special prohibitory acts, because if it does the alleged lien does not exist. There are other questions raised in the case which we do not deem necessary to discuss here, because the conclusion we have reached obviates the necessity of a consideration of them.

The judgment is affirmed.

TUDOR v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Attorneys at law—Proceedings to disbar—A lawyer should never be disbarred upon testimony of a doubtful character, and in this action the prosecuting witness admitting that appellee had rendered him legal services, his testimony sustains appellee's in that the latter testified that the witness owed him, and that the amount paid was a payment upon that debt.

Tobias Gibson and Hobbs & Farmer for appellant.

N. B. Hays, Loraine Mix, John R. Allen and Samuel M. Wilson for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Based upon the affidavit of R. E. Smith an information was filed against the appellant, S. M. Tudor, for the purpose of disbarring him as an attorney at law. There is really but one charge sufficiently averred against appellant, and that may be stated by a quotation from the finding of the court, which is as follows: "The court finds from the evidence that the defendant, S. M. Tudor, an attorney at law of the bar of Fayette county, has been, and is, guilty of malpractice as an attorney, and of conduct such as is unbecoming and improper in an attorney at law, and that renders him unworthy and unfit to be or remain an attorney at law, in that, after being employed by one M. A. Pharis to prosecute and to aid in the prosecution of one R. F. Smith upon the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, as charged in the information, and while he was so employed, and after said prosecution had been instituted, and while same was still pending, the said S. M. Tudor, as the court finds from the evidence, entered into an agreement with said R. E. Smith, whereby, in consideration of $10, agreed to be paid by said Smith to said Tudor, and of which $5 was in fact then and there paid to him, said Tudor agreed and undertook to have said criminal proceeding dismissed and no prosecution had against said Smith."

We do not reach the same conclusion that the lower court did on the question of fact. If Tudor was employed by Pharis to represent him in the prosecution, and he accepted money from Smith in consideration that he would dismiss it, he was thereby guilty of malpractice, and should for that reason have been suspended from practicing or disbarred, as the court thought proper under all the facts of the case. The charge, if at all, must have been sustained by the testimony of R. E. Smith, who confesses his own shame and wrongdoing in an effort to gratify his ill-will toward the appellant, not to conserve the morals of the community, or to uplift the legal profession. Tudor says that Smith owed him a fee, and that the money was paid on that, and not for the purpose stated by Smith. Smith admitted that Tudor had rendered legal services for him. In this respect he sustains Tudor. While it was unfortunate for Tudor that he collected his fee at the time and under the circumstances detailed, still we can not find from the evidence that he used the prosecution for the purpose of aiding him in the collection of his fee. He did not look up Smith and demand his fee, but Smith admits that he sought and obtained the interview with Tudor at which time he says Tudor was guilty of the wrongdoing. We do not think that Smith's evidence sustains the charge against Tudor. The court should never disbar a lawyer, and thus deprive him of his chosen profession, and perhaps his only means of a livelihood, on testimony of a doubtful character.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

WOLFORD v. STEELE.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Contracts for the sale of mineral rights—Fraud—Evidence—The evidence conducing to show that appellee was seventy-four years of age, in infirm health and illiterate; that the mineral rights were worth much in excess of the amount appellant agreed to pay for them; that appellee had another tract of land which was the one he thought he was selling, the mineral rights in; that he was induced by the nephew of appellant, who was a secret partner of appellant's in the transaction, to go over to appellant's house where the conveyance was signed, and there given whisky, the lower court improperly adjudged a specific performance. The purchase money paid should be returned appellee and the action dismissed.

Roscoe Vanover and J. F. Butler for appellant.

James M. Roberson for appellee.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellee, R. Steele, in the Pike Circuit Court for a specific performance of a contract for the sale to him by appellant of all the coal and other mineral rights underlying two hundred acres of land in Pike county, Kentucky. The consideration for the conveyance was $60 cash in hand paid, and the agreement on the part of Steele to pay $1.50 per acre for the mineral rights as soon as the land could be surveyed.

By the terms of the contract Steele was to have ingress and egress over and under the land for the purpose of mining and marketing the coal and minerals, with the right to build tramroads, railroads and switches, and erect tipples and other buildings necessary to mine coal and minerals, with timber for all mining purposes, and with the right to use stone and water for mining purposes.

Among other defenses appellant set up the fact that he was seventy-four years of age, of infirm health, and without any education whatever, being unable either to read or write; that he did not agree to sell and convey the mineral rights under the land described in the petition, and the contract filed an exhibit herewith, but that his agreement was to sell to appellee the mineral rights under two hundred acres of land, the most of which was other than the land described; that he did not agree to allow his vendee the right to build tipples, houses and railroads on his land, or to allow him the unlimited right to take timber for the purpose of operating the mine; that the contract, after it was written, was not read to him in whole, and was a fraud in the way it was written; that R. D. Wolford, who wrote the contract, was his nephew, and was a silent partner with Steele in the purchase of the mineral rights in question; that this fact was concealed from him, and that he would not have permitted his nephew to write the contract had he known that he was interested in the bargain; that the coal and mineral rights described in the petition and contract were worth many times the sum of $1.50 per acre; that the contract was a fraud upon his rights, and does not represent the true agreement between him and appellee.

The evidence shows that the mineral rights under the land in question are far more valuable than the contract price, being worth anywhere from $15 to $25 per acre; that appellant is an old, infirm and ignorant man, unused to the ways of the world; that his nephew, D. F. Wolford, is an educated, bright, wide-awake real estate agent; that just prior to the transaction here involved he was engaged in buying up the mineral rights of the surrounding land for a foreign corporation or company, and that he entered into an arrangement with the appellee, Steele, by which the mineral rights under the land in question were to be purchased of appellant, the title to be held by Steele, but of which Wolford was to be an equal, but secret, partner. In pursuance of this agreement Wolford gave appellant's son $5 to bring him (appellant) over to Wolford's house, a distance of three or four miles. There appellant was given a drink or two of whisky, and the trade was made, being reduced to writing by the nephew, and witnessed by him. It is admitted that D. F. Wolford desired to keep the fact that he was a partner secret, the reason being given by him that he did not desire his company to know that he was buying this very valuable tract of mineral land on his own account.

We think the evidence shows that the land was far more valuable than the average mineral land in the neighborhood, there being five distinct seams of coal, one above the other, in the same hillside, several of them exceedingly valuable; and this, doubtless, was the reason that the well-informed real estate agent was anxious to acquire title to himself, and to keep the matter secret from his employer; at any rate, he was buying his old uncle's property, and wrote the contract without acquainting him with his interest in the transaction. Of necessity, his aged relative relied upon him with more confidence, he being disinterested, than if he were one of the purchasers.

The evidence as to whether the writing sets forth the real contract is very conflicting. Appellant and his son swear positively that it does not; whereas Steele and D. F. Wolford are equally positive in their testimony that it does truly show the contract as made. Ordinarily, where the evidence is so nearly equi-ponderant, we would leave the chancellor's conclusion on the facts undisturbed; but we are impressed with the belief that the facts of this case bring it within the purview of Wollums v. Horsley, 93 Ky., 582, a case very similar to this in the facts as well as the legal proposition involved. In that case we laid down the principle, based upon undoubted authority, that we would not specifically enforce a hard and unconscionable bargain where the ability and knowledge of the contracting parties was so unequal as to result in one being overreached, and his property sacrificed by the inadequacy of the consideration. In that case, as in this, the real estate man was a bright, wide-awake, alert trader, and the vendor an old, uneducated, afflicted man, and, as in this, the consideration was several times less than the real value of the property sold. We said: "A contract ought not to be carried into specific performance unless it be just and fair in all respects. When this relief is sought ethics are considered, and a court of equity will sometimes refuse to set aside a contract, and yet refuse its specific performance. * * * The contract was not equitable or reasonable, or grounded upon sufficient consideration, and no interest has arisen in any third party. A court of equity should, therefore, refuse its specific enforcement, but the appellant should have what was in fact paid, with its interest; and when this is done his petition should be dismissed."

We do not think that the fact that nearly or quite all of the purchase money was paid distinguishes the case at bar from that cited. In this, as in that, whatever has been paid must be returned, with interest, and when this is done, the parallel between them will be complete. Upon the authority of the case cited, when this returns to the circuit court, the purchase money received by appellant should be repaid, with interest, and when this is done the petition should be dismissed.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

CAMPBELLSVILLE TELEPHONE CO. v. LEBANON, LOUISVILLE AND LEXINGTON TELEPHONE CO.

(Filed January 18, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Helm, Bruce & Helm for appellant.

Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey and Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

The following extension of opinion was delivered by Judge O'Rear:

Lest the expression in the original opinion, that the duration of the contract between appellant and appellee must continue during the corporate existence of the two companies, should be misleading, we extend the opinion so as to express more clearly what was meant. The contract should endure so long as the parties to it, and their successors continue to maintain an exchange or public station at the cities of Lebanon and Campbellsville, or at the intermediate point of Phillipsburg. Should either of the parties elect to withdraw from the city of Lebanon or Campbellsville, and quit doing telephone business or operating public station or exchange at either of those points, then the contract would be terminable by that fact, although the company so withdrawing might continue its corporate existence, and do a telephone business elsewhere. But so long as it exercises its franchise in maintaining an exchange or public station as a telephone corporation in the cities or at the station now served in that community, they must observe the constitutional requirement and maintain the connection and transmit messages between their respective lines.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. HAYS' ADM'R.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damages—Instructions—The verdict and judgment in this action for $2,000 for damages against appellant for the killing of appellee's intestate will not be disturbed where the evidence shows that deceased was either on the crossing or near it, so near as for all practical purposes to be on it; that it was about dusk; that deceased stopped on a spur so as to allow a freight train to pass when the engine with the tender towards him, backing towards the public crossing, ran over him. If signals were given the noise occasioned by the passing train; its exhausting its steam; the ringing of its bell were well calculated to drown whatever sounds were made in the way of warnings by those in charge of the engine which ran over deceased. Upon this state of case the court below was authorized to refuse an instruction asked by appellant, based upon the idea that deceased was a trespasser.

Robbins & Thomas, J. M. Dickinson and Pirtle & Trabue for appellant.

H. T. Smith for appellee.

Appeal from Fulton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Armstead Hays, a negro man, was run over and killed by one of appellant's engines in Fulton, Ky., at or near the intersection of Walnut street with its right of way. To recover damages for this injury this action was instituted, it being alleged that the accident was caused by the gross negligence of appellant's employees in charge of the engine. The answer placed in issue all of the affirmative allegations of the petition, and also contained an affirmative plea of contributory negligence, which, by consent, was controverted of record, thus completing the issues. A trial resulted in a judgment of $2,000 in favor of appellee (plaintiff). To reverse the judgment based on this verdict this appeal is prosecuted.

The facts are substantially these: Fulton is a city of some 3,500 or 4,000 inhabitants. Walnut street is one of the public thoroughfares, and is crossed from north to south by appellant's right of way. The intersection made between the street and the right of way was occupied by appellant's main track and a switch which separates into two spurs. The three tracks are spread out over the intersection in a fan-like shape, occupying a large part of it. The accident occurred about 7 o'clock in the evening, it being about dusk, and just before the electric lights of the city were turned on. As Armstead Hays was crossing the intersection of the street and right of way from west to east he encountered a long line of freight cars being backed from north to south across the street, completely blocking the highway, and forcing him to stop, which he did on spur No. 1. About twenty feet south of the crossing on spur No. 1 one of appellant's engines was standing with its tender towards the point where Hays was standing, and some fifteen or twenty feet from him. This engine had been run in on the spur in order to give the freight train, which was passing at the time, the right of way on the main track, and it was the purpose of those in charge of it to back down on the main line as soon as the track was clear of the passing freight train. Before the freight train passed the point opposite to where Hays was standing it had cleared the switch further north, so that the engine, by backing down, could regain the main track, and this the employees undertook to do, and, in so doing, backed over Hays, killing him instantly.

The evidence shows, without contradiction, that there was no light on the tender, or any person there to see that the way was clear as it crossed the highway. As to whether or not the bell was rung, or whistle blown, before the engine was started on its course the evidence is somewhat conflicting; but we are of opinion that at least the bell was tapped several times, and perhaps the whistle blown. At the time this was done, however, the heavy freight train was passing immediately in front of Hays, and the bell on its engine was being rung, and the engine was exhausting loudly, and these sounds, together with those rumblings usually resulting from the passing of heavy trains, were well calculated to drown whatever sounds of warning were made by those in charge of the engine immediately prior to the time it started.

We can not agree with learned counsel for appellant that the fact that Hays stopped in front of the passing freight train, although he was standing on the spur of the track upon which was the engine in question, was per se negligence on his part. For the purposes of this case, it may be conceded that he was some eight or ten feet south of the south crossing instead of being precisely on it. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the crossing of Walnut street and the right of way was one of the most popular thoroughfares of the city, and that many people passed and repassed there daily; that these passers did not always confine themselves to the mathematical line of the crossings, but constantly quartered across the street as convenience and inclination dictated. We think it is immaterial whether the decedent stood precisely on the crossing, or whether he was a few feet to the south of it. This was a place which the public constantly used, and appellant was bound by this habitual use to expect persons to be there. Common experience teaches that at such crossings the traveling public is not, and can not be, restricted to precise mathematical lines in crossing; therefore, the decedent was not a trespasser so as to bring him within the principle that appellant's servants owed him no duty except to refrain from injuring him after his peril was discovered. The tender of the engine was within twenty feet of the crossing; there was no light on it, and nothing to attract the attention of Hays as he stood waiting for the freight train to pass so that he could cross the street. From their position in the cab of the engine appellant's servants could not see a man standing on the track within less than sixty or sixty-five feet from the rear of the tender. This was demonstrated by actual experiment afterwards: so that when the engine commenced to back across the highway those in charge could not see whether there was any one on the crossing or not; and, although they were bound to know that the noise of the passing freight train was calculated to drown the signals given by themselves, they, without light or an attendant on the tender, backed over one of the most constantly used thoroughfares in the city. A glance at the map filed with the transcript convinces us that Hays, as he stood waiting for the passing of the freight train with all of its noises, was in a veritable death trap if the engine on the spur commenced backing before the freight train cleared the crossing in front of him; and, under all the circumstances of this case, we are impressed with the conviction that the employees in charge of the engine on the spur, taking into consideration the dusk of the evening, the noise of the passing freight train, the absence of light on the tender, or of an attendant there to give warning of danger, were guilty of at least ordinary negligence in running over the deceased in the manner in which they did.

We have said so often and so uniformly that where the tracks of a railroad run through cities, and especially at public crossings, those in charge of its trains owe to the public a vigilant lookout to prevent accidents that it is not worth while to cite those cases here. We do not mean to in anywise abate the doctrine, that one who is unlawfully or without right on a railroad track is a trespasser, and that the corporation owes him no other duty than the exercise of a reasonable care to avoid injuring him after his peril is discovered; but this doctrine has no place where the accident occurs at, or so near as to be practically at, a public crossing in a city. At such a place we do not believe that the operators of an engine can back it over the crossing without some one in charge who can see the danger ahead, and so control the engine as to prevent injury, without being guilty of negligence. Let us suppose that some misfortune happened to one at a crossing; that he had caught his foot in such a way as to be enabled to get off the track; or that his horse had become frightened and balked, and he was unable to control it; or that any one of a great number of possible accidents of this nature had occurred; of what avail then would it have been to have blown the whistle or rung the bell, if those in charge could not see the danger ahead, and those in peril were unable to save themselves by getting off the track? We think, under these circumstances, no one would claim that the employees were free from negligence, although they had rung a bell and given the "back-up signal."

The same principle applies where the circumstances are such that the one in danger either can not hear the signals by reason of other noises made by the defendant's employees and cars, or, for the same reason, becomes confused and does not understand them. As the tender of the engine was turned towards the public crossing, with no light on it, the passerby, without his attention being particularly called to it, would not notice its presence, or perhaps would not know it was an engine at all, and he certainly would not expect it to be backed along the switch over the public crossing while a heavy train was being operated along the main line over the same crossing. It seems to us that this act in itself was negligent, as one so caught between the trains, even if he saw the coming engine, might by the confusion of fright and excitement be rendered helpless. We do not think the court erred in refusing to give instruction "D.." asked for by appellant, which was based upon the decedent's 'being a trespasser at the time he was killed, for the reason that the evidence shows (stating it most favorably to appellant) that he was either on the crossing, or so near it as for all practical purposes to be on it; that the general public often made the same use of the right of way as did the decedent, assuming him to have been eight or ten feet south of the crossing, and appellant's employees had a right to expect that persons would at any time be on the right of way near the crossing where the decedent, according to Mr. Bennett's testimony, was standing. The decedent's standing there was not a mere arbitrary use of appellant's right of way, but he was stopped there by the freight train passing along the main track, and, as said before, we think it was negligence in the operators of the engine to have backed it blindly over the public crossing in the manner that is conceded to have been done in this case. The questions of law arising from the facts were fully and fairly presented by the instructions.

The judgment is affirmed.

VOGEL, &c. v. MOORE, &c.

(Filed January 12, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Sales of merchandise—Where the evidence in this action showed that the goods were sold in the usual course of trade and without other warranty than the law implies in such sales; that the goods were retained by the purchasers for about seven months, before offering to return them; that one of the partners asked indulgence on the claim, never complaining of the goods or offering to return them, and most of the goods being sold, it is manifest that the defense is an afterthought and without merit.

2. Evidence—It was error for the lower court to exclude the testimony of appellant's salesman, to the effect that the goods of which appellees complain to him in their store were not a part of those sold by him, but were bought by another dealer.

John W. Rodman for appellants.

B. G. Williams for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellants on June 22, 1903, sued appellees in the Franklin Circuit Court for $259.81, balance due upon account for merchandise, consisting of boots and shoes, sold and delivered them in the months of August and September, 1902.

The statement of account filed with the petition indicates that appellees purchased of appellants, August 19, 1902, a bill of goods mentioned, amounting to $180.85; September 12, 1902, another of $182.36, and yet another of $23.40 September 15, 1902, making altogether $385.71, and appellees are credited in the account by $26.40, paid February 3, 1903, and $50, paid May 18, 1903, leaving unpaid the sum of $259.31 sued for. The purchase of the foregoing bills of merchandise, as well as the correctness of the respective amounts charged therefor, were admitted by the answer of appellees. It is averred in the answer that in addition to the several bills of merchandise mentioned in the petition appellees purchased of appellants two others, one of $754.50, July 11, and one of $187.20, August 5, 1902; that at the time of making the order of July 11, 1902, appellees being ignorant as to the quality and workmanship of such boots and shoes as were sold by appellants, the latter gave an express warranty to the effect, first, that the boots and shoes they would furnish them should be of first class quality and workmanship; second, that they would be satisfactory to appellees and adapted to their trade; third, that if the goods were found to be unsatisfactory to appellees, and unsuited to their trade, appellants would take back such of them as were not of the quality warranted, and give appellees credit therefor.

It was further averred in the answer that the boots and shoes furnished appellees by appellants under the foregoing alleged contract of sale and warranty were discovered by appellees to be of inferior quality and workmanship, unsalable and unsuited to appellees' trade, and consequently unsatisfactory to them; that many of the boots and shoes sold by appellees to their customers out of the stock bought by them of appellants were soon returned to them as worthless, and that by reason of the inferior quality of the boots and shoes sold them by appellants, and their unsuitableness to appellees' trade, they were unsalable, and the bulk thereof were left upon their hands, or had to be sold at great loss, instead of profit, whereas if they had been of the quality and workmanship represented by appellants and suitable for appellees' trade, as warranted, they would have readily sold in great numbers and at a profit to appellees of not less than 25 per cent., amounting in the aggregate to $318.75.

It was further averred that at the date of the filing of the answer appellees had on hand $496.55 worth of the boots and shoes sold them by appellants, which they expressed a willingness to return to appellants. The answer was made a counterclaim and judgment was asked thereon against appellants for $551.16 damages on account of the alleged breach of warranty complained of, which sum was made up of the $318.75, alleged loss of profits, and $237.41, the amount of the difference between $496.55, the alleged value of the unsold goods purchased by appellees of appellants, and the $259.14 claimed by appellants in their petition.

By an amended answer, which, though objected to, appellees were permitted to file, they averred that upon their discovery of the alleged defective quality and workmanship of the boots and shoes purchased of appellants, they offered to return them, but that appellants refused to accept them. A demurrer was filed by appellants to the answer and counterclaim as amended, but overruled by the court, to which they excepted. Thereupon they filed a reply, controverting the material averments of the original and amended answer and counterclaim. Upon the trial of the issues thus formed the jury returned a verdict for appellees, which in effect allowed only so much of their counterclaim for damages as equalled in amount the balance of $259.14 due appellants upon account as claimed in the petition.

Judgment was entered upon the verdict dismissing the petition and allowing appellees their costs. Appellants filed motion and grounds for a new trial, but the motion was overruled, and the record brought to this court by appeal presents for our consideration the judgment and rulings of the lower court complained of. We think the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to the answer and counterclaim as amended, as the facts stated therein do not constitute a good defense, or cause of action upon the counterclaim.

It will be observed that the answer expressly admits the appellees' indebtedness for the amount claimed in the petition, and that this amount, $259.14, is all that remained unpaid of an indebtedness of $1,255.09, contracted by them for goods purchased of appellants between July 11 and September 15, 1902. It is averred in the answer and counterclaim that $942 worth of the goods received by appellees of appellants were purchased prior to August 19, 1902, and that the contract containing the alleged warranty from appellants set out in the answer was made when the orders of July 11 and August 8, 1902, for goods were made by appellees. It is not, however, averred in the answer and counterclaim that the warranty of appellants extended to or embraced the subsequent sales of goods of August 19, September 12 and September 15, 1902, and yet the goods purchased by appellees at the three sales last named are the goods for the price of which appellants sued in this case. In other words, the language of the answer and counterclaim seem to confine the alleged warranty to the two sales of July 11 and August 5, 1902.

It is not averred in the answer and counterclaim in what respect the boots and shoes were defective, or why they were unsalable, and the statement of the pleaders that they were not adapted to the trade, or satisfactory to appellees or their patrons, is a mere conclusion.

It is not alleged in the pleading in question when or in what manner it was to be ascertained whether or not the boots and shoes purchased by them of appellants were of first-class quality and workmanship and suited to their trade. It should have been averred when these facts were to be determined whether by an agreed date, or within a reasonable time. Nor is it alleged when or how the goods were to be received by appellants or returned to them in the event they were found to be of defective or of unsalable quality. Were they to be shipped to appellants, or were the latter to receive them at appellees' place of business? It is true the averment is made that when appellees discovered the defects in the goods they notified appellants of that fact and offered to return them, but when was the discovery made? Was it within a time fixed by the contract of sale, or in a reasonable time? The answer is silent on these points.

We can not look to the evidence for the facts omitted from the answer. They must be alleged because they are essential, and the counterclaim will not present a cause of action without them. But it will be found that the evidence heard in the trial threw little, if any, light upon these questions; that of appellees conduced to show that many of the boots and shoes sold by them to their customers did not give satisfaction, and were returned. It is not altogether certain, however, that those sales were from the goods purchased by appellees of appellants. Indeed there was evidence to the effect that appellees while holding appellants' goods had other shoes purchased of a different dealer, which were of very inferior quality, and all the evidence in behalf of appellants tended to show that their goods sold appellees were of good quality and workmanship, and such as were adapted to the local trade of a country store.

While it does appear that appellees at one time in the fall of 1902, expressed to appellants' salesman, Johnson, dissatisfaction with a small lot of goods shipped them by appellants, they, by Johnson's direction, reshipped them to appellants, and the latter gave them credit therefor, amounting to $26.40. It further appears that in the latter part of August, 1902, and about two months after ordering the first bill of goods of appellants, appellee Moore paid to J. J. Vogel, one of the appellants, $940 upon account, which payment was made in appellees' store at Elmore, in Franklin county, as Vogel was on his way to Frankfort from the Lawrenceburg Fair and according to the testimony of Vogel and Johnson, who was with him, the appellee, Moore, then made no complaint about the goods sold his firm by appellants; upon the contrary, after that time they purchased of appellants two of the bills of goods to recover the prices of which this action was brought. At the time of the payment of $940 appellees had had about two months' time in which to ascertain the quality of the goods theretofore sold them by appellants, and it is not reasonable that they would have made such a large payment, which in fact amounted to about all they were owing appellants at the time, if they were dissatisfied with the goods, or they were not of the quality represented by the sellers.

The evidence introduced by appellants further conduced to prove that the goods sold by them to appellees were purchased by the latter in the usual course of trade, and without any other warranty than that implied by law in such sales, and we think the circumstances attending the following sales support this theory. But if it be conceded that the purchases of goods made by appellees of appellants were under such a contract and warranty as contended by them, it not being alleged or proved by appellees when the quality of the goods were to be ascertained by them or when they were to be returned to the sellers if found defective and unsuited to appellees' trade, it was the duty of the latter, as a matter of law, to ascertain these facts within a reasonable time after receiving the goods, and in like reasonable time to return or offer to return them. If this was not done, the law presumes, and appellants had the right to conclude, that appellees were satisfied with the goods, or if they were not of the quality and description contracted for, that the defects were waived. (Dana v. Boyd, 2 J. J. M., 594; O'Bannon v. Rief, 7 Dana, 320; Kerr v. Smith, 5 B. M., 553; Jones Bros. v. McEwan, 91 Ky., 373; Benjamin on Sales, 4th edition, sections 600 to 609.)

The reason for this rule is a sound and equitable one. It is that "when the vendor tenders (or delivers) the goods in discharge of the contract and they do not come up to the stipulation, if the vendee, after having inspected them, or after having a fair opportunity to do so, would reject them, the vendor, in many cases, could comply with his contract by delivering other goods of the contract description or quality; or, in the absence of such right or opportunity, he would have the opportunity to take charge of them and dispose of them himself, rather than confide the sale of them to the vendee, whose interest might be to have recourse on the vendor and to handle the goods with that view alone, or his business capacity might be such that the vendor would not be willing to trust him. But if the vendee, after inspecting, or having a fair opportunity to inspect, the goods, were allowed to receive them in discharge of the contract, and then hold the vendor responsible for actual or supposed defects by exposing him to actions on the warranty on account of defects, but really to cover losses resulting from short-sighted speculation, or the wayward changes in the market after he had been led to believe that all was satisfactory, would be most inequitable." (Jones Bros. v. McEwan, supra, 91 Ky., 373.)

It is disclosed by the record in this case that appellees retained the goods shipped them by appellants from the time they were received until May 19 of the following year, a period of about seven months, before offering to return them. On that day appellees sent their attorney, W. L. Jett, to Louisville to see appellants, and he testified that he made them a tender of the goods then on hand, amounting in value to $496, in discharge of the debt named in the petition, and demanded in money the difference between the debt and the value of the goods. This statement was denied by appellant, J. J. Vogel, and his clerk, they stating that Jett only offered a compromise by paying their debt with some of the goods in appellees' possession, which they refused. But assuming that the conversation occurred as stated by Jett, it is nevertheless evident that the offer to return the goods came too late.

During the seven months they were held by appellees all of the goods except $496 worth were sold by them during the month of February, 1903, and later the appellee, Moore, repeatedly wrote appellants begging indulgence upon the debt sued on, and never once complaining in these letters of the goods, or offering to return them. In fact, on May 18, 1903, the day before they sent Jett to Louisville with the offer to return the goods, he paid appellants' Frankfort attorney $50 on his indebtedness to appellants, and after he was sued mortgaged the goods in controversy with his entire stock to his brothers, and still later made a deed of assignment of them to his brothers, thereby putting it out of his power ever to return the goods. It is manifest from the evidence that the defense interposed by the appellees to the claim sued on was, and is, an afterthought, and without merit. Under the uncontradicted facts of this case as presented by the record the trial court ought to have held as a matter of law that the defense relied on was not good, as appellees were too late in offering to return the goods, and should have peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the appellants the amount of the debt sued on. It follows from this conclusion that the instructions given were improper and erroneous.

The trial court erred in excluding the testimony of the appellants' salesman, Johnson, to the effect that the goods of which appellees complained to him in their store were not a part of those sold them by appellants, but were bought by appellees of another dealer. The excluded testimony was clearly competent.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to grant appellants a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HALL v. CONTINENTAL INSURANCE CO. OF NEW YORK.

(Filed January 17, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Insurance—Assignment and transfer of policy—In this action to recover upon a policy of insurance, where it is apparent that the agent undertook to facilitate the transfer of the policy to appellant, and for this purpose mailed him a blank application for the consent of the company, and that appellant failed to sign and forward the necessary application, and pending the negotiations the property burned, the court correctly awarded a peremptory instruction to find for appellee.

Bloomfield & Crice for appellant.

W. M. Oliver and Oliver & McGregor for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Mrs. Eliza Sanderson was the owner of a farm, with a dwelling house and other improvements thereon, in McCracken county, Kentucky. While the title to the property was in her she secured a five years' term fire insurance policy from the appellant company on the dwelling and its contents, the risk being distributed as follows: Three hundred dollars on the household effects and six hundred dollars on the dwelling. The insured had paid an annual premium January 1, 1901, which kept the policy in force until January 1, 1902.

On October 16, 1901, she sold and conveyed the property to appellant, T. E. Hall, the money consideration being part cash, lien reserved for the remainder; she also agreed to assign the policy to her vendee. On November 6, 1901, she did assign the policy by a writing on the back thereof, and delivered it to the agent of the insurance company, Joe W. Hughes, for the purpose of having the company consent to the assignment. Thereupon the agent entered into a correspondence with Hall on the subject, and their letters constitute all the evidence of what took place between them, and are as follows:

“November 23, 1901.

“Mr. Hall, Milburn, Ky.:

“Dear Sir—Enclosed find application that you will fill out, showing your relationship to the property, in regard to the title, encumbrances, etc.; also a guarantee that you will pay the remaining installments as they fall due, $9.60 January 1, 1902, and January 1, 1903.

“As we haven't your address we will have to use an indirect way of reaching you through mail.

Very truly yours,

“JOE W. HUGHES, Agent.”

“Milburn, Ky., December 16, 1901.

“Dear Sir—Your letter has been received. I understand that part of that policy is on household goods. I have nothing to do with anything but the amount on the house. If it is all right I am willing to assume the payment of premium if transfer is properly made. Please let me hear from you in regard to the matter.

Respectfully yours,

"T. E. HALL."

"December 18, 1901.

"Mr. T. E. Hall, Milburn, Ky :

"Dear Sir—Yours of the 16th to hand. In regard to the matter, I will say that in the policy there is $500 on the dwelling house, $100 smokehouse and $200 on personal property in dwelling. Where the house is occupied by a tenant the rate is higher, and to cancel the personal property of $200 it would make the premium just about the same as if you was taking a new policy, so if you will simply fill out the blanks and send them to me, the policies will be properly transferred and forwarded to you.

"Please attend to the matter and oblige,

"Very truly yours,

"JOE W. HUGHES, Agent."

"Milburn, Ky., December 12 21-01.

"Dear Sir—Answering your letter of —, will say, I expect to occupy the place after one year. Would be willing to pay the premium you demand for that time, but no longer. Let me hear from you at once, and oblige,

"Yours,

"T. E. HALL."

"December 23, 1901.

"Mr. T. E. Hall, Melber, Ky. :

"Dear Sir—Yours of the 21st to hand. Will say in regard to policy No. 283144-5 saying that you guarantee the payment for one year, that would not be be satisfactory to the company. The policy is written to expire January 20, 1904. However, you have the right to cancel the policy at any time you desire by paying the company a short term rate for cancellation, but I will say that from the time you occupy the place yourself that it will reduce the rate 25 per cent. I guarantee to furnish you as cheap insurance on the property as any company would do.

"Trusting that upon receipt of this that I will receive the necessary blanks filled out and executed as I have heretofore sent you.

"Yours very truly,

"JOE W. HUGHES, Agent."

On the back of the policy, and immediately underneath the blanks provided for the assignment by the original insured and for the consent of the company thereto, is the following stipulation: "No local agent or other representative, except the general manager, has the power to consent to the assignment of this policy or any indorsement thereon.

"All assignments or indorsements must be made by the duly authorized general manager of this company at Chicago, Ill."

It is apparent from the correspondence between the agent and the vendee, Hall, that the former undertook to facilitate the transfer to the latter of the policy, and for this purpose mailed him a blank application for the consent of the company, together with a statement showing his relationship to the property, its title and encumbrances, etc.; also a guarantee that he would pay the remaining installments of premium as they fell due. The correspondence speaks for itself, and shows beyond question that Hall failed to sign and forward the necessary application, which was required before the company would agree to accept him as the insured under the assignment. Pending the negotiations the house burned.

There can be no question as to the rule of law that before a policy of insurance secured by the owner of property can be transferred or assigned to his vendee the consent of the company must be obtained; and this is the plain stipulation on the face of the contract involved in this litigation. Usually the question of consent is a matter of dispute, and very intricate and troublesome questions of fact arise as to whether or not the company has consented. In this case, however, there is no such difficulty; it is not pretended that the vendee, Hall, ever had communication with any agent of the company, except the correspondence above given, and this conclusively shows, as before stated, that he failed to comply with the terms of the company, and was not accepted by it as an insured; and that, therefore, he had no contractual relations with it. The following authorities support the views here expressed: Hays v. Continental Insurance Co., 7 Ky. Law Rep., 524 (Superior Court, Bowden, J.); Green v. Kenton Insurance Co., 12 Ky. Law Rep., 750 (Superior Court, Barbour, J.), and Queen Insurance Co. of America v. Block, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 626, Hobson, J.

The facts above detailed appearing in the evidence of appellant (plaintiff), the court correctly awarded a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for appellee (defendant) at the close of the testimony for appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

HARMON v. STUART.

(Filed January 18, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Practice—Setting aside submission—Where appellant had been absent in South America and in England during the period of the litigation, and the letters of his attorneys had failed to reach him apprising him of its condition and status, and reached this country just a few weeks after the submission, when he found papers and memoranda which were of vital importance to him in his case, the ends of substantial justice require that the submission should be set aside, and that he be allowed time to take proof to enable him to prepare his case.

J. M. Benton for appellant.

G. B. Nelson for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

On the former appeal of this case the judgment in favor of the plaintiff was reversed and the cause remanded for a settlement of the partnership between appellant and appellee. (Stuart v. Harmon, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1820.) The mandate having been filed in the lower court an order of reference was entered on October 24, 1903, for the settlement of the partnership as directed in the opinion. At the February term, 1904, the master commissioner filed his report of settlement showing a balance in the hands of Harmon due the firm of $29,955.50. Both sides filed exceptions to the report and the case was submitted on the exceptions, little proof having been taken after the return of the case from this court. On May 2, 1904, and before the case had been heard, Harmon filed the affidavits of himself, Tazewell Ellett, William Beckner, John Stokes Adams and W. W. Weigly, with four exhibits, and moved the court to set aside the order of submission and permit him to retake his own deposition and the depositions of the witnesses named. In these affidavits Harmon showed that he had been absent from this country during the past twelve months, and had not been advised of the progress or condition of the litigation. He had just learned that a settlement as to disbursements made by him and expenses incurred was required.

On the original hearing Stuart produced a letter from Harmon, stating that when the deal was closed he could show the whole thing up through the Union Trust Co. of Philadelphia. His attorney in preparing his case had written to this trust company to get the information which it had, and receiving no answer and Harmon being in South America, the attorney went to Philadelphia and applied to the trust company for the information, but was informed by it that the officers of the company had changed; that they knew nothing about the matters and were satisfied the papers had been turned over to the parties in interest. Shortly before the May term Harmon, by employing counsel in the East, had procured the trust company to look up the papers and it had found papers which would enable Harmon to show the court the condition of the account, and from these papers the recollection of the witnesses whose depositions were proposed to be retaken were unfinished so that now, with the aid of the papers, he would be able to establish the facts which theretofore he had been unable to establish. He also showed by the affidavits of Ellett, Weigly and John Stokes Adams that he could prove by them facts of vital importance in his behalf. The court overruled his motion to set aside the submission and gave judgment against him for something over $13,000, with interest from January 1, 1887.

Whether or not the submission should be set aside and a further opportunity given the defendant to take proof is within the sound discretion of the court, and is to be determined by it under all the facts and circumstances in aid of substantial justice. Harmon had been in South America and after this in London; the letters of his attorneys had failed to reach him; their efforts to obtain the evidence had also failed, and when he reached this country a few weeks before the May term, and after the submission of his case, he succeeded for the first time in finding the papers and producing the memoranda which were of vital importance to him in getting his case properly before the court. In view of the large amount involved and the importance of the evidence, and in view of the fact that Harmon had been absent from this country since the reversal of the case in this court, and that the letters of his attorneys had failed to reach him, and he was unapprised of the condition of the litigation, we think that the ends of substantial justice require that the submission of the case should be set aside and a reasonable opportunity given him to take his proof. But in view of the length of time the litigation has been pending, and the fact that the case had been submitted on the merits after a report from the commissioner on the proof before the court, the submission must be set aside on the condition that Harmon, within thirty days after the entry of the order, pay the costs of the action up to May 2, 1904. If he fails to pay the costs within that time the judgment will stand. He should be allowed sixty days to take such further proof as he may desire, after the payment of the cost of the action.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

MAHAN v. DOGGETT.

(Filed January 18, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Evidence—In this action to recover damages for the injury to his property by appellant's sawmill, the evidence showing that the chute that carried off the dust was so built as to deposit the saw dust within a few feet of appellee's lot; that finer particles of it invaded his house, injuring his furniture, clothing, etc., killed his garden, it was not improper to permit the plaintiff upon the trial to prove that other mills burnt their dust as the tendency of this evidence was to show that there was another and a proper way to dispose of the saw dust.

2. Instructions—An instruction telling the jury that they should find for plaintiff such sum in damages as would compensate him for injury sustained by deposit of saw mill dust upon his premises, in injuring his trees, garden, furniture, etc., was not only right as far as it went, but it might have gone further, and defined that plaintiff was not only entitled to the use of his property, but that he had the right to enjoy it in peace and comfort.

R. C. Burns for appellant.

R. L. Greene and Montague & Williams for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant operates a large steam sawmill on his lot in Catlettsburg, adjacent to the lot of appellee. Appellee has a dwelling house on his lot which he occupies with his family as a residence. Appellant, in disposing of the saw dust from his mill, built a chute through which the sawdust was forced by a machine, called a cyclone, creating a powerful draft by which the saw dust was thrown and scattered with great force. The chute was so built as to deposit the saw dust within a few feet of appellee's lot. The force by which it was driven was so great that the finer dust was scattered all over appellee's premises, and invaded his house, settled upon his furniture, carpets, bed clothing, wearing apparel, upon the dishes, on the victuals that were being cooked for the family. It so filled the atmosphere that it was breathed by the family. It settled upon his garden and killed it. It made his home almost uninhabitable for a time. Appellee sued to recover the damages. The verdict of the jury gave him $500.

The allegation of the petition was that appellee's property was worth $1,740. Appellant complained that the verdict allowing appellee $500 as damages is excessive. He also complains that there is no evidence whatever as to the value of appellee's property. However, the allegation in the petition of its value is not denied by the answer. Appellant also complains that the court erred in failing to define a correct measure of damages, or any measure of damages, to the jury, and that they were consequently left to conjecture in fixing them. In instructing the jury the court told them that if they found for the plaintiff that they would find for him such reasonable sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence would compensate him for the injury done to his house, lot, fruit trees, ornamental trees, shrubbery, grape vines, garden, furniture, beds or clothing, or any of it that was injured by the saw dust of defendant's mill, being carried through the chute and caused to deposit or settle upon plaintiff's property.

So far as the instruction went it was right. It stopped short of giving the plaintiff as much as he was entitled to. Of this appellant, the defendant, can not be heard to complain. The plaintiff was entitled not only to use his own property without its being injured by defendant, but he had the right to enjoy it in peace and in comfort, free from such molestation. If appellee's complaint was true, and the verdict of the jury found that it was, he was entitled to recover for the discomforts suffered by him and his family in addition to the actual damage done to his property, or he was entitled to recover for such discomforts even though his property sustained no actual damage.

Appellant's suggestion that the measure to recover was the difference between the rental value of the property for the length of time that the nuisance continued, whether for several weeks or months, and for such sum as would compensate the plaintiff to remove from his property during that time, is wholly untenable. Appellant's use of his mill in the manner in which it deposited the saw dust constituted a nuisance to the plaintiff's premises, sounding in trespass. It was a willful and high-handed disregard of the rights of the adjacent property owner. All the damages occasioned by it ought to have been recovered by the injured party. The complaint is also made that the court erred in admitting evidence to the jury that other sawmills burnt their surplus sawdust instead of scattering it, or depositing it where it would not become a nuisance in the neighborhood. It was objected that this fact was irrelevant. Its tendency was to show that there was another, and a proper, way of disposing of that article so that it would not work an injury to others. That fact was clearly relevant to have been shown. The manner of showing it, even though irregular, could not have been prejudicial to appellant in this case. His own witnesses proved that he himself had had a blast or furnace for consuming his own saw dust, and rebuilt another immediately after the injury complained of in this suit, and that that was done because it was the best way of disposing of the saw dust; that the acts complained of were committed while appellant's furnace for burning the saw dust was out of repair, and the chute was only a temporary affair. Furthermore, it was such an obvious fact, and one so well known, that it may be fairly presumed that a jury of ordinary intelligence was aware of it. We see nothing in the record in the nature of a prejudicial error to appellant's substantial rights.

Therefore, the judgment is affirmed, with damages.

GERMAN-AMERICAN INSURANCE CO. v. YELLOW POPLAR LUMBER CO.

(Filed January 18, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Insurance—Abrogation of clause—In this action for the recovery of insurance upon appellee's lumber there is some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not what is known as the "clear space clause" was abrogated before the loss, but the question was submitted to a jury, who found for appellee, and the preponderance of the evidence appears to sustain the verdict on this point.

2. Authority of agent—Where the agent of an insurance company had the power to issue a policy of insurance no reason can be seen why he could not make a new contract by annulling a space clause upon receiving additional premiums. A contract of insurance is not within the statute of frauds. It is not necessary that it should be in writing, it may be changed by parol, even though the contract provides that it shall only be changed by writing. The act of the agent in abrogating the contract was not a waiver of its provisions, but a new contract, and the court below was correct in so holding.

T. R. Brown for appellant.

Hager & Stewart and Robert L. Greene for appellee.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This action was instituted upon two policies of insurance, appellee suing to recover damages for loss occasioned to, and sustained by, appellee by reason of a fire occurring on September 8, 1900, resulting in the destruction and loss of a stock of lumber in its lumber yard at Scranton, Ky.

One of the policies was for $2,500, dated 21st day of April, 1900, the other for $3,000, dated June 7, 1900, each extending for one year. The issuance of the policies, the company's authority to do business in Kentucky, and the authority of its agent at Ashland to issue policies, was admitted by appellant's answer. The answer also admits the description of the property covered by the insurance, notice of loss, proofs and acceptance thereof, and failure to pay for the loss. While the answer denied total loss and the value of the property destroyed, and denied the ownership by appellee of the same, these facts were proven on the trial, and were virtually abandoned by appellant, and are not urged as causes for reversal on this appeal.

Each of the policies in suit when issued contained what is known in lumber insurance as a "clear space clause," appearing on slips annexed to and forming a part of the policy. The clause is as follows: "Warranted by the assured that a continued clear space of 150 feet shall hereafter be maintained between the property hereby insured and any wood working or manufacturing establishment, and that said space shall not be used for the handling of lumber thereon for temporary purposes, tramways, upon which lumber is not piled, alone being excepted. But this shall not be construed to prohibit loading or unloading within, or the transportation of lumber and timber products across, such space, it being especially understood and agreed by the assured that any violation of this warranty shall render this policy null and void."

It appears from the petition that the space named in this clause was not maintained at the time, and for some period prior to the fire and destruction of the lumber, and in avoidance of the effect of this clause it was in substance alleged that after the policies were issued and delivered it was ascertained that appellee could not maintain or keep clear the space required, and it, on or about the 16th day of July, 1900, made and entered into an agreement and contract with appellant's agent at Ashland, Ky., who was authorized to make the contract, by which, in consideration of additional sums named, to be paid as premiums on each of the policies, "the clear space clause" was abrogated, and appellee was from that date not required to maintain the clear space of 150 feet around the lumber insured. It was also agreed at the time that appellant's agent should prepare a slip evidencing this contract, to be attached to the policies and forward same to the office of appellee, which, on account of the neglect of appellant's agent, was not done until the day after the fire.

Appellant, by pleading, denied such a contract, or any contract, with reference to the abrogation of the clear space clause, and denied the power or authority of its agent to make such a contract, and alleged that the contracts of insurance or policies filed with appellee's petition were made and accepted upon these terms, to wit: It was agreed between the parties thereto, and made a part of the policies, that no officer or agent, or other representative of the insurance company, had power to waive any provision or condition of same, except such provisions or conditions as by the terms thereof might be subject of agreement endorsed thereon, and as to such provisions or conditions it was agreed between the parties that no such officer or agent or other representative of the company had power or authority to waive such provisions or conditions, unless such waiver be written upon, or attached to, said policy, and that no privilege or permission affecting the insurance under the policies should exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached, and denied that it or its agents at any time wrote upon, or attached to, the policies any agreement of waiver or abrogation of the agreement for maintaining the "clear space" clause, and in apt terms denied all allegations as to breach of the contract of insurance.

There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether or not the alleged abrogation of the clear space clause in the policies was made before the loss. The question was submitted to the jury, and it found in favor of appellee, and we are of the opinion the preponderance of the evidence sustains the verdict on this point. The only remaining alleged error complained of by appellant which we deem necessary to notice is the question whether or not the agent of appellant had the power and authority to make the contract referred to in the manner stated, and bind the appellant. This court has repeatedly decided that an agent's acts within the general scope of his authority binds his principal. (87 Ky., 285; 90 Ky., 89; 87 Ky., 539; 91 Ky., 208; 94 Ky., 197; 98 Ky., 305; 17 Ky. Law Rep., 619; 24 Ky. Law Rep., 57; May on Insurance, sections 126 and 144; Joyce on Insurance, sections 395, 398 and 425.)

It was proven that Davis, appellant's agent at Ashland, had authority to accept fire insurance risks on its behalf, countersign and issue and deliver its policies of insurance, renew risks, and collect and receive premiums therefor; and before the loss of the property by fire agreed with appellee, in consideration of its (appellee's) agreement to pay therefor additional premiums of \$87.50 on one policy, and \$70 on the other, to abrogate and waive the agreement as to maintaining the clear space clause, and also agreed that this abrogation and waiver should take effect and be in force from that day, to wit, 16th of July, 1900. Upon the principles of the foregoing authorities and facts proven we find that the agent of appellant was its general agent in the transaction in question; that he made the agreement for insurance to apply upon abolition of the clear space clause. He represented the appellant in effecting the insurance originally, signed and delivered the policies covering the risk at the premium rate of 2 per cent. on the hundred. It was within his power and authority as agent to have written the insurance, in the first place, without the "space clause" at the premium rate of $5\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and having such power we can see no reason why he could not make a new contract and annul the space clause upon receiving additional premium sufficient to make the sum $5\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on the \$100.

He could have, by agreement with the appellee, annulled these policies and immediately made another contract, either written or verbal, with appellee, insuring the property for a like amount for the premium of $5\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., leaving out the "clear space" clause, and the contract would have been binding upon appellant. Appellant claims that this new contract of its agent is not binding upon it because it was not evidenced by a writing endorsed or attached to the policies in the manner required in a printed condition of the policy. A contract of insurance is not within the statute of frauds. It is not necessary that it should be in writing, and although in writing, it may be changed by parol, even though the contract provides that it shall only be changed by writing. (Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Splers, &c., 87 Ky., 285; Baldwin v. Fire Ins. Co., 107 Ky., 356; Howard Ins. Co. v. Owens, 91 Ky., 199; Mattingly v. Springfield Fire and Marine Ins. Co., 26 Ky. Law Rep., —.)

In the last-named case this court said: "A contract of insurance is not within the statute of frauds. It may be oral as well as in writing, and although it is in writing like any other contract, it may be modified by a subsequent agreement between the parties. The fact that the contract provides that no subsequent agreement shall be valid unless in writing and endorsed on the policy, does not change the rule, for this part of the contract stands like any other part of it, and may be changed by a subsequent parol agreement, just as any other provision of the contract may be subsequently modified."

This rule is supported by the previous cases referred to, and by the decisions of a majority of the States. Appellant relies very strenuously upon an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, the case of Northern Ins. Co. v. Grand View, &c., Ass'n, 183 U. S., —. Deference and great respect is always due this exalted tribunal, but in this case it should be borne in mind that the Supreme Court was not construing a provision of the Constitution of the United States, an act of congress, a treaty, or giving an exposition of law upon which its judgment would be final and conclusive here and elsewhere. The court was dealing with a question of general jurisdiction, upon which it was privileged, as this court is privileged, to exercise an independent judgment. It is no new thing for this court and the honorable Supreme Court to be in disagreement upon questions of general law. To review the long line of authorities in Kentucky, and bring them in accord with the conclusion reached by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case quoted above would be to confess previous inability of this court to make and declare the law governing the rights and responsibilities of insurance companies and their patrons in this State. This would amount to an abdication of duty by the supreme judicial power of this State. We refer to a few cases in distinct opposition to the holding of the Supreme Court in that case: German-American Ins. Co. v. Norris, 100 Ky., 33; Queen Fire Ins. Co. v. Kline, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 620; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Hartley, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 57; National Ins. Co. v. Tweedle, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 881; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Trimble, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1497; Mattingly v. Springfield Fire and Marine Ins. Co., supra.)

We are of the opinion that the act of appellant's agent in abrogating the clear space clause was not a waiver of the provisions of the original contract, but it was an additional contract, made upon a valuable consideration, was binding upon appellant, and the lower court did not err in so holding.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is affirmed.

COUCHMAN v. BUSH, &c.

(Filed January 11, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Beckner & Jouett and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellant.

Geo. B. Nelson, J. M. Benton, J. T. Shelby and D. L. Pendleton for appellees.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

The court delivered the following extension of opinion:

Mrs. Couchman rendered some services as executrix; besides, the record fails to show she was not willing to render services as such. She is entitled to share in the commissions allowed the executors. (Garr, Ex'or, &c. v. Roy, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1697.) This question was overlooked in the consideration of the case, hence the opinion is extended.

ERWIN v. BENTON, &c.

(Filed January 19, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney and D. H. Kincheloe for appellant.

Appeal from McLean Circuit Court.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to motion to advance:

There is a motion to docket and advance this case, apparently on the idea that it is governed by the provisions of the act of 1900 for the trial of contested election cases. But it was held in Shindler v. Floyd, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 882, that the act of 1900 does not apply to contests of local option election. The appeal before us is from the judgment of the circuit court in a local option contest, and as the act of 1900 does not apply to it and the rule of the court is not to docket cases except by consent before the term at which they stand for trial under the Code, the motion to docket and advance this case must be overruled.

BERRY v. LEWIS, &c.

(Filed January 19, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Reed & Berry for appellant.

Husbands & Caldwell for appellees.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

In the petition for rehearing counsel call our attention to subsection 2, section 496 of the Code, which reads as follows: "If the share of a joint owner be of less probable value than $100, a sale of it may be ordered, although the owner of a share worth more than $100 may not consent to a sale."

We are unable to see that this provision has any application to the case before us. The purpose of the provision is to protect the owner of a share worth less than $100, for it applies where the owner of a share worth more than $100 may not consent to a sale; that is not this case. The grammatical construction of the provision would seem to be that the sale of the share of a joint owner which is of less probable value than $100 may be ordered, though the owner of a share worth more than $100 may not consent to a sale of the property.

Petition overruled.

ROGERS v. CONGLETON, &c.

(Filed January 19, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Office and officer—Removal of officer by council—The assessors of cities of the third class are by the provisions of the charter elected by the council, and under the provision of section 3249 may be removed by the council at pleasure; and the fact that section 3254 provides for impeachment of other officers only accentuates and makes clear that those officers elected by the council are not intended to be removed by impeachment.

G. H. Briggs, Eli H. Brown, Jr., and Sam'l D. Hines for appellant.

John W. Ray for appellees.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Frank Rogers was elected by the council of Frankfort, Ky., city assessor for a term of two years. Before his term expired the council, without notice or trial, by a majority vote, undertook to remove him from his office, and were proceeding to elect a successor when this action was instituted for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining them from so doing. The question presented is whether or not such a municipal officer as was appellant can be removed by the council of a city of the third class in the manner in which the removal under discussion was had.

The statutory law bearing upon the subject in hand is contained in the following sections of the Kentucky Statutes:

"Section 3404. Each council shall, at its first regular meeting, or within one month thereafter, elect a city assessor, who shall hold his office two years, and until his successor is elected and qualified.

"Section 3249. All officers, agents or employes elected, appointed or employed by the council may be removed by the council at pleasure."

Section 3297 authorizes the mayor to appoint all police by and with the advice and consent of the common council, and he "may remove same at pleasure, and shall designate one of their number to act as chief of police, and change same at pleasure."

"Section 3254. Except as herein otherwise provided, any officer of the city, whether elected or appointed, may be impeached and removed from office by the common council, by a three-fourth vote of all the members elected, the ayes and nays being called and entered upon the journal, for incompetency, inefficiency, neglect of duty or misconduct in office. The method of procedure shall be prescribed by ordinance."

The assessors of cities of the third class are, by the charter, elected by the council, and, therefore, under the provision of section 3249 may be removed by the council at pleasure. The fact that section 3254 provides for impeachment of other officers than those elected by the council only accentuates and makes clear the provision that those officers elected by the council are not intended to be removed by impeachment; and the fact that the charter shows that the legislature had in its mind two different modes of removing municipal officers makes it entirely plain that the different language used in describing the mode of removal of the two classes of officers meant different things. We can not presume that the legislature, in using the words as to those officers elected by the council, that they might be removed by the council at its pleasure, meant the same thing as the impeachment proceedings provided for in section 3297. This very question arose in the case of London v. City of Franklin, &c., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2306. The officer there involved was the marshal of the city, and the law regulating his removal was as follows:

"Section 3619, Kentucky Statutes. The marshal, assessor, treasurer, clerk and city attorney shall be appointed for a term of two years by the city council, but may be removed at the pleasure of the city council."

In that case the city council removed the officer without notice or trial, as in the case at bar, and this court, in the opinion, speaking through Judge Hobson, held that the city council had a right to remove the officer by the proceedings adopted. It is said in the opinion: "It is insisted for appellant that under the constitutional provision officers of cities and towns may be only removed for cause, and that section 3619 of the statute above quoted must be construed to refer only to removals for cause, or, if not so construed, is unconstitutional. The language of the statute is that the officers named may be removed at the pleasure of the city council. These words have a well-defined legal meaning. The right to remove at pleasure is an entirely different thing from the right to remove for cause. To hold that the statute only authorizes the council to remove for cause would be to deny the words used by the legislature their ordinary meaning. This can not be done." (Kentucky Statutes, section 460.)

The opinion in the case cited is conclusive of that at bar, and the judgment dismissing appellant's petition is affirmed.

SUTTON, &c. v. GIBSON, &c.

(Filed January 10, 1905.)

1. Deed by husband to wife—Delivery—Acceptance—What constitutes—Where a husband made a deed conveying one-half of certain real estate to his wife and the other half to his stepdaughter, reserving a life estate therein in all of the property, but did not deliver the deed to either of the grantees, nor apprise either of them of its execution, but did subsequently give his wife a sealed envelope containing said deed with the request to hold it for him until he called for it, but without informing her of its contents, such acts did not divest the grantor of control or dominion over the deed, and was not an acceptance by the wife of the deed either for herself or for the other grantee.

2. Conveyance by father to daughter—Redelivery of deed by daughter—Effect—Where a father conveyed a house and lot to his daughter and delivered her a deed thereto, and later induced her to redeliver the deed to him, which he, with the understanding that he would convey other property to her in exchange therefor, and afterwards sold and conveyed said property to another, but did not convey to the daughter any property in lieu thereof, it is equitable that said daughter should be reimbursed out of her father's estate for the value of the house and lot at the time she redelivered the deed to him.

Yeaman & Yeaman for appellants.

Montgomery Merritt, Lockett & Lockett and F. J. Pentecost for appellees.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Nathan A. Gibson was four times married. The last marriage was a few months before his death, and after he was seventy years old. He had but one child, appellant, Susan E. Sutton, who was issue of his second marriage. The second wife had been a widow, and had other children, Mary E. Sutton being one of them. Shortly before his last marriage Nathan A. Gibson signed a deed conveying to Nannie H. Buller (whom he was then about to marry and did marry within a few days) a house and lot in Corydon, and one-half of a tract of ninety acres of land in Henderson county, to her in remainder after his death, and so long as she might remain his widow. The other half of the ninety acres was by the same deed conveyed to Mary E. Sutton, his stepdaughter, and to her two children, Oscar Sutton and Eliza Jane Buchanan, the grantor reserving a life estate in all the property. At the time he executed the deed by signing it the grantor did not deliver it, nor did he apprise the grantees of the fact of its execution. After his marriage with Mrs. Buller he gave her a sealed envelope containing this deed, with the request to hold it for him till he called for it. He did not then tell her, nor indicate to her, what the package contained, nor did she know what it contained till after his death. The deed appears to have been acknowledged by the grantor before a deputy county court clerk May 18, 1903. During Nathan A. Gibson's last illness his wife was requested to produce the package, which she did, and sent it into the room where her husband and his physician were. After an hour or so it was returned to her without comment, and she put it away without knowledge of its contents. Gibson died shortly thereafter. A paper purporting to be his last will was produced for probate, evidently prepared when the deed was called for. But on a trial of the will this paper was rejected.

This suit was brought by appellant, the only child and heir at law of Nathan A. Gibson, against his widow, and the other grantees named in the deed, to set it aside on the ground of undue influence exerted on the grantor in its execution, as well as upon the ground that it was never delivered by the grantor, nor accepted by the grantees or any of them, nor by any one for them. The circuit court adjudged that the deed was invalid as to the grantee, Nannie R. Gibson, the widow, because she had elected not to take under it, or, as the court said, had renounced it. The judgment further was that the deed was effective as to the other grantees, and the petition of appellants was dismissed. A deed conveying the title to real estate to be effective must be fully executed between the parties, that is, it must be signed and delivered by the grantor, and accepted by the grantee. Any of these elements lacking, the deed is not a complete instrument. While it is true that a delivery may be by word, or act, or both, by which a grantor expresses a present intention to divest himself of title to property in an appropriate deed, yet his conduct must be such as to indicate the intention to divest himself of the title and all further control over the document purporting to convey it. (Hudson v. Redford, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2347.) It is likewise true that the grantee must generally evince a purpose to accept the conveyance, as it is not competent for the grantor by his act alone to impose a title or the conditions of a conveyance upon an unwilling grantee. An exception to this rule is where the grantee is an infant, or under disability, and the conveyance is beneficial to the grantee. No such conditions exist in the case at bar.

The state of the record before us discloses that the grantor, instead of intending to divest himself of control or dominion over the deed, expressly reserved such by committing the document in a sealed envelope to the care of his wife, with the request that she keep it for him until he called for it. The case is materially different upon its facts and principle from Shoptaw v. Ridgeway, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1495, and Bunnell v. Bunnell, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 800.

Mrs. Buller, as one of the grantees and the one to whom the deed was delivered to hold, was not aware, as stated, of its contents, nor of the fact that it was a deed. Her subsequent refusal to accept it, when made acquainted with its nature, is in itself a declination to become a party to it in any sense. As she did not accept it for herself, and it is not claimed that she was either authorized to, or attempted to, accept it on behalf of the other grantees named, at best it was an unexecuted purpose of the grantor to convey the title to his property. There is another feature of the case, however, which we think should be a condition to the granting of relief in equity to appellants. It is shown in the record that the grantor's stepdaughter, Mary E. Sutton, had lived in his family a number of years, and had, even after she left his family, been a faithful and dutiful attendant upon him in his illness and after the death of his wife; and further, he had received considerable estate from her mother, and frequently acknowledged that he was indebted to appellee, Mary E. Sutton, on that account, and had agreed with his deceased wife, her mother, that he would make provision for Mary E. Sutton out of his estate. Some years prior to the transaction now in suit he had conveyed to Mary E. Sutton a house and lot in Corydon, the value of which is not shown in the record. She was unable to have the deed recorded at the time, and later he induced her to redeliver to him the deed with the understanding that he would convey, or have conveyed, to her other property which he was to get in exchange for that lot. She did redeliver to him the deed, which he destroyed. He subsequently sold and conveyed that property, but he did not convey her any other property. It was to carry out this agreement, as well as the one with her mother that has been mentioned, that the grantor was attempting undoubtedly by the deed now in suit. When he delivered to her the deed to the house and lot in Corydon his title to it passed to her, and became vested in her by its acceptance. It may be seriously questioned whether a redelivery of the deed by her to him operated of itself to divest her of her title. The conveyance of this lot, however, to an innocent purchaser would preclude its recovery by her now.

It is equitable that he should comply with his agreement with her. While it is not in such form that the court could specifically enforce its execution, yet as between her and his heir at law the court may, and will require as a condition precedent to equitable relief in this action, that she be reimbursed the value of that house and lot. The lot taken back by Nathan A. Gibson was exchanged in part for the land undertaken to be conveyed to Mary E. Gibson by the deed in question. Upon a return of the case the chancellor ought to direct further pleadings so as to show the value of the house and lot at the time the deed therefor was redelivered to Nathan A. Gibson, and then adjudge to Mary E. Sutton a lien upon the half interest in the ninety acres of land now in suit to reimburse her for that value.

The judgment as to Nannie R. Gibson is affirmed. As to the other appellees it is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

DUNN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 12, 1905.)

Indictment—Breaking smokehouse—Insufficient allegations—An indictment against one for breaking into a smokehouse and stealing therefrom, which fails to charge that the smokehouse belonged to or was used with a dwelling house, is insufficient to sustain a charge of felony under Kentucky Statutes, section 1162, which provides that "if any person * * * shall feloniously break any dwelling house, or any part thereof, or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and feloniously carry away anything of value, although the owner or any person may not be there, he shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years."

A. F. Byrd for appellant.

N. B. Hays for appellee.

Appeal from Wolfe Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant Dunn was convicted of the offense of housebreaking, and his punishment fixed at two and one-half years' confinement in the penitentiary. He demurred to the indictment against him. His demurrer was overruled, and the sufficiency of the indictment is the first question to be determined on the appeal. The charge of the indictment is that the defendant, Dunn, "did unlawfully, willfully, maliciously, feloniously and forcibly break open and enter into the smokehouse of J. N. Chambers, for the purpose of taking, stealing and carrying away therefrom money, property and things of value, and pursuant to said breaking and entry did take, steal and carry away therefrom about ten gallons of molasses, of the value of $5," etc.

The indictment is based upon section 1162, Kentucky Statutes, which is as follows: "If any person * * * shall feloniously break in any dwelling house, or any part thereof, or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house, and feloniously take away anything of value, although the owner or any person may not be there, he shall be confined in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years."

It will be observed that the charge in the indictment is that the defendant feloniously broke and entered the smokehouse of J. N. Chambers, and that the statute punishes the breaking of any dwelling house or any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house. It is not charged in the indictment that the house broken belonged to or was used with any dwelling house. It is said that a smokehouse is used with a dwelling house, and, therefore, the charge that the defendant broke the smokehouse is sufficient. But the court can not so declare as a matter of law. A smokehouse is not necessarily an outhouse belonging to or used with a dwelling house. True, it usually is used with a dwelling house, but is not always so. The smokehouse may be at one place and the dwelling house at another. The owner, as where his dwelling house is burned, or where he has moved to another, may still retain the smokehouse at the old site. The charge in the indictment that it was a smokehouse which was broken is not, therefore, equivalent to the words of the statute punishing the breaking of "any outhouse belonging to or used with any dwelling house." The indictment is, therefore, insufficient, and the court should have sustained the demurrer to it.

J. N. Chambers should not have been permitted to state what was told him at John Hatton's further than that they received information there that the molasses came from Dunn's, and this only for the purpose of explaining why they went to Dunn's. The admissions of the defendant are always competent evidence against him, and, therefore, T. C. Holland was properly allowed to state what the defendant said to him about Boyd Hatton. This admission served to confirm the testimony of Boyd Hatton, and was, therefore, material. Where a witness is introduced to impeach another witness by evidence that his general moral character is bad, the opposite party may in reply attack the general character of the impeaching witness. (1 Greenleaf on Evidence, section 461; Code of Practice, section 597.)

John Patton, a member of the grand jury, might properly testify that a bottle of molasses which he saw did or did not correspond with the molasses which Dunn made, and it was not material where Patton saw the bottle of molasses, whether in the grand jury room or elsewhere; but before this evidence was admitted it should have been shown that the bottle contained molasses taken from the barrel in controversy.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

HELLARD v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 12, 1905.)

1. Homicide—Mutual combat—On the trial of one for homicide, where the evidence shows that deceased accosted defendant with an insulting remark, and invited him to "come out and take his medicine," whereupon defendant went into his house, got a pistol and returned, when he and deceased engaged in a shooting match till deceased threw down his gun, picked up an axe and continued the fight with it, defendant retreating and shooting as he went, the evidence justified the submission to the jury the question of a mutual and willing combat, as was done by the trial court.

2. Retreating—Abandonment of fight—That the defendant retreated during the conflict seems certain, but a retreat is not necessarily an abandonment. It may be only a falling back on a better position. In order to excuse one who begins a conflict the fight must be abandoned in good faith and in fact. It must be something more than a mental determination to quit. It ought to apprise the other party that his assailant has quit the fight and has relieved him of the necessity for defense which had been imposed on him by the assailant's conduct.

3. Self-defense—The doctrine of self-defense rests both upon actual necessity and apparent necessity. An abandonment of a fight must, therefore, relieve the other party of both actual and apparent danger, and if the person assaulted thereafter renew the conflict or continue it, then the original assailant's right of self-defense attaches as if he had not begun it.

4. While the accused was testifying he was asked the question whether he knew the character of deceased for peace and quiet, to which the court sustained an objection, he was permitted, however, to testify that he was acquainted with his general reputation for peace or violence, and that it was bad, which served every purpose of the excluded question.

R. M. Johnson and C. C. Williams for appellant.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Rockcastle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant appeals from a judgment convicting him of manslaughter. The case as made out by the prosecution is that appellant either began an assault on the man he killed, Abe Drew, and prosecuted it up to the fatal shooting, or that he and the deceased mutually and willingly engaged in the affray resulting in the homicide. In either state of case appellant would be guilty of murder or manslaughter, dependent upon the presence or absence of malice on his part in engaging in the fight. Appellant's version is that he was assaulted by the decedent, and had to shoot, and did shoot, his assailant in his necessary self-defense. The conflicting theories were submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions. It was the jury's province, in no sense ours, to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight to be attached to their testimony. The evidence on behalf of the prosecution is abundant to sustain the verdict. Whether there was any evidence to justify submitting to the jury the question of a mutual and willing affray, it seems to us sufficient to say that there was considerable evidence to the effect that Drew, the man killed, accosted appellant with an insulting remark, and invited him to "come out and take his medicine," meaning that the speaker was prepared to fight, and was challenging appellant to a combat. Appellant, without saying anything, went into his house, got a pistol and returned, when he and Drew engaged in a shooting match till Drew threw down his gun, when he picked up an axe and continued to fight with it, appellant retreating and shooting as he went. The evidence justified the submission of that phase of the case to the jury as was done.

Appellant contends that he abandoned the fight in good faith, even if it be considered that he begun or mutually and willingly engaged in it. That he retreated seems certain. But a retreat is not necessarily an abandonment. It may be only the falling back on a better position, or for strategic reasons, with intention to continue the battle when the advantage warranted it. In such case an assailant who has wrongfully begun a fight can not disarm his adversary of his legal right to pursue his own advantage till his safety is assured. The fight must be abandoned in good faith and in fact. It must be something more than a mere mental determination to quit, even though accompanied with a retrograde movement. It ought to apprise the other party that his assailant has quit the fight, and has relieved him of the necessity for defense which had been imposed upon him by the assailant's conduct. If this were not so, then one in the wrong who has put in jeopardy the life of one assaulted by him, and by appearances has produced upon the assaulted a reasonable apprehension of such danger, under which he has the legal right to fight to the death in his defense, could by his thought change the rightful defense to a criminal act, for changing position alone, may not at all indicate that there is to be a cessation of hostilities. The person who has been assaulted, and who under stress of necessity must act quickly and certainly, ought not to be subjected to the further hazard by his wrongful adversary of having to guess correctly whether a retreating movement is to better the latter's position in the fight, or is an abandonment of it. He who creates appearances of necessity for action should bear the burden of relieving the situation of its threatening aspect by appearances equally reasonable in their assurance. The doctrine of self-defense, it must be remembered, rests both upon actual necessity and apparent necessity. An abandonment of a fight must, therefore, relieve the other party of both actual danger and of such appearance of danger as, operating upon a reasonable mind similarly situated, ought to relieve it of apprehension of immediate or impending danger from that assault. If the person assaulted thereafter renew the conflict, or continue it, then the original assailant's right of self-defense attaches as if he had not begun it. In this case the instruction merely left to the jury whether appellant had abandoned the fight, if he had begun it, mutually and willingly engaged in it. In this it was more favorable to appellant than he was entitled to, as indicated above.

While testifying for himself appellant was asked whether or not he knew Abe Drew's "character as to peace and quiet." The court sustained an objection to the question. Appellant avowed that his answer would have been that he knew him to be a dangerous man. Appellant was permitted, however, to testify that he was acquainted with Drew's general reputation for peace and violence, and that it was bad. This got before the jury all that was involved in the other question. If Drew was notoriously a dangerous, quarrelsome man, and if appellant knew that fact, all of which was thus placed before the jury, every purpose that could have been served by the excluded evidence, had it been admitted, is answered. The general rule is that the general reputation only of the party can be inquired into. Had it not appeared by appellant's testimony that Drew was a violent and dangerous man, or had it appeared on the contrary that he was a peaceable man, it might have been permissible for the accused to show that he personally knew that he was a man of violent passion and temper, and that he always went armed. (1 Roberson's Criminal Law and Pro., 303; Payne v. Commonwealth, 1 Met., 373.)

A number of witnesses testified to appellant's general reputation, tending to impeach him as a witness. Among the number was one John Martin, who was asked on cross examination: "Is it not a fact that you have been impeached three times in Jackson county?"

To impeach an impeaching witness, by proof that he has likewise a bad moral reputation, it is not competent to do so in the manner attempted. If one without personal knowledge of the witness' general reputation had undertaken to say that he had heard that he had been impeached in some other proceeding, manifestly the testimony would be incompetent in form, but not more so than that rejected above. It must be deemed as collateral matter to the issue of the suit on trial. Appellant was also asked while testifying as a witness for himself whether any one had told him, or informed him, that Drew would kill him. An objection to the question was sustained. As put, it does not appear but what it was intended to evoke from the witness whether some person had not told appellant, as a matter of opinion or belief, that Drew would kill him, which was clearly irrelevant; that Drew made threats against appellant's life, and that they were communicated to him were allowed to be proved by appellant and by his informants.

The witness, Hubbard, did finally testify to the facts which the court refused when he was asked certain leading questions concerning them by appellant, whose witness he was. So, although under the rule that a hostile witness may have leading questions put to him, the question excluded ought to have been allowed. Appellant was not prejudiced by the court's ruling.

Whereupon the judgment is affirmed.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. JOLLY.

(Filed January 12, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Action for personal injury—Misconduct of plaintiff's counsel—On a retrial of this case, which had been reversed by the Court of Appeals, it was improper and prejudicial error for counsel for the plaintiff to be allowed to say to the jury against the objection of the defendant that "this case had been once reversed by the Court of Appeals on a technicality, and that the railroad company was furnished with skilled lawyers and stenographer's for the purpose of catching at every little thing in order to again reverse the judgment."

2. Same—On such trial it was also error for the court to permit counsel for the plaintiff against the objection of the defendant to say to the jury that "when railroad accidents occur railroad employees are furnished with statements already prepared, and such employees are required to answer each of the statements 'yes,' in order to hold their job, and if they answered 'no,' they walk a plank," there being no evidence in the case to authorize such a statement.

H. P. Taylor, J. M. Dickinson and Pirtle & Trabue for appellant.

Glenn & Ringo, E. E. Kelley and John B. Wilson for appellee.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion in the first appeal is published in 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1735. The case was then reversed for an erroneous instruction, and for the failure to give an instruction for contributory neglect.

Another trial was had in the lower court, and appellee obtained a verdict for $1,400, from which appellant appeals, and assigns many reasons for a reversal. The facts with reference to the extent of appellee's injuries and the manner and circumstances under which she received same are stated in the former opinion, and we deem it unnecessary to reiterate same. The instructions given by the court on the last trial were in conformity with the former opinion. We deem it unnecessary to here consider any of the many reasons advanced by appellant for a reversal, all of them being without merit, except as to the amount of the verdict and the conduct of appellee's counsel during the trial, and especially in his closing argument to the jury. It appears from the bill of exceptions that during the taking of testimony appellant's counsel made objection to a certain question and answer, when counsel for appellee arose with the remark: "It is the purpose of the plaintiff to follow this defendant to the Court of Appeals again."

In the closing argument appellee's counsel used the following language: "That it had been some four or five years since this suit was brought; that the action had been once reversed in the Court of Appeals on a technicality, and that the railroad company was furnished with skilled lawyers and stenographers for the purpose of catching at every little thing, not larger than that (demonstrating upon his finger's end) for the purpose of again taking the case to the Court of Appeals and reversing the judgment."

Counsel further stated to the jury as a fact in his closing argument as follows: "When railroad accidents occur railroad employes are furnished with statements already prepared, and that such employes are required to answer each of the statements 'yes' in order to hold their job, and if they answer 'no,' they walk a plank."

And again, counsel for appellee used the following language: "That this action had been in the courts some four or five years, and that the railroad company was furnished with lawyers and stenographers for the purpose of catching at every little thing to take the case to the Court of Appeals again, in order to defeat the claim by reversing it, it having heretofore been reversed in the Court of Appeals on a technicality."

It appears from the bill of exceptions that appellant's counsel objected to the foregoing remarks made by appellee's counsel, and asked the court to exclude the same from the jury, which the court refused to do, and appellant excepted. Every case in court should be tried upon the law as given by the court and the facts adduced by the evidence. Every litigant is entitled to this character of trial. The courts should be careful to prevent improper conduct and language of counsel for either side for the purpose of unduly influencing the minds, or inflaming the passions and prejudices of the jury trying the case. Counsel have the right, of course, to argue the evidence, and give their opinion and construction thereof if within the pale of reason. But when counsel in the heat of argument overstep the bounds, and objection is made by the opposing side, the court should exclude the improper matter. The remarks of appellee's counsel, that this lady had obtained a judgment on the former trial; that it had been appealed from and reversed by this court upon a technicality, and that appellant was then preparing, with the assistance of skilled lawyers and stenographers, to appeal from any verdict that might be rendered and obtain another reversal, were improper. The case should have been tried without the jury being apprised of the result of the previous trial and the action of the Court of Appeals thereon.

The statement of appellee's counsel to the jury, "that when railroad accidents occur railroad employes are furnished with statements already prepared, and that such employes are required to answer each of the statements," was not improper, for the evidence tended to show this fact. At least there was some evidence upon this subject. But the latter part of the statement, to the effect "they must answer 'yes' in order to hold thier job, and if they answer 'no,' they walk a plank," was wholly unwarranted, there being no evidence in the record to authorize it. Appellee's counsel stated this as a fact. He did not profess that it was merely an opinion or impression of his own, and such language was calculated to inflame the minds of the jury against appellant and to weaken the strength of the evidence of its employes who had testified before them. (L., H. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Morgan, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 121.) In that case appellee's counsel in the closing argument made use of the following language: "The railroad can appeal this case, but the plaintiff, Morgan, is a poor man, and has no money to appeal with, and will have to accept what you do; but the railroad has the money to appeal this case, and will do so."

Commenting on these remarks this court said: "The court can not afford to take notice of all remarks of counsel that are not strictly within the record. There is a latitude allowed in oral argument, but it should not extend as far as was done in the quotation." (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Hull, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 375.)

In that case the court reversed the judgment on account of improper remarks of counsel for appellee in his closing argument, the language used being somewhat similar to that in the case at bar. The court, in that case, said: "It was improper for the attorney to go outside of the evidence heard by the jury and the law of the case as given by the court. It was especially improper for him to state of his personal experiences which had not been testified to and were calculated to prejudice the jury against the defendant or swell the amount of the verdict. Considering the size of the verdict in connection with the argument of the counsel, we are clearly of the opinion that a new trial should be granted."

On the first trial of this case appellee obtained a verdict for $881; on the last for $1,400. Considering the increase in the amount of the last verdict and the remarks quoted, we are constrained to believe that these improper remarks in all probability prejudiced the minds of the jury against appellant. In view of the amount of the last verdict, coupled with the improper remarks referred to, we are of the opinion that appellant should be granted a new trial.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial under proceedings consistent herewith.

STEELE v. STEELE.

(Filed January 13, 1905.)

Husband and wife—Action by husband for divorce—Defense by wife—Liability of husband for wife's costs and attorney fees—In an action by the husband against his wife, in which he obtained a divorce on the ground of her lewd and lascivious conduct, and in which she filed answer denying the allegations of the petition, and filed a cross petition asking a divorce from him for cruel and inhuman treatment, the wife is entitled to her costs, including a reasonable attorney fee to be paid by the husband, unless it is shown that she has ample estate out of which to pay her costs and attorneys, although the wife was in fault on the merits of the suit for divorce.

Bennett H. Young and M. W. Ripy for appellant.

C. B. Seymour and Jos. E. Conkling for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellee, Andrew J. Steele, instituted this action against his wife, Louise M. Steele, for divorce a vinculo matrimonii, alleging as a ground therefor such lewd and lascivious conduct on her part as proved her to be unchaste. She filed answer, denying the allegations of the petition, and in the second paragraph, which she made a cross petition against her husband, prayed for a divorce from him on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. The chancellor, upon final hearing, entered a decree granting the husband the relief sought, but making no provision for alimony for the wife or the payment of her costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee by the husband. From this judgment she has appealed.

As no appeal lies to this court from a judgment granting a divorce, the only question presented by the record is whether or not the wife (appellant) was entitled to have her costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, paid by her husband, although she was in fault, that being fixed by the decree of the chancellor. It seems to us that this case comes squarely within the purview of the principle enunciated in Turner v. Turner, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 370. In that case the husband sued for and obtained a judgment of divorce from his wife on the ground of abandonment by her, without fault on his part, for one year previous to the institution of the suit. In her answer she denied that she had abandoned her husband, and alleged that he had driven her from his home, wrongfully and without cause, and prayed for a divorce from him on the ground of cruelty. Upon final hearing the court decreed the divorce to the husband, but gave the wife the sum of $200 in alimony. Thereupon the wife entered a motion for an attorney's fee to be taxed as costs in her behalf. This motion was overruled, and she appealed. After reciting the foregoing facts, this court, through Judge Burnam, said: "Section 900 of the Kentucky Statutes provides that in actions for alimony and divorce the husband shall pay the cost of each party unless it shall be made to appear in the action the wife is in fault and has ample estate to pay the same, and in the case of Ballard v. Caperton, 59 Ky., 414, this court said, viz.: 'This provision of the Revised Statutes applies to all suits for divorce and alimony. None are excepted from its operation. And in all such cases the husband is bound to pay the costs of each party (including a reasonable compensation to the attorneys of the wife for their professional services rendered to her in the action), no matter what the result of the suit may be, or by what cause it may have been terminated, unless two things are made to appear in the action: First, that the wife is in fault; and, second, that she has ample estate to pay the costs. There must be a concurrence of the two conditions in order to exempt the husband from the liability imposed by the statute, and both conditions must be made to appear in the cause. Although it may be made to appear that the wife is in fault, yet if it be not also made to appear that she has ample estate to pay the costs, the husband is bound to pay. Or, if she has the estate, and is not in fault, the husband is liable for the costs.' "

And this seems to have been the rule which has been followed in determining the question of the liability of the husband for the wife's counsel fees. Whilst appellant in this case is not free from fault, it certainly can not be said that she has ample estate; it, therefore, follows that the husband is liable for the cost, including a reasonable attorney's fee. And for this reason alone the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded, with instructions to the circuit judge to make appellant a reasonable allowance for counsel fees."

The principle enunciated in the opinion in Thomas v. Thomas, 7 Bush, 665, has no application to the case at bar. There the wife sought to obtain a judgment for a reasonable attorney's fee for services in this court on an appeal after the decree of divorce had been granted in the lower court. This was refused on the ground that the litigation in this court was not between husband and wife, but the parties having been separated by the judgment of the lower court, they stood here in the attitude of ordinary litigants. In the case at bar the services rendered by the counsel of the wife were rendered to her while she was the wife of appellee, and under the statute, as expounded in the case of Turner v. Turner, supra, he is liable for all her costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, although she was in fault as to the merits of the controversy.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

KOCH v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 18, 1905.)

Intoxicating liquors—Retailing—License—Towns of the sixth class—Section 3704, Kentucky Statutes, which is part of the charter of towns of the sixth class, provides that the granting of a license to sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be under the exclusive control of the board of trustees of such town, and where one has obtained a license from the board of trustees he is not required to have a license from the county court, but should pay or tender to the county court clerk the license tax due the State, and the refusal of the clerk to accept the money tendered made the clerk liable to the State therefor; but such refusal did not subject the defendant to prosecution for selling such liquors without a license.

J. M. Dial for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant was indicted by the grand jury of Kenton county in two cases for the offense of retailing liquors without license. The law and facts were submitted to the court, who found the defendant guilty and fixed his punishment at a fine of $75 in each case.

It was conceded on the trial that the defendant had sold spirituous, vinous and malt liquors by retail at the time charged in the indictment, but he offered to prove that at the time he sold the liquor he had a license from the town of Central Covington, where his saloon was situated; that his State license expired on May 9, 1903; that on that day he had a license from the town of Central Covington which expired on June 1, 1903, at which time his town license was renewed by the municipal authorities for one year; that while his own town license was in full force he applied to the county judge of Kenton county for a county license, and that a protest being made by the citizens of the neighborhood, the license was refused by the county court.

After this he applied to the county clerk for license, tendering to the county clerk the amount of the license, together with the cost of issuing it, but the county clerk refused to issue the license because of the order of the county court above referred to. He thereupon instituted a mandamus proceeding against the clerk in the Kenton Circuit Court, praying that the county clerk be compelled to issue him license. This case being heard the judge announced from the bench that he would make no order in it; and thereupon the plaintiff dismissed that suit without prejudice. He continued to run his saloon, and thereafter made the sales for which he was indicted. The special judge who tried the cases held that the clerk erred in not taking the money and issuing the license to the defendant; but that the mistake of the clerk did not operate as a license or excuse his violation of law in selling without license, relying upon the following cases: Commonwealth v. Blackington, 24 Pick., 356; Reese v. Atlanta, 63 Ga., 344; State v. Bach, 36 Minn., 234; Phoenix Carpet Co. v. State, 18 Ala., 143; State v. Myers, 63 Mo., 324; Roberts v. Florida, 26 Fla., 360; State v. Dower, 21 Wis., 281. In these cases it was held that so long as no license is issued, although it may be the fault or mistake of the official, the defendant is liable for the sales without license. But none of these cases seem to us in point in the case before us. Here the defendant had a license from the municipal authorities of the town. Section 3704, Kentucky Statutes, which is a part of the act governing towns of the sixth class, to which Central Covington belongs, provides that the granting of license to sell spirituous, vinous or malt liquors "shall be under the exclusive control of the board of trustees." In Schwearman v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky., 296, it was held that when exclusive authority to grant these licenses is vested in the municipal government, the issue of such a license is not at all dependent upon an order of the county court, but that it is the duty of the clerk to collect the State tax from the person licensed, and that the jurisdiction of the county court to grant license is confined to county districts outside of an incorporated city or town in which exclusive authority is vested in the municipality over the subject of license. (Kentucky Statutes, section 4203. In that case it was held that the county clerk was liable on his bond for the license taxes collected by him within the city, although no order of the county court had been made granting the licenses. The case rests on the ground that when the applicant has received his license from the municipal authorities it is the duty of the clerk to receive from him the State tax and issue to him the State license. This is a mere ministerial act on the part of the clerk. In the cases relied on for appellee the defendant had no license; but in this case the defendant has a license from the officers who are given by law exclusive jurisdiction in the premises. When he got this license and tendered to the clerk the State tax he had done all that the law required him to do. It was then the duty of the clerk to accept the money. When he refused to accept it he became liable to the State therefor.

The case differs from those cited in that here the defendant had a license from the only authority which had jurisdiction to grant it. It is not like the case where the defendant has been granted no license. The order of the county court refusing appellant license was void as the county court had no jurisdiction as to licenses within the town of Central Covington, and was, therefore, no authority to the clerk for refusing to receive the money which appellant tendered him.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

MORRISON, &c. v. FLETCHER.

(Filed January 18, 1905.)

1. Deed—Delivery—Acceptance—Presumption—Where a house and lot in this State was conveyed by a mother to her daughter, and the deed left by the grantor with her agent in this State for record in the county where the property was situated, and it was so recorded, the presumption arises that there was both a delivery and acceptance of the deed.

2. Conveyance by deed—Subsequent devise by grantor of same property to grantee—Election to take under will—Where property conveyed by deed by a mother to her daughter was afterwards devised by the mother to said daughter, the daughter could not take the property under both the deed and will, and the daughter having elected to take under the will, is thereby estopped to claim it under the deed.

3. Foreign will—Probate in this State—Effect—Where a will was made and duly probated in another State and subsequently presented for ancillary probate in this State in the county where land devised therein is situated, the judgment of the court admitting it to probate can not be collaterally attacked.

4. Tenant in possession—Remaindermen—Adverse holding—A tenant in possession of real estate, whether holding for life or claiming the fee, is bound for the taxes thereon, and the possession of such tenant is not adverse to the remaindermen who claim under the will after the death of the life tenant.

Montgomery & Montgomery and J. P. O'Meara for appellants.

W. A. Barry for appellee.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The record in this case presents a controversy between the appellants, C. A. Morrison, Lucy A. Morrison (formerly Lucy A. Richardson) and the appellee, W. D. Fletcher over the title to a house and lot situated in the city of Elizabethtown, Ky., the former claiming it as devisees in remainder under the will of Mary M. Morrison, the latter as sole devisee under the will of his wife, Georgia A. Fletcher, nee Georgia A. Morris.

It appears that the real estate in question was formerly owned by Mary M. Morrison, a widow and resident of DeWitt, Ark., and that she, while on a visit to Kentucky, by deed of date October 22, 1879, conveyed it to her daughter, Georgia A. Morrison, therein reserving to herself a life estate in the property. After acknowledging the deed before a deputy of the clerk of the Hardin County Court Mrs. Morrison returned to her home in Arkansas, leaving the deed with J. W. Fletcher, an uncle of appellee, to be, as he testified, put to record, and it was lodged by him for record in the office of the clerk of the Hardin County Court January 17, 1880, and soon thereafter duly recorded.

Some time in the year 1882, Mary M. Morrison died at her home in DeWitt, Ark., testate, and in September of that year her will was duly admitted to probate in the probate court of Arkansas county in the State of Arkansas. By the provisions of her will the testatrix devised to her daughter, Georgia A. Morrisnn, all the property, real and personal, of which she died possessed. The real estate, however, was only devised the daughter for life, with remainder in the event of her death without issue, to Robert Scanland, a brother of testatrix, and at his death to appellants, C. A. Morrison and Lucy A. Morrison, nee Richardson, nephew and niece of her deceased husband. The real estate thus devised consisted of a house and three parcels of land in DeWitt, Ark., and the house and lot in Elizabethtown, Ky., in controversy. The testatrix and her daughter, Georgia A. Morrison, were living with Robert Scanland in DeWitt, Ark., at the time of the death of the former, and after her death the daughter continued to live with him several years, and until his death.

On the 10th of March, 1899, she intermarried with the appellee, W. D. Fletcher, with whom she lived until her death, which occurred February 10, 1901. No children were born to Georgia A. Fletcher, but she left a will whereby she undertook to devise her husband all of her property, real and personal. The will was duly admitted to probate by the county court of Meade county, Kentucky, in which county she and her husband were domiciled at the time of her death. As before stated, the house and lot in controversy is claimed by appellee under the will of his wife, and this action was brought to quiet his title to same, as well as to recover of appellants damages for certain alleged acts of trespass committed by them upon the property, and by interfering with his tenants, it being averred in the petition that while he was in the peaceable possession of the house and lot the appellants, C. A. Morrison and Lucy A. Morrison, together with Frank Morrison, her husband, and James Montgomery, appellants' attorney, set up claim to same as the property of appellants, C. A. and Lucy Morrison, and were attempting to deprive him of the possession thereof, and had in fact collected of his tenants certain rents by making them believe that appellants were entitled to the same.

The petition, as amended, contains the further averment that appellee's wife, Georgia A. Fletcher, obtained a fee-simple title to the house and lot in controversy by virtue of the deed from her mother, and that upon the death of the mother she took possession of the property under the title conveyed her by the deed, and remained in the possession thereof under the deed until her death. The answer of appellants denies appellee's title, or that his wife ever accepted the deed from her mother, and avers that her interest in and title to the house and lot was only a life estate under the will of her mother, Mary M. Morrison; and further, that as she died childless, and the first or intermediate remainderman, Robert Scanland, is also dead, appellants, C. A. and Lucy A. Morrison, under the provisions of Mary M. Morrison's will, became invested with an absolute title to the property as surviving remaindermen.

The chancellor, however, adopted the contrary view, and by the decree rendered adjudged that Georgia A. Fletcher acquired title under the deed from her mother and not by the will, and, therefore, that the will of Georgia A. Fletcher invested appellee with the title thus acquired by her, consequently he was granted all the relief asked in the prayer of the petition. A careful reading of the record inclines us to the opinion that the deed from Mary M. Morrison to Georgia A. Fletcher, nee Morrison, was never manually delivered to the latter. It is not shown by the evidence that the daughter was with the mother, or in this State when the deed was executed, upon the contrary the circumstances attending the making of the deed create the inference that she was then at her home in Arkansas, for if with her mother, some one of the several witnesses who testified to the fact of seeing the mother during her visit to Kentucky would have told of seeing the daughter. Indeed we might go further, and say the record furnishes no evidence that tends to prove that the daughter was ever in Kentucky after the year 1878 until she came into the State as the wife of the appellee. According to the testimony of J. W. Fletcher the deed from Mrs. Morrison to her daughter was left with him to be recorded.

In Bunnell, &c. v. Bunnell, &c., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 805, it is said: "Delivery (of the deed) is the act finally that divests the grantor of title, and acceptance the concurring act that invests the grantee. One may be established by entirely different proof, and indeed to have occurred on a different occasion from the other. Upon reconsideration of these cases we are inclined to adhere to the doctrine that when the grantor has executed a deed, by signing it, completely acknowledging it, and causing it to be lodged for record and recorded in the proper office for registry, under the authority of Ford v. Gregory's Heirs, and McConnell v. Brown, supra, a prima facie case is made, or presumption is raised, that he has delivered the instrument on the day of its date. This presumption, of course, subject to be rebutted by competent proof of either a nondelivery in fact or of a delivery at another time than the date of the instrument. Such facts, however, raise no presumption of an acceptance by the grantee (Owings v. Tucker, 90 Ky., 279) save where a clearly beneficial interest is conferred."

Applying the above rule to the facts of the case at bar, we are inclined, in view of the relationship of the grantor and grantee, and the apparent beneficial character of the conveyance, to hold that the due execution and recording of the deed in question authorizes the presumption that there was both a delivery and acceptance thereof. Although a prima facie acceptance of the deed by Georgia A. Fletcher is shown by the facts and circumstances referred to, her right to the possession of the house and lot thereby conveyed did not accrue until the death of her mother in 1882, which terminated the life estate in the property reserved to the mother by the deed.

Upon the death of her mother Georgia A. Fletcher took the title as well as the possession of the property devised her by the will, and the house and lot conveyed her by the deed was included in the realty given her for life by the will. Under these circumstances an election upon her part was necessary. In Bigelow on Estoppel, pages 503 & 4 it is said: "A party can not occupy inconsistent positions, and where one has an election between several inconsistent courses of action, he will be confined to that which he first adopts. Any decisive act of the party done with knowledge of his rights and of the facts, determines his election and works an estoppel. * * * It is an old rule of equity that one who has taken a beneficial interest under a will is thereby held to have confirmed and ratified every other part of the will, and will not be permitted to set up any claim or right of his own, however legal or well founded it may otherwise have been, which would defeat or in any way prevent the full operation of the will. Thus if a man bequeath to another property which belongs to a third person, to whom he gives by the same will other parts of his estate, such third person must convey his property to his devisee or he can not take the property devised to him under the will. The only question in such case is, did the testator intend (upon the face of the will) that the property should go in such a manner, and not had he the power to do so? It is immaterial whether the testator thought he had the right, or knowing the extent of his rights, intended by an arbitrary exertion of power to exceed them, in either case the legatee as such can not dispute the ownership of the property bequeathed to the other, and he can only take the property on the terms upon which it is given." (Pom. Eq. Jurisp., 2d edition, volume 1, section 742.)

In Gore v. Stephens, 1 Dana, 203, it was said by this court: "It is one of the leading maxims in equity that a person shall not claim an interest under an instrument, whether a deed or will, without giving free effect to the instrument as far as he can. If the testator give what is not his property, but which he supposed to be his, and gives to the person whose property it is an interest by his will, that person will not be permitted to defeat the disposition where it is in his power, and yet take under the will, and the same rule applies though the testator knew that he had no right to dispose of the lands, and yet knowing it, takes upon himself to dispose of them." * * * (Story's Eq. Jurisp., section 1096.)

In the light of the foregoing authorities it is manifest that Georgia A. Fletcher could not take under both the deed and will. It is also clear that Mary M. Morrison, after conveying her the property in controversy by deed, intended to abrogate the deed, and doubtless thought she accomplished that end in devising the daughter by her will the same property with the residue of her estate, and this intention of the mother was, we think, effectuated by the daughter and devisee, by an election on her part to stand by the will, and to take the property therein devised her under its provisions.

Obviously in making such election she understood her rights under the deed and will, for, according to the evidence, she had and kept a copy of the will from the time it was probated until her death, and in addition to the presumption arising from the recording of the deed, of its acceptance by the grantee and her consequent knowledge of its terms and provisions, it was further shown by the evidence that she was informed of its existence in 1883 or 1884, through Scanland, her uncle and agent, to whom the fact was communicated by J. W. Fletcher.

It also appears from the deposition of J. A. Gibson, a lawyer of DeWitt, Ark., and the legal adviser of her mother, that Georgia A. Fletcher received under her mother's will from $3,000 to $4,000 in money, and that she further received and had in possession until her death the house and lots in DeWitt devised her for life by the will. There was no evidence conducing to prove that Georgia A. Fletcher held the Elizabethtown property in a manner or under a claim of title different from that under which she held the Arkansas property. Upon the contrary it appears she did not attach any importance to the deed, and in fact never withdrew the original from the clerk's office in which it was recorded. Indeed the evidence disclosed by the record preponderates in favor of appellants' contention, that she held the house and lot in controversy under the will regardless of the deed, and any other view of the matter would be inconsistent with her conduct throughout, and at variance with the circumstances attending her control of the property.

Nor does the fact that Georgia A. Fletcher left a will making appellee her sole devisee militate against this view, for it appears from the evidence that she owned at the time of her death a very considerable estate in addition to that received from her mother. We are unable to sustain appellee's contention, that the will of Mary M. Morrison was improperly admitted to probate by the Hardin County Court, or that the statute of limitation barred appellant's right to have it probated in this State.

Upon this question we do not regard Allen v. Froman, 96 Ky., 314, as an authority in point. In that case there was an attempt to make an original probate in this State of a copy of the will of one who was a resident of another State at the time of his death, and it appearing that the original had never been probated in the State of the testator's residence, and that his death occurred more than twenty years before the copy was offered for probate in this State, it was properly held by this court that the right of probate was barred by the ten-year statute of limitation. But the will of Mary M. Morrison had been, as it appeared, legally admitted to probate in a court of competent jurisdiction in the State of Arkansas, where the testatrix resided at the time of her death. The will was presented to the Hardin County Court solely for ancillary probate because some of the property affected by it lies in that county, and under the authority of Johnson v. Bard, 54 S. W., 721, decided by this court, the limitation applied in Allen v. Froman, supra, could not be applied to this will, and did not prevent the county court from admitting it to probate.

In any event it has been conclusively settled by this court that the judgment of a county court admitting a will to probate can not be attacked in a collateral action or proceeding, and this is true of foreign as well as domestic wills. (Whalen v. Nisbet, &c., 95 Ky., 464; Kentucky Statutes, section 4852.)

We think the chancellor attached undue importance to Georgia A. Fletcher's possession for more than fifteen years of the house and lot in controversy, and to the fact that she paid the taxes thereon during that time. If after her mother's death she elected to hold the property under the deed, notwithstanding the will of her mother, actual possession of it by her was unnecessary. Upon the other hand, if she elected to take the property under the will, her possession, however long or continuous, was not adverse to the title of the remaindermen, and in any event she was personally liable for the taxes, and the property was also bound therefor during her possession of it, whether it was held by her as tenant for life under the will, or as the owner of the fee under the deed. The foregoing conclusions make it unnecessary for us to consider the contention made by counsel for appellants, that if Georgia A. Fletcher elected to take the property in controversy under the deed from her mother, and also received the remaining estate devised her by her mother's will, compensation is due appellants from appellee as her devisee for the property conveyed her by the deed.

Being of the opinion that the chancellor erred in the conclusions reached by him the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to set it aside and enter in lieu thereof judgment dismissing the petition and giving appellants, C. A. and Lucy A. Morrison, the house and lot in controversy, and for such further proceedings as may be consistent with the opinion.

Whole court sitting.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

VOL. 27.

FEBRUARY 15, 1905.

No. 2

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

HAGER, AUDITOR v. GAST, &c.

(Filed January 19, 1905.)

1. Street Improvement—Abutting property owned by the State—Liability for cost of improvement—Under section 2838, Kentucky Statutes, which requires the State to pay its proportion of the cost of the improvement of a public street in cities of the first class, on which property is situated which is owned by the State, or is held in trust for the public use of the State, where such street has been improved under the ordinance of the city, and an apportionment warrant or statement of the costs thereof shall be certified by the board of public works of the city to the State auditor, it is the duty of the auditor to pay the same.

2. Constitution—Special legislation—Exemption from taxation—Authorizing debt to be contracted on behalf of State—The act supra is not in conflict with section 166 of the Constitution on the ground that it is local or special legislation, because Louisville is the only city of the first class in this State, nor is it in conflict with section 170 of the Constitution, by which it is provided that public property used for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation, as it is well settled that the sections of the Constitution relating to taxation do not apply to assessments made on adjoining property for the improvement of a highway. Nor is it in conflict with sections 49-50 of the Constitution, which forbids the general assembly authorizing any debt to be contracted except for certain specified purposes, as these sections have been the organic law since 1851, and under it this court has sustained such legislation, holding that these provisions embrace the ordinary expenses of the government.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellant.

Wm. Furlong and H. L. Stone for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

The State of Kentucky owns a lot of land in Louisville on which is situated the Kentucky Institute for the Blind. The institute was originally located outside of the city boundary, but as the city has grown, its limits have been extended until the city takes in the property, and streets have been opened adjoining it. The city council ordained that these streets should be improved at the cost of the adjoining owners. Appellee Gosnell was the contractor, who did the work under the ordinance of the city and the contract made with him by it. Section 2833a, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows: "That when any public way, or other public improvement of any city of the first class in this Commonwealth, is ordered or directed, by ordinance of the general council of said city, to be constructed, which, according to the provisions of the act for the government of that class of cities, may be lawfully constructed at the cost of the owners of the lots of ground adjacent to such improvement, or within the taxable limits thereof, defined as provided in such act, and any such real estate within such taxable limits is owned by the State of Kentucky, or is held in trust for the public use of the State, the proportionate part of the cost of making such public way or other public improvement shall be apportioned against the real estate of the State in like manner as against other lots of ground within such taxable limits, and apportionment warrant or statement thereof shall be certified by the board of public works of such city to the auditor of public accounts, who shall thereupon draw on the State treasurer for the amount of such apportionment warrant or certified statement in favor of the person named therein as entitled to the amount thereof, and the State treasurer shall pay said warrant drawn by the auditor out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The auditor having refused to draw his warrant on the treasurer for the amount of the apportionment warrant issued by the city for Gosnell as provided by the statute, this suit was instituted for a mandamus compelling him to draw his warrant on the State treasurer therefor. The auditor filed an answer, to which the court sustained a demurrer, and he failing to plead further awarded the mandamus as prayed. The only question raised by the answer are matters of law. It is insisted that the statute is unconstitutional because it is local or special legislation, as it applies only to the city of Louisville, and is in conflict with sections 59-60 of the Constitution. The act is a part of the law governing cities of the first class. It is true Louisville is the only city of the first class in the Commonwealth, but this is immaterial. Section 156 of the Constitution provides that the cities and towns of the Commonwealth shall be divided into six classes, and that the organization and powers of each class shall be defined and provided for by general laws. The power of the legislature to provide for the government of cities of the first class are the same as they would be if there were a hundred cities of the first class instead of one, for if any other city by an increase of its population comes to be placed in the first class, it will be governed by the act; otherwise the legislature would be powerless to carry out section 156 of the Constitution. (Richardson v. Mehler, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 917.)

It is also insisted that the act is in conflict with section 170 of the Constitution, by which it is provided that public property used for public purposes shall be exempt from taxation. But it is well settled that the sections of the Constitution relating to taxation do not include or apply to assessments made on adjoining property to pay for the improvement of highways. (Zable v. Orphans' Home, 92 Ky., 89; Holzbauer v. Newport, 94 Ky., 407; Levi v. Louisville, 97 Ky., 407; Gosnell v. Louisville, 104 Ky., 201.)

Lastly, it is urged that the act is in conflict with sections 49-50 of the Constitution, which forbid the general assembly authorizing any debt to be contracted on behalf of the Commonwealth except for certain specified purposes. But these sections of the Constitution have been the organic law of the State since 1851 (sections 35-36, article 2 of former Constitution), and under it this court sustained such legislation. (Lindsey v. Auditor, 3 Bush, 281; Commonwealth v. Collins, 12 Bush, 386; Auditor v. Haycraft, 14 Bush, 284.) These provisions of the Constitution do not embrace the ordinary expenses of the government. The State may repair its blind institute or build a road to it to make it more accessible, or conduct its ordinary affairs without making a special levy for this purpose. The State gets the benefit of the improved highway, and instead of building it itself has authorized the city to have it built, agreeing to pay its pro rata part of the expense like other property owners abutting on it. The State could have authorized this portion of the highway to be built, and paid for it out of the general fund. The fact that the city was authorized to have it built does not change the legal aspect of the transaction.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. NAPIER.

(Filed January 19, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Criminal law—Indictment—Upon the trial of appellee, charged with the burning of property of Hiram Cawood, it was error to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant, the proof showing that the property was in the name of his wife. It was shown by the evidence that the property was known as that of Hiram Cawood; the witnesses all spoke of it as such; he had the possession and control of it, and, moreover, he had an inchoate interest in it and possession of it, and a conviction or acquittal under the indictment would bar another prosecution for burning the barn of Sally Cawood, the wife.

N. B. Hays and Ira Fields for appellant.

Appeal from Harlan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Rebecca Napier was indicted in the Harlan Circuit Court for the crime of barn burning jointly with one Thomas King. The charge in the indictment is that she and King "did unlawfully, willfully and feloniously burn a barn not their own, but the property of and belonging to Hiram J. Cawood." On the trial of Rebecca Napier the Commonwealth introduced evidence showing that Thomas King set the barn on fire at the instance of Rebecca Napier; that she had King to burn the barn and paid him $10 to set it afire. There was other evidence tending to confirm this testimony.

The defendant then introduced Hiram Cawood, who testified as follows:

"Q. Mr. Cawood, who owns that barn and the land where it stood?"

"A. The land where it stood is titled to my wife, but I use it all the time; the barn and mowing machine and things that got burned was mine."

"Q. Isn't it a fact, Mr. Cawood, that at the time the barn was burned the land was titled to your wife and the deed was made to her, and that you didn't hold title to the land, the barn or the property at all?"

"A. She holds title to the land; but the barn and things that got burned was mine."

"Q. Where do you live with reference to the barn?"

"A. About seventy-five yards from the barn."

"Q. You lived with your wife at that time did you?"

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. She occupied the same building?"

"A. Yes, sir."

"Q. Who built that barn?"

"A. I done the last work on it myself."

No other evidence was introduced, and the court thereupon instructed the jury to find the defendant not guilty on the ground that there was a variance between the charge in the indictment and the proof, in this: That the barn burned was not the property of or belonging to Hiram J. Cawood, but was the property of his wife, Sally Cawood. Section 128 of the Criminal Code: "If an offense involve the commission of or an attempt to commit an injury to person or property, or the taking of property, and be described in other respects with sufficient certainty to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or attempted to be injured, or as to the owner of the property taken or injured, or attempted to be injured, is not material."

In Johnson v. Commonwealth, 87 Ky., 189, the indictment charged that the defendant broke and entered into barbershop of Philip White, but the evidence showed that the shop broken into was leased and occupied not by White alone, but by him jointly with one Gatlin, his partner, and that the property belonged to another. It was held, under the section of the Code above quoted, that the indictment sufficiently described the house broken into, although White was not the sole or actual owner of it, but in possession only as tenant jointly with his partner. In Hennessey v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky., 301, the charge was that the defendant obtained $15 in money from Betty Cook by false pretenses. It was shown that Betty Cook was a married woman, and, therefore, it was claimed that the $15 was the property of her husband. The conviction was sustained, but the judgment of the court is rested on the idea that it was immaterial whether the money obtained was the property of the husband or that of the wife if the defendant obtained it by false pretenses from his wife.

The question is presented whether in indictments under section 1169, Kentucky Statutes, the house burned may be laid as the property of the husband where he and his wife are both living on the property. Under such circumstances the wife is technically in possession, but as a matter of fact the husband is in the actual possession and control of the property. There is not the slightest difficulty to identify the act. The grand jury knew, as did the defendant, what property was intended to be described in the indictment. Section 128, Criminal Code, was intended to modify the rigorous requirements of the common law as to the description of the person or property injured. When the act can be identified there is no danger of a defendant being put in jeopardy twice for the same offense. On the trial of an indictment for burning the barn of Mrs. Cawood it would be easy to show that she had been tried under an indictment for the same act. As was shown by the evidence in the case the barn was known by the witnesses as Hiram Cawood barn. They all spoke of it as such. He had possession and control of it. The description of the barn in the indictment could not have misled the defendant, and as Cawood has an inchoate interest in the barn and possession of it, a conviction or acquittal under the indictment would bar another prosecution for burning the barn of Sally Cawood.

We, therefore, conclude that the court erred in instructing the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant, and this is ordered to be certified.

THE HARDY PACKING CO. v. SPRIGG.

(Filed January 20, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Fertilizer—Guarantor of notes—Action against—Issue—Evidence of value—Competency—In an action against one as guarantor of notes executed for Fertilizer, who filed answer, alleging that the notes sued on were given for the price of a fertilizer on a warranty that it was a good wheat producer, but that it was worthless and of no value, on which answer issue was joined by a traverse, it was competent and relevant for the defendant to prove by the farmers who purchased and used the fertilizer that it would not, and did not, produce wheat.

Williams & Handley for appellant.

J. W. Gore and Mather & Creal for appellee.

Appeal from Larue Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant sued appellee as guarantor of eight or ten small notes, the whole amounting to $270.

The appellee answered and alleged, in substance, that he received no consideration for guaranteeing the payment of the notes; that they were executed by farmers for the purchase price of fertilizer on a warranty that the same was a good wheat producer; that the warranty failed; that the fertilizer would not produce wheat, and was worthless and of no value. Appellant replied, traversing these allegations. Upon this issue a trial was had, which resulted in favor of appellee. The appellee introduced eight or ten farmers who purchased this fertilizer, and who stated that it was worthless, and would not, and did not, produce wheat. Appellant objected to this evidence, and contends that the only competent testimony that could have been introduced by appellee was a report of analysis of a sample of the fertilizer, by the director of the Agricultural Experiment Station of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Kentucky, as provided in subsection 8 of section 1822 of the Kentucky Statutes. Even if the statute should be construed to have the effect as contended for, which we do not decide, the appellant did not prepare its pleadings to get the benefit of the statute. It was not alleged that it complied with the provisions of this statute in any particular. It did not even allege that the fertilizer furnished appellee for sale was labeled with the analysis as made by the director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, and, if so labeled, that the fertilizer furnished appellee was of the kind or grade as the samples furnished by it to the director for analysis. We are of the opinion that the evidence objected to was competent and relevant to the issue.

Judgment affirmed.

CAMDEN INTERSTATE RY. CO. v. SMILEY, &c.

(Filed January 20, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Injunction—Dissolution—Amended pleading—Damages—In an action to enjoin a railroad company from constructing a viaduct in a street in front of plaintiff's property, where an injunction granted by the clerk was dissolved by the circuit court, it was not error in this court to permit the plaintiff to amend her petition, charging that the viaduct was a permanent obstruction and praying for damages to her property caused thereby.

2. Railroads—Constructing viaduct in street—Damages to abutting property—Where a viaduct was constructed by a railroad ten or twelve feet high in the center of a street, twenty-one feet from plaintiff's dwelling, which was worth $1,250, a verdict allowing $425 damages is not so excessive as to authorize this court to disturb it where the proof shows that the ingress and egress to and from the property was seriously impaired.

T. R. Brown for appellant.

R. S. Dinkle and P. K. Malin for appellees.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee owns a lot fronting one hundred and twenty feet on Mound street in Catlettsburg, Ky., having on it two dwelling houses which she rented to tenants. Appellant was building along Mound street a viaduct some ten or twelve feet high which occupied the central part of the street, leaving only the space of twenty one feet between her property line and the base upon which the viaduct rested, and after deducting the sidewalk of ten feet, only about eleven feet for teams to drive on. The purpose of the viaduct was to raise appellant's track so as to get up to the bridge over the Big Sandy river. It rested on trestle work. Bents were placed eighteen feet apart, the bents resting on concrete pedestals two feet square. While appellant was building the structure appellee brought this suit to enjoin it from continuing the erection in the street on the ground that it was a taking of her property by appellant without first paying a just compensation therefor, as the ingress and egress to and from her property would be materially affected. An answer was filed by the defendant, and on the hearing before the circuit judge upon affidavits the court dissolved the injunction which had been granted by the clerk. The plaintiff thereupon amended her petition, charging that the viaduct was a permanent obstruction in the street, unreasonably destroying ingress to and egress from her property, and damaging it in the sum of $1,250, for which she prayed judgment. The case was then on her motion transferred to the ordinary docket, where it was heard before a jury who returned a verdict for her in the sum of $425, on which the court entered judgment.

It is insisted that the court erred in allowing the amended petition to be filed seeking damages for the obstruction of the street. The courts have a wide discretion in allowing amendments, and as it had been held that the construction of the viaduct would not be enjoined we do not see that there was any substantial error in allowing the plaintiff to amend her petition and claim damages for the injury to her property. The plaintiff was manifestly entitled to damages if the statements of her petition were true, and although she was not entitled to enjoin the construction of the viaduct, the court, in furtherance of justice, should not have left her remediless and refused to allow her to amend her petition and ask the relief to which the facts she stated entitled her. (McHugh v. Louisville Bridge Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1546.)

While the proof was conflicting there was sufficient evidence of obstruction of the ingress to and egress from the property to justify the submission of the case to the jury. (Ashland and Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. v. Faulkner, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 156; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Cumnook, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1890; Henderson v. McClain, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1452; Ludlow v. Detweiler, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 895.)

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"1st. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the defendant in constructing its viaduct on Mound street appropriated and obstructed the street adjacent to plaintiff's lot so as to deprive plaintiff of the reasonable use of the said street as a means of ingress and egress to and from said property, they will find for the plaintiff and fix the damages as in instruction No. 4.

"2d. The court instructs the jury that they are not authorized to find any damages for plaintiff if they believe from the evidence that sufficient space in Mound street is left between plaintiff's property and defendant's viaduct on said street to permit the reasonable use of same for ingress and egress to and from said property by vehicles in ordinary and general use.

"3d. The court instructs the jury that if they find for plaintiff under instruction No. 1, that they are only 'permitted to find for the plaintiff such depreciation of value, if any, of plaintiff's property as they believe and find is due to the obstruction, if any, to the reasonable use of Mound street adjacent to plaintiff's property for travel by any vehicle, in ordinary and general use, to and from plaintiff's property, and the jury are not permitted to include in any finding they may make any depreciation in the value of plaintiff's property that they may find to be due to the operation of defendant's line of street railway on the viaduct in Mound street adjacent to plaintiff's property, or to the unsightliness of defendant's viaduct, or to any fear by horses from operation of cars on said viaduct or to mere proximity of or inconvenience from defendant's viaduct that does not obstruct the reasonable use of Mound street adjacent to plaintiff's property for travel by any vehicle, in ordinary and general use, to and from plaintiff's property.

"4th. If the jury find for plaintiff under instruction No. 1 they will first ascertain from the evidence the fair market value of the property in question just before it became generally known that the viaduct of the defendant was to be built on Mound street adjacent to said property; they will then ascertain from the evidence what portion of that value, if any, has been taken from same by reason of the construction of said viaduct on Mound street adjacent to said property, and the amount so found is the sum plaintiff is entitled to recover, nor exceeding $1,250."

The principal complaint is that instruction No. 4 takes off the brakes, allowing the jury to find for appellee whatever of the value of the property had been taken from it by the construction of the viaduct. All the instructions of the court are to be read together, and when the four instructions above quoted are so read they could not have misled the jury. By instruction 3 the jury were told plainly that they could not find for the plaintiff on account of certain things, but only for the damages from the obstruction of ingress and egress to and from the property. This is plainly set out in instruction No. 1; it is repeated in instruction No. 2, and is reiterated in instruction No. 3.

The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that her property was worth about $1,250 before the construction of the viaduct, and that it had been damaged by its construction in the sum of $625, as teams could not pass on the space of eleven feet and loaded wagons could not turn and go under the viaduct. The proof was somewhat conflicting as to whether a wagon could turn and pass under the viaduct, but as to the space left there was no conflict in the evidence, and it was reasonably clear from the proof that the ingress and egress to and from the property was seriously impaired. The jury fixed the damages at $425, and we can not say that the verdict is so excessive as to warrant us in disturbing it.

Judgment affirmed.

THE KENTUCKY STOVE CO. v. BRYAN'S ADM'R.

(Filed January 24, 1904—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Liability for—In this action to recover damages for the death of appellee's intestate it is not a defense that deceased was at work under an independent contractor, as the furnishing of the wheel, the bursting of which killed him, its shafting and power were all under the supervision of appellant.

2. Competency of witnesses—It was not error for the court to refuse to permit stockholders of appellant to testify for it in an action against it for damages with reference to conversations had with the intestate. (24 Ky. Law Rep., 1800.)

Bennett H. Young and M. W. Ripy for appellant.

Gardner & Moxley for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment for $3,000, obtained for the death of William Bryan, who was killed by the bursting of an emery wheel in the plant of appellant.

This wheel was situated in a room at one end of the plant, about one hundred feet from the engine which operated it.

The appellee in substance alleged that the wheel was defective; that it was improperly and unsafely put on the shaft which revolved it, and that the servants of appellant negligently and carelessly operated the wheel at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed, and that the agents and servants of appellant in charge knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, and this appellee's intestate did not know that the wheel was defective; that it was improperly placed upon the shaft, and that it was operated at a dangerous and excessive rate of speed. Appellant denied all negligence, and alleged contributory negligence on the part of the deceased; also that the decedent was not in the employ of appellant; that he was employed by and under the sole control of one John Hines, an independent contractor, and, therefore, it was not responsible for the death of Bryan. The affirmative matter in the answer was traversed by a reply. It appears from the evidence that the wheel was not defective. The only evidence to indicate that it was defective was the fact that it burst, but the evidence conduces to show that it was at the time deceased was killed improperly and insecurely placed upon the shaft which revolved it, and that it was being operated at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed.

It is shown without contradiction that appellant owned and controlled the power that operated this wheel, and it was its duty to exercise reasonable care in making it secure and safe for the protection of persons whose duty it was to work and labor in the room, where the emery wheels were situated. Under the facts proven in this case this duty devolved upon appellant. It matters not whether the persons working about these wheels were employees and upon the payrolls of appellant, or whether they were working under a boss or independent contractor, as the furnishing of the wheel, the shafting and the power to run it were all under the supervision and control of appellant. (Ohio Valley Ry. Co. v. McKinley, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 1020; Wilson v. Alpine Coal Co., 26 Ky. Law Rep., 838; King v. Creekmore, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1293; Ford & Ford v. Crigler, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 57.)

The instructions as given by the court were unobjectionable, and properly submitted every phase of the issues to the jury. Appellant also complained that the court erred in refusing to allow two stockholders of appellant to testify with reference to conversations and transactions had with appellee's intestate. This was not error. (Story v. First National Bank of Louisville, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1800.)

Perceiving no error in the record prejudicial to appellant the judgment is affirmed.

HELTON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 24, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Evidence—Admonition of the court—Upon the trial of appellant the court permitted the prosecution to prove that some weeks after the killing he returned to the house where it occurred and indulged in conduct indicating that he was being lashed by a guilty conscience; that he said he wanted to pray for those boys; that he had to kill them in his self-defense. After admitting the evidence, the court excluded it by an admonition to the jury that they could only consider the fact that he did visit the premises again after the killing, and that he was more or less intoxicated. Held—That the whole circumstance was immaterial, and should not have been admitted; yet it was not prejudicial to accused.

2. Evidence—Evidence to the effect that notches were cut upon appellant's pistol was immaterial except as he had admitted that they were put there to indicate the number of men he had killed. Had there been doubt as to its identity, then evidence of such marks would have been admissible. There was no evidence that appellant had ever fired his pistol at any other person, and the admission of evidence as to marks upon it does not seem to have been prejudicial.

J. M. Roberson for appellant.

N. B. Hays for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction of manslaughter. Appellant was constable of District No. 4 in Knox county. He had in his hands for collection a capias pro fine against David Fletcher for $5 and costs. In attempting to execute the writ he arrested Fletcher. But before starting with him to the county jail he suffered Fletcher to go to his home, ostensibly to carry some articles of merchandise for the use of his family. A brother of David Fletcher and one Brock, a boarder at the house of the person arrested, went along. Fearing some difficulty, appellant summoned his nephew, Jay Helton, to assist in executing the writ. There was some talk as the parties went along to the house indicating that Fletcher would not go to jail. Whether it was to the effect that he would resist the officer by force, or whether he would settle the fine and costs by payment after he got to his house there is a conflict in the evidence. At the house David Fletcher took a pistol holster, but without the pistol, and buckled it on his person.

The officer expostulated with him and told him that, being a prisoner, he would not be allowed to carry arms with him. Fletcher went to his trunk, which was in the room, and started to raise the lid. Whether this act was to get a pistol from the trunk, as claimed by appellant, or to get the money or for some other purpose, as claimed by the prosecution, there is a sharp conflict of evidence. The officer and his deputy say that the prisoner raised the trunk lid, grasped a pistol that was in the trunk and presented it at the deputy, when appellant and the deputy began shooting at him, killing him instantly, the shots fired by appellant taking effect in the back, and in the back of the head. When the shooting began Tom Fletcher and Brock, who had accompanied the party to the house (they both boarded there) entered from a rear room, Tom having two pistols in his hands. The officers turned their fire upon Tom Fletcher and Brock, killing Tom and wounding Brock. The contention of the officers is that David Fletcher, Tom Fletcher and Brock had entered into a conspiracy to kill the officers in the resisting of the arrest, and that they had to shoot to save themselves, while the prosecution claims that the officers acted unnecessarily in shooting David Fletcher, using more force than was necessary, even if it appeared to them and was a fact that David was attempting to get a pistol from the trunk.

All these issues of fact were submitted to the jury by irreproachable instructions.

The only errors complained of that this court is authorized to notice was in the admission of evidence against the accused. Of these rulings only three are assailed. The first is, the court permitted the prosecution to prove that appellant, some weeks after the killing, returned to the house where it had occurred, but which had since been vacated by the family of Fletcher, and indulged in uncertain conduct, but which was thought to indicate mental perturbation by the accused, possibly that he was brooding over the act, indicating that he was being lashed by a guilty conscience; that he then said he wanted to pray for those boys; that he had been compelled to kill them in self-defense. The prosecution also proved that appellant was drunk on that occasion, and was armed with a pistol. After admitting the evidence the court excluded it by an admonition to the jury, except they were allowed to consider the fact that the accused did visit the premises again, and that he was more or less intoxicated. We are of opinion that the whole circumstance was immaterial, and should not, on that account, have been admitted. Yet we are unable to perceive how it was prejudicial. Appellant was permitted to prove why he went there; that he went at the suggestion of his counsel to examine the situation of certain doors so as to be able to explain it to the attorney, appellant never having seen the place but once before; that he was a peace officer justified his carrying arms; that he was more or less intoxicated was not such a circumstance as would probably have prejudiced his case. If it be suggested that the court's admonition could not remove from the jury the hurtful effect of the matter excluded after it was once admitted, it seems enough to say in response that it is not at all certain that the matter was really prejudicial. To pray for one's enemies is not regarded as evidence that the one offering the prayer is doing it from a sense of his own personal guilt. The taking of human life, even when justifiable under the law, may affect one's peace of mind. But that fact does not militate against the legal innocence of the slayer. These are mental phenomena well known. The jury in every probability were fully aware of them, and were as apt at least to give them a proper application as not. It would be trivial to reverse a judgment for such slight irregularity in the trial.

Another matter complained of is that it was proven that appellant sold his pistol, the one with which he did the shooting charged in the indictment, to Chas. Byrley some time after the killing. Byrley was permitted to prove that there were three notches cut on the pistol, which the Commonwealth sought to show, and argued to the jury, were put there by appellant to indicate the number of men he had shot with it. Unless appellant admitted, or it was otherwise shown, that he so marked the pistol, and for the purpose of making a score of the result of his shots fired on the occasion for which he was being tried, the matter is wholly immaterial and irrelevant. If there was doubt as to the identity of the pistol, and the distinguishing marks were used by the witness for the purpose of identification, the evidence would have been admissible, for it was a material fact to be shown that appellant fired a pistol of large calibre, of the size of the one offered in evidence, inasmuch as two of the mortal wounds entering from the back were fired from such a pistol. There was no evidence that appellant ever fired his pistol at any other person or on any other occasion. The admission of the evidence does not seem to us to have been prejudicial.

The remaining objection is that the court allowed evidence to go to the jury of the killing of Tom Fletcher and of the shooting of Brock. It would have been difficult, if not impossible, to have prevented it, even if it were not proper, for it was all one transaction, so interwoven and done so quickly that, according to appellant's own version, "it was over before you could open your mouth." To tell of it, without telling all of it, would be hard to control. Everything done at the time, and every part of the affair, was receivable in evidence as explaining the nature and motive of the act for which appellant was being tried. But were it otherwise, the court whenever objection was made, rejected all evidence of the shooting of Tom Fletcher and of Brock. The most of the evidence admitted on that point came from the appellant himself and his witnesses. There does not appear to be a reversible error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

JEFFERSON, & CO. V. HOPSON BROS.

(Filed January 24, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Liens—Married women—Since the enactment of section 9123, Kentucky Statutes, married women have the same power to create liens upon their own property for its improvement as unmarried women or men.

2. Same—Even though the property upon which material was furnished for the building of a house was the property of a wife, and she did not enter into a written contract with reference to its improvement, still where she accepted the material the law implies a promise to pay.

John C. Dabney and R. A. Burnett for appellants.

Sims & Thomas for appellees.

Appeal from Trigg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Appellants are husband and wife. About the first day of December, 1900, the husband purchased from one Glover four acres of land at $100 per acre, and caused the conveyance to be made to himself. On the 27th day of the same month he surrendered to Glover the deed, it having not been recorded, and caused Glover to make a deed to his wife, claiming at the time, as testified by him, that the money used in paying for the land belonged to her, and it was the intention in the beginning to have the conveyance made to her, but by oversight he suffered the deed to himself.

Between the dates of these deeds the husband entered into a contract with one Hamby, whereby Hamby agreed to furnish the material and erect a dwelling house upon this property at the price of $1,100. Under a contract with Hamby the appellees furnished material in the erection of this house to the value of $149. Appellees took the necessary steps to perfect a lien on the property, and instituted this action to enforce it. Appellants answered that they did not contract for this lumber and were not responsible therefor; that appellant's husband had paid more for the erection of this house than he had contracted to pay, and the property belonged to the wife and she had not signed any written contract, nor made any contract of any character for the improvement of her property. It appears that there was proof introduced by both parties upon the question as to whether or not the change of title to his property from the husband to the wife was fraudulent. Under recent decisions of this court this question is not material in respect to the liability of this property for the payment of the claim in suit.

In the case of Tarr & Templin, &c. v. Muir, &c., 107 Ky., 283, and Johnson, &c. v. Bush & Curran, &c., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1899, it was decided that section 2128 of the Kentucky Statutes had the effect to repeal that part of section 2479 which required a written contract signed by a married woman before her property could be placed in lien for improvements made thereon; that since the enactment of section 2128, concerning the rights and liabilities of married women, she had the same power to create liens upon her property for the improvement thereof as possessed by unmarried women or men. Even if this property is hers appellees are entitled to a lien for the material furnished in making the improvement thereon. She accepted the material, and the law implies a promise to pay for it.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. LOUISVILLE CITY RAILWAY.

(Filed January 25, 1905—Not to be reported.)

H. L. Stone for appellant.

Boyle & Yeaman and Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Judge Barker delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

The tax bills involved in this action bear interest from the time, and in the manner, that other taxes bear interest under the provisions of the charter of cities of the first class. The various payments made by the railway to be applied as of the dates made, thus extinguishing principal and interest under the ordinary rule as to partial payments.

All other motions except as herein indicated overruled.

RAMSEY, &c. v. CITY OF SHELBYVILLE, &c.

(Filed January 25, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Gilbert & Gilbert and J. C. Beckham & Son for appellants.

Willis & Todd for appellees.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Judge Barker delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

There is nothing in the opinion to suggest the illegality of any appropriation made by the council of Shelbyville out of the annual revenue for the benefit of the public library. On the contrary, so far as this record shows, and we are at present advised, such action, if any, was entirely valid.

MANNING v. ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO.

(Filed January 26, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damages—Where there was no evidence that the presence of one who was injured by being struck by a moving train was discovered by those in charge of the train in time to avert the danger to him by the exercise of ordinary care, under the well-settled rule that he was a trespasser, the company was under no obligation to maintain a lookout for him, and is not responsible to him unless his danger was perceived and there was after this a failure to use ordinary care for his safety.

W. J. Webb and S. H. Crossland for appellant

Robbins & Thomas, J. M. Dickinson and Pirtle & Trabue for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant on May 1, 1902, lived north of the station Bouz on appellee's road, and was walking along the railroad going south to his work, which was beyond the station. As he went along a train passed him also going south, which pulled in on the side track at the station, and when he reached the side track he walked down the main track. He heard a second train coming southward down the railroad, and supposing that it would come in on the main track crossed over to the side track, and without looking back proceeded to walk on down the side track in the direction of the first train, which had stopped on the side track some distance south of him. While he was thus walking along the side track the second train, when it reached the switch, also took the side track, pulling in behind the first to leave the main track clear for a passenger train, and in so doing ran upon him and knocked him off the track while he had his back to it and was under the impression that this train was on the main track. He sued to recover for his injuries, and at the conclusion of all the evidence the court instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant.

Appellant complains of the action of the court and relies on the case of Wilmuth's Adm'r v. I. C. R. R. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 671. That case is rested on the idea that the engineer saw the man on the track two hundred feet away from him, and after perceiving his danger failed to exercise ordinary care for his safety, or at least that there was evidence from which the jury might properly so find. There was no evidence in this case that the engineer saw the appellant before he was struck, or that his presence on the track was perceived by any one on the train in time to avert the danger to him by ordinary care. The plaintiff's evidence failed to show that his presence on the side track was seen by those in charge of the train, and under the well-settled rule that he was a trespasser the company was under no obligation to maintain a lookout for him and is not responsible to him unless his danger was perceived, and there was after this a failure to use ordinary care for his safety. The court should have sustained the defendant's motion for a peremptory instruction made at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence. The testimony for the defendant in no way strengthened the plaintiff's case. The proof by the engineer was that by reason of the curve he could not see the plaintiff as the engine obstructed his view. The fireman testified that he was putting in coal, and when he looked out and saw the plaintiff he at once called to the engineer, who did all he could then to stop the train.

Under all the evidence we are satisfied from the proof that the flagman of the first train had turned the switch and that the second train ran in on the side track very close behind plaintiff, and struck him very soon after he walked from the main track to the side track. But whether this is true or not, and if it be conceded that he was struck after he had been on the side track some distance and far enough for the engineer to have seen him after rounding the curve, still the fact remains under the evidence that he did not see him, and the peremptory instruction was properly given. The bell on the train was ringing, but it is plain that the plaintiff supposed that the train was on the main track, and, therefore, did not look back.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. ANDERSON, &c.

(Filed January 26, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Abatement of action—Taxes—Action to collect—Where a conveyance was made to one in trust for appellee, only a dry naked trust being taken, his death did not have the effect of abating the action in which taxes were sought to be collected against the property, and it was error to sustain a motion to strike such action from the docket.

H. L. Stone for appellant.

Wilkins G. Anderson and H. M. Lane for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This action was instituted by the appellant, July 21, 1892, on tax bills for the years 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891, and process was issued against the defendants therein, viz., Caroline B. Anderson and George W. Anderson, her then trustee. It does not appear that this process was ever executed. This action remained upon the docket without any steps being taken until the 11th day of March, 1897, when appellee, Wilkins G. Anderson, her husband and her then trustee, filed an affidavit, showing that George W. Anderson, the former trustee of his wife, had died on the 28th day of August, 1894. This appears to have been the first suggestion of record of the death of George W. Anderson. One week after this, to wit, the 18th day of March, 1897, the appellant caused an alias process to be issued against appellee, Caroline B. Anderson, the service of which was accepted by her attorneys on April 12, 1897.

The appellant also filed an amended petition, stating the date of the death of George W. Anderson, and that Wilkins G. Anderson had been duly appointed as the trustee of appellee; that he had qualified as such, and was then acting as trustee for his wife with respect to the real estate described in the petition, and made him a defendant to the action. On the 11th day of December, 1897, the appellees filed grounds and entered a motion to strike the action from the docket for the reason that the first trustee died in August, 1894, and more than twelve months had elapsed after his death without any revivor of the action. This motion was not acted upon by the court until 1904, when the court sustained the motion and dismissed the action, of which appellant complains. It appears from the record that the real estate described in the petition descended to appellee, Caroline B. Anderson, from her father, and that prior to her marriage with appellee, Wilkins G. Anderson, a conveyance of this real estate was made to George W. Anderson in trust for her, and Wilkins G. Anderson relinquished to George W. Anderson any and all interest in her estate that would or might come to him by virtue of the contemplated marriage between them. George W. Anderson was to have the power to sell and convey the estate and reinvest the proceeds thereof upon like trusts, but such sale and reinvestment was only to be made with the consent of Caroline B. Anderson, who was to be paid the rents, issues and profits of the estate, and her receipts were to be a full acquittance to the trustee, and she was to have the right and power to dispose of this estate by will as perfectly as if she was unmarried.

Under this deed George W. Anderson did not take any beneficial interest in the property whatever. He took only a mere dry or naked trust, and his death did not abate, or have the effect to abate, the action, which appears from the record to have been pending all the time against appellee, Caroline B. Anderson, the sole owner and beneficiary of the property, and the person who owed and should have paid the taxes if a just claim. To have sold this property, or any part of it, for the taxes, and to pass the legal title to the purchaser it was necessary that the trustee, the holder of the title, be made a party to the action; but his not being a party did not prevent the court from proceeding against Caroline B. Anderson, the real and sole owner of the property, and if the taxes were found to be just and a proper claim, to have caused the same to be paid out of the rents and profits realized from the property, and if necessary the court might have placed the property in the hands of its receiver to effectuate that object, or the court might have ordered a sale of her equitable interest. Having arrived at these conclusions, we deem it unnecessary and a waste of time to discuss the question of the necessity of revivor.

We express no opinion upon the merits of the controversy, as that question is not before us. But we are of the opinion that the court erred in sustaining the motion of appellees to strike the action from the docket. On the return of the case to the lower court the appellees should be permitted to plead and make defense if they desire.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

MORRIS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 17, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Instructions—Where there was nothing in the testimony of appellant to show that he at any time abandoned the difficulty in good faith before he mortally wounded the deceased he was not prejudiced by a qualification added to an instruction authorizing an acquittal upon the grounds of self-defense or apparent necessity to the effect that unless the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant first wilfully and feloniously assaulted the deceased with a knife or rock, and in so doing made the harm or danger, if any there was towards him, necessary or excusable on the part of deceased in his own necessary self-defense from the defendant, in which event the defendant ought not to be excused upon the grounds of self-defense, etc.

2. Evidence—The testimony of the physician who examined the wounds of deceased, to the effect that the wound in the head tended to hasten the death of deceased, was immaterial as the appellant admitted that he killed deceased and the physician had already stated that a knife wound in the left breast was a fatal wound.

E. E. Hogg, G. I. Rader and J. R. Llewellyn for appellant.

N. B. Hays and E. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Jackson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant Morris was indicted by the grand jury of Jackson county for the murder of John Moore. He was convicted of manslaughter and his punishment fixed at twenty-one years in the penitentiary. The proof shows that Moore ran a blacksmith shop and a mill, and also repaired guns and pistols. On the day of his death he was in his yard working on a buggy tire when the defendant came along the road near by, between 12 and 1 o'clock. No witness saw the difficulty. The proof on behalf of the Commonwealth is wholly circumstantial. Shortly thereafter the defendant appeared at a neighbor's with blood on his knife and blood on his pants and stated that he had killed Moore, but that he had to do it. There were several persons there who went at once to Moore's. They found him outside of his yard and near a little path leading from his gate down to the road, lying on his face, breathing, but unconscious. He died without speaking a few moments after they got there. The road at this point ran along the creek, which at that time had a little water in it, and on the side of the road near the creek was a stump which the water had left there. Near this stump lay the hat of the deceased, a two-foot rule, closed, also some horse-shoe nails, and by the stump lay a barlow knife about one sixth open which was his. The ground about six feet from the stump showed signs of a struggle. From this point the tracks of the deceased went across the creek and then returned to the point where his body lay. There was a little blood sprinkled near the stump, a large quantity a few feet further on, and there were signs of blood on the rocks or on the ground from that point across the creek and back to where the deceased was lying. On the far side of the creek there was an impression in the dirt as though made by a man's knee. The deceased when found had one stab near the left nipple which went into the neighborhood of the heart or into it, as shown by the probe, and another stab near the right nipple which went into the cavity. Near by the body of the deceased was a rock weighing two and one-half or three pounds which had on it hair and flesh marks, and there was a bruise about the ear of the deceased where the rock had struck him. The knife which the defendant had was what is known as a large or daddy barlow. There was found in the pocket of the deceased a small pistol, which was empty, a twenty-two caliber which shot once.

It also appeared from the evidence that a few days before the defendant had passed the house of the deceased with a pig, and some one after this had reported that the deceased had said that the defendant had stolen the pig. Some men who were in the field working with him were joking him about this a day or so before, and he said he did not steal the pig, but that if he had stolen it he would as soon steal a pig as to steal corn, and then he said he did not like for any G— d— s— of a b— to tell that on him. On the day of the homicide, and not long before the defendant reached Moore's house, he overtook a man in the road to whom he said that John Moore, "the g— d— black rascal," had been accusing him of stealing a pig, and he would just as soon be a hog rogue as a corn rogue; that he wanted to see Moore and see what he was accusing him of stealing a pig for, something that he was innocent of. To another witness he spoke of Moore's having cursed his boy. While the evidence of what he said about Moore's cursing his boy was not important, it served in some measure to show the state of feeling of the defendant, and was for this reason confirmatory of the testimony as to what he said about the pig matter.

The court allowed the doctor who examined the body of the deceased to state that he was inclined to think the wound in the head would to some extent hasten the death of the deceased. This was objected to, but it was immaterial, as admittedly the defendant killed the deceased, and the doctor had already stated that the stab in the left breast was a fatal wound. The defendant also complains that he was not permitted to ask Ike Sloane this question: "When you first got there did you notice any shavings around the stump?"

The Commonwealth objected to the question as leading, and the court sustained the objection, but whether this was proper or not we need not determine, as there is no avowal what the witness would have stated. The testimony for the Commonwealth showed that at the stump referred to there were two piles of shavings as if two men had sat there whittling. The evidence for the defendant was to the effect that these shavings were made by others after Moore was killed. The defendant had interrogated his other witnesses on the subject and he could have interrogated Sloane by the same line of questions.

These are all the questions made in the case except the propriety of the fifth instruction, which is as follows: "If you shall believe from the evidence that at the time the defendant cut, struck, stabbed and wounded the deceased with a knife so as to cause or hasten his death, or at the time he struck and wounded the deceased with a rock so as to cause or hasten his death (if you shall believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that he did the one or the other or both), he believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that he was then and there in danger of death or the infliction of some great bodily harm at the hands of the deceased, and that it was necessary, or was believed by the defendant in the exercise of a reasonable judgment to be necessary, to so cut, strike, stab and wound the deceased with a knife, or to strike and wound the deceased with a rock in order to avert that danger, real or to the defendant apparent, then you should acquit the defendant upon the grounds of self-defense and apparent necessity. Unless you shall believe from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant first wilfully and feloniously assaulted the deceased with a knife or with a rock, and in so doing made the harm or danger, if any there was, towards him, necessary or excusable on the part of the deceased in his own necessary self-defense from the defendant, in which event you ought not to excuse the defendant upon the grounds of self-defense and apparent necessity."

The defendant objects that the instruction should not have been qualified by the words contained in the last paragraph, and insists that there was no evidence in the case upon which to base it. The defendant testified in his own behalf that as he crossed the creek Moore spoke to him about the hogs running after him when he came by with the pig; that he then said "you are mistaken where I got that pig;" that Moore said, "I saw you pick it up," and he said, "I can prove by Mr. Spars I got the pig there;" that Moore then said, "don't you accuse me of lying, I saw you pick it up; I am not afraid of any G— d— man;" that he said then, "I don't guess you are;" that Moore then came out of the gate and got his knife out and he got his; that Moore struck at him and he knocked his lick down and struck at him; that Moore made another lick at him and he cut him again; that Moore then shut up his knife and grabbed at a rock and jumped across the stream and grabbed another rock and turned back across the stream and threw the rock at him; that he undertook to dodge it and it struck him in the side, knocking him to his knees; that the deceased then ran upon him, saying, "I aim to kill you," and struck him twice with his fist: that he then grabbed the rock the deceased had thrown at him and when he hit the deceased he pitched on his face; that it was just a short time; that it was all immediately done.

The finding of the jury shows that they did not credit the defendant's version of the transaction. The proof showed that there was dirt on the knees of the deceased on his pants; that there were no cuts on the defendant's person. The knife of the deceased was a small barlow knife and was found right by the stump as though he had aimed to shut it up when he dropped it as he was rising from the stump. His hat and rule and nails were near by. While the deceased had the little empty pistol in his pocket he did not make, so far as appears, any effort to use it, nor did the defendant know that he had it. The declaration of the defendant as he was going down the road, and just before he reached the house of the deceased, was that he wanted to see Moore and find out what he was accusing him of stealing that pig for, and this was accompanied by very abusive language. The jury were not required to believe the defendant's evidence. They might believe it, or they might not. They were required to find a verdict on all the evidence before them, and in doing this they might consider the circumstances proven in the case. If the last clause of the instruction had been omitted it would not have helped the defendant in any respect, for the jury would not have been warranted in finding him not guilty under the usual self-defense instruction on the ground that he acted in his necessary self-defense if he first willfully and feloniously assaulted the deceased with a knife or with a rock, and in so doing made it necessary for the defendant to use in his self-defense such force as he employed. Under the usual self-defense instruction the defendant had only the right to cut the defendant with a knife or to strike him with a stone in his necessary self-defense, and if no more than the ordinary instruction had been given, the jury would have had to determine from all of the evidence whether the defendant acted or not in his necessary self-defense or first assaulted the deceased willfully and feloniously with a knife or rock.

•

Though the evidence was circumstantial, there was enough to go to the jury, and there was nothing in the circumstances or in the testimony of the defendant himself to show that he at any time abandoned the difficulty in good faith before the deceased received his mortal wound, and, therefore, he was not prejudiced by this qualification not being added to the instruction. On the whole case we see no substantial error to the prejudice of the defendant in the record. There was no doubt that the defendant killed the deceased. It was equally clear that there was a struggle between the two men ending in the death of deceased. The only question was, who brought on the difficulty? If the deceased came out of his yard and attacked the defendant in the public road he should have been acquitted; and he would have been acquitted under the instructions given by the court, if the jury had so believed from the evidence. But if the defendant attacked the deceased with a knife or stone and so brought on the difficulty, he can not be excused on the ground of self-defense. The jury saw and heard the witnesses. They had all the facts and circumstances before them, and they reached the conclusion that the defendant did not act in his necessary self-defense.

Judgment affirmed.

CUYLER v. BUSH.

(Filed January 25, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Title—It appearing that the land in controversy was within a boundary known as the "forge line" or "three mile circle" which was embraced in a large body of land conveyed in 1849 by several claimants to Samuel C. Jackson and others, and that appellant owns it, it was error for the chancellor to dismiss his petition in which he sought to recover same.

2. Same—Appellee claims through John Clem, who testified that Mason, who gave him fifty acres of land outside of the "forge circle," explained to him that he owned no land in the circle, and the fifty acres must be selected outside, and that when he sold to Vaughn he explained to him that he only sold him so much of the land as lay outside of the circle, and that Vaughn fully understood this when he purchased the land. This occupation was not adverse to appellant's title and can not be included in the time required by appellee to make up his title by prescription.

O. H. Pollard, R. L. Greene and M. A. Phillips for appellant.

C. F. Spencer for appellee.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This controversy involves the title to fifty acres of unenclosed timber land in Powell county, Kentucky. The proceeding was commenced by the appellant's filing a bill in equity in the Powell Circuit Court against appellee for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the latter from cutting timber. Appellant, in his petition, alleged ownership and possession of the land in question, and also facts which, if true, entitled him to the restraining order he sought. The answer placed in issue the title and possession of appellant, and alleged title by prescription in the defendant (appellee). Upon final hearing, the chancellor reached the conclusion that appellee owned the property in litigation, and dismissed appellant's bill; of which judgment he is now complaining.

In 1849, several claimants to a large body of land around the present site of Clay City, Powell county, Kentucky, entered into a compromise by which all of the interests of the various claimants within a perfect circle, with the smokestack of the forge of the Red River Iron Works as a center, and a radius of three miles from the center to circumference, was conveyed to Samuel C. Jackson and others. This boundary was well known as the "forge line" or "three-mile circle," and the deed to Jackson was duly recorded as by law required. The title to this land was afterwards, by regular devolution by properly-recorded deeds, conveyed to appellant, and he and his grantors have been in possession of it, claiming by themselves, their agents and tenants, continuously, to the full extent of the boundary above described, for more than fifty years.

In 1859 or 1860, J. C. Mason, a claimant who had conveyed his interest as above set forth, authorized John Clem to select for himself on either side of Hardwicke creek fifty acres of land outside of the "forge line" or "circle," and to take possession of it, and promised him a deed to it. In pursuance of this verbal gift, Clem, without knowing exactly where the "forge line" ran, and relying upon information of others, selected fifty acres of land, believing it all to lie outside of the "forge line." Upon this, in 1868, he built a small house, cleared and enclosed five or six acres. He lived there until about 1885 without ever having obtained a deed, when he sold it to John W. Vaughn, giving a bond for title, which called for fifty acres outside of the "forge circle." Vaughn afterwards failed, and made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and the property was sold by his assignee and bought in by Mrs. Vaughn, the wife of the assignor. Vaughn and his wife resided near and held the title conveyed to them by Clem until 1890, when they conveyed it to Morgan McKinney, who, in a short time thereafter, sold his title to the appellee, A. P. Bush.

The evidence in this case leaves no doubt in our minds that all of the land described in the petition lies within the "three-mile circle" or "forge line," and that appellant owns it, unless the appellee has acquired title to it, by prescription. Appellant's vendors entered into possession of the "three-mile circle" with the intention of claiming the whole boundary, and have held the same since 1849 continuously, by themselves, their agents and tenants, paying the taxes, warning off trespassers, and exercising other acts of ownership. The rule in such cases is, that one who enters upon unoccupied and under a deed or patent, with the intention of taking possession of the whole, acquires possession to the full extent of the boundary contained in the muniment of title under which he enters. (Culbertson v. McCullum, 1 Ky. Law Rep., 267; Newell on Ejectment, 483-436; Grughler v. Wheeler, 12 B. Mon., 184, and Layson v. Galloway, 4 Bibb., 101.)

We, therefore, conclude that the appellant is the owner of the property in question, unless, as said heretofore, appellee has acquired a title by prescription. The facts as to this are few and simple. John Clem, through whom appellee claims, testifies that J. C. Mason, who verbally gave him fifty acres of land outside of the "forge circle," explained to him that he owned no land inside of the circle, and that the fifty acres must be selected outside, which he undertook to do. He says that he at no time claimed adversely, or otherwise, any interest in, or title to, land within the circle; that he believed that he was outside of it, but did not know, of his own knowledge, exactly where the line was, and that he never had a marked or well-defined boundary to the fifty acres he claimed; that when he sold it to Vaughn, and gave his bond for title, he explained to his vendee that he only sold him such of the land as lay outside of the "forge line," and that Vaughn fully understood this when he purchased; that the bond for title, which he gave to his vendee, described the land as lying without the "forge line."

The occupation of John Clem was not adverse to appellant's title, and his possession from 1863 to 1885 can not be included in the time required to make up the title by prescription claimed by appellee. In the case of Smith v. Morrill, 5 Litt., 212, it is said: "The boundaries of the land of the tenant who made this improvement did not extend into, but adjoined the appellee, and the tenant deposed in this cause that when he made said improvement he extended it into the lines of the appellee by mistake of the place where the true line was, and did not intend it. According to the decision of this court in the case of M'Kinney v. Kenny, 1 Mar., 461, this act of the tenant could not possess him further than his actual enclosure, and the recovery from this tenant could not possess the evictor further than the tenant held, and the court below so instructed the jury."

And in M'Kinney v. Kenny, 1 Mar., 461: "The accidental and undersigned projection by M'Dowell of one corner of his farm over the line of Kenny to the extent of one pole, can not be considered as an entry on a part for the whole. It has been more than once decided by this court, that possession to extend itself beyond the close must be upon a claim of greater extent; and it is believed that to give a constructive extension to the possession of M'Dowell beyond the limits of the claim under which it was taken, and contrary to the intention of the occupant, would not have the sanctity of authority or reason. It would be to make M'Dowell a trespasser against his will."

There is no evidence in this case that the Vaughns held the land with any other intention than was consistent with the information given them at the time of the conveyance by Clem, and their deed to M'Kinney shows that they did not claim any land within the circle, because the last call runs with the "circle" line to the point of beginning; so that appellee's claim to title by prescription breaks down under the uncontradicted evidence.

But in addition to this, even if Clem and Vaughn had claimed the land adversely from 1863 to 1899, appellee's title must fail. Appellant's vendors, as before stated, were in possession under the older deed, claiming to the full extent of their boundary, a circle with a radius of three miles. If Clem had claimed the land from the time he built his house and occupied it, his title by prescription would have been limited to the extent of his actual enclosure within the boundary of the older title, the rule being that, where the holder of a junior makes entry upon land in the actual or constructive possession of the owner of an older title, he acquires possession only to the extent of his actual enclosure. (Chiles v. Jones, 7 Dana, 528; Shreve v. Summers, 1 Dana, 239; Moss, & Co. v. Currie, Id., 267; Jones v. McCauley's Heirs, 2 Duv., 414; Kentucky Land and Immigration Co. v. Crabtree, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 744.)

The land in controversy is wild, rough mountain land covered with timber. No part of it was ever enclosed, except from five to seven acres fenced by Clem, and the most that appellee, under any state of case, could have acquired by prescription, under the rule above announced, would have been this enclosure. The real trouble in this case is not that the appellee, or his vendors, believed they had a right to any land within the boundary of the "three-mile circle," because that was well known, in theory, at least, as containing land belonging to appellant and his vendors. But they did not know exactly where the "circle" line was located with reference to the land in question. They made no claim to the land within the "circle," but did not believe it extended out so far as to include the land in dispute. The "circle" line was well known as extending out three miles in every direction from the smokestack as a center, but it was not known that three miles from the smokestack reached this particular land. All of the deeds which constitute appellee's chain of title show this to be true, by their last calls running with the "circle" line to the point of beginning. With the greatest respect for the opinion of the chancellor on the facts, we are forced to the conclusion that he erred in adjudging that the appellee was the owner of the property involved herein, and in dismissing appellant's petition. The trespasses complained of were within the "circle," and not within the enclosure made by Clem, and, therefore, on appellant's land, and the injunction should have been awarded.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, with directions to enter a judgment in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

CITIZENS INSURANCE CO. OF MISSOURI v. HENDERSON ELEVATOR CO.

(Filed January 25, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Insurance—Cancellation of policy—The testimony in this action conduces to show that the policy was cancelled, that appellee's agent agreed to its cancellation, and the money returnable under a clause of the policy relating to its cancellation was by consent of appellee's agent to be applied to premiums on another policy to be issued by another company upon the same property. There was sufficient evidence to authorize the submission of the case to the jury.

Lockett & Lockett for appellant.

Clay & Clay for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action is based upon a policy of fire insurance for $1,200, which the appellant issued on October 8, 1903, to appellee on hay and grain in its warehouse at Janesville, Ill. The property was destroyed by fire on October 30, 1903. The court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the appellee.

The policy contained the following provision, to wit: "This policy shall be cancelled at any time at the request of the insured, or by the company by five days' notice of such cancellation. If this policy shall be cancelled as heretofore provided, or become void or cease, the premiums having been actually paid, the unearned portion shall be returned on the surrender of the policy or last renewal, this company retaining the customary short rate except that when this policy is cancelled by this company by giving notice it shall only retain the pro rata premium."

The appellant averred that the policy had been cancelled on October 19, 1903, and that the authorized agent of the appellee agreed to the cancellation and promised to surrender the policy. The evidence introduced by the appellant tended to show that Cox of the firm of Cox & Beal, the agents who issued the policy of insurance and who represented other insurance companies, notified appellee's agent that the policy was cancelled, and that he consented thereto and agreed to send for the policy which was at Henderson, Ky., and surrender it; that he asked Cox & Beal to issue other policies on the property for the amount of appellant's policy; that they issued several policies which were cancelled by their companies; that the Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Co. issued a policy for $1,200 on the property, but subsequently reduced it to $600; that this policy was in force at the time the fire occurred; that the day after the fire appellee's agents surrendered the policy which the appellant had issued. The evidence further conduces to show that Cox informed appellee's agent that he would be required to pay a four instead of three per cent. rate, which he had paid the appellant; thereupon, he agreed to pay the insurance agents an additional sum of $12 to cover the additional rate. The testimony conduces to show that the appellant's policy was cancelled; that appellee's agent agreed to its cancellation; and that the money that was returnable under the clause of the policy quoted, was by the consent of appellees' agent to be applied by Cox & Beal to premiums on another policy or policies to be issued on the same property. The effect of the agreement was, that the insurance agents were not to return the money to the appellee, but were to hold and apply it for its benefit in the payment of premiums. Therefore, the evidence tends to support the averments of the answer that the policy had been cancelled at the time of the fire. The facts of this case are quite different from those of the case of the Continental Fire Insurance Co. v. Daniel, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1501. We are of the opinion that the averments of the answer were sufficient to show a cancellation of the policy.

We are of the opinion that the case should have gone to the jury upon the testimony offered by the appellant; hence, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

MILLER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 27, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Evidence—Sufficiency of—Where there is any testimony to show the accused guilty this court will not reverse a case for lack of evidence.

2. Bill of exceptions—Where the transcript fails to show what conduct of the Commonwealth's attorney is complained of, that question can not be reviewed.

John H. Wilson for appellant.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant was indicted for false swearing averred to have been committed while giving his testimony before the grand jury of Knox county in relation to a matter then under investigation by it. It is claimed that the appellant swore falsely when he testified that certain parties were not engaged in gambling on a certain night at a certain place in Barbourville.

Two witnesses were introduced by the Commonwealth, whose testimony strongly tends to show that the parties named were engaged in a game on the occasion in question in the presence of the appellant. Counsel for the appellant devoted most of his brief to show that these witnesses did not agree with each other as to collateral facts and as to what they saw with reference to the game. The court has repeatedly held that it is the province of the jury to pass upon such questions. It has also held that if there is any testimony tending to show the guilt of the accused, it will not reverse a case for the lack of evidence. It is suggested that the Commonwealth's attorney was guilty of improper conduct in his argument to the jury. The transcript fails to show what conduct of the Commonwealth's attorney is complained of, hence that question is not here for review.

Perceiving no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH, BY, &c. v. FARMERS BANK OF KENTUCKY.

(Filed January 27, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Escheat—Construction of statutes—In this action to recover lands on the ground that it had escheated to the Commonwealth, sections 1606 to 1623, Kentucky Statutes, do not give the right to maintain the action. Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Wisconsin Chair Co., page 170.

W. J. Webb and F. L. Turner for appellants.

Clay & Clay for appellee.

Appeal from Ballard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The Farmers Bank of Kentucky is a corporation. It acquired the title to certain real estate in Ballard county, under a decretal sale. It held it for a longer period than five years. Charles Linthicum, as escheator of that county, instituted this action to recover the land upon the ground that it had escheated to the Commonwealth by virtue of section 192 of the Constitution and of section 567, Kentucky Statutes. The same question was involved in the case of Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Wisconsin Chair Co., decided January 19, 1905, in which this court held that the escheator was not authorized to maintain the action. The statute law (sections 1606, 1623, inclusive), does not apply to the case under consideration. And the right to maintain the action is not given by these provisions of the statute. The court did not in the case to which reference is made determine what effect section 192 of the Constitution and section 567, Kentucky Statutes, has upon the rights of a corporation as to property held for a longer period than five years. Neither does the court do so in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMBS' ADM'X, &c. v. KRISH.

SAME v. KRISH, &c.

(Filed January 27, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Pleading—Variance—In these actions there is a variance between the proof and pleadings. The petition alleged a sale of land to one, and the proof showed a sale to another. The judgment was, therefore, unauthorized. Where a judgment sought to be opened had been obtained by one, he was a necessary party to the petition for a new trial. If there is a defect of parties that question must be raised by demurrer, and it not being raised is waived.

J. J. Fitzpatrick and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellants.

J. J. C. Bach, Bach & Patrick and W. H. Miller for appellees.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee, Krish, on February 7, 1901, filed his petition in equity against W. H. Turner and wife and the widow and heirs at law of J. H. Combs, alleging that Turner owed him an account of $156, and that to secure the debt Turner had mortgaged to him a lot in the town of Hazard, which he had purchased from J. H. Combs, and for which Combs had executed to him a title bond, and that Turner had paid Combs for the land, but that no deed had been made. An answer was filed by the widow and children of Combs, in which they denied that Turner had purchased the land from J. H. Combs, or held a title bond for it, or had paid him the purchase money. Some of the heirs of Combs were infants, and a guardian ad litem was appointed for them. Proof was taken by the plaintiff which showed that Combs had sold the lot to one G. D. Stout for $80 and executed to Stout a bond for title; that Stout was a physician and had some doctor's bills against Combs, the amount of which the witness did not know; that Stout sold the lot, or a part of it, to Turner; that Combs died about two years after the sale to Stout, and shortly before he died said that he had bought a wagon from Turner; that he had to buy it to get a debt Turner owed him for some property. The wagon was worth $50 or $60. The case was then submitted and pending submission Polly Ann Combs, as administratrix of

J. H. Combs, tendered her petition, in which she alleged that there was a balance of $80 due her intestate on the land, for which she prayed judgment. The court refused to allow her petition to be filed, and entered a judgment that Stout and Turner had fully paid to Combs the price of the land and adjudging that the widow and heirs of J. H. Combs convey the land to Turner. He also adjudged Krish a lien on it and ordered it sold. This was on September 4, 1901. On the 7th day of January, 1903, Polly Ann Combs, as administratrix of J. H. Combs, filed her petition in the Perry Circuit Court for a new trial, in which she alleged in substance that the title bond given by her husband to Stout was not in her possession, and she did not know in whose possession it was as it was concealed when the former case was tried and it had recently come into her possession, and that this bond showed that the purchase price for the land was $200, and of this only $81 had been paid. She filed the title bond with her petition, and asked to have the judgment set aside, and for a new trial of the action. The court dismissed her petition. She and the children have prosecuted an appeal to this court from the original judgment, and she has prosecuted an appeal from the judgment dismissing her petition for a new trial.

The evidence before the court in the original action was insufficient to show that either Stout or Turner had paid Combs for the land. The amount of the doctor's bills was not shown, and it was not shown that the wagon was taken for the payment of the property in contest, nor were any facts shown from which this should be presumed. There was also a variance between the proof and the allegations of the petition. The plaintiff alleged the sale of the land by Combs to Turner. The proof showed a sale to Stout. There was no proof in the record that the title bond was lost, and there was nothing justifying the introduction of parol evidence as to its contents. The judgment in that case was, therefore, unauthorized.

While the petition for a new trial does not allege that no part of the purchase money had been paid except $81, the allegation being that only this much has been paid as shown by the bond, it must be borne in mind that the petition is filed simply for a new trial, it having been aptly denied in the original case that the purchase money had been paid. In the original action Krish alleged that the purchase money was all paid, and to obtain the relief he got in that action it was incumbent on him to maintain his allegation. The facts stated in the petition of the administratrix for a new trial showed that the purchase money was not all paid, or, at least, was sufficient to raise a presumption to this effect. The judgment which was sought to be opened had been obtained by Krish, and, therefore, he alone was a necessary party to the petition for a new trial. Turner was not a party plaintiff in the original suit, and filed no cross petition or pleading of any kind. If there is any defect of parties defendant this objection must be raised by special demurrer, and not being so raised, is waived. If it turns out that other parties are necessary to a final determination of the action they may be brought in. Stout and Holcomb, to whom he also sold a part of the land, should be brought before the court if any relief is sought against them. On the return of the case to the circuit court, such pleadings as may be necessary to bring in the proper parties and complete the issues may be filed.

The judgment on both appeals is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

MOSELY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 31, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Former opinion—Affirmed upon the authority of Kelsie Mosely v. Commonwealth.

B. B. Golden for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The indictment, evidence adduced upon the trial, and the instructions given by the court to the jury in this case, were the same as in the case of Kelsie Moseley v. Commonwealth, this day decided. The jury found the appellant guilty of voluntary manslaughter and fixed his punishment for a term of ten years in the penitentiary.

The judgment herein is affirmed for the reason given in the opinion in that case.

BRAMBLET v. COMMONWEALTH LAND AND LUMBER CO.

(Filed February 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Helm, Bruce & Helm and W. S. Pryor for appellant.

O. A. Wehle and Albert S. Brandels for appellee.

Carroll & Carroll for bondholders.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Judge O'Rear delivered the following extension of opinion:

It will be recalled that the judgment acquired by appellant Bramblet's purchase from the banks were based upon five notes. One of the notes for $13,248 and one for $4,720 belonged to Thomas F. Hargis, and were by him assigned to the bank, as collateral. Two other notes for amounts equal to the ones just stated, were owned by Fetter and pledged by him to the banks. The remaining note, the one for $5,300, was the debt of the corporation, the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co., for money borrowed by it from the bank. The notes owned by Hargis were a part of the purchase money of the land conveyed to the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co., by Hargis and Fetter. They were secured by liens upon the land. It was competent for Hargis to collect these notes from his corporation, the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co., and if they were not paid at maturity, he might have sued his corporation and enforced his liens against the land. When he pledged the notes to the bank as collateral to secure his debt to the bank, he did not part with the absolute title to them. He retained the title subject to the right of the bank to enforce the collection of the notes, and apply the proceeds to the payment of its debt.

It was also competent for Hargis to have paid his debt to the bank, and thereby have redeemed his notes pledged upon the debt. In that event he would have been fully restored to all of the rights he had in the notes before assigning them to the bank. If the corporation, the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co., of which Hargis was president, failed to pay the notes owing by it to him, he might, without violating his duty to the corporation, have redeemed the notes from the bank and sold them to Bramblet at any price agreed between them. Bramblet would then have had the right to enforce their collection for the full amount without regard to what he paid for them. If Hargis was unable to redeem his notes by the payment of his debt to the bank in full, but could obtain a settlement from the bank for less than the full amount of his debt, thereby redeeming his land notes so as to leave him a margin in them, it was competent for him to do so. If to raise the money to make the compromise with the bank he had to give some of this margin to the person furnishing the money, there was nothing in that transaction that involved a breach of his duty to his corporation, for he did not undertake to the corporation not to collect from it the debt it owed him for the purchase money of the land he had sold it. In that transaction it was implied at least that Hargis might do for his own interest what any person not at all connected with the corporation might have done, had he held such a debt against it. We, therefore, conclude that the transaction between Hargis and Bramblet, by which Bramblet bought up the judgment against the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co., based upon Hargis' notes, was not an illegal act. By it he obtained the perfect title to that judgment, with its interest and costs. He also obtained, so far as the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co. in this litigation is concerned, the title to the other collateral pledged to the bank for Hargis, namely, his shares of stock in the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co. But for the remaining judgments, or parts of judgments, based upon the Fetter notes and the $5,300 note, the matter rests upon the principle announced in the original opinion herein. As to them it was Hargis' duty to give the benefit of his information, his services, and ability to arrange for their settlement at less than their face, to his corporation, whom he had engaged to serve, and not to his friend or partner for a consideration personal to him, Hargis.

The conclusion announced above necessitates a somewhat different adjustment of the rights of the parties from that indicated in the original opinion. Instead of Bramblet being entitled to have returned to him the whole of the purchase money paid by him to the banks for the judgment, $10,000, he should have been repaid so much of the $10,000 and interest as the Fetter notes and the $5,300 note bear to the sum of all five of the notes.

The shares of stock in the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co. pledged by Fetter and others than Hargis to secure the Fetter notes and the $5,300 note, will, if the Commonwealth Land and Lumber Co. redeems the land, as is allowed in the original opinion, belong to the corporation, and not to appellant Bramblet.

The petitions for rehearing are in other respects overruled.

CITY OF LEBANON, &c. v. KNOTT, &c.

(Filed January 31, 1905—Not to be reported.)

H. S. McElroy for appellants.

John McChord for appellees.

Appeal from Marlon Circuit Court.

The judgment in this case is affirmed by an equal division of the court, Judge Cantrill not sitting.

CONTINENTAL INSURANCE CO. v. THOMASON.

(Filed January 13, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Insurance—Provision of policy—Change of ownership in property—Thomason, the appellee, had his house and barn insured for five years. The policy provided, among other things, that if any change in the ownership of the property take place the policy shall be void, and that no one except an officer of the company in its western department should have authority to waive or alter its terms. During the life of the policy the assured made a contract with his son by which he conveyed him the tract of land upon which the house and barn were situated, but by a written agreement between them which, by mistake, was omitted from the deed, the deed was not to take effect in possession until the death of the assured and he in the meantime was to have a life estate in the property. After this was done, and before the policy matured, and when the last note for the premium was presented by the agent of the company he was informed by both the father and the son as to the condition of the title of the land and he said that he knew it and that it would be all right and would make no difference in the insurance. The premium note was paid upon this assurance and some four or five months thereafter the property burned and the company refused to pay the loss on the ground that there had been a change in the property. Held—The knowledge of the agent of the transfer of the property is the knowledge of the company, and having collected the premium note with the assurance that the insurance was all right it can not now be heard to say that the policy was not in force.

2. Same—If the insurance company, aside from the provisions of section 700, Kentucky Statutes, waived a change that had been made in the title to insured property, the burden is upon it to show that the life estate was of less value than the amount of the insurance, and in this record disclosed neither pleading nor proof that the life estate of the assured was not sufficient to cover it.

J. A. & John A. Moore for appellant.

James & James and A. C. Moore for appellee.

Appeal from Crittenden Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

J. H. Thomason, the appellee, insured his house, barn and some personal property with the appellant company on August 7, 1899, for five years, and on the 8th day of December, 1903, the property was destroyed by fire. He sued to recover for the loss, and having succeeded in the circuit court the insurance company appeals.

The policy, among other things, provided that "if any change take place in title or possession (except by succession by reason of the death of the assured) of the property herein named * * * this entire policy shall be null and void. It is stipulated that no agent or employe of this company, or any other person or persons than an officer of the company in its western department at Chicago, Ill., shall have power or authority to waive or alter any of the terms or conditions of this policy or to make any endorsement hereon, and all agreements by such officer must be signed by him."

During the currency of the policy the assured made a deed to his son, A. G. Thomason, for 125 acres of land, which included the residence and barn, but by a written agreement between them which was omitted by mistake from the deed this deed was not to take effect in possession until the death of the father and he in the meantime was to have a life estate in the property. After this was done the last premium note of the insurance company fell due and when it was presented by the agent of the company for payment he was informed by both the father and the son as to the condition of the title to the land and he said that he knew it and that it was all right and would make no difference in the insurance. The premium note was paid upon this assurance and some four or five months after this the house burned down. The company refused to pay the loss on the ground that there had been a change of title to the property, relying upon the clause of the policy above quoted and insisting that the agent was without authority to waive the condition. The agent denies that he made the assurance above referred to, but this was proved by three witnesses, and he admits himself that then asked him if the insurance would be all right. A man named J. S. Henry represented the company at the time the policy was taken out. He took the application and received the first payment, forwarding it to the home office in Chicago, from which the policy was issued. Some time after this he ceased to be the agent, and Ab Henry became agent in his place. The premium note was sent by the company to him to collect, and he collected it, telling the assured the deed from him to his son made no difference in the insurance as above stated.

The provisions of the policy that its conditions should not be waived except by a writing endorsed on the policy and signed by certain of its officers is not applicable for the reason that notwithstanding this provision the company might be estopped to rely on a forfeiture of the policy. If the policy had become null and void by the change in the title to the property the company had no right to collect the premium note, from the assured. If, with this knowledge, it collected the premium note, assuring the insured that his insurance was all right, it can not now be heard to say that the policy is not in force. The weight of the evidence shows that the agent knew these facts, and so the question is narrowed down to this, is the knowledge of the agent the knowledge of the company?

Neither J. S. Henry nor Ab Henry, who succeeded him and collected the premium note, had authority to issue policies of insurance. The authority of each was limited to the taking of application and the collection of premiums, the applications being forwarded to the Chicago office, where, if the application was approved, the policy was issued. In Phoenix Insurance Co. v. Spiers, &c., 87 Ky., 285, the company had a local agent named Curtis, who took applications for insurance, made the surveys, received premiums, and countersigned and delivered policies to the insured, but did not issue them. The policy provided that it should be void if any other insurance was taken upon the property. Additional insurance was taken with the knowledge of Curtis, and the question was whether his knowledge was the knowledge of the company. The court, resting its opinion upon the ground that the acts of an agent within his ostensible authority are the acts of the principal, held the acts of Curtis within the apparent scope of his authority, and binding upon the company. Among other things, after discussing a number of authorities, the court said: "He usually represents a company remotely located. Its patrons in the vicinity naturally look to him for direction generally as to insurance obtained through him. He is generally regarded as having full power in reference to it. Being usually the only man upon the ground having anything to do with it, the persons insured in his company, with few, if any, exceptions, would, in the absence of notice that his powers were limited, regard his statement as to any matter relative to such insurance as authoritative, and any notice to him as to it is sufficient. They rarely know anything of the company or of its officers, who issue the policies, and look to the agent, through whom they have obtained the insurance, as the complete representative of the company in everything connected with that insurance. If they did not consider that they were authorized to do so, it would undoubtedly create distrust and cripple the business. As to third parties, the agent should, in the absence of notice to the contrary, be regarded as possessing all the powers his occupation fairly imports to the public. Under this rule an agent who solicits the insurance, takes the application, receives the premium and delivers the policy, may, in our opinion, by his conduct or acts, bind his company by way of waiver of a forfeiture on account of additional insurance, in the absence of knowledge upon the part of the assured that his powers in this respect have been restricted. This being so, it follows that the knowledge of the agent under such circumstances is to be imputed to the company."

This rule was followed in Hartford Life Insurance Co. v. Hayden's Adm'r, 90 Ky., 89; Wright's Adm'r v. Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., 91 Ky., 208. It has been held by this court that where an agent, with authority to solicit insurance, take applications and collect premiums, learns, when taking the application, of defects of title or other matters affecting the risk and rendering the contract of insurance void, his knowledge is the knowledge of the company. (Rogers v. Farmers Mutual Aid Association, 106 Ky., 871; London and Lancashire Insurance Co. v. Gerteisen, 106 Ky., 815; Citizens Insurance Co. v. Crist, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 47; Ætna Life Insurance Co. v. Hartley, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 57.)

The case before us can not fairly be distinguished from the Spiers case or the subsequent cases following it. There is nothing to indicate that the assured had notice of any limitations upon the apparent authority of the agent, Ab Henry. If the agent, instead of telling the assured that his insurance was all right, had told him that the change of title forfeited the policy, he had unquestionable authority to take an application for insurance on the property and collect the premiums therefor. He was the only representative the company had in the locality. He determined that this was unnecessary, and that all that was needed was that the insured should pay his premium note. It was within the apparent scope of the authority of the agent under the circumstances to determine a question of this character, and when, with knowledge of all the facts, he collected the premium, assuring the insured that his insurance was all right, it was his duty to report the facts to his company, and it is to be presumed that he did this. (Rhode Island Underwriters Association v. Monarch, 98 Ky., 805.) It was unnecessary for the plaintiff to aver that the life estate of J. H. Thomason in the property destroyed was of value equal to the insurance, for if the company is estopped to rely upon the clause forfeiting the policy on account of the change of title after collecting the pay for the insurance with knowledge of the condition of the title, it must be presumed it so agreed to carry the insurance upon the ground that the life estate of the insured was of value sufficient to justify it. In other words, if it waived the change that had been made in the title, aside from section 700, Kentucky Statutes, the burden is at least on it to show that the life estate was of less value than the amount of the insurance, and there is neither pleading nor proof in the record that the life estate of J. H. Thomason was not sufficient to cover it.

By the terms of the policy the loss, if any, was payable to the mortgagee, P. S. Maxwell, as his interest may appear. The mortgage to Maxwell was renewed after the policy was issued, but the amount was not increased beyond the original amount of the debt, and it does not appear that any right of the defendant was affected by this, or even that it was informed of the amount of the Maxwell debt at the time the policy was issued. Prima facie the policy was payable to Maxwell to the extent of his mortgage debt as it appeared from the record in the county clerk's office. The verdict of the jury under the instructions of the court is in effect a finding that the agent, Henry, had notice of the change in the mortgage.

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

Judges Paynter and Barker dissenting.

BULLOCK, TRUSTEE, &c. v. BULLOCK, &c.

(Filed February 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Wills—Estates—Where a will provided that the remainder of an estate should be equally divided among the descendants of Bullock at the time of his death, the judgment in this action decreeing a division and settlement among his descendants (he is still living), was erroneous, because it is impossible at this time to know which of his children will survive him. (See former opinion, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 1413.)

P. J. Beard for appellant.

Willis & Todd for Mary E. Gudgell.

E. H. Davis for guardian ad litem.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is the second appeal of this case. The opinion on former appeal may be found in 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1418, which is referred to for the facts of this unfortunate litigation.

On the return of the case to the lower court a judgment was rendered. That part of it which is necessary to a proper understanding of the question involved on this appeal is as follows: "This cause being again by consent submitted on the pleadings, proof and exhibits, and the court being sufficiently advised, it is the judgment of the court that the infant defendants, Lunsford Bullock, Helen Maul Bullock, Thomas Bullock and E. P. Bullock, Jr., are entitled to have paid into court from the proceeds of the sale of the land described in the petition the sum of $1,500, with interest from January 20, 1903, to wit, $1,622.50, it appearing to the court that there is now in court as the amount recovered from the former trustee, J. Lowry Bullock, the sum of $991.33, part of proceeds of sale of land herein, but there is to be deducted from this the sum of $10, which is allowed out of same to W. M. Cardwell for his services as custodian thereof, leaving $981.33. Now it is adjudged that the defendant, Mary E. Gudgell, will pay into court a sum sufficient to pay the said sum of $1,622.50. with interest from this date, and costs and allowances hereinafter adjudged, but not less than the sum of $709.02, the amount of her bond unpaid at this date, with its accrued interest."

This judgment would be correct but for the clause in Mrs. Mary Bullock's will, as follows: "Remainder to be equally divided among descendants of E. P. Bullock living at the time of his death per stirpes."

E. P. Bullock is still alive, and it is impossible to know at this time whether or not his four adult or his four minor children will survive him. Such of them as may not survive him will not take any interest in the property, except their part of the use and profits while they live. There can not be any other reasonable construction given to this provision of the will, and it must control. The court can not disregard it, although it may entail a hardship in this case.

The appellee, Mary E. Gudgell, for the reasons stated in the former opinion, is entitled to all of the interests of E. P. Bullock and his four adult children in this property or fund, but she can not take and hold same in such a way as to affect the rights and interests of the named infant children. Her interest in the property of the four adult children depends upon the fact as to whether or not they survive their father. If so, she takes their interest in fee simple; if not, her interest in their portion ceases at their death.

These four infant children's interest can be protected in two ways: First, require Mary E. Gudgell to pay the balance of her sale bonds, with interest, into court. Add this to the amount recovered and received from the trustee, J. Lowry Bullock, and then require her to pay into court an additional sum to make the original purchase price of the land purchased by her. The court should then have this fund reinvested in other property upon the same terms and conditions as provided in Mrs. Mary Bullock's will, but the court should give to Mary E. Gudgell five-ninths of the rents and profits derived from this property so long as E. P. Bullock and his four adult children live. Her interest however should be decreased in the proportion that any one Or more of the adult children should die before their father's death, and in the event they survive their father, she should take half of this property in fee simple. In the event all do not survive, she should take the interest of those who do not survive, or sufficient to reimburse her for her investment therein. The infant children should receive four-ninths of the rents and profits from this property until the death of their father and take in fee simple one-half of the property, or such part as may be coming to them upon the death of their father, as provided in the will of Mary Bullock.

Second. If the purchaser prefers it, the following plan may be adopted in lieu of the one above suggested. The court may require the balance due by the purchaser paid to the receiver, and also the funds collected from J. Lowry Bullock, the former trustee, and cause this fund to be reinvested as directed in the will of Mary Bullock, excluding E. P. Bullock and the four adult children from all interest therein, and the court may then direct the land sold to be conveyed to the purchaser, Mary E. Gudgell, retaining a lien thereon for anything that may, on final hearing or a final settlement of the trust at E. P. Bullock's death, be adjudged to the other contingent remaindermen, over and above the amount so invested for their benefit.

The adoption of either of these methods will protect the interests of the descendants of E. P. Bullock, who may be alive at his death and take under the will of Mary Bullock, and the purchaser, Mary Gudgell, should be allowed the option as to which method is adopted. If she adopts the first method suggested, then she will be entitled to a conveyance of the ninety acres of land purchased by her in this action free from all liens or claims of any character whatsoever.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

BRADY v. FRALEY'S ADM'X, &c.

(Filed February 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Attachments—Fraudulent conveyances—On the day an attachment was sued out against his property a debtor conveyed his property to Wells, who was on his bail bond. Wells did not have to pay anything on the bond, and about ten months later conveyed the property to the wife of the debtor at the latter's request. The record seems to establish a fraudulent intent to defeat the recovery of the appellant's claim.

James F. Clarke for appellant.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg and W. A. Young for appellees.

Appeal from Rowan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

In January, 1890, James A. Butts, &c., brought an ordinary action in the Rowan Circuit Court against F. M. Fraley, in which they sued Fraley for sixteen walnut logs, and took an order of delivery for the logs. To retain possession of the logs Fraley executed bond, with James J. Brady as surety, as provided by the statute. Butts finally recovered in the action, and having sued Brady on the bond, recovered judgment against him, which he paid. Brady thereupon filed this suit against Fraley, charging that he had paid out on the judgment in all $811.02, and in addition to this had paid in attorney's fees on an appeal taken to the superior court $60, the appeal having been prosecuted with the approval of Fraley and for his benefit. A defense was filed to the action on the ground that Brady had received the sixteen walnut logs, for the possession of which the bond was given, and that they were of value more than the amount he had paid. An attachment was taken out by Brady on the ground that Fraley was about to dispose of his property with the fraudulent intent to cheat, delay and hinder his creditors. On final hearing the court gave judgment in favor of Brady for $137.87, with interest and cost, and discharged the attachment. From this judgment Brady appeals, and a motion has been entered to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the amount in controversy is less than $200.

The amount of Brady's claim was $811.02, plus $60, or $871.02. If we deduct from this $137.87, there is a balance of something over $200, which is in controversy on the appeal. The motion to dismiss the appeal is, therefore, overruled. It is insisted that the attachment was properly discharged as the proof failed to show a fraudulent disposition of his property by Fraley. The facts are that Fraley, on the day the attachment was taken out, conveyed to W. R. Wells two tracts of land worth about $1,500, which appear to have been about all the property he had. While this conveyance purported to be for value, it was really made because Fraley was in jail and Wells entered as his bail to secure his release from jail, the conveyance being intended as a security for Wells to protect him from loss on the bail bond. Wells did not have to pay anything on the bail bond, and about ten months later he conveyed the land, at Fraley's request, to Fraley's wife. It is said that the conveyance to Wells was not made fraudulently, but for an honest purpose, to secure Fraley's release from jail. Yet the effect of the arrangement was to put the absolute title in Wells, and while this would not conclusively show a fraudulent purpose, still when it was followed by the deed from Wells back to Fraley's wife, we think the fraudulent intent is sufficiently established, and the attachment should have been sustained and the land subjected to Fraley's debt. The proof is conflicting as to the value of the walnut logs which Brady got, but under the evidence, and giving some weight to the chancellor's judgment, we have reached the conclusion not to disturb his finding as to the amount due Brady.

Judgment reversed for a judgment subjecting the land to the debt of Brady as herein indicated.

RATLIFF, &c. v. MAY, &c.

(Filed February 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Survey of—Patents—In this action to recover for the value of timber cut, the question of title being in issue, the evidence of certain witnesses read as depositions as to the location and boundary of the land was insufficient to overthrow the location of the land as determined by the actual calls of the patent.

2. Parol evidence—The rule is well settled that parol evidence is inad-impossible to show the actual location of a patent, and that course and distance must give way to marks found on the ground, or the actual location of the patent.

Roscoe Vanover, W. S. Pryor, J. F. Butler and W. S. Harkins for appellants.

J. M. Roberson for appellees.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellants were cutting some timber which appellees claimed was on their land; thereupon the following written contract was made between them:

"Whereas, J. E. Ratliff & Co. has out a lot of sawlog timber on Grassy creek on a tract of land known as the 'May survey,' and in order to settle the matter without a law suit or cost, the said J. E. Ratliff & Co. has agreed to pay the 'May heirs' $3.25 per tree for all the trees cut by them inside of the 646 owned by them.

"They further agree to pay $3.25 per tree for all merchantable poplar, ash and cucumber which measures twenty-two inches over the bark stump high from the ground which they have not cut standing in bounds of said survey owned by the 'May heirs.' Said timber is to be counted and branded as soon as hands can be procured to do the same, and the money is due and payable on this contract as soon as timber is counted.

"It is further agreed that party of the second part has the right to use such timber and stone as is necessary for roads, shanties, ox lots, etc., except timber to saw railing to build tram roads."

Thereafter appellees brought this suit upon the contract, alleging that the timber cut on their land at the contract price was of value $3,074.50. The defendants filed answer, in which they claimed that the timber which they had cut was on their own land, and this is the only question necessary to be determined on the appeal. The proof showed that on December 7, 1846, a patent was issued to William Ramey for 8,620 acres of land. On January 8, 1858, two surveys were made, one of Isaac Epling for 650 acres, and one of John and David May for 1,000 acres. Subsequently, on June 17, 1872, there was another of 500 acres made by John Belcher and George Potter. The plaintiffs claim under the May patent issued in 1858. The defendants claim under the Belcher patent issued in 1872, and maintain that the May patent does not include the land. The controversy turns upon the proper location of the beginning point of the May patent. The plaintiffs claim two white oaks for the corner on the waters of Grassy creek, while the defendants claim two white oaks for the corner which are a mile and a half away from the point named and on the waters of Beaver creek.

When the case was called for trial the defendants moved for a continuance, filing affidavit as to what they could prove by witnesses whose depositions they wished to take. The plaintiffs consented that the affidavit might be read as the deposition of the witnesses, and thereupon the court overruled the motion to continue the action. It is said that the court paid no attention to the affidavit as containing the testimony of the witnesses referred to, and, therefore, the defendants were prejudiced by the ruling of the court. The case must be tried here on the record before us. The same effect must be given to the statements of the witnesses in the affidavit for continuance as would be given to them if contained in the depositions regularly given by the witnesses, and if by giving this effect to the testimony judgment should be entered for the defendants the court will so order.

The defendants proved by John May, who made the survey on which the May patent was issued, and by several other persons who were present at the time, that he marked the two white oaks on the waters of Beaver creek as the beginning point of the survey and began the survey from that point, but all of the witnesses state that May did not run any line of the survey: that while he was running the lines of the Epling survey, which was run the same day, he went to these two white oaks and marked them as the corner of the May survey, and had them to stretch the chain once from them. They then returned to the Epling survey, which they completed, and the May survey was laid down entirely by protraction. David Belcher bought the May survey some years afterwards, and in running the lines then they ran from the two white oaks on Beaver Knob. This fact in the affidavit for continuance was proposed to be proved by George Belcher; by Moses Coleman they proposed to prove that he was one of the chain carriers on the May survey and would state the same facts in substance as John May and the other chain carrier whose depositions were taken. Buck Dameron was afterwards the surveyor of the county, and it was proposed to prove by him that the May survey began on the south side of Beaver Knob, and was situated entirely on the waters of Beaver creek. The depositions of these witnesses were before us in the case of Barr v. Potter, 29 Ky. Law Rep.. 416, and were substantially as set out in the affidavit, and it was held in that case that such evidence was insufficient to overthrow the location of the land as shown by the actual calls of the patent. The case before us is in effect the same as the case then presented.

Among the calls of the Ramey patent are the following: "Thence same course (S. 76 30 W.) 188 poles to two black locusts, hickory and black oak on top of the dividing ridge in a gap between said Grassy and main head of Card creek."

The calls of the Epling patent begin as follows: "Beginning at a hickory and two black locusts, corner tree to William Raymey's survey in the gap between Card creek and Greasy (Grassy); thence running the calls of said survey S. 76, 30 W. 118 poles to two white oaks and a black gum on the fork ridge of Greasy (Grassy) creek."

The calls of the May patent are as follows: "Beginning at two white oaks, corner trees of Isaac Epling; thence running with calls of Ramey survey S. 76 W. 1,056 poles to a stake, N. 250 poles to a stake, N. 80 E. 835 poles to a stake, S. 58 E. 57 poles to a chestnut oak and black oak on a ridge, S. 58 E. 180 poles to the beginning."

In the entire survey of the Epling patent the only two white oaks called for are the two white oaks in the line of the Ramey patent. The proof clearly shows that there is no creek known as Greasy creek, and that the word "Greasy" is simply a clerical error for the word "Grassy." If we locate the corner on Beaver Knob as claimed by the defendants it will not touch either the Ramey patent or the Epling patent, while, as shown by the calls above quoted, the three patents must lie together, the May patent beginning at a corner of the Epling patent in the Ramey line and running from thence with the Ramey line. While it may be true that the surveyor marked the two oaks on Beaver Knob and told the people present that that was to be the corner of the May patent, still, as a matter of fact, he made no survey from that corner, and when he came to return the survey to the county court and to get the patent he in fact located the corner at the two white oaks, Epling's corner in Ramey's line. There would be no security in land titles if the calls of a patent after so many years could be entirely set at naught by parol evidence. The rule is settled that parol evidence is admissible to show the actual location of a patent, and that course and distance must give way to marks found on the ground or the actual location of the patent. But this rule has no application where no survey is made at all and the surveyor simply selects what shall be the beginning corner for the survey, and then in his report and in the patent which was issued on it, which he accepted, unmistakably designates another point as the beginning corner of the survey. To allow the parol evidence contended for would be to make the title to land depend not on the patent issued by the Commonwealth, but on the mere declarations of the surveyor at the time the survey is made.

Judgment affirmed.

MYERS' ADM'R, &c. v. ZOLL.

(Filed January 18, 1905.)

1. Vicious dog—Damage to child—Action for pain and suffering—Survives to administrator—Compromise with parents—Where a vicious dog known to be so by the owner was allowed to run at large, went upon the premises of another and bit and mangled a child, which suffered great pain therefrom for thirty five days, when she died from the injuries, the cause of action for her pain and suffering survived to her administrator and not to her parents, and a plea by the defendant of a settlement and compromise with the parents of the child for the damages is no defense to an action by the administrator.

2. Same—While the parents of the child had a cause of action against the owner of the dog at the time of the alleged compromise for nursing and medical bills bestowed and incurred in endeavoring to cure the child, they had no claim for compensation for her pain and suffering caused by the injury to her by the dog.

Bradley & Batson and Benjamin F. Washer for appellants.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant in substance alleged in his petition that on and prior to the 26th day of September, 1903, the appellee was the owner and kept a vicious dog, which he knew to be dangerous, vicious and inclined to bite mankind, and which he allowed to go unrestrained and at large; that on the 26th day of September, 1902, this dog went upon the premises and into the residence of the intestate's father in the city of Louisville, without the knowledge of the father, and attacked, bit and mangled appellant's intestate, by reason of which she endured intense pain, suffering and agony, both bodily and mental, for thirty-five days, when she died, and asked damages of the appellee.

The appellee answered and did not deny any of the allegations of the petition, but alleged in substance that Theresa Rosa Meyer, appellant's intestate, was an infant, and died about the 1st of November, 1902, unmarried and without issue, leaving no estate of any kind, except the alleged claim asserted in the petition, and leaving no debts; that she left surviving her a father, John H. Meyer, who asserted against the appellee the same cause of action set up in the petition, and that appellee denied and disclaimed any responsibility or liability thereupon; that by the statute in such cases made and provided the mother and father of appellant's intestate were the exclusive beneficiaries of the alleged cause of action asserted in the petition; that on the second day of October, 1902, this appellee and John H. and Theresa Oswald Meyer, the parents of appellant's intestate, compromised and settled all claims against, and liabilities of, appellee by reason of their child's death, and the alleged injury received by her, and signed and delivered a receipt, acknowledging full satisfaction thereof, as follows:

"Louisville, Ky., October 2, 1902.

"Know all men by these presents, that we, John H. and Theresa Meyer, being husband and wife, and the parents of Theresa Rosa Meyer, do hereby, for and in consideration of the sum of $500, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do, on behalf of ourselves and each of us and of our said child, hereby remise, release and forever discharge George Zoll, of the city of Louisville, county of Jefferson and State of Kentucky, his heirs, executors and administrators, of and from all actions and causes of actions, suits, claims and demands whatsoever, in law or in equity, and especially from all claims and demands arising from an alleged injury of Theresa Rosa Meyer, the said child of the said John H. Meyer and Theresa Meyer, which occurred at 501 E. Kentucky Street, Louisville, Ky., on or about the 26th day of September, 1902, which the said John H. Meyer and Theresa Meyer have had, now have, or which their heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, or any of them, now have, hereafter can, shall or may have for or by reason of the said alleged injuries, or for any cause, matter or thing whatsoever.

"In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands this 2d day of October, 1902.

(Signed) "JOHN H. MEYER,
"THERESA OSWALD MEYER."

Appellee further alleged that at the time appellant Dean was appointed and qualified as the administrator of Theresa Rosa Meyer she had left no estate of any kind or character, and that the appointment of appellant as such administrator was null and void, and that he had no right to prosecute this claim, inasmuch as the parents of his intestate and the sole beneficiaries were fully paid and satisfied as to any and all claims which might exist against appellee for their use and benefit. The court overruled a demurrer to this answer.

Appellant filed a reply, in effect denying that his intestate's parents had compromised and settled the matters sued for in this action, and alleged that the receipt or writing copied herein was obtained by the fraud of appellee. The acts of fraud were specifically stated, but are not necessary to a determination of this appeal, and are, therefore, omitted. The appellant also stated that at the time the receipt was executed the child appeared to be improving, had every appearance that it would recover from its injuries, and that they were assured by the appellee that the dog which injured the child was free from hydrophobia or any disease, when in fact he was afflicted with such a disease, and inoculated the child, and that it died from hydrophobia within thirty days from that time, and asked that the alleged compromise and receipt be declared void. The court sustained a demurrer to this reply. Other pleadings were offered by appellant, which the court refused to allow to be filed. Under our view of the principles governing this case we deem it unnecessary to refer to them further. We are of the opinion that the court should have sustained a demurrer to the answer of appellee as it did not state any defense to the cause of action stated in the petition. Appellant by his petition sought to recover of the appellee damages for the pain, suffering and anguish endured by his intestate from the time she was bitten and lacerated by this dog until the date of her death, a period of about thirty five days, which cause of action survived to her personal representative under section 10 of Kentucky Statutes. The parents of this child never at any time had any right of action for the pain and suffering of their child. This right existed in the child alone, and survived upon its death as stated. The parents had no right to compromise or settle with appellee for this cause of action, because at the time of this pretended settlement or compromise they had no beneficial or other interest in the cause of action stated, and any attempt on their part to settle for the child or for themselves for the pain and suffering endured by it prior to its death was void. The parents' interest in the cause of action stated in the petition was not in existence at the time of this pretended settlement. In 4 Bush, 358, in the case of McBee v. Myers, &c., the court said: "But it is insisted in support of the judgment that the contract relied upon by appellant is of no effect and void, because the subject-matter of the contract at the time was not in esse; that it had neither an actual nor a potential existence, and was a mere hope or contingency, founded upon no right, and coupled with no interest, and, therefore, could not be the subject of a contract. This we recognize not only as the doctrine of the common law, but as being authoritatively settled by the adjudication of this and other courts."

If the allegations of the petition were true the parents did have a cause of action at the time of the alleged compromise, in that they had the right to recover for the nursing, attention and medical bills bestowed and incurred in endeavoring to restore the child to health, and that it must be presumed that this was the meaning and extent of the settlement made, for at that time it was not expected, nor contemplated, by the parents that the child would die by reason of its injuries, and the interest sued for herein was not in the minds of the parties at the time of the execution of the recelpt referred to. Appellee cites in support of the settlement pleaded the following authorities: Doyle v. N. Y., &c., 72 N. Y. S., 936; Mattoon, &c., Co. v. Dolan, 105 Ill. App., 1; Christie v. Chicago, &c., 74 N. W., 697; Dowell v. Burlington, &c., 17 N. W., 901; Sykora v. The Case Mfg. Co., 60 N. W., 1008; Prater v. The Tenn., &c., Co., 58 S. W., 1068; Vail v. Anderson, 64 N. W., 47. We have carefully examined each and all of these authorities, and find that in all of them the settlements were made with the beneficiaries after the death of the party injured, some few of them before administration, and some after. But in all of the cases the parties settled and compromised with had then a vested, beneficial interest at the time of the settlement, that is, their interests in the estate were in esse, and, therefore, the cases have no application to the question involved in the action at bar.

170 COMMONWEALTH, BY, &C. V. WISCONSIN CHAIR CO.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

COMMONWEALTH, BY, &c. v. WISCONSIN CHAIR CO.

(Filed January 19, 1905.)

Escheat—Real estate—Corporations—Under Constitution, section 192, and Kentucky Statutes, section 567, providing "that no corporation * * * shall hold any real estate in this State except such as may be proper and necessary for carrying on its legitimate business for a longer period than five years under penalty of escheat," an escheator can not maintain an action under section 1606, Kentucky Statutes, to have the title to a tract of land owned by a foreign corporation in Ballard county to vest in the Commonwealth, as it is only to land mentioned in said section 1606 that the escheator has authority to maintain an action to escheat.

W. J. Webb and F. L. Turner for appellants.

Robbins & Thomas for appellee.

Appeal from Ballard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee is a foreign corporation and owns forty-seven acres of land in Ballard county. Charles Linthicum, escheator for Ballard county, instituted this action in the name of the Commonwealth against appellee to forfeit its title to the Commonwealth. It is averred that the appellee owned it for a longer period than five years, and did not need it for carrying on the legitimate business authorized by its charter. The action is based on section 192 of the Constitution and section 567, Kentucky Statutes.

Section 192 of the Constitution reads as follows: "No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized by its charter, or the law under which it may have been or hereafter may be organized, nor shall it hold any real estate, except such as may be proper and necessary for carrying on its legitimate business, for a longer period than five years under penalty of escheat."

Section 567, Kentucky Statutes, reads as follows: "No corporation shall engage in business other than that expressly authorized by its articles of incorporation or amendments thereto; * * * nor shall any corporation hold or own any real estate, except such as may be necessary and proper for carrying on its legitimate business, for a longer period than five years, under penalty of escheat."

The question arises as to the right of the escheator to institute and maintain this action. Neither the section of the Constitution nor that of the statute quoted provides a remedy for having land forfeited to the Commonwealth. The only instance in which an escheator can institute proceedings is under sections 1606 and 1623, inclusive, of Kentucky Statutes.

Section 1606 reads as follows: "That part of estates lying or found in this Commonwealth not disposed of by will of persons who have died, or may hereafter die, without heirs or distributees entitled to the same, or which have been, or may hereafter be, devised to any person who, or any heir or distributee or devisee of his, or of the testator, has not claimed the same, or shall not claim the same, within eight years after such death, shall vest in the Commonwealth, subject to the debts and liabilities of the decedent."

This section provides the conditions under which the title to land may vest in the Commonwealth. It is only as to land thus vesting in the Commonwealth that the escheator has authority to maintain an action. The sections of the statute referred to defines the duties of escheators. It would be violative of the statute to hold that the escheator could maintain this action. It would be creating a duty for the escheator to perform not prescribed by law. When the statute prescribes the duties of an office, it excludes the idea that he is empowered to perform other and distinct duties. It is a case for the application of the rule of construction that the inclusion of one thing is the exclusion of all others. The court properly sustained the special demurrer. If we should suggest a remedy it would be purely advisory, besides the court must forbear to express an opinion as to the purpose and effect of the provision of the Constitution and section 567, Kentucky Statutes.

The judgment is affirmed.

DENHAM v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 20, 1905.)

1. Verdict—Indefinite—May be perfected by jury or court—If the verdict of the jury be so inadequate in form or substance, or its language so indefinite or ambiguous as to make its meaning uncertain, the jury should be required to perfect it, and this may be done by them in the presence of the court and under its direction, or after returning to the jury room, or it may be done by the court in the presence of the jury and with their approval.

2. Valid verdict—A verdict of a jury in a criminal case for maliciously striking with a deadly weapon with intent to kill, which reads as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, fix his punishment three years in pen," though awkwardly expressed, is not so defective as to affect its validity.

3. Indictment for malicious striking—Evidence of robbery—Competency—Res gestæ—Where one was assaulted in the night time and knocked unconscious at his front gate with a weapon, on the trial of his assailant for malicious striking with intent to kill it was not error in the court to admit evidence that after the injured man regained consciousness he discovered that $42 in money had been taken from his pocket after he was stricken, as such taking was a part of the res gestæ.

4. Bloodhounds—Trailing suspected criminals—Competency—While the pedigree of bloodhounds used in trailing supposed criminals was not asked about nor stated with particularity, yet where it is shown that they were pure bloodhounds and had been carefully trained in tracking men, evidence of their trailing the defendant on the night of the alleged offense was properly allowed to go to the jury for what it was worth as a circumstance tending to connect the defendant with the crime.

C. C. Williams for appellant.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Lincoln Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

On the night of October 20, 1902, one C. H. Vanarsdale, who resides in Lincoln county, on the Hustonville and Middlesburg pike, was called to his front gate, situated within thirty yards of his house, upon reaching which he found two men, one a tall man and the other of lesser height. When Vanarsdale got to the gate the tall man asked if he was Mr. Vanarsdale, and said, "G—d—n you, I am going to kill you," at the same time raising his arm, and holding in his hand something that Vanarsdale took to be a knife or pistol. Immediately following this demonstration the shorter man struck Vanarsdale in the face, and knocked him down. The blow was evidently inflicted with brass knucks, or other deadly weapon, as it lacerated Vanarsdale's face and rendered him unconscious for some time, but he managed to either walk or crawl to the house, and after a time informed his family of what had been done to him. When he met his assailants at the gate he had $42 upon his person, but when he regained consciousness he discovered that the money was all gone.

James Cottrell and the appellant, Hiram Denham, were arrested for the crime committed upon Vanarsdale, and both were soon thereafter jointly indicted by the grand jury of Lincoln county for willfully and maliciously striking and wounding Vanarsdale with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill him, but of which he did not die. Cottrell was first tried, convicted and sent to the penitentiary, but for what length of time the record in this case does not indicate. After many continuances of the prosecution as to the appellant, Denham, he was finally brought to trial, which resulted in his conviction and the fixing of his punishment by the jury at confinement in the penitentiary for three years. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction, and now asks its reversal. Numerous alleged errors upon the part of the lower court were set forth in the grounds filed in support of the motion made by appellant for a new trial but only three of them are now relied on in the brief of appellant's counsel.

It is contended for appellant, first, that the verdict returned by the jury was so indefinite and defective as to render it insufficient to support the judgment; second, that after the verdict mentioned was returned and the jury discharged, the trial judge being advised of the alleged defective character of the verdict, improperly recalled the jury and caused them to retire and return another and second verdict, equally as defective in form and substance as the first, which he received, and upon which the judgment appealed from was entered; third, that the court admitted upon the trial incompetent evidence greatly to appellant's prejudice.

The language of the first verdict was as follows: "We, the jury, fin the defendant guilty, fix his punishment three years in pen. S. E. Estes, Foreman." That of the second: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and fix his punishment at three years in the State prison. S. E. Estes, Foreman."

While each verdict is awkwardly expressed, we do not think either so defective as to affect its validity. Obviously any one of average intelligence and ordinary understanding would know at a glance that the word "fin" in the first verdict was intended for find, and that the word "pen" is a mere abbreviation of the word penitentiary, an institution provided by the State, in which offenders against its criminal laws are confined for punishment and correction. Nor would a mistake be made by one of common understanding as to the meaning of the words "State prison." They are frequently used as synonymous with the word penitentiary, never as meaning a jail, which, as is well known, is a prison appertaining to a county or municipality, in which are confined for punishment persons convicted of misdemeanors committed in the county or municipality. We think a judgment entered upon either verdict would have been good, as neither was fatally defective. Correction, however, of their first verdict by the jury was authorized. Judicial pride in maintaining a presentable, as well as accurate, record of the proceedings in his court induced the trial judge, doubtless, to exclude from that record such a deformed verdict as was the one first returned by the jury, hence its correction was proper, though not necessary to its validity.

If a verdict be so inadequate in form or substance, or its language so indefinite or ambiguous, as to make its meaning uncertain, the jury should be required to perfect it. This may be done by them in the presence of the court and under its direction, or after returning to the jury room, or it may be done by the court in the presence of the jury and with their approval. (Bishop's New Crim. Procedure, volume 1, section 1004.)

Where mistakes, such as appear in the first verdict in this case, occur the necessary correction may be made by the jury or court in one of the several ways already indicated. (Am. & Eng. Enc'y. of Law, volume 28, page 865.)

In the case at bar the court calling the attention of the jury to the defects in the first verdict, directed them to return to the jury room and correct it, which they did. Counsel's contention that the jury were discharged after the return of the first verdict and recalled by the court after such discharge, and then sent to their room to return a second or correct verdict, is not sustained by the record. Upon the contrary, we find that the jury were not discharged until after the return of the second verdict, as this statement in the bill of exceptions immediately following the first verdict will show: "And the judge being shown the verdict, he thereupon sent the jury back to the jury room," and they then returned the second verdict. But if the jury had been discharged, as charged by counsel for appellant, even then, as they had not left the presence of the court before being recalled and directed to retire to their room for the purpose of returning the second verdict, no injury could have resulted to appellant's rights.

In Taggart v. Commonwealth, 104 Ky., 801, it appeared that the jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant, Don Taggart, guilty, and fix his punishment at confinement for seven years in the punishment." The clerk, in reading the verdict, substituted "penitentiary" for the word "punishment." After the reading of the verdict the jury was discharged, but took their seats in the court room, save one, who entered a water closet connected with the court room. The attention of the court was called to the mistake in the verdict. The members of the jury were recalled, and the court erased from the verdict the word "punishment," and in lieu thereof wrote "penitentiary." The verdict was then read to the jury, and the jury polled. Upon that state of facts this court said: "We perceive no error in this. The context clearly shows that by the word punishment was meant 'penitentiary,' and the immediate correction could not, in any conceivable way, have prejudiced the rights of appellant."

It is insisted for appellant that as he was charged with and being tried for malicious striking and wounding Vanarsdale with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill him, the court erred in admitting evidence that Vanarsdale was robbed of $42 when assaulted and knocked down in his yard. The competency of such evidence has been repeatedly recognized by this court. In Roberson's Crim. Law, 2d volume, page 1058, it is said: "It is a general rule that in a prosecution it is not competent to show that defendant on another occasion committed another and distinct crime, even though it be similar to the one charged. There are exceptions to this rule. Thus evidence of another and distinct crime, if it is committed as part of the same transaction, is admissible, and forms a part of the res gestæ." (Snapp v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky., 173.)

Clearly the robbery committed upon Vanarsdale was a part of the res gestæ. The evidence in question was admissible upon another ground, viz., to show a motive for the assault upon Vanarsdale.

"The intent, knowledge or motive under which the defendant did the act charged against him not generally admitting of other than circumstantial evidence, may often be aided in the proof by showing another crime, actual or attempted, then it is permissible." (Bishop's new Crim. Procedure, volume 1, section 1126; O'Bryan v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2511; Bess v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1091.)

It is further insisted for appellant that the court should have excluded the evidence introduced to show the use of bloodhounds in the attempt to discover the assailants of Vanarsdale. It appears from the evidence that a telephone message was sent to John Mulligan, of Wilmore, Ky., on the night of the assault upon Vanarsdale, requesting the use of his bloodhounds to track the guilty parties. The request was complied with, and a pair of bloodhounds sent by Mulligan to Vanarsdale in charge of Keelin and Smith. They got to Vanarsdale's on the same night the assault was committed. The heads of the dogs were held up when they were taken from the wagon until the place of the assault was reached. They were then put to their work, and at once struck the trail which they followed to the home of James Cottrell in the neighborhood. Upon reaching and entering the house they immediately went to Cottrell and appellant, who were there, smelled them, and did no further trailing. It also appears that care was taken by the family and friends of Vanarsdale to prevent persons about the premises after the assault upon Vanarsdale from going to or about the place where it was committed, in order that the bloodhounds might not be confused or obstructed in following the tracks of the assailants.

It also appears from the testimony of Mulligan, the owner of the dogs, that one of them was two years, the other sixteen months old; that both are bloodhounds of good breeding, the sire of the older one being a pure bloodhound, and the grandsire an English bloodhound, trained in tracking men. It was further testified by their owner that both dogs had been carefully trained in tracking men, and that the older dog had tracked and aided in the capture of sixty-three criminals, in several of which the younger dog had assisted. While the pedigrees of the dogs were not asked about, nor stated with particularity, we incline to the opinion that the testimony as a whole shows that they substantially possessed the breeding qualities and training required by the rule announced by this court in Pedigo v. Commonwealth, 103 Ky., 41, therefore, the testimony as to the trailing done by them in the capture of appellant and Cottrell was properly allowed to go to the jury for what it was worth as one of the circumstances tending to connect the appellant with the crime for which he was convicted.

The testimony in question was, as we think sustained, and the guilt of appellant as thereby indicated confirmed by Vanarsdale's identification of him by his size and voice, the finding by the arresting officer of money concealed in his drawers' leg, the confession of his accomplice, and other circumstances of equal weight shown by the record. Though no objection is urged to the instructions in the brief of counsel, we have nevertheless carefully read them, and find that they presented fully and fairly to the jury all the law of the case.

The record presenting no cause for reversal the judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. JACOBS, &c.

(Filed January 31, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Taxation—Pleading—Liens—This action to recover taxes due appellant having been instituted before the lapse of the five-year statute, it prevented the statute of limitations from running. A purchaser before its termination was a pendente lite purchaser, and the plea of the statute in such a state of case is not available, the fact that the five years had expired before such purchase will not operate as against the claim for taxes upon which the action was instituted against the real owner before the lapse of that period.

H. L. Stone for appellant.

Lane & Harrison for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee, Lizzie Jacob, owned property on Main street in the city of Louisville. She failed to pay the tax bill for the year of 1895, amounting to $288.25, on the assessment of that property, and this action was brought on February 28, 1900, to recover the amount of the tax bill. Another suit of the city against her was pending in the Jefferson Circuit Court to recover taxes due for previous years. A judgment was entered therein directing the sale of the property for the taxes found to be due for those years. On December 11, 1899, the property was sold and R. C. Wintersmith became the purchaser, but the appellee, Lizzie Jacob, had the right to redeem the property from that sale. At the time of the sale the Fidelity Trust and Safety Vault Co. had a mortgage upon the property for about $8,000. Appellee, L. M. Rice, had a junior mortgage for about $2,500. Thus the matter stood when in June, 1900, the appellee, Lizzie Jacob, sold the appellee, L. M. Rice, the property. Rice paid the Wintersmith purchase money into court, satisfied his own mortgage debt, assumed the mortgage debt due the trust company and paid the appellee, Lizzie Jacob, $189. Besides this, he assumed the payment of all taxes against the property, but reserved the right to question or litigate any claims for taxes asserted against the property. It is recited in the deed that R. C. Wintersmith joins in the deed for the purpose of conveying all right, title and interest he has in the property acquired by his purchase for the taxes. After the appellee, Rice, took the deed the city filed an amended petition, bringing him before the court. This action was instituted against Lizzie Jacob before the lapse of five years after the claim for taxes matured, but more than five years elapsed after its maturity before the amended petition was filed making Rice a defendant. The appellee, Rice, pleads and relies upon the statute of limitations as a bar to the right of the city to recover.

Lizzie Jacobs owned the property, and the legal title was in her at the time this action was instituted. It remained in her until she sold it to Rice. The sale to Wintersmith had not divested her of title. Wintersmith never paid the purchase money, and it is perfectly evident from this record that he was acting as the friend of the appellee, Jacob, in the purchase of the property, for he permitted Rice to pay the excess of purchase money to her. So Lizzie Jacob was the real owner of the property, subject to the mortgages and tax sale. She being the real party in interest, it was proper for the city to sue her. The suit against Lizzie Jacob prevented the statute of limitations from running. Rice was a pendente lite purchaser, and, therefore, the plea of the statute of limitations is not available.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY CO. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 24, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Separate coaches—Failing to furnish—Indictment—Sufficiency—An indictment which charges the defendant with having “willfully and unlawfully failed to furnish for the transportation of white and colored passengers on its line of railroad a separate coach, each compartment divided by a good and substantial wooden partition, with a door therein, and each bearing in some conspicuous place, in plain letters, appropriate words indicating the race for which it was set apart,” is a good indictment, under Kentucky Statutes, section 795, known as the Separate Coach Act.

2. Instructions—Unavoidable casualty—On the trial of the defendant for a violation of the separate coach act (Kentucky Statutes, section 795), the court should have instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the operation of defendant's train February 19, 1903, without a separate coach or compartment car marked and provided with notices, as set out in instruction No. 1, was caused by an unavoidable accident or casualty, which defendant, by ordinary prudence, could not reasonably have anticipated or guarded against, they should find the defendant not guilty.

Willis & Todd for appellant.

N. B. Hays and L. Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., was tried, convicted and fined $500 in the Shelby Circuit Court, under an indictment charging it with having willfully and unlawfully failed to furnish for the transportation of white and colored passengers on its line of railroad a separate coach, each compartment divided by a good and substantial wooden partition, with a door therein, and each bearing in some conspicuous place, in plain letters, appropriate words indicating the race for which it was set apart.

Appellant asks a reversal of the judgment because of alleged error upon the part of the lower court, first, in overruling its motion in arrest of judgment; second, in failing to properly instruct the jury and refusing proper instructions offered by appellant.

Section 795, Kentucky Statutes, provides: "Any railroad company or corporation, person or persons, running or otherwise operating railroad cars or coaches, by steam or otherwise, on any railroad line or track within this State, and all railroad companies, person or persons, doing business in this State, whether upon lines of railroad owned in whole or in part, or leased by them, * * * are hereby required to furnish separate cars or coaches for the travel or transportation of the white and colored passengers on their respective lines of railroad. Each compartment of a coach divided by a good and substantial wooden partition, with a door therein, shall be deemed a separate coach within the meaning of this act, and each separate coach or compartment shall bear in some conspicuous place appropriate words, in plain letters, indicating the race for which it is set apart."

Section 796 declares that no discrimination shall be made in the quality, convenience or accommodations of the coaches set apart for white and colored passengers, and section 797 provides: "That any railroad company or companies that shall fail, refuse or neglect to comply with the provisions of sections 795 796 shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $500, nor more than $1,500 for each offense."

The evidence contained in the record conclusively shows that appellant did on the 19th day of February, 1903, operate a passenger train upon and over its railroad in Shelby county, which did not have attached, or belonging to it, a separate coach for the transportation of white and colored passengers, partitioned and otherwise equipped or required by the statute.

Indeed no denial of this fact is made by counsel for appellant, but it is contended that the facts stated in the indictment do not constitute a public offense within the jurisdiction of the court; and, further, that the appellant on the day in question was prevented by unavoidable accident and casualty from having with and as a part of its train a separate coach for the use of colored passengers, as required by the statute, and as was its custom.

We are of opinion that the first contention is without merit. The indictment in large measure follows the words of the statute in describing, and in fairly appropriate language sets forth with sufficient particularity the acts constituting the offense, and that it was committed in Shelby county on the 19th of February, 1903, and before the finding of the indictment. We think the language of the indictment was sufficiently explicit to apprise appellant of the offense with which it was charged, and to bar a subsequent prosecution against it for the same offense. The trial court, therefore, did not err in overruling the motion in arrest of judgment. Appellant's second contention presents a more serious question, and one upon which this court has never passed.

It appears from the record that appellant's passenger train, for the running of which without the separate coach it was indicted in this case, was known as No. 22, and that it was scheduled to leave Louisville daily at 8:30 a. m., and on February 19, 1903, it left Louisville at 8:30 a. m., as usual, but for the first time was carried through to Lexington without the separate coach for the use of colored passengers. It also appears that another of appellant's trains known as No. 25 left Ashland daily at 1:20 p. m. for Louisville, and arrived at the latter city at 8 p. m. of the same day, and that this train was always provided with a separate coach for the transportation of white and colored passengers, equipped as required by the statute, which after its arrival in Louisville was transferred to and connected with train No. 22, due to leave Louisville at 8:30 a. m., and used by the latter train daily. It further appears that train No. 25, instead of leaving Ashland, February 18, 1903, at 1:20 p. m., its schedule time, which would have enabled it to reach Louisville at 8 p. m. of that day, was so delayed by a landslide east of Ashland that it did not leave that city until 12:14 a. m. of February 19, which caused it to arrive in Louisville thirteen hours and thirty-one minutes behind its schedule time, or at 9:31 a. m. February 19, 1903, about one hour after train No. 22 left that city on its schedule time. In other words, the two trains met near Shelbyville.

On account of the delay caused to train No. 25 beyond Ashland train No. 22 was, on February 19, 1903, deprived of the use of the separate coach it was accustomed to receive from train No. 25 before leaving Louisville, and its run that day from Louisville east was consequently made without it, as stated. The evidence for the Commonwealth established the fact that on no other day than February 19 was train No. 22 run through Shelby county without a separate coach equipped and lettered as required by the statute, and the further fact that there were no colored passengers on the train that day. It was shown, too, by appellant's testimony that it had and used between Louisville and Ashland three separate coaches equipped and lettered as required by the statute for the transportation of white and colored passengers, which had theretofore supplied the wants and convenience of the traveling public.

and that neither delay nor accident had, previously to February 19, 1908, prevented train No. 25 from arriving at Louisville in ample time to attach the separate coach for colored passengers to train No. 25 before the arrival of the schedule time for its departure from that city.

Did the foregoing facts and circumstances excuse the failure of appellant to have attached to the passenger train in question a separate coach for the use of white and colored passengers on the occasion named in the indictment? In considering this question it must be borne in mind that appellant was required by statute to run its train, as well as to provide it with the separate coach. Besides, it was and is a common carrier, entrusted by the Federal government with the duty of carrying its mails without unreasonable delay. Its duty to the public requires regularity and promptness in the running of its trains, and it will hardly be contended that delay of the other train in reaching Louisville should have prevented this one from leaving that city according to its schedule time.

It is, however, insisted for the Commonwealth that appellant is amenable to the punishment prescribed by the statute because of its failure to keep at Louisville an extra separate coach equipped as required by the statute for the use of its white and colored passengers, as it might have done, to guard against such emergencies as the one that occurred on February 19, 1908. It is true that such a precaution might have been taken, but in view of the fact that no occasion had theretofore arisen for an extra separate coach of the character indicated, and of the further fact that there was an interval or margin of twelve and a half hours between the time scheduled for the arrival of the train bringing the separate coach and the time of the departure of the other, appellant's contention that its employes charged with the duty of operating its trains could not, under the circumstances, have anticipated and guarded against the conditions that compelled the running of the train in question on February 19 without the separate coach, is not without force. At any rate, it was for the jury to say whether, notwithstanding the accident which delayed train No. 25, appellant, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could have secured for train No. 25 a separate coach for white and colored passengers equipped as required by the statute.

It is said by Bishop in his work on Statutory Crime, section 132: "Again, a statute will not generally make an act criminal, however broad may be its language, unless the offender's intent concurred with his act, because the common law requires such concurrence to constitute a crime. A case of overwhelming necessity, or of honest mistake of facts, will thus be excepted out of a general statutory prohibition." * * *

It is true the statute supra declares "that any railroad company or companies that shall fail, refuse or neglect to comply with the provisions of sections 795 and 796 shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," etc. The words "fail," "refuse," "neglect," are used interchangeably, and as meaning something more than an unavoidable or accidental violation of the statute.

We are aware that it has been held by this court, and by other courts of last resort, that acts not done with compulsion or under necessity, if forbidden by statute, although not malum in se, are punishable as provided in the statute, notwithstanding they might have been done without willful or malicious intent. (Wayman v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 466; Jellico Coal Co. v. Commonwealth, 96 Ky., 878.)

In Commonwealth v. Bull, 18 Bush, 666, it is said: "When the legislature has declared that a given act shall be deemed unlawful the person voluntarily doing said act will be charged with a criminal intent." * * *

But the above rule applies to unlawful acts voluntarily (and in that sense intentionally) done, and never to such as are done under compulsion or necessity. The appellant on the morning of the 19th of February, 1903, in sending out its train seems to have acted from both necessity and compulsion. By unavoidable accident or casualty the train from which train No. 22 was accustomed to get the separate coach for colored passengers in time for its departure from Louisville on the morning of each day was delayed beyond the hour for the departure from Louisville of that train, thereby leaving appellant to the choice of not sending out its train on the morning of the 19th of February, and not transporting its passengers or the mail, in violation of law, or sending out the train without the separate coach for colored passengers as the statute required.

In Stephens' Digest of Criminal Law, article 32, it is said: "An act which would otherwise be a crime may be excused if the person accused can show that it was done only in order to avoid the consequences which could not otherwise be avoided, and which had they failed would inflict upon him, or upon others whom he was bound to protect, inevitable or unavoidable evil; that no more was done than was reasonably necessary for that purpose, and that the evil inflicted by it was not disproportionate to the evil avoided." (Ency. of Law and Procedure, volume 12, page 160.)

We think the appellant, upon the facts of this case, was entitled to the benefit of the rule above quoted, and that the trial judge erred in refusing to give to the jury the law as asked by appellants, though improperly expressed in the instructions offered; that is, the court should have instructed the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the operation of appellant's train February 19, 1903, without a separate coach, or compartment car marked and provided with notices as set out in instruction No. 1, was caused by an unavoidable accident or casualty, which appellant, by ordinary prudence, could not reasonably have anticipated or guarded against, they should find the appellant not guilty.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial and further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

OWSLEY, SR. v. OWSLEY, &c.

SAME v. OWSLEY, JR.

(Filed January 24, 1905.)

Records—Clerk Court of Appeals—Fees for copy—Loaning record—Where a record is taken from the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals by an attorney, to be used by him instead of a copy, his client is liable for the cost of a copy, although the clerk may have agreed with the attorney not to charge for the copy unless his client is successful, as the fees of the clerk's office now belong to the State and the clerk has no authority to make such an agreement.

W. C. Marshall, W. S. Pryor and Carroll & Carroll for appellant.

N. B. Hays for appellees.

Appeal from Cumberland Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

These cases are submitted on the motion of appellant to correct the taxation of costs in so far as a copy of the record in each case is taxed as part of appellee's cost.

In the first case the record was obtained from the clerk by appellee's resident attorney, who argued it orally in this court upon an agreement of the clerk that his client was not to be charged with a copy unless successful. It is the settled rule of the court that where the clerk allows the attorneys to take the record upon the agreement that a copy is to be charged, a copy may be taxed as cost, although not actually made. The fees of the office now belong to the State. If the record is taken from the clerk's office to be used by the attorney instead of a copy, his client becomes liable for the cost, and the clerk has no authority to agree that he shall not be taxed with the cost of a copy if unsuccessful. The clerk can not give away the money of the State, and his agreement not to charge in any contingency for what the law allows to be charged is not binding on the State. The motion to correct the taxation of cost in the first case is, therefore, overruled.

In the second case the original attorney declined to take out the record on the understanding that his client was not to be charged with a copy unless successful, and the case was then submitted. A year afterward, and when the case had been decided and was pending on the petition for rehearing, the resident attorney here took out the record, but in doing this he evidently acted upon the idea that his client was entitled to the use of the record without further liability for a copy. Nothing was then said between him and the clerk. From the entries on the clerk's books, and all the facts as shown by the affidavits, we conclude that this record was withdrawn under a misapprehension, and that no copy of the transcript should be taxed in this case.

The motion to correct the taxation of costs in the second case is, therefore, sustained, and it appearing that the clerk has received the money, he is ordered to refund it to this extent to the appellant.

HARMON v. THOMPSON.

(Filed January 24, 1905.)

1. Contract—Writing—Best evidence—Presumptions—Where parties to a contract have written and signed a memorial of their undertaking, it is conclusively presumed, in the absence of fraud or mutual mistake, that the whole of the undertaking and all negotiations leading up to it, are merged in the writing. The writing is the best evidence, and so long as it can be produced is the only evidence of what the parties have agreed to do and of their whole meaning with reference thereto.

2. Same—In construing a written contract by which T. and H. agreed with T. to take charge of T.'s farm of 125 acres, lying adjoining the city of W., and lay it off into lots, by streets and alleys, and to pay T. $600 per acre for two-thirds of the whole tract, and to allow T. to retain the other third of the land so divided, an allegation by H., in pleading a mistake in the contract, is not available unless it alleges a mutual mistake of both parties to the agreement.

8. Abandonment of contract—Action for breach—Tender of deed—Necessity—In an action for damages for a breach of contract to sell land, where the breach alleged is an abandonment of the contract by the vendee and a refusal to execute his part of it, it is not necessary for the vendor to tender to his vendee a deed to the land when the vendee has declared that he will neither pay for the land nor accept the deed.

4. Defective pleading—Cured by verdict and judgment—In an action on a written contract by a vendor against the vendee for damages for a breach of his contract to sell land, while it was a necessary allegation in the petition that plaintiff was willing, able and ready to convey the title to the land, it affirmatively appearing after verdict and judgment that plaintiff was able, ready and willing to convey, the failure to make such allegation in the pleading was cured.

5. Disposal of property by vendor—Where the vendee of an executory contract to buy land abandons and refuses to comply with its terms, the vendor upon electing to proceed for damages for the breach may, after making his election, and after the time when by the terms of the contract the conveyance was to have been made, dispose of the property by sale or mortgage without regard to the contract.

6. Measure of damages—In an action by a vendor against a vendee for damages for the breach of an executory contract to buy land, the quantum of damages is the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the land at the date of the breach, and to which interest may be added.

Wm. Lindsay, Morton, Webb & Wilson and Beverly R. Jouett for appellant.

Pendleton & Bush, J. H. Hazelrigg and J. M. Benton for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This suit involved the construction of the contract copied below, the measure of damage for its breach, and the nature and requisites of the action upon it. The contract is worded as follows:

"This agreement, witnesseth, that whereas, H. P. Thompson owns certain lands in and near Winchester, Ky., and, whereas, the undersigned, B. E. Talbutt and Archer Harmon, desire to have the control and right of selling said lands, consisting of the unsold lands lying south of Belmont street, which runs south of the house of said H. P. Thompson and on the boundary bought by him of James Ballard's heirs, amounting to between 100 and 125 acres, lying south of said Belmont street in the town of Winchester; now it is agreed between the parties hereto as follows: Said Talbutt and Harmon undertake to sell said lands in lots of such size as may suit purchasers and be most advantageous to the interest of the sellers, and to account to said Thompson for said land at the price of $600 per acre for two-thirds of the said land, and to leave the said Thompson the owner of the other third, that is to say, that the said Thompson shall receive, pay for, two-thirds of said land at the rate of $600 per acre, and be entitled to the other third of said purchase money of said lands. The said Talbutt and Harmon shall open such streets and alleys through such lands as they may think proper; one-third thereof shall be chargeable to said Thompson and two-thirds thereof to said Talbutt and Harmon, but the whole expense thereof is primarily to be borne by said Talbutt and Harmon, and said Thompson is to pay his one-third of said expenses. All the streets to be opened shall be by mutual agreement of the parties as to location and cost thereof, and not without such consent. Before deeds are made to said Harmon and Talbutt for the said lands the said Thompson is to receive two-thirds of the purchase price at the rate stipulated above in money or satisfactory notes. No interest is to be charged by Thompson until after January 1, 1891, and he shall not account for interest for such sums as may be received by him in excess of his two-thirds. For the balance due on the 1st day of January, 1891, notes are to be given with lien on the remaining land, or such security as said Thompson may accept in lieu thereof.

(Signed) "H. P. THOMPSON,
"ARCHER HARMON,
"B. E. TALBUTT.

"Witness: B. F. BUCKNER."

The contract was made February 17, 1890. At that time, and for some time prior, there had been considerable animation at Winchester in the real estate market. A "boom," so common during that period, was being experienced. Appellee had cut a farm, or a good part of it, into town lots, and was selling them at fairly remunerative prices. Appellant and Talbutt were promoters, or speculators, dealing in town lots, in various localities where active speculation was possible owing to inflated prices and excited expectations. Appellee's contention in this case is that they were attracted by what appeared to be favorable opportunities afforded by his property at Winchester, and bought it for that purpose. Appellant contends, on the contrary, that he and Talbutt engaged merely to promote appellee's venture in exposing his lots to public sale. The paper is said to be ambiguous, and because of that claim it was sought by appellant to have his construction of its meaning aided by extraneous evidence.

It is not every contract of vague or slightly obscure meaning that calls for, or that will admit of, other evidence to aid in its interpretation. If the paper itself affords a reasonably clear understanding of what the parties have engaged themselves to, it is safer, and it is the law, that its language alone should be consulted in arriving at that meaning. It is upon that reason that such rules as that all the terms of the writing must be consulted and reconciled, if possible, are founded, for when the parties to a contract have deliberately written down and signed a memorial of their undertaking, it is presumed, and in the absence of fraud or mutual mistake it is conclusively presumed, that the whole of the undertaking, and all negotiations leading up to it, are merged in the writing. The writing is the best evidence, and so long as it can be produced is the only evidence receivable of what the parties have agreed to do, and of their whole meaning with reference thereto. It were better if all agreements were perfectly clear and free from controversy. But they are not. It does not at all follow from that fact, though, that all agreements not perfectly plain, and having but one possible interpretation, are subject to be explained in every case by extraneous and parol evidence. If such were so, the value of written contracts would be reduced to a minimum, if not nil. It is because such is not the law that the numerous rules for construing written contracts are in existence, for, most obviously, a perfectly plain, undoubted meaning needs no rule to aid in its construction. So when the written terms seem to be in conflict with each other, where some part of the writing is apparently inconsistent with another part, it does not follow that the bars are to be let down and parol evidence, with its train of uncertainties, admitted. Before that is allowed the resources of the paper itself must be exhausted; that is what the law assumes the parties intended by reducing the agreement to writing; for if it were to be left to parol testimony as to any part of its meaning, it was idle to have been to the trouble of having it written down. When, after applying to the writing those rules of interpretation found safe and just in the experience of the law, the meaning, or the probable meaning in law, of the parties can be fairly gathered with a certainty satisfying the judicial mind, the courts will consult the writing alone, rejecting extraneous evidence as aid in construing it. But where, after applying the rules of interpretation applicable to the writing alone, the judicial mind is still in doubt as to the meaning of the parties, and there exists a latent ambiguity, the law admits parol or other outside evidence to explain what was meant by the writing. Technical terms and trade expressions afford probably the most numerous instances of the application of the rule just stated, though there are of course many others.

Can the intention of the parties to the agreement sued on be gathered from that writing? Subjecting the paper to analysis, it appears clearly enough that Thompson, the owner of the land described, wanted to sell it, and was by that paper undertaking to sell it. The price at which he was willing to sell two-thirds of it is fixed at $600 per acre. Appellant and Talbutt appear in the paper as both buyers and sellers. They were not selling to Thompson. They had to buy from him before they could sell to anybody, unless they were authorized by Thompson to sell for him. To buy from him the terms upon which they were to get the land must be agreed on. So it was stated that Thompson was to receive $600 per acre for what he was selling, viz., two-thirds of the tract. But that was not the whole agreement. It was contemplated, as shown by the paper, that appellant and Talbutt were to resell, and possibly immediately before the date when by their agreement they would be compelled to pay for what they were buying. To protect Thompson in so parting with his title it was, therefore, provided in the paper that in event such sales were made the purchase money, or acceptable purchase money notes, if notes were taken in lieu of cash, were to be turned over to Thompson to the extent of $600 per acre for such parts as were so sold, he not accounting for interest on it. It seems from the paper to have been also contemplated that some part, or maybe the whole of the purchase money for the land sold Harmon and Talbutt by Thompson, would not be paid or secured by notes of Harmon and Talbutt's vendees before January 1, 1891. It was, therefore, provided in that event Thompson was to have interest from Harmon and Talbutt after that date, and to have purchase-money notes for such balance before he made them a deed. Other features of the contract show that Thompson expected, and that the parties agreed, that Thompson's one-third of the land not sold to Harmon and Talbutt was to be sold by them in their general plan of subdividing the whole tract into town lots, and selling them off. The paper provided for the expense of such division, all the parties bearing it in proportion to their ownership of the whole tract. It was likewise provided that Thompson was to receive the pay for his one-third interest in the tract if sold in lots under this scheme by Harmon and Talbutt at whatever price it might be sold, while for the other two-thirds, the part sold to Harmon and Talbutt, Thompson was to get only his original purchase price, the excess going to the owners, Harmon and Talbutt. Thus construed, every term, every provision and every word of the contract, as written, is accounted for, and given a consistent meaning, while the whole document is given a rational construction.

To adopt appellant's theory, which is that he and Talbutt were merely promoters, and were to sell Thompson's land for Thompson, and on commission, the commission being the excess of price realized on the part sold over $600 per acre, would necessitate the ignoring or expurgation of several very explicit and important provisions of the agreement. That is never done when it is possible to avoid it, nor unless it clearly appears that such provisions are annulled intentionally by other provisions of the paper, for it must always be borne in mind that the office of the court is to arrive at the meaning of the parties: not necessarily what may have been in the minds of either one or both of them, but their meaning as it may be gathered from their written agreement. It would not do to allow years after, or at any time after, a written agreement has been executed, upon a disagreement arising as to its meaning, to hear evidence outside the contract as to what the parties meant, simply because the paper admits of a doubt as to its meaning. Parol evidence would not be safer as a guide to the original intention of the parties (in the absence of an allegation of fraud or mutual mistake) than the law's process of confining the inquiry to the agreed document so long as it is susceptible of reasonable certainty in being understood. Otherwise every disputable clause in a written document would open it up to every evil of chance, of misrecollection and of perjury, that the parties have attempted to avoid by reducing the matter to writing.

Under these rules the court did not err in rejecting appellant's amended answer, pleading his interpretation of the contract, although it was said that it was a mistake if the contract did not so express the meaning of the parties, for the mistake, to be available, must have been a mutual mistake, and not that alone of one of the parties to the agreement. It was not pleaded that it was a mutual mistake. In that state of the record it devolved upon the court to construe the writing. That construction was in accord with the one we have given it.

Harmon and Talbutt caused a sale to be made of some of the lots before January 1, 1891. The prices realized were less than $600 per acre. The sale was discouraging, and marked the enterprise a failure. Whereupon Talbutt and Harmon abandoned the contract, and refused to have anything further to do with it. Early in 1891 appellee brought this suit, alleging the abandonment and consequent breach of the contract, and praying judgment for some $51,000 in damages because thereof. Other features of the petition are seized on as showing that appellee was endeavoring to hold appellant and Talbutt bound for a specific execution of their undertaking. But upon the whole, it satisfactorily appears that the real action was to recover damages for the breach of the undertaking by appellant and Talbutt to receive and pay for the land within the time stated. The case from the beginning seems to have been constructed upon that theory. A demurrer to the petition was overruled. The ground of the demurrer is, conceding the suit to be one to recover damages from the vendees for their refusal to take and pay for the property as agreed, that the petition fails to aver that the plaintiff was able and willing to convey to the vendees on January 1, 1891, a good title to the property, and did not aver a tender of a deed; also that the petition did not aver that plaintiff was then willing, ready and able to convey a good title. A contract to sell land, unlike one to sell personal chattels, gives to the vendor choice of two remedies for its breach by the vendee: One, an action against the vendee for specific execution of the contract, in which case the vendor must aver and show that he has the title contracted to be sold, and must tender it. The other, is a suit to recover the damages sustained by the vendor by his vendee's breach of the contract, where the breach is occasioned by the vendee's abandonment. In the latter case the vendor elects, as he may do, to retain the property, where the agreement is executory, and proceed to recoup himself in damages from the vendee. The vendee having broken the contract, is not entitled to have it enforced, if the breach is an abandonment of it, and a refusal to execute his part of it. Nor is it necessary for the vendor to tender to his vendee a deed when the latter has already declared that he will neither pay for the property nor accept the deed. The reason for requiring a tender in an action to enforce the specific execution of a contract is wholly lacking in a suit where it is sought to recover damages because the vendee has abandoned and refused to perform the contract. As the law does not require the doing of a vain thing, it will not require a pleading to aver that the pleader has offered to do what the defendant admits he would not accept if done.

That appellee was able and willing and ready to convey the title as agreed on January 1, 1891, was a necessary allegation, because it was an essential fact, for, although his vendees were in default in failing to take the property, yet to entitle him to recover damages he must have owned the property, and have been in position to have complied with his contract according to its terms. This defect in the petition is one of form. After verdict and judgment, it affirmatively appearing by the record that appellee was able, ready and willing to comply with his part of the agreement within the time fixed by the contract, the defect in the pleading was cured. (Duncan v. Brown, 15 Ben Mon., 196; Roundtree v. Hardin, 1 Ben Mon., 169; Hill v. Ragland, 114 Ky., 209.)

After January 1, 1891, appellee encumbered this property by mortgage, and under which it was sold before this case came on for trial. It is contended by appellant that this act of appellee's was an abandonment by him of the contract; that by that act and its consequences he put it out of his power to comply with his agreement, and for that reason can not recover against his vendees. Where the vendee of an executory contract to buy land abandons the agreement and refuses to comply with its terms, the vendor upon electing to proceed for damages for the breach, may, after having made his election, and after the time when by the terms of the agreement the conveyance was to have been made, dispose of the property, by sale or otherwise, and without regard to the contract. It is the vendor's property. The contract repudiated by the vendee can not give the latter any right to the land, nor to control it. The only question then open between the parties is the extent of the damages sustained by the vendor for the breach. These he is entitled to recover in addition to the land. (Mo-Brayer v. Cohen, 92 Ky., 479.) The vendee has no more right to control the vendor's use or disposal of his own land before the verdict and judgment fixing the damages than he would have after they were so fixed and paid. Upon such breach the quantum of damages is the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the land on the date of the breach, provided the actual value is less than the contract price. In addition, interest may be awarded.

Such was the course pursued by the trial court in this case. That the case dragged along for several years before trial can not affect the right of appellee to recover what is legally due him. Appellant might have insisted on an earlier trial if he had desired it. The delay is reasonably accounted for by appellee. No substantial right of appellant's seems to have been affected by it. The action for a while was on the equity docket. On appellant's motion it was transferred to the common law docket for a trial by jury. Before the order of transfer was made the court decided upon the face of the record that appellant and Talbutt had abandoned the contract as of January 1, 1891. The evidence then in the record, in the form of depositions and exhibits, fully sustain the judgment. Whether there had been such abandonment was an issue in the case. Had appellant moved for the transfer of that issue to the common-law docket when he answered it would have been so ordered. (Section 10, Civil Code.) But he did not then move for it. It was thereafter within the discretion of the trial judge whether he would order it transferred. On the subject of an abandonment by appellant and Talbutt the evidence is all one way. In truth, it is not contended seriously in the argument for appellant that he had not abandoned the contract. It was not an abuse of discretion by the trial judge to decide that question himself, and to send the question of damages to the jury to try. The judgment of the court decreeing that appellant had abandoned the contract January 1, 1891, was not entered till October 24, 1903, although the judgment was in fact announced by the court on October 17, 1903. Before the orders of the latter date were signed the court amended them so as to conform to the facts stated. We see nothing in this prejudicial to appellant, or that was beyond the power of the court to do.

Perceiving no error in the record the judgment is affirmed.

SCHROEDER, &c. v. BOHLSSEN, &c.

(Filed January 25, 1905.)

Leiber & Lincoln and Bodley, Baskin & Flexner for appellants.

J. D. Reed for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

In the petition for rehearing counsel insist that the court did not correctly state in the opinion the ground on which an affirmance of the judgment was asked; that their position was not that this was a devise that failed, but that their position was that the conditions precedent named in the ninth clause of the will gave only the potential possibility of a legacy arising thereunder, and that these conditions not having been fulfilled, there was never any such status at law under this clause as constituted a legacy in fact. In other words, they say that the clause of the will as to Joseph Schroeder made a conditional gift depending for its ripening into a legacy upon conditions precedent that had to happen before it could have any existence as a legacy, and that, therefore, the twelfth or residuary clause of the will became effective just as if the ninth clause had never had a place in the instrument when Joseph Schroeder died before the testatrix without being restored to his right mind.

We so understand the position of counsel on the original hearing, but it seems to us that the language of the statute is too broad to admit of this construction. The words are: "Which shall fail or be void or otherwise incapable of taking effect." If the word "fail" only was used there would be more ground for the position of counsel, but we must presume that when the legislature added the words "or be void or otherwise incapable of taking effect," they contemplated not only the failure of a legacy given absolutely and without condition, but intended to lay down the rule that should obtain in all cases where the devise is void or otherwise incapable of taking effect. When Joseph Schroeder died, insane in the lifetime of the testatrix, the devise to him became void or otherwise incapable of taking effect according to the ordinary sense of these words. The statute is not to be strictly construed, but, on the contrary, is to be liberally construed with a view to promote its objects. (Kentucky Statutes, section 460.) The legislature obviously intended by the statute to change the common-law rule, and the broad language employed covers conditional devises of no less than those which are absolute where the devisee dies in the lifetime of the testator.

Petition overruled.

Whole court sitting.

HAGER, AUDITOR v. FRANKLIN.

(Filed January 25, 1905.)

Commonwealth's attorney — Compensation—Lien on fines collected — If the Commonwealth's attorney who prosecuted a case has received all the money that is coming to him, that is, $4,000 per year, then his prior right to a per cent. on judgments collected after he has gone out of office ceases, and the Commonwealth's attorney who is in office when the money is paid into the treasury, if he has not received his $4,000 for the year, is entitled to the per centum.

N. B. Hays for appellant.

T. L. Edelen for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

As the law stood previous to the adoption of the present Constitution Commonwealth attorneys were entitled to 30 per cent. of the judgments for fines and forfeitures, and it was held that after judgment was rendered the Commonwealth attorney had a vested interest in so much of the judgment as was allowed him by law. (Stone v. Riddell, 68 Ky., 349; Berry v. Sheehan, 67 Ky., 434.)

As the law then stood some abuses crept in, and so much of the judgment as belonged to the attorney was collected and then little attention was paid to the collection of that part of the judgment belonging to the State. To remedy this defect it was provided in section 98 of the Constitution as to Commonwealth attorneys that "should any percentage of fines and forfeitures be allowed by law, it shall not be paid except upon such proportion of the fines and forfeitures as have been collected and paid into the State treasury, and not until so collected and paid." Pursuant to this provision of the Constitution is section 124, Kentucky Statutes, which gives the Commonwealth attorney 50 per cent. of fines and forfeitures, but provides that he shall not receive any part thereof from the treasury except upon such proportion of the fines and forfeitures as have been collected and paid into the State treasury, and not until so collected and paid. Section 125, Kentucky Statutes, limits the compensation of the Commonwealth attorney from the State treasury to $4,000.

The purpose of the Constitution and section 124, Kentucky Statutes, was not to change the rule theretofore in force giving to the Commonwealth attorney a vested interest in the judgment when he obtained one, but to require all the money to pass through the treasury so that the State's part of the judgment would be collected. There is nothing in the statute to evince an intention to make any other change in the law as it was then well understood, and Commonwealth attorneys under the present statute who prosecute a case to judgment have a vested interest in the judgment no less now than under the former law. By the former statute the county attorney where he prosecuted, aiding the Commonwealth attorney, was allowed a certain percentage of the judgment, and he had a vested interest in the judgment no less than the Commonwealth attorney. (Stone v. Riddell, 68 Ky., §49.) So section 183, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "in all prosecutions in the circuit court when the county attorney is present and assists in the prosecution he shall receive from the State treasury 25 per cent. of all judgments," etc. Under this provision manifestly only the county attorney in office at the time the judgment is rendered gets any interest, for if the judgment is not paid until he goes out of office his successor will be entitled to no part of it, because he was not present and did not assist in the prosecution. By section 1721, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided: "As additional compensation for services in Commonwealth cases, each circuit clerk shall receive from the State treasury 10 per cent. of the amount of all fines and forfeitures recovered in their respective courts and paid into the State treasury, but not until so paid in."

In this section manifestly the circuit clerk who does the work in the case in which the judgment rendered is entitled to the 10 per cent. and not the clerk who is in office when the judgment is paid, for the allowance is made to each circuit clerk as an additional compensation for services in Commonwealth cases, and is to be received out of fines and forfeitures recovered in their respective courts. The money is not to be paid them until it is paid into the treasury, but their rights are vested in the fines and forfeitures recovered in their courts. It can not be presumed that the legislature intended to give the county attorney and circuit clerk a vested right in the judgments rendered and to deny to the Commonwealth attorney, who is chiefly responsible for the prosecutions, a like interest. It is a just principle that he who sows shall reap, and we should not presume that the legislature intended to change the former rule in violation of this principle without a clear expression of its will to this effect.

It will be observed that the State gives 50 per cent. of the judgments to the Commonwealth attorney, 25 per cent. to the county attorney and 10 per cent. to the clerk, thus making 85 per cent., and leaving only 15 per cent. to the State. This shows that it is not the legislative policy to make money for the State out of these prosecutions, but that the purpose of the statutes is to collect the judgments that may be rendered so that the punishments inflicted will be enforced, and that this may be done out of the funds thus brought into the treasury.

The salary of the Commonwealth attorney is limited to $4,000, and he can not receive out of the treasury in any one year more than this amount. But it is not the purpose of the statute to cut him down below $4,000 in any one year, if in this year sufficient fines and forfeitures are paid into the treasury to bring him up to that amount. In other words, the Commonwealth attorney, who does the work, has the prior claim on the judgment which he recovers, and if he has not received his $4,000 for the year he is entitled to the money when paid into the treasury, although this may be after his term has expired.

On the other hand, if the Commonwealth attorney who prosecuted the case has received all that is coming to him, his prior right is out of the way and the Commonwealth attorney who is in office when the money is paid into the treasury, if he has not received his $4,000 for the year, is entitled to the per centum. In this way the statute holds out an inducement to the prosecuting attorney to secure judgments and also to those who are in office to have unpaid judgments collected. It is not unreasonable that the attorney who collects a judgment, should be paid for his services and at the same time the attorney who recovered the judgment is also entitled to compensation. As we said in the Chinn case, the fees belong to the office. The 50 per cent. of fines and forfeitures belong to the office of Commonwealth attorney. The incumbent of the office can not receive for his services in any one year more than $4,000; but where he recovers judgments that are not collected during the year, he may look to these when collected to make up his $4,000 in so far as he has not received that sum for his services during the year in which the judgments were rendered; and if there is a balance after paying him the $4,000 for that year arising from such judgments, it may be applied to pay his salary for the year in which the money is paid into the treasury, or the salary of the incumbent of the office at the time the money is paid into the treasury, if there has been a change in the office. The attorney who has a judgment collected and paid into the treasury should be paid for his services, and while he can not have priority over the attorney who recovered the judgment, there is no reason why what is left of the 50 per cent. belonging to the office should not be applied to his salary after the other attorney has received his $4,000. The language of the statute is: "No Commonwealth's attorney shall be paid, or receive as compensation for his services as such officer, for any one year, from the State treasury, more than $4,000." (Section 125, Kentucky Statutes.)

The only limitation is that the Commonwealth attorney shall not receive for his services for any one year more than $4,000. It was not designed to cut him down below $4,000 because the money that ought to have been paid in one year was paid in the next; nor was it designed to abrogate the rule so long in force that the attorney recovering the judgment was entitled to look to the percentage belonging to the office for his compensation for his services.

The opinion heretofore delivered is extended as above indicated, and the petition for rehearing is overruled.

JONES v. CRAWFORD.

(Filed January 26, 1905.)

Homesteads—Marriage of infant homesteader—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 1707, providing that "the homestead shall be for the use of the widow * * * and the unmarried infant children of the husband, * * * but the termination of the widow's occupancy shall not affect the children," * * * where an infant who occupies a homestead under said act marries, it thereby becomes a member of another or new family, and its right to the homestead ceases.

W. B. Moody for appellant.

Turner & Turner for appellee.

Appeal from Henry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

The question presented for decision by this appeal is whether a homestead right under the statute which had become vested in an infant daughter of the land owner is divested by her marriage during her minority.

By statute (section 1702, Kentucky Statutes) there is exempted to the debtor with a family, who is a resident of this Commonwealth, land occupied by him not exceeding $1,000 in value, which can not be subjected without his consent to sale for his debts. This right of homestead exemption belongs to the debtor who is a head of the family, and attaches to such of his real estate as may have been selected and is occupied by him for that purpose. Upon the death of such homesteader, by section 1707, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided: "The homestead shall be for the use of the widow so long as she occupies the same, and the unmarried infant children of the husband shall be entitled to a joint occupancy with her until the youngest child arrives at full age. But the termination of the widow's occupancy shall not affect the children." * * *

But for section 1707, upon the death of the homesteader, his property would at once pass to his heirs at law or devisees, subject to the rights of creditors, without any right to the widow or minor children to occupy it, save as they might take as heirs at law or devisees, which would give minors no claim superior to or different from that of major heirs. It is competent for the legislature to remove from liability for debts such portion of the debtor's estate as may be needful to sustain his family. It tends to keep the family together, to keep them from want, and is in harmony with the public policy to encourage the maintenance of the institution of the home. This policy, though varied in many of its features, is now a universal one in this country. It would be incomplete and fall short of its wise and humane purpose did it not extend to the widow and infant children of the debtor after his death. Every reason that existed before upon which it could rest continues with increased force after the death of the debtor. This right or privilege of homestead exemption is a creature of the statute. Its beneficiaries can take only what the statute has given them, and upon the terms named in the act. The heirs at law have no title during their ancestor's life to his property. Upon his death they take simply what the law gives them, and subject to the terms imposed by law. There is no inherent natural right of inheritance. So when the legislature created the privilege of homestead exemption in favor of a householder, and continued it after his death for certain members of his family, it was competent for the law-making body to select those members whose interests and whose relation to society were such as to bring them within the public policy treated of by the enactment, and who should for these reasons be favored by the statute. It was likewise competent, and perhaps necessary, to provide in what contingencies the right so conferred might be lost or otherwise terminated. The widow, by abandonment of the homestead, and the children upon reaching majority, lose their rights in the homestead as a homestead. The unity of the family—of the one family—of the deceased owner is looked to. When the widow abandons the homestead, as by remarrying and removing permanently from it, she is no longer regarded by the law, for the purposes of the application of the benefits of this statute, as a member of that family. When an infant child reaches his majority, he, too, is no longer a member of the decedent's remaining "family," within the contemplation of the statute. If an infant child marries, it thereby becomes a member of another family, that of his, or her own, a new family, the head of which would be entitled to his or her own homestead exemption as such head of a family.

By marriage the infant does not bring the spouse into the old family as a member of it in law.

Counsel for appellee argue that an infant is incapable of contracting or of waiving his or her legal rights by conduct; that as appellee's right to occupy the homestead in this case had once attached, her subsequent marriage during her infancy could not waive that right because she was then under the disability of infancy. But it must be remembered that the disability of infancy, as discussed in law, is a status created by the law, and may be subject to limitations or exceptions by the law makers. The statute under investigation is an exception by legislation to the general rule of law regarding the disability of infants. Under it the infant's act, whereby he is removed from the class who may claim the benefits of the statute, is what was contemplated by the legislature, and was made a condition concurrent to the enjoyment of the statutory privileges.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

THE LOUISVILLE & EASTERN R. R. CO. v. POULTER'S ADM'R.

(Filed January 26, 1905.)

1. Change of venue—Unless application be made at the appearance term a party is not entitled to a change of venue, where he failed to give ten days' notice to the opposite party of his intended application therefor, or failed to file a verified petition accompanied by the affidavits of two credible housekeepers of the county.

2. Undue influence of counsel—A party is not entitled to a change of venue by reason of the alleged undue influence of the counsel of his adversary in the "community" where the trial is to be had.

3. Master and servant—Injury to servant—Falling of defective scaffold—Contributory negligence—Question for jury—Where an employe was killed by the falling of a defective scaffold erected by the master and used by the servant in the building of a depot, there being conflicting evidence as to the servant's knowledge at the time of its defective condition, it was a question for the jury to determine whether the servant was guilty of contributory negligence in using it, under proper instructions of the court.

4. Peremptory instruction—The giving of a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant is improper where there is any evidence to support a verdict for the plaintiff.

5. Errors not excepted to—This court can not consider any alleged improper remarks made by the trial judge to appellant's counsel in the hearing of the jury unless it is shown by the bill of exceptions to have been excepted to at the time.

E. R. Atkinson, O'Neal & O'Neal and D. H. French for appellant.

L. W. Gates, R. F. Peak and S. E. DeHaven for appellee.

Appeal from Oldham Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, Andrew M. Sea, as administrator of the estate of Henry Poulter, deceased, obtained in the Oldham Circuit Court a verdict and judgment against the appellant, the Louisville & Eastern R. R. Co., for $4,000 in damages for the death of his intestate, caused, as alleged in the petition, by the falling of a defectively constructed scaffold used by appellant in erecting a depot at Beard's Station, the intestate being at the time of his death a day laborer and general helper in the work of erecting the depot by employment of appellant.

As to the manner of his death, it was averred in the petition that while he was assisting other employees of appellant in placing in position for being attached to the depot building a large bracket of 200 pounds weight, and necessarily standing upon the scaffold for that purpose, that structure broke and fell, thereby precipitating the intestate to the ground, and causing the heavy bracket to fall upon him and fracture his skull, of which he shortly thereafter died.

It was further averred in the petition that the scaffold was negligently and improperly constructed by appellant's servants of defective and unsuitable material and in such a negligent and unskillful manner that when completed it was unfit and dangerous for use by appellant's workmen, and that its defective and dangerous condition was known, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been known, to appellant and its other servants at work upon the depot, but was unknown, and by the exercise of such care could not have been known, to the intestate. The answer, by specific denial, put in issue the affirmative matter of the petition, pleaded contributory negligence upon the part of the intestate, and that he knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the unsafe condition of the scaffold, if it was unsafe, before he got upon it.

The affirmative matter of the answer was controverted by reply, and upon the issues thus formed the parties were put upon trial and proof with the result stated in the outset of the opinion. Numerous errors were assigned by appellant in support of its motion for a new trial, but they were regarded by the lower court as insufficient; consequently a new trial was refused.

One of the grounds for a new trial was that the court erred in overruling appellant's motion for a change of venue and continuance. The case was tried before a special judge because the regular judge was of counsel for appellee under a contract of employment made before his election. The affidavit of appellant's agent in Oldham county was filed in support of the motion for a continuance and change of venue, in which it was stated that, owing to the undue influence of appellee's attorney, the regular judge of the court, appellant could not have a fair trial in the "community;" that the attorney mentioned was elected judge of the court in which the action was then pending at the preceding November election and had acted as judge of such court during the term then in progress until the day before the calling of this case for trial, and that on the first day of the term the attorney, as judge of the court, in charging the grand jury made to that body, in the hearing of the members of the petit jury, summoned for the term, certain improper and inflammatory statements in regard to corporations and the directors of corporations, which are set out in the affidavit, and that the members of the petit jury would naturally be unduly influenced by such language from the judge of the court, and thereby prejudiced against appellant in the trial of its case.

The answer of appellant had been filed at the previous term of the court at which term the cause was continued. The motion for a change of venue and continuance was not, therefore, made at the appearance term, but at the second term of the court after the institution of the action, and not in fact until the case was called and both the parties had announced ready for trial.

Section 1094, Kentucky Statutes, provides: * * * "A party to any civil proceeding, triable by a jury in a circuit court, may have a change of venue when it appears that owing to the undue influence of his adversary in the county, or to the odium which attends himself, or his cause of action or defense, he can not have a fair trial."

Section 1095 provides "before an order for a change of venue shall be made ten days' notice shall be given to the party."

Section 1096 provides: "Application for an order for a change of venue must be made by petition, verified by the affidavits of the party, supported by the affidavits of at least two credible housekeepers of the county in which the action is pending. The adverse party may file affidavits controverting the ground relied upon for a change of venue, and the court may hear other evidence for or against the application, and shall exercise a sound discretion in deciding the question."

Manifestly appellant did not comply with the provisions of the several sections of the statute, supra, in the matter of its application for a change of venue, as it neither gave the notice, nor filed the verified petition accompanied by the affidavits of two credible housekeepers of the county required thereby. In filing the affidavit upon which the motion for a change of venue and continuance was based, appellant attempted to avail itself of the privilege accorded by section 1103 of the statute, supra, which provides: "At the appearance term of a civil suit if a party desires a change of venue he shall state the facts and reasons therefor in an affidavit, which shall be good cause for a continuance, if deemed sufficient by the court, provided the application for a change of venue be made during the term."

Obviously appellant could not proceed under this section, as it had no application, for the simple and conclusive reason that the motion was not made, or affidavit filed, at the appearance term, but at a subsequent term, and after both parties had announced themselves ready for trial, as before stated. It is, therefore, evident that the trial court did not err in overruling the motion. But if this were not so, it is further evident that the affidavit was insufficient to authorize the order asked of the court. The affidavit set forth certain alleged intemperate remarks made by one of appellee's attorneys, now, and at the time of the trial, judge of the Oldham Circuit Court, in charging the grand jury. If they were uttered as stated in the affidavit, though in the hearing of the petit jury, their very intemperateness doubtless prevented them from having a hurtful effect upon the minds of the hearers.

While it is in effect stated in the affidavit that the remarks in question were made in the hearing of the petit jury, some of whom would be taken upon the jury to try appellant's case, it does not appear from the record that any of them in fact served upon the jury. We think the grounds presented by the affidavit insufficient in another respect. They relate alone to the undue influence of appellee's attorney in the "community" as in the way of appellant's securing a fair trial, whereas the statutory ground for a change of venue is the undue influence of the opposite party in the county. We apprehend it will never be considered that the great or unusual influence or skill of counsel for one of the parties to an action will authorize the granting of a change of venue to the other party, that his case may be tried where the influence of his adversary's counsel would be less powerful. It is insisted for appellant that the court erred in refusing the peremptory instruction asked by its counsel after the introduction of appellee's evidence. A peremptory instruction would not have been proper unless there was a total failure of proof.

According to the evidence, the scaffold, by the falling of which appellee's intestate lost his life, was constructed under the supervision of appellant's foreman, Wm. Cox, for the use of the workmen engaged in erecting its depot. The scaffold consisted of three upright scantlings six feet west of the depot, with planks, called outriggers, six by three quarter inches nailed to each of the upright scantlings and to the building, the planks or outriggers acting as a support for the planks used as a floor of the scaffold. The floor of the scaffold was about seven or eight feet above the ground. The distance between the northwest corner upright of the scaffold to the middle upright was about eight feet, and from the middle upright to the southwest corner was about fourteen feet. While the evidence was conflicting as to the number of braces on the scaffold, there was no conflict as to the fact that the middle outrigger had a knot in it, which was about midway between the end of the outrigger nailed to the middle upright scantling and the end nailed to the doorfacing of the depot.

We think the weight of the evidence showed that the knot greatly weakened the outrigger, which fact, in connection with the further facts that the distance between the south corner upright and the middle upright was fourteen feet, and that the scaffold was defectively braced, caused it to give way and fall. The proof also conduced to prove that the scaffold as a whole was a frail, unsubstantial and unsafe structure, defective in material and construction, and unequal to the task of supporting the combined weight of the 200 pound bracket and from two to four workmen who were required to get upon it to attach the bracket to the depot. In brief, we think it sufficiently shown by the evidence that appellant, through its superintendent, Cox, and other skilled employes then at work upon the depot, was guilty of negligence in thus constructing and maintaining the scaffold, and that it and they knew it to be unsafe and dangerous for use by its employes. Upon the other hand, there was evidence tending to show that the intestate knew, or ought to have known, of the dangerous construction of the scaffold, as he gave some assistance in erecting it; that is, by the orders of Cox he carried to it from an adjacent point about the depot some of the material used in its construction, and probably gave some other assistance to those by whom

It was put up. It appeared, however, from the evidence that he was a plasterer by trade, and that while he had occasionally done a little rough carpentering, he was practically without knowledge of or skill in that trade. It was for the jury to determine from all the evidence whether he was enough of a carpenter to know, after having given some assistance in erecting the scaffold, that it was defective and dangerous.

The several workmen of appellant testified that the intestate was told to support and push the end of the 200 pound bracket that was being adjusted to its place on the depot building, in doing which his proper place was on the floor of the scaffold, just behind one of the workmen who had the brace on his shoulder, but that instead of remaining on the scaffold the intestate negligently stood upon a ladder leaning against the scaffold and one of its braces; that his weight upon the ladder caused the brace to give way, as it was fastened with but one nail, and that the giving away of the brace so weakened the supports of the scaffold as to cause it to fall. They also testified that, in their opinion, if the intestate had remained upon the floor of the scaffold it would not have fallen, and that he had been warned by the superintendent not to stand upon the ladder.

Upon the other hand, two witnesses introduced by appellee, Botts and Casey, testified to the effect that the intestate was not upon the ladder when the scaffold fell, but upon and near the middle of the floor of the scaffold, where it was his duty to be. Botts did not see the scaffold fall, but in passing a very short time before it fell he saw the position of the intestate as described, and Casey said he saw the scaffold fall, and as according to his testimony, the intestate was still on the floor of the scaffold and near the middle when it fell, it is not probable that he got upon the ladder after Botts passed. At any rate, Casey testified that he saw the intestate when the scaffold fell, and he was then on the scaffold, and not on the ladder. Upon this point there was, therefore, a conflict of testimony, appellant's proof conducing to show the scaffold fell because of the breaking of the brace by the ladder upon which the intestate was standing, and that he was negligent in thus standing, but the testimony of appellee conduced to show that the fall of the scaffold was not due to that cause, but to its defective construction and inherent weakness, and more especially by the breaking of the outrigger containing the knot. If the jury had believed appellant's testimony they would have found that the intestate's death was due to his own negligence, but as they found for appellee, they necessarily did so upon the ground that the evidence introduced in his behalf showed that his death was caused by the negligence of appellant's servants. As it can not be said that there was no evidence to support the verdict, the giving of the peremptory instruction asked by appellant would have been improper.

We think the instructions given by the court were unobjectionable, except that, in one respect, they were unduly favorable to appellant, in that they imposed upon the intestate the duty, equal and corresponding to that of the master, to know that the scaffold was safe before going upon it. Such is not the law of the case. Upon the contrary, the correct rule is that the duty of furnishing reasonably safe tools and materials and place to work is primarily upon the master, and that the servant is under no duty to discover such defects, and unless he knows of their existence, or they were patent and obvious to a person of his experience and understanding, he will not be precluded from a recovery for injury resulting from the failure of the master to perform the primary duty referred to.

This rule has been repeatedly approved by recent decisions of this court. (Phisterer v. Peter & Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1605, and cases therein cited.) It follows, therefore, that the authorities relied on by counsel for appellant are not in point. The record does not show the alleged improper statement claimed to have been made by the trial judge to appellant's counsel in the hearing of the jury, or that an exception was taken thereto, consequently we have been unable to consider it. We are also unable to see that any ruling of the court upon the admission or rejection of evidence was prejudicial to the appellant. Nor was there error in the refusal of the court to give the instructions asked by counsel for appellant.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

BUEY'S ADM'X v. CHESS & WYMOND CO.

(Filed January 26, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Negligence—In this action the evidence showing that the deceased told the foreman that his machine was out of level, and needed new appliances; that he made the repairs the night before the accident, and that when he went to oil it he took the precautions to keep the belt from running over on another pulley so it would not be started, show that he was conscious of the danger he was in, and this being true his death was the proximate result of his own negligence.

2. Same—Master and servant—It is the duty of the master to furnish the servant with reasonably safe machinery for his work. Not that such machinery may not be dangerous in its use, even when properly used, but it must be in reasonably fit condition for the use in which it is employed, and must be kept in reasonable repair. The servant is not bound to increase the hazard of his employment by working at machinery or with tools in unfit condition, but where he knows of the danger and continues without complaint, or without bringing it to the master's attention, he assumes for the time the increased hazard in addition to the ordinary risks of his employment.

Bingham & Davies for appellant.

O'Neal & O'Neal for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee operates a cooperage plant. Edward Buey was an employe in the plant. He operated a machine used to flare the steel hoops to be placed on barrels. He had worked in that factory for about thirteen years, and at that machine, or one like it, for about seven years. The propelling power was imparted to the machine from a general shaft above by means of a belt operating from it to a pulley attached to the machine. There were two pulleys attached to the shaft of the machine, one stationary in its position on the shaft and the other loose. The power was detached from the machine by shifting the belt from the stationary pulley, by which the machine was run, to a loose pulley adjoining it, a common mechanical device.

Unless the machine was set level the belt would not stay on the more elevated pulley when they were in motion, but would slide on to the lower one. This unlevel condition of the machine might be produced either by a sagging of some part of the foundation, or by the wearing of the babbitt metal bearings in the journals accommodating the shafting of the machine. It was the practice in appellee's factory to overhaul these machines at intervals and re-adjust their levels, and make other repairs if needed. It was the duty of Edward F. Buey to report the condition of his machine to the foreman of the shop when it became out of fix. He also repaired it at the direction of the foreman. On Thursday before the accident by which he was injured and lost his life he reported to the foreman that his machine needed new babbitt metal; that it was unlevel. The necessary material was furnished him to make the repairs indicated by his information, and he and his brother, also a workman in the plant, and who has since been made a foreman, set to repair it. They did repair it that night. No further complaint was made of it before the accident. On the following Saturday morning, while attempting to oil his machine, a part of decedent's duty, he shifted the belt from the stationary to the loose pulley in order to stop the machine so as to get at its parts. He placed a block of wood, about one inch thick and one foot long, between the cogs of the machine so as to prevent its starting up if the belt should slip back onto that pulley. In addition he, with his disengaged hand, sought to ward off the belt from slipping back. Whether his hand was caught by the rapidly moving belt, and his equilibrium lost by it, is not clear, but at any rate he was thrown, or stumbled and fell, violently striking his head and inflicting a fatal wound.

In this suit by his administratrix against his employer to recover the damages because of his death it is charged that he was injured and killed by trying to handle a dangerous machine, which was out of repair, and unfit for the use for which it was being employed, which conditions were known to the master, or could have been discovered by it with ordinary care, and that they were unknown to him, and could not have been discovered by him with ordinary care. At the close of the plaintiff's evidence the trial court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the defendants. The grounds of the court's action are set forth in the charge he gave the jury in granting the motion. It was found by the court that there was some evidence that the machine was out of repair, was unlevel, and unusually dangerous because of that fact, and that the master knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known, of the fact in time to have avoided the injury. The court also found that there was some evidence to go to the jury that decedent was injured as the proximate result of the defects in the machinery. But the court found that plaintiff's own evidence showed that her decedent was aware of the unsafe condition of the machine, and of its danger to him in continuing to use it while in that condition. Because of the fact last stated the court granted the motion for the peremptory instruction. Counsel for appellant do not criticize the circuit judge's statement of the law governing the case, but claim that the facts found by the court did not exist, or at least were not shown to exist; and that whether they did or not, was a fact to be found by the jury.

Before going further into the trial court's finding of the fact we will state shortly the law which should have been applied. It is the duty of the master to furnish his employes reasonably safe machinery with which to work. Not that machinery furnished may not be dangerous in its use, even when properly used, but it must be in reasonably fit condition for the use in which it is employed. It must be kept in reasonable repair. The master's duty extends to seeing that the machinery is in that condition of repair, and consequently he must use reasonable endeavor to keep himself informed of the condition. This the master may do by requiring the servant in charge of the machine, where he is competent to do so, to ascertain its condition, and to report it to the master, or to the superior in charge, and who represents him. The servant is not bound to increase the hazard of his employment by working at machinery or with tools in unfit condition. By bringing the fact, where it is known to the servant, to the master's attention, the defects can be remedied by the one in authority, or the servant be absolved from the increased risks incident to their use, if the danger is not such as that none but a reckless person would continue their use in that condition. When, however, the servant actually knows of the imperfection, and of the danger it involves to him, and continues without complaint, or without bringing it to the master's attention, he assumes for the time the increased hazard in addition to the ordinary risks of his employment. The law requires the master to do what he reasonably can do toward protecting his work in employments dangerous to life or limb. But employers are not omniscient. They can not actually know the condition of every piece of machinery or tool at every instant of its use. The workman who has it in immediate charge has the best opportunity for learning of such defects as may occur at any moment, and are open to his view. It is his duty to report it so that it can be repaired. If he fails in that duty the master may or may not be liable if some other person is injured by it, but if the neglectful servant himself suffers an injury from it, the master having no knowledge of the situation, it is a safe rule that lets the negligent servant bear the consequences of his own action.

Or if, in the nature of his employment and use of the machine or tool, the servant must learn of its actual condition, but for his own negligence in failing to do his duty knowledge of the actual condition of the thing will be imputed to him as if he had learned, for one ought not to profit by his own breach of duty. Appellant's intestate being dead, and not having retained full consciousness after his injury, it is said it is impossible to say just what was in his mind; and that as it is shown that the machine was unfit, and that the injury was caused by that fact, the question of the injured man's knowledge was a question of fact, to be decided by the jury upon all the evidence; that unless such knowledge was found to have existed in the decedent's mind, his estate is entitled to recover in this case. Where the plaintiff's evidence shows facts constituting prima facie a right to recover, and shows in addition other facts which defeat the right, it is always within the province of the court to direct a nonsuit, for the plaintiff can have no right to recover at all if all he has proven be true. If the circumstances were such as that the fact might have been decided from them either way, then it was a matter for the jury to determine whether the disputed fact did or not exist. But where the circumstances, as shown by plaintiff's evidence, all point to one conclusion, and in fact established it to the exclusion of others, the fact will be treated as one established and true for the purpose of the motion. For the purpose of deciding the motion for peremptory instruction, in its nature a demurrer to the evidence, all that the plaintiff has proven is taken as true.

Edward F. Buey being dead and not having spoken of the accident, it is incumbent upon whoever tries the fact to determine from the circumstances what his knowledge was at the time of his injury. His familiarity with the machine, and the fact that he had successfully operated it for many years, tends to prove his familiar acquaintance with it, as well as his actions at the time afford evidence of what he knew on the subject of its condition and danger to him. A powerful machine, used in rolling steel hoops, propelled by a tremendous force, is so obviously dangerous to human life and limb that he could not have been ignorant of the fact at his age, twenty-five, and with his experience and observation in working at it. The fact that he told the foreman it was out of level, and needed new babbitt metal for the journals, shows that he was aware of the needs and of what to do to remedy them. In addition, in making the repairs on the Thursday night before the accident he and his brother discovered that the foundation, partly composed of a wooden block, was decayed in part, by which the machine was allowed to sag; that he knew the replacing of the babbitt metal did not fully overcome the lack of perfect equilibrium of the machine, is shown by the fact that when he went to oil it Saturday morning he took the precautions indicating his knowledge that the machine was not then level. These very precautions, taken to keep the belt from running over on the stationary pulley and starting up the machine, show that he was conscious of the danger to him if it did start up while he was oiling it. Besides all that, the nature of his employment, of his duty in connection with the operation of this machine, was such that if he did it, he was bound to know of the very defects that existed. These things being true, and the master having no other knowledge or notice of the trouble, as a matter of law decedent's injury and death must be held to be the proximate result of his own negligence.

The peremptory instruction was proper and the judgment must be affirmed.

CAIN, BY, &c. v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed January 27, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Putting passenger off at wrong station—Damages—Evidence—In an action for damages for being put off of a train at the wrong station, and having to walk in the night through the sleet and cold to her station, it was competent for the defendant company to prove by one Wilson and his wife that they invited the plaintiff to stay with them all night at the station where she was put off, as she is not entitled to recover for injuries she could reasonably have avoided, or enhance the damages by her own imprudent conduct.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellants.

Benjamin D. Warfield, Wilhur F. Browder and Reuben A. Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Maud Cain, who sues by her next friend, bought a ticket at Owensboro for Utica, a station on defendant's line. She boarded a train for her destination, and as the train approached Sutherland, an intermediate station, it was called out, and she avers that the conductor told her it was the station where she was to get off; thereupon he picked up her valise and carried it out for her, and just as the train was leaving she discovered the mistake. She avers that it was a cold and sleety day in February; that she was compelled to walk to Utica, some miles distant, reaching there after dark; that in going along she fell through a trestle and hurt herself; that she suffered physical pain and mental anguish in consequence of her forced journey to Utica. She was about fifteen years old at the time of the occurrence, and it was the first time she had been on a train. The defendant denied the material allegations.

The plaintiff's testimony conduces to support the averments of the petition. The defendant introduced two disinterested witnesses who testified that the plaintiff voluntarily left the train at Sutherland; that she carried her valise from the train herself; that they told her at the time the train was pulling out that it was not the station at which she desired to get off. The conductor testified that he had no recollection of putting her off at Sutherland. But the evidence of the two disinterested witnesses was far more satisfactory than the conductor's, because they had a distinct recollection of what occurred.

The court gave the jury three instructions. Nos. 1 and 3 are as follows:

"Instruction No. 1. The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that on the 17th day of February, 1904, the plaintiff purchased a passenger ticket from the agent of the defendant, at Owensboro, Ky., for transportation on one of defendant's passenger trains, from Owensboro to Utica, a station on defendant's railroad, and she then and there took passage on defendant's passenger train, and before said train had reached Utica, but had only reached Sutherland, a station nearer to Owensboro than Utica, and not the point of her destination, the agents or servants of defendant notified her that she had reached Utica, and she relied on their statements as true, and got off the train at Sutherland, and did not discover that Sutherland Station was not Utica Station, and could not discover it in the exercise of ordinary care and caution, considering her age and experience in traveling, and did not discover that she was at the wrong station until the train had left her, and said Utica was many miles from Sutherland, and the plaintiff was compelled to, and did, walk to Utica Station, her point of destination, and suffered physical and mental pain therefrom, and was inconvenienced and annoyed as a direct and proximate result of said walk, the jury should find for her whatever damages she sustained, not exceeding $3,500, the amount claimed in the petition.

"Instruction No. 3. The court further instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that at the time plaintiff got off the train at Sutherland no officer or agent of the defendant company ordered or directed her to do so, or that plaintiff negligently or carelessly got off at said station, and but for her own negligence and carelessness she would not have been left at Sutherland, or, that the getting off of the train by the plaintiff at Sutherland Station was her own negligence and carelessness, then the jury should find for the defendant."

The instructions given were more favorable to the plaintiff than she was entitled to have, but we will not point out wherein they were more favorable, except to the extent that we deem it necessary in this opinion.

Instruction No. 1 submitted to the jury the question as to whether the conductor had put the plaintiff off at Sutherland under the circumstances claimed by her. The jury found against her on that question.

Instruction No. 8 denied her right to recover if she voluntarily left the train at that point. The conductor had no right to suppose that she would get off the train at a station other than the one for which her ticket called. He had the right to presume that a girl of her age was possessed of sufficient intelligence to remain on the car until her station was called out. So if she left the train voluntarily at Sutherland, the failure of the conductor to discover that fact and have her to return to the train was not a breach of duty. In the case of Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Jordon, 112 Ky., 473, an infant eight years old was left at a station other than the one to which it was destined, and the court said: "The law required of appellant that it should exercise the highest degree of care to safely transport appellee to her point of destination. But this duty did not require that appellant's conductor should act as a special attendant to plaintiff during the journey to see that she did not leave her seat. He had the right to presume that the friends and relations of appellee would not have consented to her going alone upon such a journey unless she was possessed of sufficient intelligence to obey the instructions given her to occupy her seat until her destination was reached. His duty was to see after the comfort and safety of the passengers generally and not one in particular."

On the trial of the case the court permitted Wilson and his wife (the two persons whom we have designated as disinterested witnesses) to testify that they invited the plaintiff to remain with them over night. Had she done so she would have escaped the consequences of the trip through the cold to Utica. This testimony was competent. In the first place, it was not prejudicial to the plaintiff on the question as to whether the conductor wrongfully put her off at Sutherland, because it did not in the slightest degree tend to prove that he had not wrongfully put her off at that point. Under the instructions of the court, notwithstanding this testimony, the jury was authorized to allow her damages for her time and suffering in consequence of her trip to Utica, if it believed the conductor had wrongfully put her off at Sutherland. It was competent evidence to go to the jury, because if a prudent person under the same circumstances would have accepted the invitation to remain with the Wilsons, rather than to have made the trip through the sleet, she is not entitled to recover for injuries resulting therefrom, because she could not be thus allowed to enhance her damages by reason of imprudent conduct. The first instruction was prejudicial to the appellee because it did not submit this question to the jury. Where a passenger is wrongfully put off of a train in a field or woods, he has the right to go to a place of safety, or if it is a reasonable thing to do, to proceed to the place of destination, and may recover damages proximately flowing from the wrongful act. If the same passenger is put off in a city or town, or other place where reasonably comfortable quarters may be had, he would not have the right to journey in bad weather over bad roads to his destination, which would cause suffering and pain, and recover therefor, for he would thus produce an injury to himself which did not proximately flow from the wrongful act. As the verdict was for the defendant we deem it unnecessary to discuss the question of the plaintiff's right to recover for mental suffering, hence we express no opinion on the part of instruction No. 1 relating to that question.

The judgment is affirmed.

FENLEY, &c. v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE.

(Filed January 27, 1905.)

Sale of land for taxes—Life estate—Remaindermen—Process—In a proceeding to enforce a lien on land for city taxes listed by the life tenant, it was error to sell the land for the taxes primarily owing by the life tenant, where process was only served on the owner of the remainder interest, although there was an allegation that the life estate was insufficient to pay the taxes. The life tenant should have been before the court, and his interest first sold so that the remainderman could protect himself by buying in the life estate.

W. O. Harris for appellants.

Henry L. Stone for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Division, for the purpose of recovering against William Johnson and Mary E. Fenley and Oscar Fenley, her husband, municipal taxes for the years 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898, on a parcel of land 57 by 92 feet, with improvements thereon, on the southeast corner of Green and Floyd streets, being lot No. 1 in block 75 on the city assessor's maps.

It is alleged in the petition that the above-named persons were, on the 1st day of September of each of the years 1894, 1895, 1896 and 1897, the owners and holders of the land and improvements above described; but in each of the four paragraphs it is alleged that the land was assessed as the property of "William Johnson, etc."

The original tax bills for the four years, authenticated as by law required, are filed as exhibits with the petition, and made part of the pleading. These tax bills show that the property was assessed in the name of William Johnson, "holder present estate." Process was issued against all of the defendants, and served on Mary E. Fenley and her husband, Oscar Fenley, but not on William Johnson. No answer was made by Fenley and wife, and after the expiration of the time allowed by law for answer the case was submitted, and judgment by default entered against them for the full amount of the taxes for the various years as shown by the bills, with accrued interest and costs. It was further adjudged that the city had a lien upon the land and the improvements described in the petition, and this was enforced, and the property ordered to be sold by the commissioner for the satisfaction of the judgment. This was afterwards done, and the city became the purchaser for the tax claim ascertained to be due it, $340.99, although the property was appraised at the sum of $4,300. From this judgment Fenley and wife have appealed.

There seems to be a substantial variance between the allegations of the petition and the tax bills filed as exhibits, the allegations of the pleading being that Johnson and Mary E. Fenley were joint owners of the land; but the tax bills show that Johnson was the holder of a life estate, with remainder to Mary E. Fenley. Section 2990, Kentucky Statutes (charter of cities of the first class), provides that "where remainders and reversions of future estate are outstanding, the holder of the particular estate shall be assessed with the words 'holder of the present estate' added to his name." * * * Section 2996 provides, among other things, that "each bill shall be authenticated by the assessor by his signature, or a stamped fac simile thereof, and when so authenticated it shall be prima facie proof that all steps have been taken to make it a binding tax bill for the amounts and purposes and against the person and property therein named or described." * * *

The tax bills, therefore, as said before, show that Johnson was the holder of the particular estate, and Mary E. Fenley was remainderman. The rule is that, where the allegations of a pleading are contradicted by the exhibits filed, the latter control. (Union Boiler and Tube Cleaner Co. v. Louisville Railway Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 122; Newman's Pleading and Practice, 252, and cases there cited.)

The question, then, presented is whether or not it was error to sell the remainder interest for the taxes primarily due from the holder of the particular estate. This very question arose in Dumesnil v. City of Louisville, 2 Ky. Law Rep., 431, wherein it was said: "In case 193 the chancellor, at the time the cross petition of the city was filed, had no jurisdiction to sell the real estate for the payment of taxes, and, besides, if the jurisdiction subsequently attached, the life tenants were liable for the taxes, and that interest should have been subjected, and not the interest of the infants. The remainderman has neither rents or profits, nor the right to enjoyment of the estate; and we see no justice or equity in having the interest of the party in remainder sold until the estate of the life tenant is exhausted. Nor will the allegation that the life estate is insufficient authorize a sale of the remainder. It must appear that the life tenant has no other property out of which the taxes could be made. The tenant for life is primarily liable, and why should the chancellor subject the estate of the remainderman to the payment of the taxes when the party primarily liable is able to pay; and especially when those in remainder are infants or married women, and when no possible injury can result therefrom to the city?" (Johnson v. Smith, 5 Bush, 102.)

As Johnson was not before the court, no interest of his passed under the judgment or sale. It, therefore, results that the remainder interest alone has been sold to satisfy a claim for which it was, at furtherest only secondarily liable. We are not called upon to decide, and we do not decide, that the city has not a lien to secure its taxes upon the fee-simple estate (section 8006, Kentucky Statutes); but we are of opinion that, in all fairness and justice to the remainderman, the holder of the particular estate should be brought before the court and his interest first sold, so that the remainderman could protect himself by buying in the life estate, and not, as in this case, sell the remainder interest and leave the real debtor, the holder of the particular estate, in full possession of his property, free from any lien for taxes, that having been paid off by the sale of the remainder. No better illustration of the injustice arising from the error pointed out in the sale of the property in this case could be made than the result of this particular sale. The remainder interest in property worth $4,800 is put up at public outcry and purchased by the plaintiff for the amount of its debt, $840.99; whereas, if the life estate had been first put up the remainderman could have forced the life tenant to buy in his estate, and thus pay the taxes he owed, or she could have purchased his estate, and, in this way, paid the city its debt, and afterwards owned the fee simple.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CARPENTER v. CARPENTER'S TRUSTEE.

(Filed January 31, 1905.)

Wills—Devise in trust—Action to vacate—Construction of will—Extrinsic evidence—By the will of John B. Carpenter the following trust was created: "6. I direct the share of my son, E. A. Carpenter, to be paid into the hands of a trustee to be appointed by the Hart County Court, to be used for his benefit and to keep him from want, but that it be not paid into his hands." A trustee having been appointed under the will, the cestui que trust has instituted this action to vacate the trust, alleging that it was made by his father under a misapprehension of plaintiff's physical and mental condition, etc. Held—That the case at bar presents an active trust where the trustee has the sole management and control of the estate, and the question involved is whether evidence aliunde can be introduced to establish for a testator a motive for his action when he has expressed none in his will, and where his language is perfectly plain and unambiguous. This we hold can not be done, and the opinion of this court in Webster v. Bush, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 565, is no longer to be regarded as authority.

C. B. Larimore, H. W. Curle and C. B. Dowling for appellant.

D. A. McCandless for appellee.

Appeal from Hart Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action involves a construction of the following item of the will of John B. Carpenter, deceased:

"6. I direct the share of my son, E. A. Carpenter, to be paid into the hands of a trustee to be appointed by the Hart County Court to be used for his benefit and to keep him from want, but that it b not paid into his hands."

The will of the father was admitted to probate, and the appellee, Truax Sturgeon, appointed trustee by the Hart County Court. Afterwards the cestui que trust instituted this action in the Hart Circuit Court against his trustee, setting up in his petition the foregoing item from his father's will, and alleging, substantially, that for three or four years before his father's death he (plaintiff) had suffered greatly from paralysis, and was unable to labor for his support, and that his father, "probably thinking or believing that his mind was impaired, or would become impaired by reason of the paralysis, which this plaintiff denies, and which was a wrong conception if it was conceived by his father that his (plaintiff's) mind was impaired, or would become impaired, by reason of the severe stroke of paralysis," placed his (plaintiff's) estate in trust as shown in the foregoing item of the will; that since his father's death his health has so improved as to render him physically able to prudently manage and control his estate, which is now withheld from him by his trustee, Truax Sturgeon; and he prays that the trust be vacated and the fund constituting it be turned over to his hands for management, etc. A general demurrer was interposed to this petition, which was sustained by the court, and the appellant declining to plead further, was dismissed.

This action is based upon the opinion of this court in the case of Webster v. Bush, Trustee, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 565, which involved the construction of a clause in a will in all respects similar in principle to that at bar, in which it was held that where a testator devised an estate in trust for his daughter, under the supposition that she was of feeble mind, the court was authorized, upon an allegation that the physical incapacity had ceased to exist, to try this question, and if it was established by the evidence, to discharge the trust. In that case Judge DuRelle delivered a dissenting opinion, which contains an admirable exposition of the law, and from which we adopt the following:

"With the wisdom or unwisdom of the clause above quoted from the will this court has nothing to do, except in so far as it might shed light on the intention of the testator, if ambiguity existed. There was no ambiguity. The testator had the absolute and unconditional right to place upon the devise to his daughter the limitations which he imposed, and no court has a right to assign to him a motive for these limitations, and by denying the existence of a reason for that motive create a new will for the testator. To adjudge that a court, in construing unambiguous language in a will, may surmise a reason in the testator's mind for his clearly-expressed intent, and then, upon evidence introduced by devisees, denying the existence of that suppositious fact, proceed to set aside the plain expression of intent, is to nullify the statute of wills. No trust could then be so carefully guarded as not to be at the mercy of the imagination of the chancellor.

"There can be no doubt that this trust comes within the class which do not vest a legal estate in the cestui que trust, being a case 'where such powers or duties were imposed with the estate upon a donee to uses that it was necessary that he should continue to hold the legal title in order to perform the duty or execute the power.' (Perry on Trusts, section 800; also Ibid, section 805; Kay v. Scates, 78 Am. Decisions, 299, and note.)

"It seems to be equally well settled that 'where the instrument is free from ambiguity, and there is no imperfection or inaccuracy in its language, the testator's intention is to be collected from the words used by him, and parol evidence is not allowable for the purpose of adding to, or explaining, or subtracting from it, or to raise an argument in favor of any particular construction. (Phil. Ev., 545; 8 Bingham, 244; Wigram on Ec. Evidence, 65.) Extrinsic evidence of intention is inadmissible for the purpose of supplying a devise, or any other material provision, omitted by mistake, or to superadd any qualification to the terms used, or to evince a mistake in writing the instrument.' (Stephen v. Walker, 8 Ben Mon., 602.)

"It is not necessary here to inquire whether the evidence introduced would be sufficient to justify a discharge of the trust if the will had provided that it was to continue only until the daughter became competent to manage her estate. The proposition here stated is that, under the terms of the will as written, no evidence can be introduced to show what the reason was for the devise to the trustee, and that that reason never existed, or has ceased to exist. To do so is to superadd a qualification to the terms used, and by parol to import into the will an intention which is not there expressed. (34 Am. State Reports, 64.)

"It is to show by evidence aliunde a different intent on the part of the testator in reference to the devise to Euphemia from that manifested by the language of the will.

"The rule was stated by Judge Simpson in Stephen v. Walker, supra: 'The inquiry must be confined to the meaning of the words used, and hence all extrinsic evidence tending to prove, not what the testator has expressed, but what he intended to express, is inadmissible.' "

The question involved in the case at bar is not to be confused with the principle that a dry or simple trust will be vacated by the chancellor upon the request of the cestui que trust. A dry or simple trust is one as to which the trustee has no duties to perform, and the cestui que trust has the entire management of the estate. It is a simple separation of the equitable and legal estates which can be united at the option of the cestui que trust. (Woolley v. Preston, 82 Ky., 415.) Nor is it to be confounded with those trusts which are created upon a declared condition which has passed away, the reason ceasing, the trust also ceasing. Such, for instance, a trust established for the benefit of a married woman, and she becomes discoverd. In that case the trust will cease to exist when the declared disability ceases. (Thomas v. Harkness, 18 Bush, 23.)

The case at bar presents an active trust, where the trustee has the sole management and control of the estate, and the question involved is whether evidence aliunde can be introduced to establish for a testator a motive for his action, when he has expressed none in his will, and where his language is perfectly plain and unambiguous. This we hold can not be done, and Webster v. Bush is no longer to be regarded as authority. It seems to us a safer rule to leave intact this trust, the result of loving foresight reaching into the future to shield the object of its solicitude after the heart which it inspired has ceased to beat, than to subject it to the vicissitude of a judicial inquiry, based upon the careless opinions of witnesses as to the sufficient restoration of the beneficiary's mind to warrant the nullification of the will of the donor.

The judgment dismissing the petition is affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

VOL. 27.

MARCH 1, 1905.

No. 3.

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. LOUISVILLE SCHOOL BOARD.

(Filed January 27, 1905.)

1. City taxes—Distribution—Interest on delinquent taxes—While Kentucky Statutes, section 2981, provides that the various named subdivisions of the city government, including the schools, shall receive their proportionate part of the tax bill after it is collected, there is no provision which in terms imports that they shall receive any part of the interest accruing on delinquent taxes. Each must receive that which the statute gives it, but they have no right to any part of the interest on the delinquency in the absence of an express provision of the law governing the matter.

2. Contemporaneous construction—The contemporaneous construction of legislation for a long period of time by those charged with its enforcement is highly persuasive of the correctness of that interpretation, and the city council having acted upon this construction of the statute for a long period of years, illustrates the necessity of the courts giving great weight to such contemporaneous construction of the statute.

Henry L. Stone for appellant.

Randolph H. Blain for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellee, the Louisville School Board, against the city of Louisville to recover what it claims to be its share of the interest collected by the city on delinquent taxes.

Section 2981 of the Kentucky Statutes requires that the levy ordinance for each year shall be subdivided as follows: "A levy for schools, a levy for the sinking fund, a levy for police purposes, a levy for the fire department, a levy for street and sewer cleaning, a levy for sprinkling streets, a levy for reconstructing streets, a levy for street repairs, a levy for construction and repairs of sewers, a levy for the house of reform, a levy for charitable institutions, a levy for parks, a levy for library purposes, and a levy for general purposes and a deficit tax. The general council shall cause the foregoing levies to be made for the purpose stated by an ordinance fixing the tax rate each year."

Section 2998, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows: "All tax bills uncollected in whole or in part, and which remain in the hands of the tax receiver on the first day of May succeeding the date on which they were listed with him for collection, against any person (not under the disability of infancy, coverture or of unsound mind) owning property in his own right, together with interest at the rate of one-half of one per cent. for every month or fraction of a month from date, shall be deemed a debt from such person to said city, arising as by contract, and may be enforced as such by all remedies given for the recovery of debt in any court of the Commonwealth otherwise competent for that purpose, and those bills assessed against an administrator, executor or trustee shall be a charge against the whole succession of trust estates, and may be enforced accordingly, aside, in either case, from the other remedies hereinafter given. The above rate of interest shall prevail until the tax bills are merged in a judgment."

Section 3001 provides that where the amount of the warrant for the delinquent tax is more than $300 a penalty shall be imposed of five per cent. on the first $300, and one per cent. on the residue, and section 3004: "The penalty provided for herein shall go to the tax receiver for the benefit of the city."

The contention of the school board is that the interest is a part of the tax, and, when collected by the city, the same proportion should be paid to appellee as is due of the principal. On the part of the city it is insisted that the interest is not a part of the tax, and that under the provisions of the levy ordinance it is only required to pay over to each department of the government, for whose benefit the annual levy is subdivided, its proportionate part of the principal of each tax bill collected; and it is pointed out that the city is put to great expense in collecting delinquent taxes, no part of which is borne by the various departments of government which are beneficiaries of the levy; that it is more than probable that the expense of collection equals the interest received; that all of this expense necessarily falls upon the general fund, and, therefore, it is but just that the interest and penalty should be passed to that fund to cover the expense of collection.

The city and its various departments of government are not presumed to deal with each other at arm's length as debtor and creditor; whatever they need for their annual support it gives, varying the per cent. of the levy coming to each in accordance with its necessity. On the part of the school board great weight is given the provision of section 3004, that "the penalty provided for herein shall go to the tax receiver for the benefit of the city." This, it is said, indicates that the interest is to follow the principal, the affirmative provision, that the penalty should go to the city, negating the idea that the interest also is to go to it. And on the surface of the statute there is some force in this contention; but it is overlooked that in the original tax law of the city of Louisville, enacted in 1884, which was substantially the same as the tax law now provided for cities of the first class, that which is now called a penalty was then called a commission, and went to the tax receiver for his own benefit. The original act on the subject in hand is as follows: "Where the warrant calls for more than $300 it shall allow ve per cent. commission on the first $800, and only one per cent. on the residue. * * * For issuing each warrant he (the clerk) shall be paid 10 cents by the city, and the commission provided for shall, when collected, go to the receiver of city taxes." (City Code, 779.)

It will be observed that this is the language of the present law, except that "penalty" takes the place of "commission," and the city, instead of the officer, receives the money.

Afterwards the law as to the remuneration of the receiver of taxes was changed, he being placed upon a salary, and then, that there might be no doubt on the subject as to who should receive the penalty, as between the city and the officer, the name of the city as recipient was substituted for that of the officer. But then, as now, the interest of one half of one per cent. for every month, or fraction thereof, was claimed and kept by the city. The specific enactment, that the city is to get the penalty, was not placed in the law to draw a distinction between its right thereto and its right to the interest, but was for the purpose of showing who is entitled to the penalty, as between the officer collecting the money and the city for whom he acts.

It is further pointed out by the school board that the statute changes the old rule that taxes do not bear interest, and that by section 2998 uncollected tax bills shall be deemed a debt, and bear interest at the rate of one-half of one per cent. for each month and fraction thereof. But this statute only accentuates the weakness of appellee's contention. The provision is that all delinquent tax bills "shall be deemed a debt from such persons (the taxpayers) to said city." * * * It will be observed that this language does not import that it is a debt due in part to the various departments of the municipal government for which the tax levy is made, but it is deemed a debt due to the city, and naturally the interest on the debt goes to the creditor. The law provides that the various named subdivisions of the municipal government shall receive their proportionate part of the tax bill after it is collected; but there is no provision which, in terms, imports that they shall receive any part of the interest accruing on delinquent taxes. Each must receive that which the statute gives it, but they have no right to any part of the interest arising from the delinquency, in the absence of an express provision of the law governing the matter.

Strictly speaking, the appellee is not a department of the municipal government, but is an independent corporation having in charge the education of the youth of the city of Louisville, and that city is one of the school districts of the State; but in dividing the tax levy it is classed along with the departments of the municipal government, and no substantial difference can be pointed out between its right to the interest in question and that of the board of park commissioners, the commissioners of charity, or the trustees of the public library. We are of opinion that on the face of the statute the claim of the school board is without foundation; but if we were less certain of the soundness of this conclusion, we would be controlled by the long and uniform construction given the law by all the departments of the municipal government having the matter in charge. As said before, the fiscal law of cities of the first class, as it is now contained in the statute, was enacted in 1884. From that time until this, without question or doubt as to its correctness, all of the interest arising on delinquent tax bills has been retained by the city, and passed to its general fund, while that part of the principal due appellee has been paid over to it as by law required.

The learned lawyer who drew the original act was elected assistant city attorney for the purpose of properly enforcing it. The learned counsel who now represents the school board then represented it, and neither he nor the draftsman of the act ever had any doubt of the correctness of the original interpretation of the law on the question at bar. With this interpretation before them, the general assembly re-enacted the act of 1884 in the charter of cities of the first class, thus adopting the original language with regard to the interest on delinquent taxes, with the practical construction given to it by the officers having its enforcement in charge. The contemporaneous construction of legislation, covering a long period of time, by those charged with its enforcement is highly persuasive of the correctness of that interpretation. Especially is this true when, as above stated, that interpretation has received the seal of approval from the legislature to the re-adoption of the act without change, after the construction has been given. (Fuqua v. The Auditor, ante, 46; Auditor v. Cain, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1188; City of Louisville v. Louisville Water Co., 105 Ky., 754.)

The case at bar fully illustrates the necessity of the court's giving great weight to the contemporaneous construction of such statutes as that under discussion. For a long period of years the city has acted upon this construction, the council has made the various levies for the consecutive years since 1884, based upon its correctness and the money that it would produce, for the support of the several departments of the city government. Each year they have decreased the amount of the levy for the general expense fund for the reason that it receives accretions from the interest on delinquent taxes. All of the annual fiscal budgets for many years past have been based upon this construction, and now, after the lapse of this long period of time, we are asked to go back and uproot all that has been done in this matter, and to affirm a judgment against the city in favor of appellee for the aggregate sum of $28,450.88, that being the amount of the interest due to appellee, on its construction of the law, for the period of five years next before the institution of this action, its claim beyond that time being barred by the statute of limitation.

We are unable to adopt this view of the statute, and for the reasons given the judgment is reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

SILVA, FOR, &c. v. CITY OF NEWPORT.

(Filed January 31, 1905.)

Ordinances—Relating to more than one subject—Validity—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 8059, part of the charter of cities of the second class, providing that "no ordinance shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title," an ordinance passed by the council of the city of Newport for the furnishing of the city with light, heat and power, by means of either gas, hot water or steam, relates to at least three subjects, and is, therefore, invalid.

Matt Herald and L. J. Crawford for appellants.

Jas. T. Thornton for city of Newport.

Harvey Meyers for himself and associate bidders.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted in the Campbell Circuit Court to test the validity of an ordinance of Newport, a city of the second class. So much of the ordinance as we deem essential to the decision of the question before us is as follows:

"ORDINANCE FOR LIGHT FRANCHISE IN NEWPORT.

"An ordinance providing for the letting at public bidding of the franchises, rights and privileges of entering in and upon the streets and public ways of and in the city of Newport, Ky., for the purpose of laying, maintaining and operating mains and pipes, with all necessary appendages, and therefrom to supply the city of Newport and its consumers with light, heat, fuel and power, by means of either gas alone, or by means of gas and hot water, or by means of gas and steam, or by means of gas, hot water and steam, for a term of twenty years from the acceptance of the successful bid therefor, and granting such franchise, rights and privileges to the highest bidder.

"Be it ordained by the general council of the city of Newport, Ky."

We do not recall ever having seen an ordinance framed precisely like the above. It will be observed that in the first line it is entitled "Ordinance for light franchise in Newport," and then follows, at the place usually set apart for the preamble (where there is one), what is nothing more nor less than a second, or more extended title, containing the purposes of the proposed ordinance. This is not a preamble, for that is a history or recitation of the necessity for the legislation in question. Bouvier defines it as follows: "It (preamble) is no more than a recital of some inconvenience, which does not exclude any others for which a remedy is given by the enacting part of the statute."

We conclude that all above "Be it ordained by the general council of Newport, Ky.," constitutes the title of the ordinance. It is apparent that the title relates to at least three subjects, to wit, the furnishing of the city with light, heat and power, by means either of gas, hot water or steam, or a combination of these. Here are three separate and distinct franchises provided for in one ordinance.

Section 3059 of the Kentucky Statutes (charter of cities of the second class) provides, among other things, that "no ordinance shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." As the title and ordinance under consideration contain more than one subject, the whole is void. (Hind v. Rice, 10 Bush, 528.)

The demurrer to the petition should have been overruled.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

MOSELEY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed January 31, 1905—Not to be reported.)

In this case a father and his two sons were jointly indicted for a conspiracy to kill E. L. Hart, and in separate paragraphs each of the three is charged with the murder of Hart, and the other two with aiding the one who did the killing. A separate trial was had as to Kelsie.

1. The evidence shows a previous preparation by all three of the defendants for an expected hostile meeting with Hart, who was a vicious and desperate man, and who was attempting to prevent them from hauling off their own timber which he claimed, and had threatened to kill them if they moved it. On the day of the tragedy the defendants, in going with wagons after their timber, met Hart in the road on horseback, with his gun across his lap. After passing a few words, on a slight motion of Hart with his gun, one of the sons drew his pistol and shot Hart in the side, when the other two defendants opened fire also, and riddled Hart's back with bullets, of which he died in a few hours. It afterwards appeared that Hart's "Winchester" had eight or ten loads in the magazine, but none in the barrel. Held—That while a conspiracy was not proven, the evidence, if true, authorized the conviction of the defendant for manslaughter. Although the defendants were amply warranted in believing they stood in great danger if they persisted in taking out their timber, they were not justified in killing Hart wherever and whenever they met him, and it was for the jury to say how far under the evidence they were justified in shooting him as they did.

2. The defendant was not prejudiced by the fact that the court instructed the jury under the conspiracy count, as he was only found guilty of voluntary manslaughter.

3. The fact that the trial court ordered a jury summoned from an adjoining county to try the case was not error, and, moreover, this court is without jurisdiction to review the decision of the trial court in the matter of selecting the jury, under Criminal Code, section 281.

B. B. Golden, John C. Eversole, L. D. Lewis and Lewis & Calvert for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Wiley Moseley, Kelsie Moseley and Robert Moseley were jointly indicted by the grand jury of Leslie county, charged with the murder of E. L. Hart. The indictment contains several paragraphs, in the first of which the three defendants are charged with a conspiracy to murder Hart, in pursuance of which he was afterwards shot and killed. The second charges them jointly with his murder, and the third, fourth and fifth charge each of them with aiding and abetting the other two in the murder. Separate trials were had, that of Kelsie resulting in his being found guilty, and sentenced to a term of twenty-one years in the penitentiary. Of this he is now complaining. The facts are these: Wiley Moseley is the father of Kelsie and Robert. He had a quarrel with Hart as to the ownership of certain standing timber in the neighborhood where they lived. There seems to be no doubt that Moseley had a valid title to the timber, and that Hart knew his own claim was without foundation, but persisted in asserting it nevertheless. He had forbidden Wiley Moseley to cut or haul timber from the place, and threatened to kill him if he persisted in so doing. He is shown by the record to have been a man of ferocious temper, and wild and reckless courage, anxious at all times for a personal altercation, regardless of consequences, and not to be influenced for good either by friend or foe. The Moseleys, and especially Wiley, showed every disposition to avoid trouble with him that was consistent with a fixed determination to cut and haul the timber in dispute at all hazards. Wiley sent messengers to Hart on several occasions to influence him from his avowed intention of preventing him (Moseley) by force from cutting and hauling the timber. Among these was the father-in-law and the father of the dead man. All overtures were without avail, and there is no doubt in our minds that Hart was simply biding his time, and watching for a favorable opportunity to do violence to Wiley Moseley, and that he had been deterred from this by the fact that the father never went after the timber unaccompanied by his sons, and generally one or two of his friends in addition.

On the day before the homicide Hart, with Winchester in hand, abused Wiley Moseley, calling him the vilest of names, and on that night the Moseleys, intending the next day to again go for timber, made preparations to protect themselves from violence. One of the boys loaded his double-barreled shotgun with bullets, the other prepared his Winchester, and on the morning of the 11th of November, 1902, the father, armed with a pistol, his two sons armed as before stated, accompanied by Russell Wooten and William Oliver, with several yoke of cattle, started into the woods to bring out timber. While on their way, in a narrow road, they met Hart, who was on horseback, astride a "turn" of corn, with a Winchester across his lap. Russell Wooten was in front, and turned the cattle out of the road to pass Hart. When he reached the side of the latter he stopped to talk with him a moment. While so doing the two Moseley boys passed by without speaking, and last of all Wiley Moseley came up.

The evidence is not quite clear as to who opened the conversation as between Wiley Moseley and Hart Oliver and Wooten stating that the first they heard was Wiley Moseley say "I don't know, Lon (familiar name), whether I would know those logs if I saw them," to which Hart responded, "I know them," and made a slight motion with his Winchester, whereupon Wiley Moseley quickly drew his revolver, and fired twice, shooting Hart in the side. At this point of the affray the horse of the latter commenced to move in a trot down the road, whereupon the Moseleys opened a fusillade with pistol, shotgun and rifle, riddling Hart's back with bullets. After going some thirty or forty yards he fell from his horse, and died in about five hours. The Moseleys all testify that Hart attempted first to shoot Wiley, who fired in self-defense. The boys claimed that they shot in defense of their father, but their shots all entered the back of the deceased, and his horse was trotting off with him when they fired.

The evidence shows that while Hart's Winchester had eight or ten loads in the magazine, there was neither cartridge nor shell in the barrel; the gun had not been recently fired, an examination showing rust in the barrel rather than the black of recently exploded powder. The first error urged by the appellant is that the judge directed the sheriff to summon the jury from an adjoining county. Section 194 of the Criminal Code is as follows: "If the judge of the court be satisfied, after having made a fair effort, in good faith, for that purpose, that, from any cause, it will be impracticable to obtain a jury free of bias in the county wherein the prosecution is pending, he shall be authorized to order the sheriff to summon a sufficient number of qualified jurors from some adjoining county in which the judge shall believe there is the greatest probability of obtaining impartial jurors, and from those so summoned the jury shall be formed."

It is insisted, first, that this section is in violation of that part of section 11 of the Constitution which guarantees to a defendant a "speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage;" and if this be not sound, it is urged that the judge violated the section of the Code by not, in good faith, attempting to obtain an impartial jury in the county where the case was tried. Neither of these propositions can be maintained. The validity of section 194 has been upheld by this court in Brown v. Commonwealth, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1552; Massey v. Commonwealth, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 367, and Roberts v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky., 502. We will conclusively presume, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that the court followed the law in selecting the jury. (Massey v. Commonwealth, supra.) Moreover, we are without jurisdiction to review the decision of the trial court in the matter of the selection of the jury. (Criminal Code, section 281.)

We are not able to see our way clear to reverse this case on the facts. There was evidence which, if true, authorized the conviction; and although the Moseleys were amply warranted in believing they stood in great danger from Hart if they persisted in taking out the timber in dispute, they were not justified in killing him wherever and whenever they met him; and it was for the jury to say how far, under the evidence, they were justified in shooting him as they did. Under our rule, if there be any evidence at all to support verdicts in criminal cases, we decline to revise them. It is very doubtful that the court was authorized to instruct on the conspiracy count, the only evidence on this subject being the preparation of the Moseleys to protect themselves from an unlawful and deadly assault at the hands of Hart while prosecuting their lawful right to take their own property. But the jury did not find the appellant guilty of conspiracy, as is shown by their verdict; they only found him guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and, therefore, his substantial rights were not prejudiced by the instruction as to conspiracy. The instructions given on the other counts are not complained of, and correctly embody the law of the case. We shall not notice specifically any of the various exceptions to the competency and relevancy of the testimony adduced upon the trial, deeming it sufficient to say that the trial judge, in ruling upon these questions, fully protected the rights of the accused, and that, upon the whole case, he had a fair and impartial trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOSKINS' ADM'R V. BROWN, &O.

(Filed January 31, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Instructions—Where upon motion and grounds for a new trial no complaint was made of instructions given by the court, they will be regarded upon appeal as the correct exposition of the law.

2. Payments—Application of—While there are rules of law that determine the application of payments of debtor and creditor, it may be a question of fact to be found by the jury as to the debt upon which the payment was made. It is the business of the court to direct the jury how the payment should be applied upon a state of facts which it may find to exist.

Lane & Harrison for appellant.

Caruth, Chatterson & Blitz for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellees were lumber dealers, and the evidence in the record tends to show that R. H. Hoskins was a customer of appellees, and that at his instance they kept three separate accounts with him—one in his own name, one known as the school account, and the other in the name of his son, J. C. Hoskins. The appellees claim that all the lumber was purchased by R. H. Hoskins on his own account, but for his convenience the accounts were kept separate. On a certain date Hoskins paid appellees $450. It is claimed by the appellant that it was paid on the school account. This was denied by appellees. The real question involved on the trial was whether the $450 had been properly credited. The court gave instructions to the jury submitting the questions raised by the pleading and evidence.

The court must regard these instructions as being the correct exposition of the law, because in the grounds for a new trial no complaint was made as to the instructions given by the court. The ground for a new trial, that the verdict is contrary to law, is too vague and indefinite to be considered. (Jones v. Woche, 90 Ky., 231.)

Another ground for a new trial is that the court admitted evidence on the question as to the application of the payment of the $450. This certainly was not error, because that was the real question at issue. It is insisted that the application of a payment is a question of law to be determined by the court, not by the jury. On this question Nuttal v. Brannon, 5 Bush, 19, is cited. There are rules of law that determine the application of payments of debtor to creditor. It, however, may be a question of fact to be found by the jury as to the debt upon which the payment was made. It is the business of the court to direct the jury how the payments should be applied upon a state of facts which it may find to exist. The ruling of the court was criticized in Nuttal v. Brannon, because the court allowed the jury to apply the payment as it pleased in the absence of evidence as to the debt upon which it was paid.

The judgment is affirmed.

LAWSON v. LIGHTFOOT, &c.

(Filed February 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Specific performance—Alienation—Appellees were devised certain real estate by the will of Lightfoot. To the widow the devise was for life and the daughters were devised the remainder, and by another clause of the will it was provided that the same should not be sold for any purpose until the death of his wife. Held—That appellant, who had bought the land, but who, when tendered a deed refused to accept it, denying the right of appellees to convey, could not be compelled to perform the contract, the accepted doctrine in this State being that restraints upon alienation may be imposed for a limited length of time. The manifest intention of the testator was to preserve the property intact during the life of his wife, and she being beyond middle life when the will was probated, her expectancy was not so great as to render the restriction placed upon the devisees unreasonable.

A. S. Kendall for appellant.

W. G. Dearing and Robert L. Greene for appellees.

Appeal from Fleming Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellees, Sarah F. Lightfoot, Ida Lightfoot and Anna Grace Sherrill, the first being the widow and the last two daughters of R. A. Lightfoot, deceased, sold to the appellant, John A. Lawson, for the sum of $2,000, a house and lot situated on Main and Cross streets in Flemingsburg, this State, and to consummate the sale tendered to the purchaser a proper deed of general warranty, conveying to him the house and lot in question, which deed he refused to accept upon the ground that it would not invest him with good title to the property.

Because of appellant's refusal to accept the deed and to pay the agreed consideration for the property this suit was brought against him by appellees for a specific performance of the contract. The answer of appellant admits the contract for the purchase of the house and lot as alleged in the petition, but denies the appellees' right to sell and convey the same during the life of appellee, Sarah Lightfoot, and the issue made by this denial having been decided by the lower court upon demurrer to the answer adversely to the appellant's contention, he asks of this court a further consideration of the question involved. The real estate in question with other real estate was devised by the will of R. A. Lightfoot to his widow for life, with remainder to his two daughters named above, under the following restriction as to the alienation of that in controversy: "And in order to secure to my said two daughters, Ida and Anna Grace, my said office property, it is my will and desire that the same shall not be sold for any purpose whatever until the death of my said wife."

As bearing upon the powers of the testator's wife and executrix of his will to sell the real estate devised, we find this further provision in the will: "I hereby invest my said wife with full power and authority to sell, or otherwise dispose of, any of my real estate, except the said office property, that may be necessary for the purposes recited in this item, conferring hereby full power upon my said wife to convey the same in her own name by title in fee simple."

It must be conceded that the great weight of authority outside of Kentucky is to the effect that where the fee-simple title to real estate passes under a deed or will, any restraint attempted to be imposed by the instrument upon its alienation by the grantee, or devisee, is to be treated as void, and such is clearly the rule announced by Mr. Gray in his excellent work on "Restraints of Alienation." But the contrary view has been adopted by this court in repeated decisions, beginning with Stewart, & Co. v. Brady, 8 Bush, 623, and ending with Wallace, & Co. v. Smith, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 189. (Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 868; Rice v. Hall, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 814; Kean v. Kean, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 956; Johnson v. Dumeyer, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2243.)

In other words, the accepted doctrine in this State is that restraints upon alienation may be imposed for a reasonable period. This court has, however, never fixed a limit to such restraint, but in Stewart v. Brady, supra, it was held that a devise of land to the testator's daughter, with the limitation that it should not be disposed of by her until she became thirty-five years of age, was reasonable, and in Kean v. Kean, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 956, it was held that a restriction accompanying a devise of real estate to a son of the testator that he should not have the power to dispose of it until he became twenty-eight years of age, was good. If such a restriction may be imposed for the periods indicated by the cases supra, why may it not endure for a longer time, or, as contemplated by the testator in this case, during the life of his widow, the tenant for life of the real estate, the alienation of which is attempted to be restricted.

The manifest intention of the testator, R. A. Lightfoot, was to preserve the property intact during the life of the widow, and until it should be taken in possession by the daughters. The widow was beyond middle life when the will was probated, so after all her life expectancy was not then so great as to render unreasonable the restriction placed by the testator upon the right of the devisees to dispose of the property. After a careful consideration by the whole court of the question presented by the record, it is deemed safer to adhere to the former decisions of the court thereon, though this conclusion has not been reached without misgiving as to its correctness upon the part of a minority of the court, the writer of this opinion being of that minority. It may not, however, be improper to suggest that, notwithstanding the restriction imposed by the will upon the power of the devisees to dispose of the real estate in question, if the deed of general warranty tendered appellant by them should be accepted, they probably could not thereafter recover the property, at any rate they could not do so without being made to account upon their warranty for the consideration received by them, with interest.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with the opinion.

Whole court sitting.

WARNER V. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictment for murder—Venue—On the trial of defendant for murder, where the trial was held in the city of Louisville and the evidence showed the offense was committed at the Louisville & Nashville railroad depot, on the corner of Tenth and Broadway streets, in said city, the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to find that the offense was committed in Jefferson county.

2. Attorney for defendant—Reading extract from book—It was not error in the court to refuse to allow defendant's attorney, during his argument to the jury, to read to the jury an extract from "a book on the Guiteau trial," there being no avowal as to what his counsel intended to read from the book.

8. Previous threats—Failure of court to instruct as to effect—The court did not err in failing to instruct or admonish the jury that they should consider evidence of previous threats made by the defendant only for the purpose of showing the motive or state of defendant's mind at the time of the killing.

4. Voluntary manslaughter—Where the defendant relied upon insanity as his defense and there was no evidence tending to show any angry altercation between defendant and the deceased at the time of the killing, or that deceased said or did anything tending to insult or assault defendant, the court did not err in failing on the trial to give the jury an instruction on voluntary manslaughter.

Suter & Solinger for appellant.

N. B. Hays, Loraine B. Mix and Aaron Kohn for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant, George B. Warner, prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court upon a verdict of guilty found against him by a jury, fixing his punishment at death for the crime of murder. The facts proven, as they appear in the record, are in substance as follows: Pulaski Leeds was superintendent of machinery of the L. & N. R. R. Co.; was about sixty years of age, and occupied an office in the depot building of the railroad company at the corner of Tenth and Broadway, in the city of Louisville, Ky., where he was killed by appellant.

The appellant was about forty-one years old; his occupation was that of an electrician, which business he had followed since his maturity. Before engaging in work for the L. & N. R. R. Co. he had for several years followed his occupation in Logansport, Ind., and before leaving there he obtained a letter of recommendation, signed by the mayor, several councilmen, contractors and other prominent people of that city. With this letter he went to Louisville, and was employed by the L. & N. R. R. Co., being given a position at New Decatur, Ala. There he worked at his calling until about June 19, 1908, when for some reason, not explained, he was discharged. The appellant and one or two of the Commonwealth witnesses indicate that his discharge was by reason of his expression of sympathy for some laborers who were discharged from the shops at that place. The proof also tends to show that appellant received information that the L. & N. R. R. Co. had placed his name upon the "black list," or "unfair" or "debarred list."

Appellant appeared at first to think that Messrs. Swoyer and Dupont, two of the officials of the company, were responsible for his discharge, and the placing of his name upon this list. Afterward it appears that he included Leeds. Several witnesses from Decatur testified that appellant at different times said that he would go to Louisville and would fix somebody before he got through with the matter," and before his departure for Louisville pulled a pistol from his pocket and said: "You see this? Well, you will hear from this." He also said: "I am going up there to Louisville. I have been discharged, and what I will do to that G—d—s— of a b— will be a plenty."

In the same conversation Leeds' name was mentioned as the party referred to. After leaving Decatur appellant stated he went to Nashville, Evansville, and three or four other places, seeking employment, and failed for the reason he did not have a letter of recommendation. He then went to Louisville, arriving there on Saturday morning, July 4. He stated that he saw Mr. Leeds on the street, and asked for a letter of recommendation; that Leeds told him that it was against the rules of the company to give such a letter, but if he would find some place in his line and come to him, he would aid him all he could. Appellant remained in the city until Monday morning, when the killing occurred. The Commonwealth proved that on Monday morning appellant purchased the pistol with which he killed Leeds; that he went to the depot at Tenth and Broadway, arriving there about 8 o'clock; asked the janitor the situation of Leeds' office; whether he was in, and when was the best time to find him in his office alone. He took his seat in the waiting room, and remained there until after the hour of eleven, when he went upstairs and into Mr. Leeds' office. When appellant entered the office Leeds was at his desk, writing. It appears that he did not notice appellant enter. Leeds after a minute or two ceased to write, turned his head, and saw and spoke to appellant, who had taken a seat near him, and said to him: "You are the engineer from Henderson?" Appellant answered: "No, I am the electrician from Decatur." Some few words passed between them in rather a low tone, which were not noticed or heard by those present. Then appellant said to Leeds: "I have seen Mr. Swoyer, and he says you are responsible." Mr. Leeds said: "I will assume the responsibility then; but wait until Mr. Swoyer returns; he will return in a few days." Appellant then asked Mr. Leeds to give him a letter of recommendation. Mr. Leeds explained to him that it was against the policy of the company to give such letters, but that if he would make application for a position, and refer the party to him he would do the best he could for him.

Appellant then said to Leeds: "Give me a letter, and state in it why I was discharged." Leeds answered, and said: "I have told you I could not give you a letter, and probably I don't know why you were discharged." Appellant then drew a pistol, and arising from his chair, said: "Mr. Leeds, by G—, you will give me that letter before I leave here," and as he uttered the word "here" he shot Mr. Leeds in the breast, then leaned over him and shot him in the face, when he turned the weapon upon himself, fired, and, seriously wounded, sat back in the chair. Mr. Leeds died within a few days from the effect of his wounds. Appellant was removed to a hospital, remaining there until he was sufficiently recovered to be confined in jail. It appears from the proof that during their conversation Leeds did not speak an unkind word to appellant, and made no movement or demonstration of any kind to assault or harm appellant in any manner.

Appellant testified, and denied all threats proven by the Commonwealth; stated that Leeds was his friend; admitted purchasing the pistol on the morning of the killing; stated that he had carried a pistol for twenty five years; that he had accidentally left his pistol on the steamboat on Saturday morning, July 4, the day of his arrival in the city of Louisville. He gave a complete and intelligent history of his life from prior to his arrival at the age of maturity until to within a few minutes of the time of the killing. He designated the place where he slept on the night of the 4th and 5th, where he took his meals, the places he visited in the city from the time of his arrival to the hour or within a few minutes of the killing. He stated that his arrival at the depot was later in the morning by an hour or two than that fixed by the Commonwealth witnesses. He admitted asking the porter where Mr. Leeds' office was, and whether he was in, but denied having asked him when was the best time to find him alone. He stated that he did not remain in the waiting room more than thirty or forty-five minutes before he started to Leeds' office; that while in the waiting room he concluded to go to Leeds, and endeavor to get his Logansport letter of recommendation, which he had left with some employe there, upon his entering the service of the L. & N. R. R. Co.; that he started up the stairway, but before he arrived at Mr. Leeds' office he lost consciousness; did not remember seeing Leeds upon that occasion; did not know that he had shot Leeds or himself until several days afterwards. Appellant also stated that several of his relations had been insane. He introduced two or three physicians as experts who gave it as their opinion that appellant was insane at the time he killed Leeds. The Commonwealth introduced about the same number who testified that, in their opinion, appellant was sane at the time of the homicide.

It appears from the record that the real defense interposed by appellant was insanity. Upon this question the court was lenient to appellant, and permitted all evidence offered by him to go to the jury, and the court's instructions upon this issue were correct. Appellant filed many reasons and grounds for a new trial. But his counsel in their oral argument and briefs only urge four reasons why the judgment of conviction should be reversed:

1st. They contend that it was not proven that appellant's alleged crime was committed in Jefferson county.

2d. That during the argument of one of appellant's counsel to the jury he proposed to read to the jury an extract from a book relating to the Guiteau case, to which the Commonwealth objected, and the court refused to allow him to read the extract.

3d. There was evidence admitted of previous threats made by the accused some days prior to the killing, and appellant contends that the court erred to his prejudice in failing to admonish the jury that they must consider such evidence of threats only for the purpose of showing the motive or state of mind of the accused at the time of the killing.

4th. That the court erred in failing to give the whole law of the case to the jury, and especially erred in failing to give an instruction on voluntary manslaughter.

With reference to appellant's contention that the crime was not proven to have been committed in Jefferson county, it is sufficient to say that while the proof did not show that fact in the use of the words "Jefferson county," yet there was an abundance of proof showing that fact. It was proven by many witnesses that the shooting occurred at the Union Depot of the L. & N. R. R. Co., at Tenth and Broadway, in the city of Louisville, where the trial was had, and the record shows that the trial took place in Louisville, Jefferson county. The appellant fixed the venue in his testimony. He stated that he arrived in the city of Louisville and remained until Monday morning, when he took a street car to the depot at Tenth and Broadway, showing that the depot, the scene of the killing, was in the city of Louisville, and he was asked also when on the witness stand with reference to the situation of certain places he had named as having visited on the day prior to and morning of the killing, he answered: "I can not tell. I am not much acquainted in this city."

In the case of Commonwealth v. Patterson, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 167, the trial was had in Springfield, Washington county. The prosecuting witness stated that his watch was stolen in "Springfield," but did not state the county. This court, in that case, said: "The courts and juries have the right to take cognizance of public cities and towns within their jurisdiction, without proof allunde of the particular county in which they are situated; they are presumed to have knowledge of that fact; for instance, the court and jury are presumed to know that Springfield is the county seat of Washington county, and that it is situated in that county." (Hays v. Commonwealth, 12 Ky. Law Rep., 611; Combs v. Commonwealth, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 659.)

The court instructed the jury that before they could convict appellant they must believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the offense was committed in Jefferson county, before the finding of the indictment, and we are of the opinion that the jury was authorized, under the facts proven, to find that the offense was committed in the county of Jefferson. The second ground relied on is the refusal of the court to permit the attorney for appellant during his argument to read an extract from a "book on the Guiteau trial" to the jury. We are of the opinion that the court did not err in this. (18 Ky. Law Rep., 195; 8 Ky. Law Rep., 515; 4 Ky. Law Rep., 853; 111 Ky., 458.) Besides, this could not have availed appellant on this appeal for the reason there was no avowal made as to what his counsel intended to read from the book, and this court can not say that appellant was prejudiced in any way by the court's refusal to allow the extract to be read to the jury.

We are of the opinion that the court did not err in failing to admonish or instruct the jury that they should consider evidence of previous threats made by appellant, only for the purpose of showing the motive or state of appellant's mind at the time of the killing. The jury could not have misunderstood the purpose of the proof of threats as they appear in this case. (Brooks v. Commonwealth, 100 Ky., 194; Trusty v. Commonwealth, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 706; Duncan v. Commonwealth, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 620.)

It is only when the threats proven may relate not only to the question of malice or motive, but to some other fact not germane to the subject of inquiry, that the court should admonish or instruct the jury as to their consideration of evidence of previous threats. Such were the facts in the cases of Thacker v. Commonwealth, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1585, and Bess v. Commonwealth, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1091.

The fourth and last ground relied upon for a reversal is that the court should have given an instruction of voluntary manslaughter. This ground is urged by appellant's counsel upon the idea that in the conversation between appellant and Leeds, immediately prior to the shooting, there were some words passed between them, which the three or four witnesses present did not notice or understand, and counsel for appellant, therefore, contends that it was possible that something was said by Leeds to appellant that might have aroused sudden heat and passion.

We can not accept this view of the matter, and for reasons that all the witnesses present say that their conversation was in a low and ordinary tone of voice; that there was no angry altercation between them indicating any feeling or passion. There was not the slightest evidence that Leeds said anything to appellant to insult him, or made any move or motion indicating an intention to assault or injure him in any manner. There was nothing whatever in the words, acts or conduct of Leeds upon that occasion to arouse the passions of appellant in the slightest degree. There was a total absence of evidence on this point, and we are of the opinion that appellant was not entitled to such an instruction. The proof, as it appears from this record, shows that appellant was either guilty of murder or he was insane. As stated, his real defense was that of insanity. The court submitted this question to the jury by proper instructions, and the jury found he was sane. The proof clearly shows that he had made threats against Leeds prior to the day of the killing; that on that morning he purchased a pistol, went to his office, and after a few words, and without any provocation, fired the fatal shots. Under these circumstances the jury had the right to conclude that he was guilty of murder.

If it was true that some officials there had his letter of recommendation, received from Logansport, Ind., it should have been delivered to him, but their failure to do so did not authorize him to kill Leeds, or any one. Neither did he have the right to kill Leeds, or any one in the employ of the L. & N. R. R. Co., for placing his name upon the "black," "unfair," or "debarred list," even if his name was so placed there. If he was damaged thereby, his remedy was by an action for damages.

The judgment is affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

SHADE'S ADM'R v. THE COVINGTON-CINCINNATI ELEVATED RAILROAD AND TRANSFER AND BRIDGE CO.

(Filed February 1, 1905.)

1. Deceased persons—Declarations to physician—Competency—Declarations by a person, since deceased, and who was suffering from a physical injury, made to her physician, as to anything it was necessary for him to know in order to treat her injuries intelligently, are competent to be given in evidence as part of the res gestæ.

2. Same—If the patient is suffering it is necessary for the physician to know where the pain is and its character; also how the injury was inflicted, whether by a blow on the head or how she was otherwise hurt; but it was wholly immaterial to his understanding of the case whether she fell on a bridge or on ice, or elsewhere, and statements by her to her physician as to where she fell are incompetent.

Myers & Howard for appellant.

Galvin & Galvin for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Eliza Shade was discovered on the 18th of February, 1902, on or near the northern end of appellee's bridge, injured, her leg. or one bone of it, being broken. Possibly she was otherwise hurt. She was sent in a carriage to her home in Covington, and died in a few weeks. Whether she died of the injuries received on the bridge was not proven. In this suit by her administrator against appellee, the owner of the toll bridge, to recover damages for her injury and death, the plaintiff declared upon the negligence of appellee, in suffering its bridge to be and remain in unfit condition by the accumulation of ice and snow upon the passenger footway. At the close of the evidence the court peremptorily directed a verdict for the defendant.

It is doubtful whether there was any evidence that the bridge was in an unfit condition for travel by pedestrians at the place and at the time where Mrs. Shade fell, if she fell on the bridge; that there was considerable ice and snow elsewhere and at other times on the bridge does not satisfy plaintiff's allegation, nor sustain his action. But assuming that there was at least a scintilla of evidence that the bridge was in dangerous condition throughout from the accumulation of ice and snow, negligently allowed by appellee during the whole of the day Mrs. Shade was injured, there is still a hiatus in plaintiff's case. There was no proof that she fell because of the ice and snow, or that she was herself in the exercise of due care, or that her injuries were caused by the condition of the bridge. The witness, Waring, does not at all identify Mrs. Shade as one of the persons whom he says he helped up from falls about that time. Indeed his evidence rather shows that she was not.

Plaintiff's case rested, if it can be maintained at all, upon the declaration made by Mrs. Shade to her physician some time after she had been taken to her home, that she had fallen on the ice on the C. & O. bridge (the name by which appellee's bridge is popularly called). It is contended by appellant that her declarations made to her physician in explanation of the cause of her injury, and made to him to enable him to treat it, are part of the res gestæ, and receivable in evidence as such.

"Where the bodily and mental feelings of a party are to be proved, the usual and natural expressions of such feelings, made at the time, are considered competent and original evidence in his favor. There are ills and pains of the body which are proper subjects of proof in a court of justice which can be shown in no other way. Such evidence, however, is not to be extended beyond the necessity on which the rule is founded. Anything in the nature of narration or statement is to be carefully excluded, and the testimony is to be confined strictly to such complaints, exclamations and expressions as usually and naturally accompany and furnish evidence of a present existing pain or malady." (Bacon v. Charlton, 7 Cush., 586.)

Here the party whose statement is offered to be proved was suffering from a physical injury. What she said to her physician as to the pain it then caused her, and the effect it had upon her senses, was necessary for him to know in order that he might intelligently treat the injury. Under such circumstances it is presumed that the party suffering will state truly how she is affected, as otherwise the medical man might be at a loss as to the remedies needful to her condition. The incentive for a fair statement is so great that the presumption is she will not hazard an untruth to better her financial condition, by fabricating a basis of claim against the person charged with her injury, at the expense of her permanent health, or may be of her life. For that reason the law allows the proof of what she said to her physician at the time of his examination as part of the res gestæ. What the injured party may have said to any one at the time of the injury, or so immediately after it as to be regarded part of it, as being the verbal part of a continuing occurrence, would also be admitted upon familiar grounds. What was said after the lapse of some minutes, a half hour or so in this case, to the attending physician, to aid him in determining the nature of the injury, and to prescribe a remedy or treatment, is allowed as an extension of the same rule of evidence. It rests logically upon the necessity of the case. It is matter proper to be shown, and not susceptible generally of being otherwise proven. But it must stop with the necessity for it. It was necessary for the physician to know whether the patient was suffering, and where the pain was and as to its character. It was also proper that he should know how the injury was inflicted, as upon that knowledge his treatment in part might depend. So it was competent to show that the patient said she had received a blow on her head (if she did say it), and how she was otherwise hurt. But it was wholly immaterial to the physician's understanding, what it was necessary for him to know in treating the injuries, whether she fell on appellee's bridge, or elsewhere, or that she fell on ice.

The opinion in Omberg v. U. S. Mutual Accident Ass'n, 101 Ky., 303, is relied on by appellant. In that case the patient who was suffering from an inflamed toe, the result of septic poisoning, told his physician that it was caused by a mosquito bite at the affected spot. The evidence was held to be competent on the ground that the statement was necessary, or at least proper, to enable the physician to understand the illness, and was part of the description of the wound, and inseparable from the patient's complaint with respect thereto. But the court was careful to restrict the application of the rule to statements made by the patient to the physician in the treatment of the malady, and added: "A narrative of the events attending the mishaps would not be competent." Nor was a narrative of the events attending the mishap competent in this case.

The judgment must be affirmed.

FURNISH'S ADM'R v. LILLY, &c.

(Filed February 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Deeds—Title—Separate deed by husband—A deed made by a son and heir to his undivided interest in land which had descended to him from his deceased father in which the son's wife did not join, does not divest the wife of her contingent right to dower in her husband's interest therein.

2. Deed by married woman—A deed made by a married woman of her interest in land descended to her from her deceased father, in which the husband did not join, is void, as a married woman can not alone convey her real estate.

3. "Expectancy"—The deed of an "expectancy" to land that a child may inherit from a parent, made while the parent is living, is void.

4. Sale of land—Distribution of proceeds—Accounting for money paid for void deeds—Where land is sold under decree of court, in which certain interests have been conveyed to the claimant of the land by married women by deeds in which their husbands did not join, in paying the proceeds of the sale to such married women they should be required to account to their vendee for the money he paid to them in purchasing their interest, but no interest should be charged to them and no rents charged to their vendee.

5. Limitation—Limitation can not be relied on by one holding land as a joint tenant against his cotenants.

W. A. Lee for appellant.

H. G. Botts for appellees.

Appeal from Owen Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Samuel Lilly died in Owen county in 1887, intestate, but was survived by his wife, Delilah Lilly, and nine children, namely: J. E. Lilly, M. N. Lilly, E. T. Lilly, Dudley Lilly, C. R. Lilly, Mattie Stewart, wife of A. Stewart, Ellen Lilly, wife of D. A. Lilly, Jane Baxter, wife of D. Baxter, and Ollie O'Neal, wife of George O'Neal. The widow, Delilah Lilly, contracted a second marriage with Jacob Furnish, whom she also survived, but no children were born of this marriage.

At the time of Samuel Lilly's death he and his wife jointly owned and resided upon fifty-four acres of land in Owen county, the interest of each being an undivided half in fee. Shortly after the death of Samuel Lilly his daughter, Ollie O'Neal, sold to her brother, C. R. Lilly, her interest of one-ninth in the undivided half of the fifty-four acres of land owned by their father at his death, and her "expectancy" in the undivided half of the same tract owned by their mother, Delilah Lilly, who was then living. The interest thus sold by Ollie O'Neal to C. R. Lilly was attempted to be passed by a written transfer entered on the back of an old deed from Brown to Samuel and Delilah Lilly, conveying them the fifty-four acre tract, but the transfer, though signed and acknowledged by Ollie O'Neal, was never signed or acknowledged by her husband.

Later C. R. Lilly sold to his brother, J. E. Lilly, the interest supposed to have been purchased by him of Ollie O'Neal, together with his own one-ninth interest in his father's half of the land, and his expectancy in the half owned by his mother. Thereafter J. E. Lilly purchased of his brothers, E. T. Lilly and Dudley Lilly, and of his sisters, Mattie Stewart, Ellen Lilly and Jane Baxter, their interests respectively in the half of the land left by their father, and also their "expectancy" in the half owned by their mother, and the vendor's last named executed to J. E. Lilly a deed conveying him the several interests they had sold him, and in this deed C. R. Lilly also joined to convey the two shares he had sold J. E. Lilly. The deed was acknowledged by the grantors, but was not lodged for record until about eleven years afterwards.

The grantors were all married persons at the time of the execution of the deed, but the wives of the male and the husbands of the female grantors did not join therein. Under and by virtue of this deed, and in his own right as an heir at law of Samuel Lilly, J. E. Lilly claimed to be the owner of eighth-ninths of the land in question, his brother, M. N. Lilly, never having parted with his interest therein; but if it be conceded that the deed was sufficient to pass title to all the interests owned by the grantors, it only conveyed the interests respectively of the grantors in the undivided half of the land owned by Samuel Lilly at his death, subject to the widow's right of dower therein. Not long after his purchase of the several shares of his brothers and sisters in the land J. E. Lilly sold and by deed conveyed his entire interest therein to his mother, Delilah, who continued in possession of the entire fifty-four acres until shortly before her death, when she conveyed it, by deed of general warranty, to her son, J. E. Lilly, May 28, 1902, in consideration of his undertaking to support and care for her during the remainder of her life. After her death this action was instituted by the appellant, A. Stewart, as administrator of her estate, for the ostensible purpose of settling the estate, selling the land to pay her debts, and dividing the surplus proceeds among her heirs at law. The children and heirs at law of the intestate, Delilah Furnish, except M. N. Lilly, were made parties to the action; but as he died before the action was instituted, his children were made defendants. Of the heirs at law whose interests respectively were purchased by appellee, J. E. Lilly, all but Jane Baxter and Ollie O'Neil joined in the action as plaintiffs. They were defendants, and have made no resistance to appellee's claim of ownership to the land.

The appellee, J. E. Lilly, by answer, denied the right of appellants to sell the land in controversy, and set up his claim to and ownership of the same under the sale and deed from his mother, and the prior sale and conveyance to him from his brothers and sisters. The reply denied the validity of the deed from the other heirs to appellee, and also the validity of the deed to him from his mother, and attacked the latter instrument upon the ground that it was procured by fraud and undue influence upon the part of appellee; and further, that the grantor was at the time mentally incapable of understanding its meaning and effect, all of which was controverted by appellee's rejoinder. The chancellor adjudged a sale of the land and division of the proceeds between appellee, J. E. Lilly, and the children of his deceased brother, M. N. Lilly, in the ratio of eighth-ninths to the former and one-ninth to the latter, and of that judgment appellants now complain.

It is clear that at the time the deed to appellee, J. E. Lilly, from his brothers and sisters was executed he and they owned an undivided one-ninth interest each in that half of the land to which their father held the title at the time of his death, subject to their mother's right of dower therein, as the other half of the land was owned by their mother in her own right. The deed, therefore, invested appellee, J. E. Lilly, with the title of the male grantors, who joined therein, to that half of the land of which Samuel Lilly was the owner at his death, subject, however, to the right of dower of the latter's widow. But as the wives of the male grantors did not unite with them in the deed to appellee, J. E. Lilly, they were not by the deed divested of their potential rights of dower respectively in the interests conveyed by their husbands. The question of dower, however, does not now concern us, as the husbands are still living.

The deed in question was absolutely void as to the female grantors, for a married woman can not alone convey her real estate. The conveyance may be by joint deed of husband and wife, or by separate instrument, but in the latter case the husband must first convey, or have theretofore conveyed. (Kentucky Statutes, sections 506 and 2128; General Statutes, chapter 24, section 20; chapter 52, article 2, section 8; Weber v. Towner, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1107; Beverly v. Wallace, &c., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2505; Sandefer v. Hardin, 3 Ky. Law Rep., 65; Brady v. Gray, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 512.)

The deed was also void as to the "expectancy" it purported to convey of the grantors in that half of the land to which their mother held the title. The mere fact that a child would inherit the real estate of the father, in the event of the latter's death intestate, does not invest the child with an interest in such realty which can be made the subject of sale or conveyance by him during the life of the father. (Smith, &c. v. Duguid, &c., 8 Ky. Law Rep., 64.)

As the deed in question only conveyed the appellee, J. E. Lilly, the one-ninth interest each of his brothers, C. R., E. T. and Dudley Lilly, in that half of the land in controversy to which their father, Samuel Lilly, had title, subject to their mother's dower therein, and these interests, together with his own of one-ninth, J. E. Lilly conveyed by deed to his mother, she thereupon became invested with the title in fee simple to four-ninths of the undivided half of the land formerly owned by Samuel Lilly, and by the deed which she subsequently made J. E. Lilly he became the owner in fee simple of his mother's half of the land, and of four-ninths of the other half, as well as his mother's dower interest therein. The appellant's contention that the deed from Delilah Furnish to appellee, J. E. Lilly, should be set aside because of her want of mental capacity and his alleged undue influence exerted upon her in procuring its execution, is not, in our opinion, sustained by the evidence.

It is true she was seventy-six years of age, and in feeble health when it was made, but according to the evidence she had sufficient mind to comprehend the terms and meaning of the deed. The consideration for the conveyance, which was the undertaking of the grantee to support and care for her during the remainder of her life, could not at the time have been regarded as inadequate. The land as a whole was not worth more than $500, and her interest therein was of less value. The fact, too, that she had spent more of her time with appellee than her other children, and that she had always received kind and affectionate treatment at the hands of himself and family, doubtless had some effect in causing her to feel that he was entitled to compensation for her past as well as future support, and though she died shortly after the execution of the deed, she seemed to have received of appellee and his family proper nursing and attention.

Three of the ten witnesses introduced as to the condition of Mrs. Furnish's mind when the deed was made testified that she was not competent to contract, while seven others, including the physician who attended her in her last illness, testified that she was competent to do so. In view of the evidence presented by the record we are not disposed to find fault with the conclusion reached by the chancellor upon this point. This court has repeatedly held that such conveyances should be upheld, unless it is made to appear that the grantor was not possessed of sufficient mental capacity to contract, or that the deed was obtained by fraud or undue influence. (Sullivan v. Hadkin, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 622; Bush v. Johnson, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 598; Rankin's Adm'r v. Wallace, 12 Ky. Law Rep., 97; Jones v. Gorham, &c., 12 Ky. Law Rep., 568; Duffey, &c. v. Sutherland, &c., 18 Ky. Law Rep., 447; Young v. Young, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1228.)

We think the chancellor erred in adjudging appellee, J. E. Lilly, entitled to all the proceeds of the land except the one-eighth directed to be paid the children of M. N. Lilly. He is entitled to, and should have been adjudged, one-half the proceeds of the entire tract because of his ownership of the half thereof formerly owned by his mother, and to six-ninths of the other half of the proceeds, because, besides the one-ninth of that half of the land formerly owned by his father which he inherited, he acquired by purchase and deed from his brothers, C. R., E. T. and Dudley Lilly, the one-ninth interest of each in the father's half of the land, and in addition the one-ninth each of his sisters, Jane Baxter and Ollie O'Neal, in the father's half, as they have set up no claim thereto, though parties to the action, notwithstanding the invalidity of the conveyance under which their respective interests are claimed by appellee.

The judgment should also direct the payment to the children of M. N. Lilly, deceased, of one-ninth of one-half of the proceeds of the land, and to the appellants, Mattie Stewart and Ellen Lilly, each one-ninth of the one-half, but before making such payment to Mattie Stewart and Ellen Lilly they should be required to refund to appellee, J. E. Lilly, the consideration paid them respectively by him for their respective interests in the land, as the title thereto did not pass to him by the deed in which they attempted to join, but no interest should be charged them upon the consideration they are required to refund, nor should he be charged with rent for any part of the time he had the land in possession. We do not think the statute of limitation can be relied on by appellee to defeat the claim of appellants, Mattie Stewart and Ellen Lilly. Besides, his possession is not shown to have been actual and continuous by as much as fifteen years. As the deed by which they attempted to convey their interests in the land was void ab initio, such possession as appellee held of the undivided half of the land in which they owned an interest, if he ever had possession thereof independently of his mother, to whom dower in that half was never assigned, was that of a joint tenant, and, therefore, not adverse to his cotenants. But, in any event, Mattie Stewart and Ellen Lilly being married women and under the disability of coverture while appellee had possession of the land, limitation did not run as to them.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

GUENTHER V. WISDOM.

(Filed February 2, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Conveyance—Consideration—Money advanced to redeem lots—Adjudged to be a mortgage—A conveyance made to appellants, by direction of appellee, of certain lots owned by appellee, upon a writing by which appellant agreed to let appellee have $211.87 in money to redeem same, and that appellee should sell the lots by a named date and repay appellant the money, with 8 per cent. interest, and to pay appellant the money which the lots sold for up to the amount of his debt, and those he failed to sell was to belong to appellant if the debt was not all paid at said date, is adjudged to be a mortgage, and appellee adjudged to be the owner of the unsold lots, with a lien thereon to appellant for the balance unpaid.

2. Usury—The contract having been adjudged to be a mortgage and not a sale, appellant is entitled to only 6 per cent. interest on his debt.

E. B. Anderson for appellant.

Hayes & Wells for appellee.

Appeal from Davless Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee, Wisdom, purchased the equity of redemption in eleven lots in Mechanicsville Addition to the city of Owensboro. Being unable to pay his bid, $2.60 on the equity of redemption and $208.77, the amount required to redeem the lots from the original purchaser, he obtained from the appellant, Guenther, $211.87. Thereupon he directed the court to make a deed to Guenther for the lots, which was accordingly done. At the time the money was obtained and the deed directed to be made to Guenther the parties entered into a writing, a part of which reads as follows: "And, whereas, the party of the second part has agreed to redeem for the party of the first part the said lots from the first purchasers thereof, as well as to pay the amounts bid for the equities of redemption (amounting in all to $211.87) upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set out, now, therefore, for and in consideration of the premises, and for the said sum of $211.87, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and in order to secure the payment to the party of the second part of the said sum, with interest thereon as hereinafter stipulated, the party of the first part has this day transferred to the party of the second part his bid for the said equities of redemption in said lots, and authorized the court to make a deed to said lots to the party of the second part; and the party of the first part further agrees and binds himself to pay the party of the second part, on or before the first day of January, 1900, the said sum of $211.87, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per centum per annum from date until paid. It is agreed between the parties hereto that the party of the first part may sell any or all of such lots as he may be able to do so, and that the party of the second part will at any time convey to the party of the first part, or as he may direct, any lot, or lots, hereinabove mentioned, upon payment to the party of the second part of the amount paid for and on account of said lots, together with interest thereon at the rate herein agreed upon, up to the date of said payment, and any expenses which the party of the second part may necessarily incur in connection therewith: Provided, That should the said Wisdom sell any lot, or lots, for an amount greater than that specified in this paragraph, the whole of the proceeds of same is to be paid to the said Guenther to the extent of the amount of money advanced by him, with interest thereon as herein specified. It is understood that the prices paid for said respective lots are as follows, to wit: Lot 4, block 7, $18.68; lot 5, block 7, $18.18; lot 7, block 7, $18.18; lot 4, block 8, $18.18; lot 6, block 8, $20.83; lot 7, block 8, $20.88; lot 4, block 9, $21.97; lot 7, block 9, $19.78; lot 4, block 19, $19.78; lot 7, block 19, $16.48; lot 6, block 20, $16.48.

It is further understood and agreed that in case the party of the first part shall well and truly pay the said sum of $211.87, with interest thereon as herein provided, on or before January 1, 1900, the party of the second part shall convey to the party of the first part all lots therein remaining unsold. But if the party of the first part shall fail to pay the said sum, together with interest thereon as herein provided, on or before the said date, then the party of the second part is to retain all the lots remaining unsold, and the party of the first part is to have no further claim upon, or interest in, them. And in that event, the party of the second part accepts said lots as full payment and satisfaction of the money advanced by him as herein provided, and is to have no recourse or demand against the said Wisdom for the repayment of the same, or any part thereof."

The appellee sold one lot for $78.75, and two other lots for $50, which sums were paid to appellant on his debt. There was a small balance due appellant, found by the court to be $42.41. The appellant claims that he is entitled to hold the remaining lots for the balance due him on his debt, because the contract was a conditional sale of them to him. The appellee claims that the contract was only intended to secure the money appellant advanced him, and that it is nothing more than a mortgage for that purpose. The instrument shows that it was intended only to secure the money borrowed from the appellant. It was nothing more than the borrowing and lending of money. Besides, the parties regarded it as such, because the appellee repaid nearly all of the debt. It would be most inequitable to allow the appellant to hold the unsold lots for the small balance due him. And to do so would be in violation of the letter and spirit of the contract and in disregard of the interpretation which the parties themselves gave it. It is urged that the appellant is entitled to 8 per cent. interest upon the theory that it was part of the consideration for the purchase of the property. When we reach the conclusion that the transaction only amounted to the borrowing and lending of money, it follows that the excess of 6 per cent. is usurious, and the court properly computed the interest at 6 per cent.

The court decreed that appellant should reconvey the property upon the payment of the balance due him. And it is urged that the court should have ordered it sold to pay it. The court did not deny appellant's right to have it sold, and has complete jurisdiction to have it done, if the appellee does not repay the balance due him. It is urged that the court erred in allowing the appellee his costs up to the entering of the judgment. This was proper, because the appellant forced the appellee to institute the suit to have his rights in the property adjudicated, and he obtained the relief sought. If appellant is compelled to enforce the sale of the property for the amount due him, then appellee will be compelled to pay the costs resulting therefrom, because his failure to pay the money makes necessary the proceedings to enforce the payment of the debt.

The judgment is affirmed.

●

LEXINGTON HYDRAULIC AND MFG, CO. v. OOTS, &c.

(Filed February 2, 1905.)

1. Contract to supply city with water—Liability of appellant to individual owner of property—Under a contract by a city with a water company to supply the city with water, such company is liable to an individual property owner for damages by fire resulting to her property from lack of water.

2. Exclusive remedy—The fact that there is a provision in the contract that "for any failure of the company to comply with any material part of its covenant shall, at the option of the city, work a forfeiture of its right to claim the rentals stipulated, and the city shall have the right, if this failure continues for thirty days, to terminate the contract," does not make such remedy exclusive, and such remedy would in nowise remunerate one who has lost her property by appellant's breach of its contract.

3. Setting aside verdict—Where the evidence in a case is conflicting in its character we are not warranted in setting aside the verdict of the jury.

4. Construction of contract—Instructions to jury—Section 16 of the contract provides: "That the machinery and boilers shall throw, if necessary, six streams of water at one time, out of a two and one-half inch hose with a one inch nozzle to a height of between eighty and one hundred feet," and under the facts in the record the jury should have been told that under the contract the company was required, when necessary, to furnish a pressure on the whole system sufficient to throw six streams of water of the given dimensions and power at one time, from hydrants located at different points on the system, and that if at the time of the fire there was such proportionate pressure on the mains contiguous to appellee's property as would naturally result from the before described pressure on the whole system, appellant would not be liable, but if such proportionate pressure was not on the mains contiguous to her property, and the failure to have it there was the proximate cause of the destruction of her property, then appellant was liable for the resulting loss.

Breckinridge & Shelby for appellant.

Morton, Webb & Wilson for appellees.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Cour .

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

On June 7, 1901, a cooper shop on West Main street, in Lexington, Ky., belonging to the appellee, Mary E. Oots, was burned in a general conflagration extending over a large area of the western part of the city. To recover damages for the destruction of her property this action was instituted by appellee in the Fayette Circuit Court, based upon the alleged failure on the part of the water company to supply the requisite quantity of water, as stipulated for in its contract with the city. A trial of the action resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the appellee for the sum of $800, to reverse which this appeal is prosecuted.

So much of the contract between the water company and the city as we deem pertinent to a proper discussion of the issues involved in the case is as follows:

"Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the Lexington Hydraulic Co., or any other responsible company, their successors and assigns, the privilege of constructing and maintaining waterworks in the city of Lexington, and thereby to supply said city and its inhabitants with pure and wholesome water for public and private uses on the following terms and conditions, to wit:

"Sec. 2. The said company shall build and put in operation, within one year from date of this contract, a system of waterworks of a sufficient capacity to supply said city of Lexington with pure and wholesome water, for public, private and manufacturing uses.

"Sec. 3. The said company agrees to furnish the said city of Lexington with two hundred double-discharge fire hydrants, to be located within said city, as shown on the map filed herewith.

"Sec. 4. The said city of Lexington agrees to pay the said company a sum not to exceed $10,000 per annum rental for a term of twenty-five years from the date of completion and successful testing of said works for said two hundred fire hydrants, to be paid to the superintendent of said company in quarterly installments, or to such other persons as the said company may designate.

"Sec. 5. A failure by said company at any time to comply with any material term, condition and stipulation of this contract shall, at the option of the city of Lexington, work a forfeiture of any rights to claim the rental herein provided for, and said city shall have the right, if such failure continues for thirty days, unavoidable accidents and delays excepted, to terminate this contract. * * *

"Sec. 13. Said company, their successors or assigns, shall, within thirty days after the acceptance in writing of the privileges granted by this ordinance, proceed without delay to make suitable arrangements for carrying out the purposes of this privilege, and shall, within one year, lay in a suitable manner within said city suitable cast or wrought iron water mains of sufficient length to properly connect said 200 hydrants; and of capacity to deliver the requisite quantity of water for fire protection and domestic supply as herein provided for. The main pipe leading from the pumps to the city shall be sixteen inches in diameter, and the remainder of such mains shall be twelve, ten, eight, six and four inches in diameter; and there shall be located on said main pipes within the limits of said city two hundred double discharge fire hydrants at the points designated in said map, and the hose attachments are to be made to fit the hose now in use for the city of Lexington. The hydrants are to be provided and maintained by the company, their successors or assigns, and are to be connected with the street mains, but the connection of the hydrants with the mains are to be considered main pipes, and there shall be attached to the main pipes suitable valves to shut off the water from any line of pipe if found necessary. It is further provided that when said fire hydrants have been established and erected, their location shall not be changed. The said city council may, from time to time, by ordinance and resolution, require the said company, their successors or assigns, within a reasonable time, not to exceed in any case ninety days, to extend said mains and pipes to other parts of the city, the extension to be from the terminus of any main, or from the intersection of the mains at any two streets, as the case may require, and the said company, their successors or assigns, shall erect and maintain one double discharge fire hydrant to every 300 feet or fraction thereof of such extension, the same to be located as the city may direct along the line of said proposed extension. * * *

"Sec. 15. In consideration of the benefits to said city and the inhabitants thereof, to be derived from the construction and operation of said waterworks, and for the unrestricted use of said 200 fire hydrants for the extinguishment of fires, the said city of Lexington agrees and binds itself to pay to the said company, their successors or assigns, the annual sum of $10,000, for the full term of twenty-five years from the completion and testing of said waterworks, for the rental of said 200 hydrants, the same to be paid quarterly to the superintendent of the said company, or to such other person as said company may designate, and in the same manner to pay $50 per annum for all hydrants on extended mains and all intermediate hydrants which are subject to rental as above, for the remainder of said term of twenty-five years after the water is turned on.

"Sec. 16. In consideration of the rights and privileges herein granted to the said company, their successors or assigns, and the $10,000 annual rental to be paid as aforesaid, the said company, their successors or assigns, shall give at all times unto said city the free and unobstructed use for fire purposes of any and all the fire hydrants located and maintained as aforesaid; and the said city, by its proper officers and employes, shall have the right, at all times, for the purpose of extinguishing fires, to take water from said hydrants without further cost or charges to said city. And in the construction of said waterworks the machinery and hydrants shall be manufactured by the Holly Manufacturing Co., of Lockport, New York, or by any other company which may be agreed upon between said company and the waterworks committee, to be of equal efficiency, and shall have two separate boilers, which machinery and boiler shall throw, if necessary, six streams of water at one time out of two and one-half inch hose, with one-inch nozzles, to a height of between eighty and one hundred feet. And it is further provided herein that the said city shall have water free of charge for four troughs for watering animals, to be located by the city council, which, with the pipes and fixtures therefor, shall be furnished by the city, and to be provided with self-closing valves, and shall furnish water free of charge for the city buildings, the city paying for hydrants and fixtures, and the said company to furnish said hydrants and fixtures at actual cost. And it is further provided that no charge is to be made for water used for filling the public cisterns or for exhibition of the fire department or for cleansing the public gutters or sewers, provided that no more than one and one-half inch streams be used at a time, one hour each day for each gutter or sewer; and further provided, that water for filling cisterns, for exhibitions of the fire department and for cleaning gutters and sewers, shall be taken only at stated times, or on reasonable notice by the mayor or marshal of said city to said company."

It is insisted by appellant that the case should be reversed for the following reasons: First, the petition fails to state a cause of action because there is no privity of contract between appellant and appellee; second, the contract itself furnishes a remedy for the failure of the water company to perform its stipulations, and this remedy is exclusive; third, the verdict is contrary to the evidence; fourth, the court misinstructed the jury. Of these in their order.

The first proposition involves the soundness of the principle first enunciated in this State in the case of the Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co., 89 Ky., 840, that for breach of contracts, such as that under consideration, the company is liable to the individual property owner for damages by fire resulting from lack of water. At the urgent solicitation of the learned counsel for appellant we have reconsidered the opinion in that case, and have pondered long on the forceful argument with which he has sought to overthrow the conclusion reached therein, with the result that we have determined that the opinion furnishes a correct exposition of the law on the subject involved, and we, therefore, adhere to it as authority.

It is true, as well said by counsel, a principle ought never to be considered settled until it is settled right; but it is equally true, when settled right, it ought to be adhered to without reference to the number of adjudications in other jurisdictions holding a contrary view. The second proposition is based upon section 5 of the contract, which prescribes that any failure of the company to comply with any material part of its covenant shall, at the option of the city, work a forfeiture of its right to claim the rentals stipulated, and the city shall have the right, if this failure continues for thirty days (unavoidable delays and accidents excepted), to terminate the contract. This remedy is claimed to be exclusive of any other. To this we can not agree. While it is true the parties to a contract may stipulate a remedy for its violation, and oftentimes the remedy will be deemed exclusive, that principle has no application here. If it be true, as we have said, that appellee has an action for the loss of her property by reason of a breach of its contract by appellant, section 5 does not supply her with a remedy, or in anywise remunerate her for the loss she has sustained. If the principle we have stated, as to the responsibility of appellant, is to be maintained, section 5 must be deemed as affording a remedy to the city by which it can control the company, and prevent a prolonged failure on its part to perform its contract, which is different from, and additional to, the remedy of appellee for her loss. To say that the remedy provided in section 5 is exclusive of all others for breach of contract on the part of appellant, is but another mode of saying that Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co. should be overruled, and the principle contended for by appellant, that there is no privity of contract between it and the appellee, should be substituted as the correct rule of law.

As to the third proposition, the evidence adduced on the trial was voluminous in its quantity, and very conflicting in its character, and we are unable to say that the conclusion reached by the jury on the facts is so obviously contrary to the great weight of the testimony as to warrant us in invading their province and setting aside the verdict. The fourth proposition urged by appellant is that the court misinstructed the jury, and the soundness of this position depends upon the construction to be given the contract as to the pressure to be furnished in case of fire. By section 13 it is provided that the company shall "lay in a suitable manner within said city suitable cast or wrought iron water mains of sufficient length to properly connect said 200 hydrants, and of capacity to deliver the requisite quantity of water for fire protection and domestic supply as herein provided for. The main pipe leading from the pumps to the city shall be sixteen inches in diameter, and the remainder of such mains shall be twelve, ten, eight, six and four inches in diameter." On the water mains there was to be located 200 double-discharge fire hydrants at points designated on a map showing the system as contemplated. By section 16 it is provided that "in the construction of said waterworks the machinery and hydrants shall be manufactured by the Holly Manufacturing Co., of Lockport, New York, or by any other company which may be agreed upon between said company and the waterworks committee, to be of equal efficiency, and shall have two separate boilers, which machinery and boilers shall throw, if necessary, six streams of water at one time out of two and one-half inch hose, with one-inch nozzle, to a height of between eighty and one hundred feet."

This is the portion of the contract upon which the question now under discussion turns. It is insisted by the appellee that, by this language, the company was under contract to furnish pressure, when necessary, sufficient to throw six streams at one time and on one main out of two and one-half inch hose, with one-inch nozzles, to a height of between eighty and one hundred feet, and, therefore, it was its duty to have a pressure sufficient upon the mains contiguous to appellee's property to throw six streams of water at one time, to the prescribed height, out of the hydrants located thereon. Appellant insists that the language of the contract should be given its natural meaning, and there should not be interpolated into it words which would make it read as if the covenant was to furnish sufficient pressure to throw six streams of water of the given force at one time and at one place; that the real meaning of the contract is that the pressure at the pumping station should be sufficiently great on the whole system to throw six streams of water from six hydrants at different points thereon; and it is urged that the evidence shows that a pressure sufficiently great to force water through a four inch main with sufficient velocity to meet the requirements of appellee's construction of the contract would not only burst the pipe, but all of the plumbing in the city, and under the well-known rule of construction of contracts this (if it can be avoided) must not be given an interpretation which imposes a duty impossible of performance, but the more reasonable one contended for by the appellant should be adopted. This reasoning, we think, is correct. The contract is, of course, mutual, and the covenant in question bears a direct relation to the consideration moving from the city to the company; and while it, doubtless, would have been better to have had all the mains of a dimension sufficient to have sustained the pressure resulting from appellee's construction of the contract, that would have entailed a higher rental, and this, presumably, the city was unwilling to pay. The dimensions of the water mains are prescribed in the contract, four inch mains being authorized in certain parts of the city; and as the water was to be supplied from the pumping station by direct pressure, it would be an unreasonable construction to say that this pressure should be so great as to burst all the four-inch pipe and all the plumbing in the city, and thus render the whole system an absolute failure.

The water system of appellant was established in 1885, and has been in use ever since. The mains were laid under the supervision of a specially-appointed waterworks committee, whose business, presumably, was to see that the interest of the city was protected; and after the system was completed a trial of its efficiency was had, and a favorable report made thereof to the city council, who, by resolution, accepted it as installed. This resolution, which was adopted on February 25, 1885, is as follows:

"Be it resolved by the Mayor and Board of Councilmen of the City of Lexington:

"That whereas, the Lexington Hydraulic and Manufacturing Co., having completed the system of waterworks provided for in the contract entered into between the city of Lexington, State of Kentucky, and said company, and complied fully with the tests and requirements provided for in said contract:

"Therefore, the mayor and board of councilmen, acting for and in behalf of said city, hereby formally accept said system of waterworks as required by said contract."

It thus appears that, at the very beginning, it was known by the city that the company had laid four-inch mains on certain streets, and it accepted this as a valid fulfillment of the contract. We are not willing, under these circumstances, to put a construction upon the contract which, if enforced, would result in the destruction of the whole system, and render abortive the very end sought to be attained by its establishment. The jury should have been told by the court, in substance, that, under the contract existing between the city and the company, the latter was required, when necessary, to furnish a pressure upon the whole system sufficient to throw six streams of water of the given dimensions and power at one time from hydrants located at different points on the system, and that the contract of the appellant was fulfilled if, at the time of the fire which damaged appellee, there was on the water mains contiguous to her property such pressure as would naturally result from the before-described pressure on the whole system; that if there was such proportionate pressure on these contiguous mains, when necessary for the purpose of extinguishing the fire in question, appellant was not liable; but if such proportionate pressure was not on the mains contiguous to appellee's property when the necessity for it arose, and the failure to have it there was the proximate cause of the destruction of her property, then appellant was liable to her for the resulting loss.

The instructions given on the former trial, modified to meet the views above expressed, will, in our opinion, correctly embody the law governing this case as shown by the record. Without particularity of statement, we think the trial court correctly ruled on the questions raised as to the competency and relevancy of the testimony. We deem it unnecessary to pass upon what is called the misconduct of appellee's counsel, as this will not be repeated on a retrial of the case. We perceive no error in the record other than as above pointed out.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Nunn dissents from the proposition of law in the opinion upon which this case is reversed.

HIEATT, &c. v. SCHMIDT, EX'OR.

(Filed February 3, 1905.)

Judicial sales—Infants' real estate—Newspaper advertisement—Consent of guardian not to advertise—Legality of sale—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 14a, providing "that in addition to notices now required by law to be posted, all public sales of any kind of property when sold under execution, judgment or decree shall, unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties to such execution, judgment or decree, be advertised in some newspaper published in the county of the sale." * * * Held—That the word "parties" in this section includes infants as well as adults, and in a decretal sale of the land of an infant, its guardian has the right, with the approval of the chancellor, to agree to dispense with the newspaper advertisement of the sale of such land, and such agreement is binding on the infant.

Leopold & Pennebaker and Johnson & Hieatt for appellants.

B. F. Gardner for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The sole question presented for our consideration by the record in this case is, can an infant party to an action brought to obtain a decree for the sale of real estate, of which such infant is part owner, with the chancellor's approval, consent through his statutory guardian to a sale thereof without the newspaper advertisement required by section 14a, Kentucky Statutes?

The section supra contains the following provision: "That in addition to the notices now required by law to be posted, all public sales of any kind of property, when sold under execution, judgment or decree, shall, unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties to such execution, judgment or decree, be advertised in some newspaper published in the county of such sale." * * *

The decree of sale in this case states "by consent it is further adjudged that no advertisement of said sale shall be made, as required under and pursuant to section 14a, Kentucky Statutes."

The infant, Henrietta Collier, and her statutory guardian were plaintiffs, and as much interested in obtaining a sale of the land as were the adult plaintiffs, joint owners with her of the property, and it is to be presumed that she and they were equally benefited by its sale. The language of the statute in question indicates that the legislature had in contemplation the fact that cases might arise in which it would not be beneficial to the parties, whether infants or adults, to be put to the expense of the newspaper advertisement, for which reason the provision allowing such advertisement by consent of parties to be dispensed with, was inserted in the statute.

It could not, we think, have been contemplated by the legislature that an infant may not, by agreement of his guardian and the sanction of a court of equity, avail himself of the provision of the statute in question when it would be beneficial to him to do so. Such a construction of the statute would deprive infants of equal protection under it, and confine its beneficent operation to adults alone. Neither would this construction extend the benefits of that provision of the statute to all adults, for those of that class owning real estate in which an infant has a joint interest would be excluded from its operation because of that fact. Should adult parties to an action like those in this case (both plaintiffs and defendants) be denied the right conferred by statute to dispense with the newspaper advertisement because an infant happens to be a party to the action? And especially where the infant and her statutory guardian are plaintiffs, and the latter, by and with the approval of the chancellor, elects for the infant to join with the other parties in interest to dispense with the newspaper advertisement? We think not.

Obviously it must have been the opinion of the parties to this action, and of the chancellor as well, that the posting of the written or printed notices in conformity to the requirements of the judgment would afford sufficient advertisement of the property to be sold, and it does not appear from the record that the sale was not attended by the usual number of people and bidders, or that the property sold for less than its fair market value. We are of the opinion that the word "parties" in the section supra includes infants as well as adults. While an infant can not personally enter into a binding agreement, or waive a legal right, he or his estate may for many purposes be bound by the act of another having authority to represent him, and especially is this true if the thing done be advantageous to the infant.

In this case the agreement to dispense with the newspaper advertisement was made for the infant by the statutory guardian; the agreement was beneficial to the infant and was sanctioned by the court, evidence of all of which is sufficiently shown by the approval of the guardian and infant's attorney, endorsed upon the order, and by the recitals of the judgment. A court of chancery has power to elect for an infant in a case properly brought before it to affirm or disaffirm the transaction to which the infant is a party. (A. & E. Ency. of Law, volume 10, page 659.)

In Kentucky Union Land Co. v. Elliott, 12 Ky. Law Rep., 812, it was held that though a judgment, under which certain lands in which infants owned an interest had been partitioned, was void and would have to be reversed, because the infants were not served with summons, yet if, following such reversal, the infants were brought before the court, and it should appear that the partition made under the void judgment was equal and just, the guardian of the infants might in open court adopt the report. (Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S., 681; Andrews v. Hall, 15 Ala., 85; Chambers v. Rainey, 56 Texas, 17.)

We are clearly of opinion that the guardian of the infant appellee, Henrietta Collier, had the right, with the approval of the chancellor, to make, as he did for her, the election authorized by the statute, consequently the agreement of the parties to dispense with the newspaper advertisement of the sale of the real estate in controversy was, and is, binding upon her. The authorities relied on by counsel for appellant do not conflict with the views herein expressed. While they illustrate the zeal of this court in protecting the rights of infants, it will be found that they are cases in which the lower court was without jurisdiction to act upon the infant's rights, or there was an attempt either by the infant himself, or some one assuming to act for him, to illegally bind his estate, or waive his property or other rights in a manner forbidden by law. It follows from the foregoing conclusions that the chancellor did not err in overruling the purchaser's exceptions to the report of sale, or in confirming the sale.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

BUTLER v. STEPHENS.

(Filed February 8, 1905.)

1. Judicial districts—Power of legislature to create—Section 132 of the Constitution provides that “the general assembly, when deemed necessary, may establish additional (judicial) districts, but the whole number of districts, exclusive of counties having a population of 150,000, shall not exceed at any one time one for every 60,000 of population of the State, according to the last enumeration.” The last Federal census shows that the State had in 1900 a population of 2,147,174. This would have entitled the State to as many as thirty-one judicial district, outside of the county of Jefferson, which had a population of 232,549. Section 128 of the Constitution provides that “the general assembly, having due regard to the territory, business and population, shall divide the State into a sufficient number of judicial districts to carry into effect the provisions of the Constitution concerning circuit courts.” Held—That the act of the general assembly of 1904, creating the Thirty-first Judicial District, composed of the counties of Floyd, Knott and Magoffin, was constitutional.

2. Size of districts—The inhibition in the Constitution is not against the size of the districts at all except where single counties may constitute a district, and the fact that the Thirty-first District contained only about 86,292 population does not affect the validity of the act creating it, as the population of the entire State by the last census was such as to empower the legislature to create an additional district.

3. Commonwealth's attorney—Any one elected to the office of Commonwealth's attorney takes it subject to the constitutional right of the legislature to make new districts as the necessities and population may require, and those affected by its exercise must yield to it as one of the conditions fixed by the Constitution upon which they took their office.

J. F. Butler, W. O. Bradley, James Goble and R. L. Greene for appellant.

Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg, Geo. B. Gardner, B. G. Williams and J. J. C. Bach for appellee.

Appeal from Floyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

The Twenty-fourth Judicial District, prior to 1904, was composed of the counties of Floyd, Johnson, Knott, Martin and Pike. In 1903, at the regular election, a circuit judge and Commonwealth's attorney were elected and commissioned for the term of six years, and entered upon the discharge of their duties. Appellant was the Commonwealth's attorney elected for that district at that time. At the regular session of the legislature held in 1904 there was erected a new district, the Thirty-first, which was made to comprise the counties of Floyd, Knott and Magoffin. The governor appointed appellee as Commonwealth's attorney in the Thirty-first District until the next succeeding regular election, who qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties.

This appeal presents for decision the controversy between appellant, John F. Butler, the Commonwealth's attorney in the Twenty-fourth District, and appellee, A. B. Stephens, Commonwealth's attorney in the Thirty-first District, as to who was entitled to administer the duties of that office in the county of Floyd, they each claiming the right. The decision in the court below was in favor of Stephens. We waive the question of practice presented by which the controversy was brought before the court, having come to the conclusion that the judgment must be affirmed on the merits of the case as they are made out in the record.

The validity of the act of 1904 (Session Acts, 1904, page 125) is assailed on two grounds: First, it is contended that no new rural district can be created unless it contains at least 60,000 population; second, that as the effect of the act is to diminish appellant's salary or official compensation, it is repugnant to section 235 of the Constitution, and as to appellant is void. By section 97 of the Constitution a Commonwealth's attorney is to be elected in each judicial district. The Constitution of 1891 did away with all courts of general original jurisdiction save circuit courts. By section 128 the legislature was required, at its first session after the Constitution went into effect, to divide the State into judicial districts. It was in that section provided: "In making such apportionment no county shall be divided, and the number of said districts, excluding those in counties having a population of 150,000, shall not exceed one district for each 60,000 of the population of the entire State."

Section 132 of the Constitution reads: "The general assembly, when deemed necessary, may establish additional districts; but the whole number of districts, exclusive of counties having a population of 150,000, shall not exceed at any one time one for every 60,000 of population of the State, according to the last enumeration."

Section 134 is: "The judicial districts of the State shall not be changed except at the first session after an enumeration, unless upon the establishment of a new district."

Section 137 of the Constitution provides that counties having a population of 150,000 or over shall constitute a district, and be entitled to four judges. It also provides that the general assembly may increase the number of judges in such counties, but not to exceed one for each increase of 40,000 population, "to be ascertained by the last enumeration."

By section 138 it is further provided that each county having a city of 20,000 inhabitants, and a population including said city of 40,000 or more, may constitute a district, and when its population reaches 75,000 the general assembly may provide that it shall have an additional judge, and may have a judge for each additional 50,000 above 100,000. From these sections it is argued that there can be no district created, except in counties having a population of 150,000 or over, or in counties having a population of 40,000, and a city of 20,000, unless such district contains at least 60,000 population. It is also urged that as frequent reference is made in these sections of the Constitution "to the last enumeration," it was intended to adopt the Federal census enumeration as the sole evidence of the requisite number of population for determining the matter of dividing the State into judicial districts. There was not at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, nor has there since been, any provision of law for taking an enumeration by the State. It may, therefore, be conceded that these references were to the Federal census. It may also be assumed that the population of the entire State, and of each of its counties, as shown by the Federal census is a matter of which the courts will take judicial notice. Proceeding upon these assumptions, it is found that the last Federal census shows that the State of Kentucky contained a population in 1900 of 2,147,174. The only county in the State then having a population of 150,000 or over was Jefferson, with a population of 232,549. This would have entitled the State to as many as thirty-one judicial districts outside of the county of Jefferson. At that time, and until the creation of the Thirty-first District, there were only thirty districts, including the county of Jefferson. Instead of the requirement being that each district must contain at least 60,000 population, save as expressly excepted, the Constitution carefully leaves the number of population to the wisdom of the general assembly. In section 128, where the duty is imposed to divide the State into judicial districts, it is said: "The general assembly, having due regard to the territory, business and population, shall divide the State into a sufficient number of judicial districts to carry into effect the provisions of this Constitution concerning circuit courts."

So that we see that something in addition to population was to enter into the consideration of the sizes of the districts. The inhibition is not against the size of the districts at all, except where single counties may constitute a district. The total number of districts only was limited by the population of the last preceding enumeration. Such was the construction of the first general assembly that convened after the adoption of the Constitution. They then divided the State into circuit judicial districts, thirty in number. The last preceding census, that of 1890, gave the State of Kentucky a population of 1,858,635. Jefferson county, then as now the only county having as many as 150,000 population, contained 188,698 inhabitants. If it was required by the Constitution that each district, except the counties which were singly entitled to be a district, must contain at least 60,000 population, deducting the population of Jefferson, there could have been only twenty-seven other districts provided. Giving the counties of Kenton, Fayette and Campbell each one district (they each being entitled to be a separate district), would have left only twenty-five districts that the State could have been apportioned into. Yet that general assembly created thirty districts, making one district each for Jefferson, Kenton, Campbell and Fayette counties. It will be observed that in determining when single counties may be created into separate districts the Federal census is not adopted as the basis of ascertaining the population. (Section 137.) The same session of the legislature created the Twenty-third District (in which Magoffin county was placed) and the Twenty-fourth. Neither of these districts contained in 1890, according to the census of that year, as many as 60,000 population. The Twenty-third had only 42,122, and the Twenty-fourth 49,308. A number of other districts in the State, having more than one county, also contained less than 60,000 population. This apportionment has never been questioned, so far as we know. The fact that the Thirty-first District contained only 86,292 does not affect the validity of the act creating it, as the population of the entire State, by the last census, was such as to empower the legislature to create an additional district, if in their wisdom the conditions required it. Whether they did or not is a matter entirely beyond the jurisdiction of this court to look into.

Section 235 of the Constitution reads: "The salaries of public officers shall not be changed during the term for which they were elected." * * *

By section 98 it was provided that "the compensation of the Commonwealth's attorney shall be by salary and such percentage of fines and forfeitures as may be fixed by law, and such salary shall be uniform, ~~in~~ so far as the same shall be paid out of the State treasury, * * * not to exceed $500 per annum."

By statute Commonwealth's attorneys receive in addition to the $500 salary, payable out of the treasury, 50 per cent. of all fines and forfeitures recovered in the circuit courts of their districts. Appellant contends that by taking from his district the counties of Knott and Floyd his salary is diminished. It may be conceded that the percentage of fines and forfeitures given by statute to Commonwealth's attorneys are to be regarded as salary, as the term is used in section 98 of the Constitution. The legislature would not, therefore, have the power to provide a less or greater per cent. of fines and forfeitures to the Commonwealth's attorneys, or increase or diminish the salary of $500, payable out of the treasury. But that is the extent of the limitation. Any person elected to the office of Commonwealth's attorney takes it subject to the constitutional right expressly reserved to the legislature to make new districts as the necessities and population of the State may require. The exercise of this power by the legislature is presumed to be in behalf of the State and its citizens. Commonwealth's attorneys affected by its exercise must yield to it as one of the conditions fixed by the Constitution upon which they took their offices.

Wherefore, the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

HOWARD v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Filed February 7, 1905.)

1. Telegram—Delay in delivery—Ineffectual if delivered—The fact that a telegram announcing a son's illness was unreasonably delayed in its transmission and delivery will not entitle the father to damages for mental suffering in not seeing his son before his death where the evidence fails to show that he could have reached his son before his death if there had been no delay.

2. Burden of proof—In an action for damages for delay in the transmission or delivery of a telegram announcing the illness of a son, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove not only the negligence in its transmission and delivery, but that such negligence was the proximate cause of the failure of the parent to reach the son before his death.

3. Interstate—Telegram—Mental suffering—Nonliability of foreign State—Effect on this State—In an action in this State for the negligent transmission or delivery of a telegram from another State to this State, damages for mental suffering may be recovered in this State, although the laws of the State from which it was sent do not allow a recovery for mental suffering unless accompanied by physical injury.

A. G. Patterson for appellant.

Richards & Ronald, Geo. Fearons and Wm. Low for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This case is before us the second time. It was reversed upon the former appeal because of error upon the part of the lower court in dismissing the action as a result of appellee's refusal to make his petition more specific. (Howard v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 828.)

Upon the trial that followed the return of the case to the lower court that court at the conclusion of appellant's testimony gave the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the appellee, and they returned a verdict as instructed. We are asked by appellant to review the rulings of the lower court as to the giving of the peremptory instruction and in refusing him a new trial. The appellant brought the action to recover damages of the appellee for mental suffering caused him by the alleged negligent failure of its agents to transmit and deliver within a reasonable time the following telegraphic message:

"To John Howard, Pineville, Ky. :

"Lark shot dangerously bad. Come at once.

"L. JACKSON."

The appellant lives at Pineville, this State, and the "Lark" referred to in the telegram was his son, Larkin Howard, who was shot at Hurley, W. Va., on the afternoon of October 4, 1902. The message was telephoned from that place, a distance of twelve miles, to Devon, W. Va., where it was received by appellee's agent in charge of its telegraph office at that place, about 5 o'clock, p. m., October 4, and was by him later forwarded to appellee's office at Pineville, Ky., where it was received at 11:45 p. m., of the same day, but was not delivered to appellant until 8.05 a. m., Sunday, October 5.

It was averred in the petition that by reason of the negligence of appellee's Devon agent in delaying the sending of the message, and that of its Pineville agent in delivering it, appellant was prevented from reaching his son's bedside before his death, which occurred at 1:30 a. m., October 6, 1902. It appears from the evidence that appellee was about seven hours in transmitting the message from Devon to Pineville, and that about sixteen hours intervened between the time of its receiving the message at Devon and its delivery to appellant. This delay seems to us unreasonable and inexcusable. But conceding the negligence of appellee on this point, if as a matter of fact the message had been transmitted and delivered in reasonable time, and it was nevertheless out of appellant's power to have reached his son's bedside before his death, he was not entitled to recover, and it was because the lower court was of opinion that there was no evidence conducing to prove that appellant, if the message had been promptly transmitted and delivered, could, in the usual course of travel, have reached his son before his death, that the peremptory instruction was given the jury to find for appellee.

It was held by the Court of Appeals of Texas in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hendricks, 63 S. W., 841, that where a message was sent to a father informing him of the illness of his son, and he could not have reached the son before he died, if the message had been promptly delivered, a delay in delivering the message would not warrant a recovery of damages for the failure to reach the son before his death. This doctrine was recognized by this court in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Parsons, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2008, though it could not be applied to the facts of that case. It is conceded that appellant's son died at the house of Lee Jackson, in Hurley, W. Va., at 1:30 o'clock, a. m., October 6, 1902.

The evidence introduced as to how and when appellant might have reached his son consisted mainly of his own testimony, according to which there were two routes from Pineville, one over the Louisville & Nashville Railroad to Winchester; thence over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to Ashland; thence over an electric line to Kenova, W. Va.; thence over the Norfolk & Western Railroad to Devon, from which point a dummy line runs a distance of twelve miles to Hurley. The other route is by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad from Pineville to Norton, Va.; thence to Bluefield; thence over the Norfolk & Western Railroad to Devon. It was stated by appellant that if the message announcing the wounding of his son had been promptly transmitted and delivered to him on the evening of October 4, 1902, he could have taken a train by way of Winchester that left Pineville at 10 p. m., the same day, or gone by way of Norton, by taking a train that left Pineville at 7:50 a. m., October 5, upon either of which he thought he could have reached Hurley before his son's death. All that appellant testified as to the Winchester route was mere hearsay, for he admitted that he had never been over that route, but said that had connection been made with the different railroads indicated at Winchester and Ashland, by this route the train would not have arrived at Kenova at 4 p. m. Sunday, October 5, which place was still one hundred miles from Devon, and he was unable to say whether a train run from Kenova to Devon on Sunday, or, if so, when it left Kenova or arrived at Devon. No time tables were introduced by appellant to show the time of the running of the trains on either route, nor did he introduce any of the employes of any of the railroads to prove these facts.

We do not think there was any competent testimony conducing to prove that appellant, by the Winchester or Kenova route, could have reached his son before the latter's death. Besides, it is apparent that for some cause, satisfactory to himself, he was unwilling to take the Winchester route, though he could have done so on Sunday, October 5, at 10 p. m., instead of doing which he went Sunday afternoon as far as Middlesboro to obtain a pass over the Norton route, which he secured, and on the morning of the 6th (Monday), started from there by way of Norton to go to his son, but he got no further than Norton, as he there received a telegram informing him of his son's death, whereupon he at once returned to Pineville. Appellant further testified that if the message from Jackson announcing the condition of his son had been promptly delivered he believed he could have taken the Louisville & Nashville train at 7:50 a. m., on Sunday, October 5, and by the Norton route have reached his son in time to see him alive.

This conclusion was not based upon his knowledge of the running of the trains on that route as of the date of his son's death, but from knowledge derived by going over that route in December, 1902, two months afterwards. He did not, however, testify that the time schedule was then as it was at the time of his son's death. All that he knew was that if the trains on the Norton and Bluefield route ran on October 5, 1902, as they did in December following, by taking the 7:50 train on the morning of Sunday, October 5, he could, if close connection had been made at Norton and Bluefield, have reached Devon at 12:18 Sunday night, and from that place he could have gone upon another line of railroad in an hour's time to Hurley, which would have enabled him to reach the latter place at 1:18, just seventeen minutes before his son's death.

It does not appear from appellant's testimony, or from that of any other witness, how far Lee Jackson, at whose house the son died, lived from the depot at Hurley; whether he was a resident of the town, or lived some distance in the country, consequently the evidence does not show whether appellant, if he had arrived at Hurley at 1:18, could have gotten to his son in the seventeen minutes of time intervening between the arrival of the train and his death. The burthen was upon appellant to prove not only that appellee was guilty of negligence in transmitting, or delivering, the telegram, but in addition that such negligence was the proximate cause of his failure to reach the bedside of his son before the latter's death. We are of opinion that the lower court was authorized to conclude that there was no evidence conducing to prove that appellant could have reached his son before his death if the telegram had been promptly delivered; consequently there was no error in the giving of the peremptory instruction.

It is contended by counsel for appellee that the peremptory instruction was also authorized upon the ground that a contract for the transmission of an interstate telegram is governed by the law of the State where it is made, and that the telegram in this case was sent from West Virginia, under a contract made in that State, which was in part performed in that State, and under the laws of that State a recovery of damages for mental suffering, unaccompanied by physical injury, is not allowed. This defense was specifically pleaded in the third paragraph of the answer, to which a demurrer was sustained by the lower court. In some of the States the courts have held as contended by appellee, but the weight of authority supports the contrary view.

"Where contracts are made in one place to be performed at another, they are to be governed by the law of the place of performance, as to validity, nature, obligation and interpretation. But the remedy upon it will be governed by the law of the State in which the remedy is sought. * * * Where a contract is made in one State and intended to have effect in another, it must conform to the laws of the latter State." (Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, volume 8, page 561; Goddin v. Shipley, 7 B. M., 575; Tyler v. Trabue, 8 B. M., 306; Stephens v. Gregg, 89 Ky., 461; Chapman v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 90 Ky., 268.)

In American and English Ency. of Law, volume 27, page 1079, 2d edition, we find the following under the head of Conflict of Laws: "The fact that damages for mental anguish alone are not recoverable under the laws of the State from which the message was sent will not preclude a recovery of such damages in the State to which the message was directed, where the laws of the latter State permit such recovery. Likewise, a recovery for such damages may be had in the State whence the message was sent, although they may not be recoverable under the laws of the State where the message was to be delivered. But when the law of the place whence the message was sent and that of the place of delivery both refuse to recognize such damages, they can not be recovered, although the action may have been brought in a jurisdiction which recognizes the right to recover them."

248 U. S. FIDELITY AND GUARANTY CO. V. OVERSTREET.

In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Eubank & Russell, 100 Ky., 591, it was said by this court: "The general rule is that the law of the place where the contract is to be performed governs, subject, of course, to the rule that a contract which is void by the law of the place where made is void elsewhere."

The most recent decisions of this court upon the doctrine in question are to be found in C., C. & St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Drum, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 108, and Adams Express Co. v. Walker, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 1025. In the former case it was held that where the contract is valid in the State where it is made the law of that State governs insofar as it is to be performed outside of this State, but that the law of this State governs insofar as it is to be performed in this State. In the latter case it was held that an interstate contract of carriage, to be partially performed in Kentucky and partially performed in the State where made, is governed by the law of the State where made and partially performed to the extent of its performance outside of this State, and governed by the laws of Kentucky so far as its performance in the latter State is concerned. If the negligence or breach occur wholly in the State where the contract is made and partially performed, it is governed by the laws of that State, but if the negligence or nonperformance occur in Kentucky, it is governed by the laws of this State. We see no reason why the doctrine announced in the several cases supra should not apply to the case at bar. The contract, though made in West Virginia, was to be consummated in Kentucky, and the negligence complained of occurred mainly in the latter State. We are, therefore, of opinion that the demurrer to the third paragraph of appellee's answer was properly sustained.

For reasons herein indicated the judgment is affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Nunn dissenting.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY AND GUARANTY CO. v. OVERSTREET.

(Filed February 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Indemnity bond—Liability thereon—An indemnity bond conditioned that the surety "will make good and reimburse to the employer any pecuniary loss sustained by him of money, securities or other personal property in the possession of the employe in the discharge of the duties of his office" amounting to larceny or embezzlement," does not make the surety liable for money advanced by the employer to the employe to enable him to prosecute his work, expecting him to be charged with it all in his final settlement, or for money that the employer paid to his employe's creditors, but is responsible for money collected by the employe on contracts for the employer.

Bodley, Baskin & Flexner for appellant.

J. B. Wickliffe for appellee.

Appeal from Ballard Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee had in his employ one J. L. Davidson as compiler of material for an edition of appellee's newspaper. Davidson's duties as compiler seem to have been confined to soliciting advertising matter for the special edition, and collecting the pay for it. He was required by appellee to execute a bond indemnifying appellee against certain defalcations, which he did with appellant as surety. The obligation of the bond was that the surety would "make good and reimburse to the employer all and any pecuniary loss sustained by the employer, of money, securities, or other personal property in the possession of the employe (Davidson) in the discharge of the duties of his office or position as set forth, amounting to larceny or embezzlement, and which shall have been committed during a continuance of the bond." It was further stipulated in the bond: * * * "It being the true intent and meaning of this bond that the company (appellant) shall be responsible only as aforesaid, for moneys, securities or property diverted from the employer through fraud or dishonesty, amounting to larceny or embezzlement aforesaid, on the part of the employe within the period specified in this bond, while in the discharge of the duties of the office or position to which he has been elected or appointed."

Appellant advanced money and other property and credits to his compiler to enable the latter to prosecute his work, expecting that Davidson would be charged with it all in his final settlement. Upon the same idea appellee engaged to certain of Davidson's creditors that he would be responsible for his bills, and accordingly paid them. Before completing his work Davidson decamped, without repaying his employer the sums so advanced to him and on his account. In addition Davidson turned in certain contracts which turned out to have been forgeries, so it is said. The parties in whose names they appear to have been made repudiated them as not genuine. This suit against the surety sought to charge it with all of those matters, and in addition with $16, collected by Davidson from persons from whom he had taken contracts for appellee. We are of opinion that the last-named item, the $16 mentioned, was the only one covered by the bond. Appellant did not undertake to secure Davidson's debts, nor that he would fulfill his contract to do the work for appellee that he had engaged to do. It merely undertook to indemnify the employer against Davidson's peculations by which he might have misappropriated the former's funds to the latter's own use, without the consent of the former, and which had been entrusted to the latter's care, or which had come into his possession, or to which he had got access, by virtue of his employment.

Whether or not the old rule that a surety is a favorite of the law, and his contract will be construed strictly in his favor, applies to those who make it a business to become surety for pay, or whether the contract in the latter case is to be construed as any other insurance contract, that is, most strongly against the insurer, still the obligation can not be extended beyond the plain meaning of its expressed terms. The contract in this case is a limited one. It covers only a narrow liability. The parties have so agreed. And that is the end of it. (Chas. Brown Grocery Co. v. Wasson, 118 Ky., 414.)

We decide the case upon the record before us. What the application may have shown to enlarge the contract, if it showed anything on that point, is not before us.

The judgment must be reversed and cause remanded for a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

SPENCER CHRISTIAN CHURCH'S TRUSTEES, FOR USE v.
THOMAS, &c.

(Filed February 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Lands—The lot in controversy was properly adjudged to appellees, it having been shown they have the title and that appellants have neither pleaded nor shown one.

B. F. Day & Son and C. F. Thomas for appellants.

Robt. H. Winn for appellees.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is prosecuted by the appellants by which they seek to reverse a judgment of the Montgomery Circuit Court, rendered at its September term, 1902, in which a small strip of land, 107 by 169 feet, is adjudged to appellees as against appellants.

It appears from this record that appellees are the owners of and have the paper title to a tract of land lying on the north side of and adjoining the Spencer turnpike road; that prior to appellees becoming the owners thereof the appellants received a conveyance from one Ellis, the then owner of this tract, for one acre of land, the deed giving the metes and bounds thereof. This strip of land in controversy lies between this one acre belonging to the church and the turnpike road. It appears that this strip of land has never been enclosed by any character of fence, but it has been open and used by the persons occupying and attending a blacksmith's shop, situated at the east end thereof, and by persons attending the church, in fact, by all persons who desired to use or pass over it for sixty or seventy years. Appellees erected a tobacco barn on the west end of this strip. When they commenced to erect the barn this suit was instituted. It is conceded that the paper title to this property is in the appellees, but the appellants claim to be the owners of it by reason of the long adverse possession. Appellants prove the long use of it as stated, but they do not prove that the use was adverse or under a claim of right. There is not a scintilla of evidence to that effect. There is no claim of dedication of the property by the owners to this charity, or for any other purpose. There is no proof at all of adverse possession. The proof is that appellees and their tenants used this property as much, or more, than the appellants.

There can be no constructive possession of the same land by conflicting claimants. It is obvious that two persons claiming against each other can not at the same time be in the actual possession of the same premises, either in law or in fact. If both are present, claiming the title, the possession is his who has the title. In this case the appellees have the title, and the appellants have neither pleaded nor shown one. (Owsley, Sr. v. Owsley, Jr.,

HAMILTON V. MAYSVILLE & BIG SANDY R. R. CO., &C. 251

25 Ky. Law Rep., 1187; Taylor v. Shields' Heirs, 5 Lit., 295; Jones v. McCauley's Heirs, 2 Duv., 14; Wait, &c. v. Gower, &c., 11 Ky. Law Rep., 750. The court gave appellees the land, with passway to appellants.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Judge O'Rear not sitting.

HAMILTON v. MAYSVILLE & BIG SANDY R. R. CO., &c.

(Filed February 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Lands—Condemnation of—Tender—In this case it appears that appellant announced in open court that she would not accept the money awarded her for her land, and this being true, a tender was unnecessary, and appellee was excused when the money was deposited by it in open court.

A. D. Cole and T. R. Phister for appellant.

Worthington & Cochran and W. H. Wadsworth for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Appellee, the Maysville & Big Sandy R. R. Co., August 10, 1899, instituted proceedings in the Mason County Court to condemn a strip of land for its roadbed, through a lot belonging to appellant, containing about one acre. The commissioners awarded her $300. Exceptions were filed to the commissioner's report, which were tried before a jury in the county court. The jury also allowed her $300. She appealed therefrom to the Mason Circuit Court, and on a trial there she was awarded $500. She accepted this sum, and the same was paid to her and she conveyed the strip to appellee in March, 1900.

In March, 1903, she brought this action against appellees, claiming $1,000 damages for trespasses committed on this strip of land, alleged to have been done by appellees in October, 1899, which was after the rendition of the judgment in the Mason County Court, which she had appealed from. Appellees answered her petition, denying that she owned the land when the alleged trespasses were committed, and by a second paragraph set up the condemnation proceedings, making the transcript thereof a part of it, and also setting up the fact that on the rendition of the judgment in the county court she objected and excepted to the verdict and judgment, and announced in open court that she would not accept the verdict or receive payment of that sum for her property; and thereupon the appellees deposited with the court the $300, and paid all the costs of the proceeding to that date, and thereupon the court adjudged that the appellees were entitled to take possession of this strip of land and use and control same for the purpose for which it was condemned. Appellant demurred to this paragraph of the answer, which was overruled. She filed a reply, controverting the allegation as to the offer to pay and the deposit of the money. She, however, did not deny that she announced in open court that she objected and excepted to the verdict, and that she would not receive or accept that sum.

The question involved on this appeal is whether or not the judgment of the county court authorizing the appellees to take possession of this strip of land at the time and under the circumstances was void. Appellant claims that it was unauthorized and void for two reasons, to wit: First, the appellees did not tender the money to her as required by the statutes; second, that if section 889 of the statutes authorized the county court to make such an order, then the statute is violative of section 242 of the Constitution, and is void.

The last proposition was settled by this court in the case of C., St. L. & O. R. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 860. It is true that this case was considered by Burnam, C. J., in chambers on a motion to reinstate an injunction, but the whole court heard and considered the case with him, and his opinion was delivered as the opinion of the whole court. The opinion in that case decides that such an order of the county court and the taking possession of the property thereunder by the party at whose instance it is condemned is legal. As to the proposition of tender, it is sufficient to say that a tender in money is excused when the party to whom it should be made declares he will not receive it. (Dorsey v. Barbee, Litt. Sel. Cas., 204.)

In the case at bar it appears without contradiction that appellant announced in open court that she would not accept the money, and it would have been futile and unnecessary to do otherwise than to deposit the money with the court, as was done in this case.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS PACIFIC R. R. CO. v.
BURGESS.

(Filed February 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Instructions—In this action against appellant for the killing of stock the court properly instructed the jury that while it is the duty of the engineer to keep a lookout ahead of the train to see if the track is clear of obstructions, yet he is not required to keep his eyes constantly on the track in front of him, but only that he should exercise reasonable care in the discharge of his duty.

2. Same—The rule in this State is that if there is any evidence the question is for the jury, and in cases like this, where the circumstances showed that the stock might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have been seen in time to avoid a collision, and warranted such finding of the jury, this court has uniformly held that a peremptory instruction should not be given.

V. F. Bradley and John Galvin for appellant.

Montgomery & Lee for appellee.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant's fast train going south about 9 o'clock at night ran into a lot of mules owned by appellee, killing eight and wounding another. To recover for this he filed this suit. The jury to whom the case was submitted returned a verdict in his favor for $705, on which the court entered judgment, and the defendant appeals.

There is no complaint of the instructions of the court or of the admission or rejection of evidence. The only complaint is that the evidence does not warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, and that at the conclusion of the testimony the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant. The proof for the defendant is to the effect that the mules were on a curve, and that by reason of the curve the engineer of the train could not see them until he got within two hundred and fifty or three hundred yards of them; that the train could not be stopped within less than a quarter of a mile, and that after the mules were discovered on the track everything was done which could have been done to avoid striking them. The train was furnished with an electric headlight, which was so arranged as to throw the light straight ahead on the track, and where the track curved the light would follow a straight line and would not be thrown upon the track around the curve. If there had been no other evidence but that of the defendant there would be great force in the argument made for it. But the plaintiff showed that the mules were struck and knocked from the track at a point only five rail lengths from the beginning of the curve, and that from this point there was a plain view northward for about seven hundred yards. His proof also showed that there was blood on the ties two rail lengths north of where the mules were knocked from the track, and that for three rail lengths north of this point there were tracks of the mules cupping the ground, caused evidently from running in front of the train. If this proof was true the mules when they began to run were at or about the beginning of the curve, with a straight track north of them for some distance. A rail is thirty feet long, and the distance that the mules ran before they were hit by the train running about forty-five miles an hour was some evidence that the train was pretty close to them when they began to run, or that it then had entered on the straight track north of them. One of the mules was caught upon the pilot and carried there something like two hundred yards to where the train stopped. This mule may have been the first one struck, and may account for the blood found two rail lengths north of where the other mules were knocked off. The proof for the plaintiff showed that the electric headlight lighted the place where the mules were knocked off when the train was at least seven hundred yards from it, and while some of this proof is not entitled to much weight, that of the surveyor who measured the ground is of more value.

The court properly instructed the jury that while it is the duty of the engineer to keep a lookout ahead of the train to see that the track is clear of obstructions, yet the law does not require that he should keep his eyes constantly on the track in front of him, but only he should use reasonable diligence and caution in the discharge of this duty. The rule in this State is that if there is any evidence the question is for the jury, and in cases similar to this, where the circumstances showed that the stock might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have been seen in time to avoid a collision, and warranted such a finding by the jury, this court has uniformly held that a peremptory instruction should not be given. The law raises a presumption that the injury of stock is due to the negligence of the railroad company, and this presumption can not be said to be overthrown as a matter of law when the evidence shows such a state of facts as appears here.

Judgment affirmed.

MANDERS' COMMITTEE v. EASTERN STATE HOSPITAL.

(Filed February 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Lunatics—Pleading—A motion to dismiss an action by an asylum for the keeping of a lunatic for want of demand upon the committee before suit brought was properly overruled, as this was waived by filing a demurrer to the petition.

2. Depositions—While the Virginia officer in his certificate to the depositions does not certify that the witnesses were sworn, he does so state in the caption, and the whole deposition, including the caption, must be read, and when so read it sufficiently appears that the witnesses were sworn.

8. Jurisdiction—Limitation of actions—Where Manders took his wife to Virginia temporarily on a visit, where she became insane and was committed to an asylum in that State, but he kept his residence in Kentucky, keeping her estate here, an action by the asylum for keeping her could only be maintained in this State, and, therefore, the limitation provided for by the Kentucky Statutes in such cases must govern, for a Virginia statute of limitation could not be applied to an action that could not be enforced in that State.

Beard & Marshall for appellant.

Pickett & Barrickman and Gilbert & Gilbert for appellee.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Mary T. Manders has been confined in the Eastern State Hospital of the State of Virginia as a lunatic since the year 1897. C. S. Weakley, as her committee, appointed in Shelby county, Kentucky, has in his hands an estate amounting to something over $2,800 belonging to her.

This action was brought by the Virginia asylum against Mrs. Manders and her committee to recover for her keeping during the time that she has been in the asylum at the rate of $260 a year. The circuit court allowed five years of the claim at $150 a year. From this judgment the committee appeals, and the asylum prosecutes a cross appeal. Before proceeding to the merits of the case we will dispose of some preliminary matters. The motion to dismiss the action for want of demand on the committee before suit brought was properly overruled, as this was waived by filing a general demurrer to the petition. Objections of this character must be made at the threshold. A general demurrer goes to the merits of the case. A litigant can not ask the judgment of the court on the merits of the case, and after being defeated on this plead matter in abatement, such as want of demand, accompanied by proper verification before suit. While the Virginia officer in the certificate to his deposition does not certify that the witnesses were sworn, he does so state in the caption. The whole depositions must be read, including the caption as well as the certificate, and when they are so read it sufficiently appears that the witnesses were sworn.

The motion to transfer the case to the ordinary side of the docket was properly overruled, as there was unreasonable delay in making the motion. (Chenault v. Eastern Kentucky Timber and Lumber Co., 96 Ky. Law Rep., 1078.) The motion for continuance was also properly overruled, as the plaintiff consented that the affidavit for continuance might be read as the deposition of the witnesses. There was no show that a further delay of the case was necessary.

The facts of the case are that Mary T. Manders was a married woman, living with her husband in Shelbyville, Ky., and about the year 1895 was adjudged a dangerous lunatic, and sent to the Eastern Kentucky Asylum. After being in the asylum for some time she was released as a harmless patient, and returned to Shelbyville. Not long after this she was again taken to the asylum, where she remained a short time, when her husband, at the request of her sister, who lived in Richmond, Va., took her from the asylum to her sister's house, hoping that the change would benefit her. After she had been in Richmond a short time, in February, 1897, on the application of her husband a writ of lunacy was obtained against her, which was heard under the statutes of that State by three magistrates, who committed her to the Eastern State Hospital of Virginia, and there she has remained since. At the time of this inquest Manders and his wife were both in Richmond, and he appears to have remained there a year or two afterwards, and in fact died there in the year 1901, though he returned to Kentucky between times, and seems to have always claimed Shelbyville as his home, and only to have voted in Kentucky. They had only one child, a son about fourteen years of age, who went with his father. Mrs. Manders was then about fifty-three or fifty-four years of age. Her lunacy was due to the drowning of her eldest son at Shelbyville. She is subject to illusions; calls herself Miss Wouldridge, and says that she has had four husbands. It is apparent from the record that she was sent to the asylum in Virginia, and has been kept there, as a resident of the State of Virginia. It is also apparent that while John Manders has lived much of his time in Richmond, he has claimed his home in Shelbyville, Ky. The son died before his father. At the time of the inquest in Virginia John Manders was committee for his wife. He kept in communication with the asylum authorities and was informed by them of her condition, which seems to have been much the same during the whole time. When Manders resigned as committee and Weakley was appointed, Weakley was informed of the whereabouts of his ward. The authorities of the asylum did not know that Mrs. Manders had an estate until just before this suit was filed, when the husband brought a suit against the committee to have the property turned over to him. The laws of Virginia as to the lunatic asylums are in substance the same as the laws of Kentucky, that is to say, if a person is committed as a State patient, an action may be brought in the name of the asylum to recover for his keep if it turns out that he has property; but the statute of limitations there is three years instead of five as in this State. This is proven in the record, although the Virginia statute of limitations is not sufficiently pleaded by the defendant.

The rule is that a foreign statute must be pleaded as any other fact, and not being pleaded is not available. But in this case we have a suit against a lunatic and her committee to take her estate from the hands of her committee. She is a ward of the court, and her committee is subject to the control of the court. In such a case, if there is a formal defect in the pleading of the committee, the court must order an amendment, and find the facts according to the proof as shown by the record. The committee attempted to plead the statute, but did not plead it sufficiently. We will, therefore, consider the case as though the statute had been sufficiently pleaded. The circuit court applied the Kentucky statute of five years. The cross appeal questions the correctness of this ruling, as it is insisted that the Kentucky statute was also not properly pleaded. But for the same reason we must disregard the defect in the plea as the circuit court treated it as sufficient, instead of ordering a forthwith amendment to conform to the facts, as he would no doubt otherwise have done.

The general rule is that limitation is governed by the law of the forum and not by the law of the place where the contract took place or cause of action accrued, but section 2542, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows: "When a cause of action has arisen in another State or country between residents of such State or country, or between them and residents of another State or country, and by the laws of the State or country where the cause of action accrued an action can not be maintained thereon by reason of the lapse of time, no action can be maintained thereon in this State."

In Labatt v. Smith, 88 Ky., 599, the court considered this statute, and held that it applied only to a cause of action arising in another State between citizens of that State, or between them and citizens of another State or country other than Kentucky; and that it did not apply in favor of a resident of this State when sued in the courts of this State upon such a cause of action. It is unnecessary for us to determine how far the rule laid down in that case is applicable here. The proof shows clearly that John Manders and wife were, in 1897, citizens of Kentucky; that he took his wife to Richmond, Va., at the invitation of her sister, hoping that the change of climate would benefit her, and that he always recognized Shelbyville, Ky., as his home. There is nothing in the record to warrant the conclusion that he changed his domicile to Virginia, and, therefore, he remained a citizen of Kentucky. He evidently had her placed in the Virginia asylum without intending any wrong on the State of Virginia, and in ignorance of the fact that she, being a resident of Kentucky, should have been brought back here to a Kentucky asylum. Though the lunatic has been in Virginia since the year 1897, her estate has been in Kentucky, and her committee has been here. The courts of Virginia could have no jurisdiction to subject her estate, and no personal judgment could have been rendered against the lunatic. Her estate could only be reached in the courts of Kentucky, and, therefore, the Kentucky statute of limitation must govern the action, for the Virginia statute of limitation can not be applied to a cause of action which could not be enforced in the courts of Virginia.

It is insisted, however, that the Virginia statutes defining the appellee's powers have no extra-territorial effect, and that a Virginia asylum can not sue in this State under those statutes. It is also insisted that it is not shown that the plaintiff is incorporated, or that it had authority to receive Mrs. Manders. It appears from the evidence that the Virginia asylum was incorporated early in the history of the State, and that the original articles of incorporation have been burned. Aside from all this, the Virginia statutes, which are exhibited, make it at least a quasi corporation, with power to sue in such cases as this. It is also authorized to receive patients other than those sent there by law on such terms as the board may direct, and a wife's property is made responsible for her keeping.

While there is some evidence that the relatives of Mrs. Manders were willing to give a bond and keep her at home, it is clear from the evidence that both they and her husband acquiesced in her being kept in the asylum, and the weight of the evidence does not show that any bond was in fact offered, or at least that the Virginia authorities ever so understood. But, however this may be, the lunatic has been cared for by the asylum with not only the acquiescence of her relatives, but by the procurement and acquiescence of her husband, who was also her committee; and this has also been acquiesced in by her present committee. The proof is clear that somebody had to take care of her, and as her keeping was necessary to her, her estate is liable upon a quantum meruit to the asylum for what she has thus received. Our statute allows $150 a year for similar services, and from the proof in the case this is a reasonable allowance here. We, therefore, conclude that the circuit court properly allowed the sum of $150 for five years, and see no reason for disturbing his judgment on the original or on the cross appeal. The circuit court retained the case for such further orders as may be necessary. To prevent further costs, as all the parties are before him, and it is important that the committee be directed in the discharge of his duties, under the plaintiff's prayer for general relief the court should, on the return of the case, make an order directing the committee to pay the asylum at the same rate, $150 a year, for the subsequent time as long as his ward remains in the asylum, and he has funds in his hands sufficient for this purpose.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. SMITH.

(Filed February 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Damages—Evidence—In this action by appellee against appellant for damages caused by appellant's servants in moving its cars, his statements while testifying to the jury that his physicians had advised him that an operation was necessary and would have to be performed, and in relating a dream that his hand would have to be amputated, and proof by other witnesses of what he had told them several months after his injury of the sufferings he had undergone, were incompetent for any purpose. The testimony as to what the physician stated would have been competent had it been testified to by the physician, but coming from appellee it was mere hearsay, and the testimony as to the dream can not be justified upon any ground, nor should others have been permitted to relate conversations had with him in which he related the nature and extent of his sufferings.

2. Same—Conduct of counsel in argument—Where statements of counsel are made outside of the record and were otherwise improper and calculated to inflame and excite the passions of the jury, and thereby induce them to disregard the evidence and go to an extreme and unjustifiable length in arriving at a verdict, it was error in the trial court not to admonish the jury to disregard them.

Benjamin D. Warfield and W. C. McChord for appellant.

Henry & Woodward for appellee.

Appeal from Green Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, H. O. Smith, recovered a verdict and judgment in the Green Circuit Court for $2,750 in damages for an injury to his hand, caused by the alleged negligence of appellant's servants in moving its cars.

It was averred in the petition that at the time of receiving his injuries the appellee was in a closed car, which appellant had put upon its side track at Greensburg for his use, placing therein, for shipment, buggy rims that were being handed him by a colored boy on the ground, when the appellant's servants in charge of an engine and certain of its cars detached two of the latter from the train, and without notice to appellee negligently permitted them to be run backward with great and unnecessary force against the car in which he was at work, which would have caused appellee to be thrown down, or perhaps out of the car, but for the fact that he in some sort maintained his equilibrium by suddenly throwing out his hand, but in doing so it came in contact with the car, or buggy rims, thereby greatly bruising and injuring it.

The material statements of the petition were specifically denied by the answer, which interposed the further defense that appellee's injuries were caused wholly by his own negligence. The plea of contributory negligence was denied by reply, and upon the issues thus made the parties went into trial, with the result indicated. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the lower court erred in refusing to give a peremptory instruction directing the jury to find for appellant. We do not think a peremptory instruction would have been proper. While the evidence as to the manner in which appellee received his injuries was conflicting, it left no doubt of the fact that appellant for hire put the car on the side track for his use. He was, therefore, a licensee, and it was the duty of appellant's servants in making up its train to use ordinary care to protect him from injury, if they knew, or by the use of such care could have known, of his presence in the car. It appears from the appellee's evidence that they knew appellee was in the car and what he was doing, and with such knowledge, if they, without notice to him, as the evidence of appellee further conduced to show was the case, turned loose two cars on the side track without a brakeman on either, and the cars collided with that in which appellee was at work with such force as to cause his injuries, such a state of facts would seem to warrant a verdict in appellee's favor.

Upon the other hand, if, notwithstanding the negligence of appellant's servants, appellee knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the turning loose of the cars, and of the danger to him from a collision between them and the car he was in in time to have protected himself from injury, and yet negligently failed to take such steps as would secure his safety, he was not entitled to recover. Much of appellant's testimony conduced to prove that appellee was familiar with the movements of appellant's trains at the place of the accident, and that on the occasion of his injuries he knew or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the approach of the cars and of the danger of a collision between them and the one he was on in time to have prevented his injuries. It was the duty of the jury to pass upon the evidence, and though it was conflicting, they had the right to accept the testimony of appellee's witnesses, and reject that of appellant's witnesses. This court will not invade the domain of the jury and disturb their verdict upon the ground that it is against the weight of the evidence.

It is only when there is no evidence to support the verdict, or when it is so flagrantly against the evidence as to indicate that it was superinduced by passion or prejudice upon the part of the jury, that the court will be authorized to set it aside, in the absence of errors of law upon the part of the court occurring upon the trial. We find no substantial error in the instructions. Though unnecessarily elaborate, they fairly presented all the law necessary to enlighten the jury and guide them in arriving at a verdict. Another complaint urged by appellant is that the lower court admitted incompetent evidence in appellee's behalf upon the trial, that is, appellee was allowed to state that he had been advised that his injury was very bad; that Drs. Van Meter and Shively advised him that he would be compelled to have an operation performed, and he was also permitted to relate the following: "I dreamed one night that my hand was to be amputated. It troubled me a great deal how I would get my hand back again. I dreamed I told my wife to take the hand and put it in ice to preserve it so that all of my body could be buried together."

In addition to the foregoing the court permitted appellee to prove by the witnesses, George Perkins, Joe Cantrill and Charles Mudd, what he told them several months after he was injured of his suffering from the wounded hand. It seems to be well settled that where the physical or mental suffering of a person resulting from an injury are the proper subjects of inquiry, the usual expression of such suffering manifested or made at the time may be admitted as original evidence.

In Bocan v. Charlton, 7 Cush., 586, it is said: "Where the bodily and mental feelings of a party are to be proved, the usual and natural expression of such feelings made at the time are considered competent and original evidence in his favor. There are ills and pains of the body which are proper subjects of proof in a court of justice which can be shown in no other way. Such evidence, however, is not to be extended beyond the necessity on which the rule is founded. Anything in the narration or statement is to be carefully excluded, and the testimony is to be confined strictly to such complaints, exclamations and expressions as usually and naturally accompany and furnish evidence of a present existing pain or malady."

The above statement of the law was quoted with approval by this court in Shade's Adm'r v. Covington, &c., Bridge Co., ante, 224, and ordered to be reported. Shade's administrator sued to recover damages for the death of his intestate caused by a fall on the ice on the defendant's bridge. The only evidence as to the manner of her fall was furnished by the statement of the intestate made to her physicians after she had been taken home, to whom she said: "She had fallen on the ice on the C. & O. bridge." It was contended that this and other declarations made to her physician in explanation of the cause of her injury, and to enable him to properly treat her, were of the res gestæ, and receivable in evidence as such. In discussing the admissibility of the declaration in question the court, speaking through Judge O'Rear, said: "Here the party whose statement is offered to be proved was suffering from a physical injury. What she said to her physician as to the pain it then caused her, and the effect it had upon her senses, was necessary for him to know in order that he might intelligently treat the injury. Under such circumstances it is presumed that the party suffering will state truly how she is affected, as otherwise the medical man might be at a loss as to the remedies needful to her condition. The incentive for a fair statement is so great that the presumption is she will not hazard an untruth to better her financial condition, as by fabricating a basis of claim against the person charged with her injury at the expense of her permanent health or maybe of her life. For that reason the law allows the proof of what she said to her physician at the time of his examination as part of the res gestæ. What the injured party may have said to any one at the time of the injury, or so immediately after it as to be regarded part of it, as being the verbal part of a continuing occurrence would also be admitted upon familiar grounds. What was said after the lapse of some minutes, a half hour or so, in this case, to the attending physician, to aid him in determining the nature of the injury and to prescribe a remedy or treatment, is allowed as an extension of the same rule of evidence. It rests logically upon the necessity of the case. It is matter proper to be shown, and not susceptible generally of being otherwise proven. But it must stop with the necessity for it. It was necessary for the physician to know whether the patient was suffering, and where the pain was, and as to its character. It was also proper that he should know how the pain was inflicted, as upon that knowledge the treatment in part might depend. So it was competent to show that the patient said she had received a blow on her head (if she did say it), and how she was otherwise hurt. But it was wholly immaterial to the physician understanding what it was necessary for him to know in treating the injuries, whether she fell on appellee's bridge, or elsewhere, or that she fell on the ice."

In the light of the foregoing authorities it is manifest that the testimony complained of in the case at bar was incompetent for any purpose. If the physician called to treat appellee's injuries expressed to him the opinion that amputation of his hand was or would become necessary, that fact would have been competent if testified to by the physician as an expert, but coming from appellee, as it did, as a fact communicated to him by the physician, it was mere hearsay, and should have been excluded. The admission of appellee's relation of his dream as evidence can not be justified upon any ground. It was competent for him to testify fully as to the nature and extent of his suffering, and if at the time of the trial the wounded hand gave him pain, he had the right to state that fact; but in reciting his dream he violated all rules of evidence. It is true certain learned writers maintain that dreams are due to the physical and mental condition of the dreamer, but we apprehend that no law writer of note will venture to recommend, or court of last resort will hold, that dreams be admitted as evidence to prove the existence of pain or suffering.

For the reasons mentioned it is equally clear that the statements made by appellee to Perkins, Cantrill and Mudd, several months after his injuries were received, in which he told them of his sufferings, were incompetent.

They might have been allowed to testify that he suffered from the wounded hand at the times named by them, and even that he complained of pain from that member, but should not have been allowed to relate conversations had with him in which he related the nature and extent of his sufferings.

We think the incompetent evidence was prejudicial to the appellant because it unduly emphasized and enlarged appellee's injuries. We do not know to what extent it influenced the jury, and it is useless to speculate as to its effect, but there was so much of it, and it was so calculated to reach the sympathies of the jury, that it is safe to say it must have given them an exaggerated idea of appellee's injuries, and perhaps served to swell the verdict far beyond what it would have been if the incompetent evidence had not been admitted.

In the closing argument to the jury learned counsel of appellee said to them: "The defendant in this case is a soulless corporation, making millions of dollars every day. Its money is worth 150 cents on the dollar, and Heck Smith's (appellee) money is only worth 100 cents to the dollar. Notwithstanding the great wealth of this soulless corporation, it doesn't know who owns it; whether it is J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., or J. W. Gates, the great trust magnate, God Almighty only knows."

At this point objection was made by appellant's counsel to these remarks of the speaker. The court thereupon told counsel for appellee that his line of argument was improper, but did not command him to desist or admonish the jury to disregard the improper language. After being thus told by the court that his line of argument was improper, counsel for appellee in reply to, and without rebuke from the court, said in the presence and hearing of the jury: "That may be so, but every word of it is true, and you know it."

Again counsel for appellee made this further statement to the jury: "To show how this great soulless corporation treats widow women, a widow woman brought suit against this company down in Hart county." At this point counsel for appellant again objected to the remarks of the speaker; the court said to counsel that his statements were not proper, but did not tell the jury to disregard them. The speaker then facing counsel for appellant said to him in the presence of the jury: "I will give you $2.50 to let me tell the story."

Finally counsel for appellee said to the jury: "I cross the track of this company at the depot at Greensburg every day, and I know that you run your cars wild there, and it has got to be stopped if I have to bring an injunction suit to stop it."

The last statement of counsel does not appear to have been noticed by the court, though objected to at the time by opposing counsel. Exceptions were taken by appellant's counsel to the failure of the court to exclude from the jury the improper remarks of appellee's counsel. We are of opinion that the statements of counsel complained of were outside of the record and otherwise improper, calculated to inflame the passions and excite the prejudices of the jury, and thereby induce them to disregard the evidence and go to an extreme and unjustifiable length in arriving at a verdict. The trial court erred, therefore, in not admonishing the jury to disregard them.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial and further proceedings consistent with the opinion.

Whole court sitting.

BORUM v. ALLEN.

(Filed February 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Partnership—In this action to recover the amount alleged to be due upon a contract of sale of an interest in a partnership between the parties, the instructions fairly presenting the law applicable to the case, and there being evidence upon which the jury was authorized to find a verdict for appellee, the verdict and judgment in his favor will not be disturbed.

Robt. Harding, R. L. Greene and Denton & Robinson for appellants.

Sharpe & Siler for appellee.

Appeal from Pulaski Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellee, Allen, and the appellant, Borum, were copartners under the name of the "New Century Publishing Co.," and were engaged in publishing a magazine called "The Mistress of the Manse," at Somerset, Ky. Appellee Allen alleged in his petition, and introduced proof conducing to show, that the appellants formed a copartnership for the purpose of continuing this publication, and alleged that they purchased his interest therein for the price of $654.05, one half payable in twelve months and the remainder in two years.

Appellants by their answer denied this, and introduced proof to show that they did not form a partnership nor purchase appellee's interest therein at the price named, or at any price. This action involves the first payment of one-half of the purchase price, the other half not being due at the institution of this action.

The court gave to the jury two instructions, as follows:

"1st, If you believe from the evidence that the defendants, W. A. Borum and W. P. Harvey, entered into a contract of copartnership, and as partners agreed to and did purchase the interest of plaintiff, in the magazine, 'Mistress of the Manse,' and agreed to pay plaintiff the amount of money he had expended with reference thereto, in installments at one and two years, and that in pursuance to said contract it was agreed between defendants that defendant Borum should submit the agreement defendants had made to the plaintiff for his acceptance or rejection; and you shall further believe that in pursuance to the agreement between the defendants said agreement, or the terms thereof, was submitted to the plaintiff by defendant Borum, and that the plaintiff accepted same, you will find for the plaintiff the one-half of the money he has invested in the magazine, to wit, the sum of $327.02, with interest thereon from September 21, 1901, until paid, and unless you so believe, you will find for defendants.

"2d. Unless you believe that a partnership was entered into and existed between defendants Borum and Harvey at the time the contract with the plaintiff is alleged to have been made, you will find for the defendants."

These instructions fairly presented to the jury the issues to be tried. It is unnecessary to refer to and discuss in detail the evidence produced on the trial. There was evidence upon which the jury was authorized to find a verdict for the appellee. It appears that there were no errors committed at the trial to the prejudice of appellants, and we do not feel authorized to disturb the finding of the jury upon the facts.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL CO.

(Filed February 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Taxation—Limitation — Construction of statutes—Where property was bought by appellee in 1896 from the United States Government, but was not assessed by appellant, the deed to appellee not having been recorded, for the years 1896, 1897 and 1898. In November, 1898, the appellant assessed the property retrospectively, in the name of W. N. Haldeman, the deed not being of record and appellant's officers being under the impression that he owned it. In an action against him, and while it was pending, he died, and it was revived in the name of his personal representatives, and afterwards appellee had a deed conveying the property to it recorded and pleaded the five years' statute of limitation, on the ground that the cause of action for the taxes for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1897, accrued to the city of Louisville on August 20, 1897, and that the cause of action was not commenced until November 8, 1902, or more than five years thereafter. Held—The provision that the property may be retrospectively assessed would be entirely nugatory under the provisions of the statutes in many cases if it was held that the statute ran from August 20 of the year, although the property had not been assessed. Such a construction would require the court to hold that the legislature contemplated not allowing five years for the assessment, but five years for all the other steps that were required to be taken before suit could be brought, which would not give fair effect to the statute.

H. L. Stone for appellant.

Lane & Harrison for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

A lot on the corner of Green and Third streets in Louisville, Ky., was the property of the United States government. On it stood the customhouse which was used for many years. In the summer of 1896 this property was bought from the government by the Louisville Courier-Journal Co., of which W. N. Haldeman was president and owner of a majority of the stock. The deed for the property was made by the government to the Courier-Journal Co., but the city did not assess it for taxation in September 1896-7 or 8, the deed from the government to the company not having been recorded. Finally, in November, 1898, the property was assessed by the city retrospectively, but this assessment was made in the name of W. N. Haldeman, as the deed was not recorded and the assessing officers seem to have been under the impression that he was the purchaser. Finally this suit was brought on July 26, 1901, against W. N. Haldeman to recover, among other things, for the tax bill for the year 1897. Haldeman filed an answer, denying ownership of the property, and alleging that it was exempt from taxation as the property of the government. A reply was filed, and afterwards Haldeman died. An amended petition was then filed, reviving the case against his executors and devisees. They then filed an answer, in substance the same as that filed by the testator. After this, on November 8, 1902, the deed to the Courier-Journal Co. having been in the meantime recorded, the city amended its petition, and made the Courier-Journal Co. a defendant, praying judgment against the property as before for its taxes. The Courier-Journal Co. answered, pleading the five years' statute of limitation, on the ground that the cause of action for the taxes in the fiscal year ending August 31, 1897, accrued to the city of Louisville on August 20, 1897, and that the action was not commenced against it until November 8, 1902, or more than five years thereafter.

It is provided in the statute that the fact that the property may be assessed in the name of the wrong person shall not invalidate the assessment if the property is correctly described. It is also provided as follows in the same connection: "Whenever, by the complaint of the party assessed, or otherwise, it appears that any property has been assessed in a name other than that of the owner or holder, the city assessor shall, after notice through the mail to the owner or holder, at the time of the notice, make the correction, whether for the current or any preceding year, in his books, and certify such correction to the tax receiver, and to the corrected assessment and to the retrospective assessments hereinafter authorized, the remedies of sections 2997 to 3009, both inclusive, shall attach, beginning with the first of May after the correction or retrospective assessment is certified to the receiver. When any lands or improvements shall not be assessed in any one year they may, when the omission is discovered, be assessed retrospectively for that year at any time not later than five years thereafter; but the lien thereby accruing to the city shall not prejudice the right of purchasers acquired in the meantime; and for any damage arising to the city by the loss of the lien the assessor guilty of the omission, together with his bondsmen, shall be liable. Any person thus retrospectively assessed may, within thirty days after the mailing of a notice thereof to him, file in the assessor's office the complaint provided for in the next section. If he does so, the assessment shall not become binding, nor shall any bill be issued thereupon until it be passed on as in the next section provided. (Section 2991, Kentucky Statutes.)

"The assessment books in the section named shall remain open in the assessor's office from the 15th to the 30th of November, and any one who thinks that his lands or improvements, or those in which he has an interest, though they be not assessed in his name, have been assessed beyond their value, may, before the last-named day, file with the assessor his complaint, specifying the parcel and alleged excess, and the complaint shall forthwith be investigated by the board of equalization, which shall, according to the justice of the case, approve or reduce the assessment. It may, after notice to the taxpayer, increase the assessment, if satisfied, on investigation, that it is too low, either as to real or personal property." (Section 2993, Kentucky Statutes.)

By section 2997, above referred to, it is provided when the tax bill shall be made out by the assessor and listed for collection with the tax receiver, and necessarily this is not to be done as to property omitted from assessment until it is assessed as provided in section 2991. By section 2999 notice must be given by the tax receiver, and if the bills remain unpaid warrants are issued which, under section 2002, may be levied on personalty by the tax receiver. The taxes still remaining unpaid on the 1st day of May following may be enforced by action by the city. (Section 2998, Kentucky Statutes.) The provision that the property may be retrospectively assessed for five years would be entirely nugatory under these provisions in many cases if it was held that the statute ran from August 20th of the year, although the property had not been assessed. Such a construction would require us to hold that the legislature contemplated not allowing five years for the assessment, but five years for all the other steps that were required to be taken before a suit could be brought. This would not be to give a fair effect to the statute. The assessment is the basis of the proceeding. Until the assessment is made there is no liability which may be enforced, and the city has no cause of action against the property. The purpose of allowing five years for property, which has been omitted, to be assessed retrospectively is to guard against the negligence of the city officials and to prevent their negligence from releasing property from taxation or affecting the revenues of the city.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer to the plea of limitation and for further proceedings consistent herewith.

COMMONWEALTH v. BECKETT.

(Filed February 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Indictments—Obtaining money under false pretenses—Where appellee swapped horses with another, it being agreed that he was to receive $7.50 to boot, and after the exchange of horses had been made appellee handed the other party a $10 Confederate bill, with the remark, "Give me $2.50; here is a $10 bill," he was guilty of the crime denounced by section 1208, Kentucky Statutes, and a demurrer to the indictment against him should have been overruled.

2. Same—A proposition to sell an article for $10, without designating the currency in which the price is to be paid, implies that the seller is to get lawful money or currency of the United States, and the use of a worthless bill, pretending that it is valid, and with the intent to defraud, is a false token under the statute.

Ed. Daum and N. B. Hays for appellant.

Appeal from Bracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This appeal involves the sufficiency of an indictment against appellee, charging him with obtaining money and property under false pretenses. (Kentucky Statutes, section 1208.) A demurrer was sustained to the indictment. It is charged that appellee fraudulently, knowingly and with the wicked intent to deceive and defraud one William C. French, induced the latter to part with $2.50 lawful money of the United States, which belonged to said French, in exchange in part for a $10 bill of the Confederate States of America. The particulars of the transaction were set forth in the indictment, the substance of which is that appellee and said French swapped horses, it being agreed that appellee was to pay French $7.50 to boot. The horses were exchanged, and appellee handed French a $10 Confederate bill, with the remark, "Give me $2.50; here is a $10 bill." French believing it was a bill for $10 of lawful money, its appearance being quite similar to the treasury silver certificates for that sum, gave appellee the $2.50, and accepted the Confederate bill as good money, without knowledge or suggestion that it was what it was. It is charged that appellee knew at the time that it was a Confederate bill, and intended by his words and conduct to deceive French into believing it was a bill of lawful currency, and did so deceive him. It is said that the indictment was held to be bad because there was no specific statement by appellee that the bill was United States currency. The statute is (section 1208): "If any person, by false pretenses, statement or token, with intention to commit a fraud, obtain from another money, property or other things which may be the subject of larceny, * * * he shall be confined in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years."

It seems to be conceded that all the conditions of the statute are satisfied except that of the false pretense, statement or token. It is the deceit, falsely and fraudulently superinduced by a beneficiary whereby the latter obtains money or property of value, that is sought to be repressed by the statute. When one intentionally creates a belief as to an existing fact, which is false, and with the intent to defraud another of his property, and does so, it can not matter whether the erroneous belief was induced by words, or acts, or both. The mischief may be done as effectually by one method as by another. Some words by their common employment may imply other words not spoken. A proposition to sell an article for $10, without designating the currency in which the price is to be paid, in this country implies that the seller is to get lawful money or currency of the United States of America. When the buyer agrees to pay the price and offers a bill in payment, purporting to be a bill of the currency of the circulating medium of the country, it is implied that he thereby represents that it is of that currency, if nothing to the contrary is stated. This amounts to an assertion or representation by conduct, which may be as efficacious to convey an idea, or to constitute the basis of a reasonable belief, as though exact and appropriate words had been used. Words are used to express ideas. Signs might be used instead. Conduct that conveys necessarily the same idea, and intended to do so, is but a substitute for the words or signs expressive of it. We have no doubt but that the use of a worthless bill, pretending it is valid, and with the intent to defraud, is a false token under the statute. (State v. Pallito, 4 Hawks, N. Car., 348; State v. Stroll, 1 Rich., L., S. Car., 244; State v. Grooms, 5 Strobb. L., S. Car., 158.)

It may be said that a false representation or token is not within the statute "unless calculated to deceive persons of ordinary prudence and discretion." (2 Whart. Crim. Law, 2129; Commonwealth v. Grady, 13 Bush, 285.) This is true only in a limited sense, for the statute was not designed to protect only the ordinarily wary and prudent, who in spite of their vigilance might be overreached by the clever rogue, but must have been aimed at all scoundrelism who, by false statements or tokens, succeeded in hoodwinking the unwary, or even the foolish, into parting with their property.

The statute has a two-fold purpose: First. To protect the owner of property against cheats. Second. To punish the cheater. It can not be said that the law is partial to "persons of ordinary prudence and discretion" in protecting them in their property, whilst it leaves imprudent and silly persons as lawful prey for frauds. On the other hand, in punishing the wrongdoer, his motive and its results are the main subjects of inquiry. Under this statute the wicked purpose, the fraud, is equivalent to the same ingredients in theft. So is the result the same. The distinguishing feature is, in theft, the owner does not intentionally part with the title and possession of his property, while under this statute he does. It would not do to say that to steal from a careless or imprudent person is not punishable, though the statutes against larceny aim to protect the owner in the possession of his property, as well as to punish the thief who purloins it. Under the statute being considered the pretense or token must be false. Where a token is used it must be calculated to deceive, according to the capacity of the person to whom it is presented to detect its falsity under the circumstances. A token that might be calculated to deceive a blind man, or one in the dark, or a child, would not necessarily be a false token when used upon one who could see, and who had mature judgment. (Peckham v. State, 38 S. W., 582, Texas Crim. App.) Nor would absurd or irrational pretenses, not ordinarily calculated to deceive one of the intellectual capacity and discretion of the person upon whom it may have been practiced, be sufficient, it seems. (Woodbury v. State, 69 Ala., 242; 44 Am. Rep., 515; People v. Crissie, 4 Den., 525.) Or, where the representation is as to the state of the title to real estate, a record of which is accessible to the vendee, the representation, though false, can not be said to have induced the action, for a registration of deeds is provided for the express purpose of protecting purchasers of real estate, to which they are presumed to have recourse for final information concerning facts shown by them, and about the existence of which there need be no doubt, it can not be said that the vendee could have been deceived by the oral representations respecting the state of the title. This is the reason supporting the decision in Commonwealth v. Grady, 13 Bush, 285. While in Commonwealth v. Haughey, 3 Met., 223, the facts were that Jones, the person alleged to have been defrauded, really parted with nothing upon the misrepresentation. Furthermore, it appears that the misrepresentation was as to quality of a crop of tobacco, a matter of opinion, not the subject of the statute. Whether the false token is one calculated to deceive one of the capacity and understanding and in the situation of the prosecuting witness is a question of fact to be found by the jury. (Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind., 507.) In People v. Oyer and Terminer, 83 N. Y., 436, it is laid down distinctly that the pretenses must be calculated to deceive, leaving that to be determined by the jury, and if the pretense was capable of defrauding, it is sufficient. There may be a state of facts where it would not be apparent upon their mere recital that they alone were capable of defrauding, and it may be the better practice in such cases to aver in the indictment that they were capable of defrauding, as well as did defraud, the prosecutor. But where the facts recited show upon their face that they are capable of defrauding, and it is charged that the defendant by them did intentionally and wickedly defraud the prosecuting witness, it seems to us to be useless to specifically charge that they were capable of defrauding. It is a matter of common and general knowledge that a Confederate $10 bill is quite similar in appearance to treasury silver certificates of that denomination, and that it is entirely capable to defraud credulous persons by its use under many circumstances. Whether there were peculiar circumstances in the case at bar to rebut the probability of such an effect upon the prosecuting witness is more properly evidential matter by way of defense. The facts alleged in the indictment bring the transaction clearly within the statute, and the demurrer should have been overruled.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

HERNDON, &c. v. OGG.

(Filed February 9, 1905.)

1. Recording deed—Failure of clerk to index record—Effect—Notice—Where the grantee in a deed lodged his deed with the clerk of the county court of the county, where his land lies, and said deed was recorded by the clerk in the deed book kept in said office for that purpose, such recording is legal notice of and protects the grantee in his ownership of said land against any subsequent purchaser thereof. The fact that the clerk failed to index the deed book containing such record does not affect the grantee's ownership of the land.

Wm Herndon and Lewis S. Walker for appellants.

C. H. Collins for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

It appears from the record that appellants on the 29th of August, 1895, purchased from one Shelby Nunn one fifth undivided interest in a tract of land in Madison county, subject to the life estate of his mother, Sophia Nunn, and on that day Shelby Nunn and his wife conveyed this interest to appellants, and they had this deed, with the certificate of acknowledgment, duly recorded in the clerk's office of that county on the 3d of October, 1895. It also appears that on the 25th of July, 1892, Shelby Nunn executed and acknowledged a deed for this same undivided interest to Sarah C. Nunn, and on March 7, 1893, Sarah C. Nunn and her husband conveyed the same to appellee, William A. Ogg. The deed from Shelby Nunn to Sarah C. Nunn was on the 26th of February, 1893, lodged with the clerk of the Madison County Court for record, and she paid the clerk all the necessary and proper fees thereon, and the clerk recorded it in the deed book provided for that purpose, and returned the original deed to her on the 6th of March, 1893, and it has not been in the clerk's office since that day. This last-named deed from Shelby Nunn to Sarah C. Nunn, when it was recorded, was, by oversight of the clerk, not indexed, and there was not any index made thereof until the 28th of January, 1903. The deed from Sarah C. Nunn and her husband to William A. Ogg, appellee, was lodged and recorded on the 21st of October, 1895.

The appellants did not have any knowledge or information of either of the deeds last described until January, 1903. It is agreed that before appellants purchased the land that they caused an attorney to investigate, and they investigated themselves, the question as to whether or not Shelby Nunn was the owner of this interest in the land, and whether or not he had previously conveyed it, and upon such investigation they concluded that he was the owner and had never conveyed it. Shelby Nunn represented to them that he was the owner of this land, and they, by searching the records in the usual way (examining only the indices), failed to discover the deed from him to Sarah C. Nunn.

The appellants allege that Sarah C. Nunn was negligent in removing her deed from the clerk's office after it was recorded without seeing that the clerk had it properly indexed, and they asked the court to declare, for the reason named, that their title be held to be prior to that of appellee. Appellants admit that when a deed is lodged for record, and the tax paid thereon, it is notice under the statute, but contend that this lodgment will not operate as a notice against innocent purchasers when the deed itself has been withdrawn from the clerk's office without having been properly indexed; that he becomes a party to the negligence of the clerk in failing to see that the clerk has performed his duty before he withdraws his conveyance from the office. This is the only question for determination on this appeal. By section 500 of the Kentucky Statutes it is provided that any contract for the sale of land, or any interest therein, when acknowledged or proven as deeds are required to be, may be recorded in the county in which such lands are situated, in the same offices and books in which deeds are recorded, and the record of all such contracts recorded shall, from the time of lodging the same for record, be notice of such contracts to all persons. It appears from this section, and the preceding sections, that when a grantee presents a deed acknowledged according to law and lodges it for record, and has it recorded, he has done all that the law requires him to do to give notice for the protection of others. We are of the opinion that after the grantee has done all that the law requires he should not be held accountable and made to suffer for the mistake, carelessness or fraud of the clerk. It appears from section 513 of the statutes that the clerk of the county court is required to make and keep an alphabetical cross index of all conveyances. It is not intimated in the statutes that the grantees in conveyances are required to see that the clerk performs this statutory duty. They have the right to presume, upon withdrawing their conveyances, that he has performed it. If county clerks were agents of grantees in conveyances the case would be different, but they are not such agents; they are public officials who perform, or should perform, duties as required by the statutes for the protection alike of present as well as after purchasers. (2 Amer. R., 532; 5 J. J. M., 545.)

It follows from the views herein expressed that the action of the lower court was correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. HEAD, GUARDIAN.

(Filed February 9, 1905.)

1. Parties to action—An action for damages to Rupert Head, an infant, for failure to deliver him a railroad ticket, ordered by a telegram, should have been brought in his name, by his statutory guardian, Fred Head, and not in the name of Fred Head, statutory guardian of Rupert Head, suing for the use and benefit of Rupert Head.

2. Failure to deliver ticket—Order by telegram—Measure of damages—A railroad ticket from St. Louis, Mo., to Greenville, Ky., was paid for at Greenville, and a telegram sent to the agent at St. Louis to furnish R. Head such ticket, the object being to get R. Head to reach Greenville in time for his father's funeral; and another telegram was sent to R. Head, by his guardian, to call at "Illinois Central" for the ticket. R. Head called at the city office in St. Louis, which the agent said was the right place for the ticket to be, and after waiting two days, found it at the "Union Station," and reached home after his father's burial. Held—That in an action for damages by R. Head for delay in getting the ticket the measure of damages is simply a reasonable compensation for the time lost and any expense incurred by reason thereof.

Jonson & Wickliffe, Pirtle & Trabue and J. M. Dickinson for appellant.

R. Y. Thomas, Jr., for appellee.

Appeal from Muhlenberg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

George Head died on April 28, 1901, at Greenville, Ky. His son, Rupert Head, was then in St. Louis. His son, Fred Head, who was at home, on the 29th went to the up-town telegraph office to telephone out to the railroad station and ask what the fare from St. Louis to Greenville was, and was told that it was $8. By an arrangement made with the agent, through one Jarvis, he paid Jarvis the $8, and Jarvis having told the agent that the money was deposited with him the agent wired a ticket to St. Louis for Rupert Head, his telegram being as follows:

"Greenville, April 29.

"Ticket Agent, St. Louis, Mo.

"Please furnish R. Head ticket St. Louis to Greenville, Ky.; notify when done and I will remit to cover.

"T. L. PATTERSON."

Thereupon Fred Head sent from the telegraph office, where he was up town, the following message:

"April 29, 1901.

"Dated, Greenville, Ky.

"To R. Head,

"840 Chato Ave:

"Call Illinois Central for ticket; arrive here eleven to-morrow, sure.

"FRED HEAD."

The purpose of the arrangement was to get Rupert Head to Greenville in time for his father's funeral the next day, the understand being that the connections were such that he would reach there by 11 a. m.

Patterson's telegram went to the agent at the Union Station. Rupert Head, on getting his telegram, went to the city office of the railroad company, where he was told by the person to whom he applied, who was selling tickets, that that was the place for his ticket to be, but it had not come. This was said after he had showed the agent his telegram. He went back several times, but was each time told the ticket had not come, and after two days' delay went down to the Union Station with the intention of trying to come home in some other way, and found his ticket there. He reached home after his father was buried, and this action was filed to recover damages for the delay. Judgment was rendered against the company in the sum of $200, and it appeals.

The suit was brought in the name of "Fred Head, statutory guardian of Rupert Head, suing for the use and benefit of said Rupert Head." The guardian had sustained no loss by the delay of Rupert Head; the cause of action was in the infant, and should have been brought in his name by Fred Head as his statutory guardian. This seems to be what the pleader was aiming to do, and the petition may be amended so as to make Rupert Head party plaintiff, suing by Fred Head as his statutory guardian. The court gave the jury the following instruction as to the measure of damages: "The measure of damages, if any, is such a sum of money as will reasonably and fairly compensate plaintiff for any mental suffering, if any, caused to him by the negligent failure, if any, of the defendant to deliver the ticket aforesaid, if it did fail, and the mental suffering, if any, caused to him by the failure to be present at the funeral of his father."

In giving this instruction the court followed the rule announced by this court in the telegraph cases where there is negligence in delivering social telegrams announcing the death or the sickness of a relative and the like. But this rule is never followed except where the telegram on its face shows its nature, and thereby apprises the company of its importance. It will be observed that in the case at bar there is nothing of this character. The contract which was made through Jarvis by the railroad agent with Fred Head was simply a contract to furnish transportation from St. Louis to Greenville. The ticket agent at Greenville had no authority presumably to make a contract to bring Rupert Head to Greenville at any specified time, and there is nothing in the record warranting the conclusion that he undertook to do so. The evidence presents simply a case where the railroad company agreed to furnish transportation and failed to do so promptly, if Rupert Head was not guilty of contributory negligence in going to the wrong place for his ticket, and of this the jury must judge. But if the railroad company was negligent in furnishing the transportation, the measure of damages is simply a reasonable compensation for the time lost by Rupert Head and any expenses he incurred by reason thereof. (Robinson v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 452.) In 3 Sutherland on Damages, section 936, the rule is thus stated: "If the journey is delayed there will be a loss of time, and the passenger is entitled to compensation for it, and also for any increased expense reasonably incurred during the delay or to procure other conveyance when necessary."

The same rule is stated in 2 Sedgewick on Damages, section 863, and then this is added: "In Hamlin v. Great Northern Railway Co., 1 H. & N., 408, the plaintiff was delayed on the defendant's road so that he could not get from G. to H. in the evening, as he had intended to do. He, therefore, remained for the night at G., and went to H. the next morning. It was held that he could not recover for a failure to keep appointments with customers at H. He could only recover the expense of his night's lodging."

If Rupert Head had, by reason of the delay, lost an option worth $100, or had reached Greenville too late to be married, such damages could not be recovered for here. The damages would be too remote and not the natural or proximate result of the defendant's act. The same rule must apply to his failure to reach his father's funeral.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

Whole court sitting.

DAMRON v. DAMRON.

(Filed February 9, 1905.)

1. Owner of adjoining tracts of land—Sale of one tract by sheriff for debt—Easement of purchaser over adjoining tract—Passway—Appellant owned two adjoining tracts of land, and by reason of the mountainous condition of the country the only practicable way to the upper tract was through the lower tract. Appellee bought the upper tract at sheriff's sale, under execution, and brought this suit in the circuit court to restrain appellant from interfering with his right to use a natural and reasonable route over the lower to the upper tract, which the lower court granted. Held—That the circuit court had jurisdiction as this was not a proceeding to condemn a private passway, and the sale by the sheriff's deed passed the same easements over the servient estate as if the sale had been made by the owner.

2. Occupancy of purchaser—The fact that the purchaser did not reside on the tract bought at the sheriff's sale does not affect his rights under his title, as the sale made by a sheriff of a part of the owner's tenement for debt is an involuntary conveyance by the owner of such parcel, and the sheriff's deed includes easements and quasi easements appurtenant to the land sold.

Roscoe Vanover for appellant.

N. J. Auxier for appellee.

Appeal from Pike Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant was the owner of a boundary of land, consisting of two adjoining tracts. They were both located on the same small stream, one further up than the other. Owing to the mountainous condition of the country the only practicable way to get to or from the upper tract was to pass along the valley, by way of the lower tract. There was no public road or other passway to the upper tract. The upper tract was sold under execution against appellant, and appellee bought it. This suit involves the right of appellee to pass over appellant's other land so as to get to and from that which he bought. The suit was brought by appellee in the circuit court to restrain appellant from interfering with appellee's using a natural and reasonable route over the lower tract so as to reach the upper one. The circuit court granted the relief.

Appellant insists that the circuit court had not jurisdiction of the case, relying upon section 4818, Kentucky Statutes, which confers jurisdiction upon county courts to open private passways, by condemnation, over the land of another, to enable one having no other accessible route to attend courts, elections, the meeting house, mill, ferry, railroad depot, etc. But that section does not apply to this proceeding at all. This is not an effort to condemn a passway, but to enjoin the obstruction of one already in existence. Of this action the circuit court alone had the original jurisdiction. The defense rested upon the fact that appellee was not shown to reside on his land, nor did he have a tenant upon it. From this it is argued that there was no necessity for the passway to enable him to discharge his civic duties, as by attending court, elections, meeting, etc., citing Shake v. Frazier, 94 Ky., 143, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 798; Cody v. Rider, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 59. But appellee's right asserted in this case rests upon an entirely different principle. It is elementary law that where the owner of land sells a part, with no outlet to a public highway, or to a private passway which may rightfully be used in connection with the parcel sold, it is implied that the vendor grants to his vendee a right of way over his remaining lands to enable the latter to get to and from the part sold to him. Without the easement the part sold and conveyed would be useless to the purchaser, hence there passes to the grantee those easements necessary to the enjoyment of the part conveyed.

A sale of a part of the owner's tenement by the sheriff for debt is an involuntary conveyance by the owner of the parcel sold and conveyed. In law the sheriff is the owner's proxy in making the conveyance. The sheriff's deed actually conveys the owner's title to the property embraced, including easements and quasi easements appurtenant to the land sold. If the situation be such that the parcel sold can not be enjoyed except by the use of an easement over the debtor's remaining parcel, it must be implied that the debtor, by the sheriff, sold and granted such easement over the parcel not sold as was essential to the use and enjoyment of the part that was sold. In such case the owner of the servient estate ought to have the right of selection, if reasonably exercised, and within a reasonable time. Otherwise, the owner of the dominant estate may select such route. In this case, no such selection having been made and being refused by appellant, the chancellor properly selected the route most natural and accessible.

The judgment is affirmed.

COMBS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 10, 1905.)

Indictment—Selling liquor without license—Insufficient allegations—An indictment found on July 20, 1904, for selling liquor without a license, which alleges that the offense was committed on July 18, 1904, and that a former indictment for said offense, filed November 13, 1903, had been stolen and could not be found, is inconsistent and uncertain, and as the dates named neutralize each other, there is nothing in the indictment to show that the offense charged was committed within twelve months before the finding of the last indictment or within twelve months before the finding of the one that was stolen.

R. L. Greene for appellant.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Knott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant was indicted in six cases for selling liquor without license in the county of Knott. He was found guilty in each case and his punishment fixed at a fine of $100. The six indictments were returned into court on the 20th or 21st day of July, 1904, and were tried on the same day they were returned. The defendant entered a demurrer to the indictment in each case, which was overruled, and the correctness of this ruling is the only question to be determined on the appeal.

The indictments are in substance all the same with the exception of the name of the person to whom the sale was made. One of them, which may be taken as a sample of the others, is as follows: "The grand jury of Knott county, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse Henry Combs of the offense of unlawfully selling spirituous liquor without license so to do, committed as follows. The said defendant, on the 18th day of July, 1904, in the county and circuit aforesaid, did unlawfully sell spirituous liquors to Bob Thacker without a license so to do. A former indictment for said offense, filed on the 13th day of November, 1903, has been stolen and can not be found, against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

The rule is that an indictment must show on its face, where an ordinary misdemeanor is charged, that it was committed within twelve months before the finding of the indictment, unless it is in lieu of a former indictment, and then it must show that the offense was committed within a year before that indictment was found or the prosecution was begun. In Williams v. Commonwealth, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 666, the court said: "Section 129, Criminal Code, is as follows, to wit: 'The statement in the indictment as to the time at which the offense was committed is not material further than as a statement that it was committed before the time of finding the indictment, unless the time be a material ingredient in the offense.' The offense with which the defendant is charged is a misdemeanor, and unless the indictment was returned within twelve months after its commission the statute of limitation operates as a bar to the prosecution, therefore, the time is a material ingredient in the offense."

In Stamper v. Commonwealth, 102 Ky., 36, the court again said: "Another objection is made on account of omission of the formal statement that the alleged offense was committed within twelve months before the indictment was found. The reason for requiring that statement in an indictment for a misdemeanor is that the plea of limitation should be by the Commonwealth anticipated, and made to appear prima facie precluded. But as the indictment in question was found and returned November 9, 1896, and contains a specific averment that the alleged offense was committed November 2, 1896, no further statement on the subject was needed."

In Commonwealth v. Cook, 102 Ky., 288, the above was approved in these words: "It is objected to the sufficiency of this indictment that there is no averment that the offense was committed within twelve months before the finding of the indictment. This court has recently held, in the case of Stamper v. Commonwealth, ante, 83, that the averment mentioned was unnecessary, providing the date alleged for the commission of the offense was within twelve months before the finding of the indictment. It was, therefore, not necessary to the sufficiency of the indictment to make averments showing that this indictment was a continuation of a previous prosecution not barred by the statute."

As to what averments are necessary to show a continuous prosecution and avoid the bar of the statute thereby in Commonwealth v. Megibben Co., 101 Ky., 198, the court thus stated the law: "On the other hand, it is claimed on behalf of the Commonwealth that this prosecution was a continuous one, the indictment containing the statement that 'the offense herein charged is the same offense charged in indictment No. 1014, filed in this honorable court on February 16, 1896.' This statement fails, however, to show whether the other indictment was pending, or whether it had been quashed and the case re-referred to the grand jury, or whether it had been dismissed by the Commonwealth's attorney and re-referred. In N. N. & M. V. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 197, following Tully v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush, 153, it was held that a new indictment found by a grand jury, to which the prosecution has been re-referred, can not be regarded as a continuation of a former prosecution so as to avoid the statute of limitations unless it alleges the facts as to the former indictment, its dismissal, etc., and thus clearly upon its face shows that the prosecution was intended to be a continuous one."

It will be observed that the indictment before us insofar as it relates to the previous indictment is insufficient under this rule, as it does not show the dismissal of that indictment or that the prosecution was then resubmitted to the grand jury. The statement in the indictment that the offense was committed on July 18, 1904, is inconsistent with the statement also made in it that a former indictment for the same offense was filed on November 13, 1903. If we reject both these allegations as neutralizing each other, there is nothing in the indictment to show when the offense was committed. The indictment, therefore, as a whole, is uncertain, and does not show that the offense charged was committed within twelve months before it was found by the grand jury, and the demurrer to it should have been sustained.

Judgment in each case reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

RUST, &c. v. RUST, &c.

(Filed February 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Will contest—Statement of the case to the jury—While it is proper for the attorney for the will to conclude his statement to the jury of the facts relied on to sustain the will, before the contestant's attorney makes his statement the fact that the court permitted the attorney for the will to make an additional statement after the opposing attorney had made his statement is not a reversible error.

2. Statements by counsel in argument—A statement made by counsel for the will in his argument to the jury, that "the proof fails to show, for twenty years, one act of kindness to the testator by any one of the contestants," and "that only four of the children have appeared in the action, the others having washed their hands of the transaction," are legitimate conclusions from the evidence, and are not objectionable.

H. J. Moorman and W. J. Webb for appellants.

Robbins & Thomas for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This is a contest over the will of William Rust, deceased. The jury found it to be his last will and testament. A reversal is sought for reasons which will appear herein. After the jury was sworn counsel for the propounders read to the jury the paper purporting to be the will, and stated that it had been executed in the presence of witnesses and that unless it could be shown by contestants that it was procured by undue influence, or that William Rust was not of sound mind, that the paper must stand as his will. Thereupon counsel for contestants stated the case to the jury. After that the attorney for the propounders resumed his statement, and stated what the evidence would tend to show.

It is urged that as section 817 of the Civil Code provides that the plaintiff shall briefly state his claims, and the evidence by which he expects to sustain it, and that the defendant must then briefly state his defense, and the evidence he expects to offer in support of it, it was error in the court to allow the case to be stated in the manner indicated. Counsel for the propounders evidently thought that when they offered evidence as to the due execution of the paper that the burden of proof would shift to the defendant, and that the statement should proceed in the order in which the evidence would be introduced. We are of the opinion that it would have been proper for counsel for the propounders to have completed his statement before the statement was made for contestants. While this is true, we do not believe that the case should be reversed on that account, because it did not and could not have prejudiced the substantial rights of the contestants. While the Code prescribes an orderly way for stating a case, it does not follow that because it may not be strictly pursued that a prejudicial error has been committed.

It is urged that the statement made by counsel for propounders was not permissible under the Code. We have examined it, and are of the opinion that it is a substantial compliance with the Code, which requires the plaintiff to state his claim and the evidence which he expects to sustain it. Objections are urged as to the language used by counsel for propounders in his argument to the jury. The court's attention is called to some of the alleged objectionable language used by counsel for propounders. It is claimed that the testimony did not warrant counsel in making the statements. For instance, counsel stated that for twenty years the proof in this case fails to show one act of kindness to the old man by any one of the contestants. This was a conclusion that counsel drew from the testimony, and it was perfectly legitimate. Again, counsel said only four of these children have appeared in this action. The other children washed their hands of the transaction. It certainly was legitimate for counsel to draw the inference from the evidence that some of the children had apparently abandoned the contest. The other alleged objectionable statements are no more objectionable than the ones we have mentioned.

It is urged that the court erred in allowing Mrs. Linn Rust to testify because of her husband's interest in the estate under the will. This can not be reviewed, because the will is not made part of the record by an order of court or by the bill of exceptions, therefore, there is nothing to show that her husband had any interest in the estate under the will. We are of opinion that the evidence abundantly supports the verdict of the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

HANDSHOE v. CONLEY.

(Filed February 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Land—Adjoining tracts—Dividing line—Common title—In an action to determine the location of a division line between two parties who claim the land from the same source, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to show that he derived title from the Commonwealth.

Phillips & Fugate for appellant.

Jas. Andrew Scott for appellee.

Appeal from Knott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The question involved in this case is as to the location of the division line between the lands of the appellant, Handshoe, and the appellee, Conley. Both claim to derive title through Alamander Coburn. He owned a boundary of land on the Salt Lick Fork of Beaver creek. In 1879 he conveyed part of it to W. C. Coburn, and W. C. Coburn conveyed part of the land which was deeded to him by Alamander Coburn to the appellant. Alamander Coburn remained in possession of the balance of his boundary for some years, when he conveyed it, or a part of it, to one Moore, and the latter conveyed it to appellee Conley. The conveyances to Moore and Conley called for the line of the boundary of the land which was conveyed to W. C. Coburn, so the controversy is settled when the true location of the line of the W. C. Coburn boundary is determined.

The description of the land contained in the deed of Alamander Coburn to W. C. Coburn reads as follows: "Beginning on a black walnut and buckeye on the bank of the creek; thence running up the hill on the east side of the creek to the top of the point; thence with top of the same to the top of the ridge between the old Field branch and Bee branch; thence down said ridge to the head of a small drain; thence down the same, crossing the creek; thence up the point on the west side of the creek between the Bulltail hollow and the hollow that said Alamander Coburn now lives at the mouth of; thence running with the point to the main ridge; thence running down the creek with the top of the ridge to opposite the beginning; thence a straight line to the same." * * *

The difficulty in locating the line is to determine the location of the small drain referred to in the deed to W. C. Coburn. For the appellee it is insisted that the small drain referred to is the small depression in the side of the hill overlooking the creek. For the appellant it is contended that "Rocky hollow" is the drain referred to in the deed. There is testimony tending to show that the small drain referred to could not be the one claimed by the appellee, because it can not be reached by running down the ridge between old Field branch and Bee branch. The weight of the evidence tends to show that W. C. Coburn's line runs down "Rocky hollow." And in addition to that, the evidence tends to show that Alamander Coburn recognized that the line ran down Rocky hollow, as he said when building a splash dam across it that the land below it belonged to W. C. Coburn. So the court below should establish the line down Rocky hollow, and thence according to the calls of the deed to W. C. Coburn. The court below did not determine the question as to the true location of the line, but adjudged the appellant failed to show that he derived title from the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and, therefore, dismissed his petition. This court has heretofore decided that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that fact when he and defendant claim title through the same source.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HOERTZ v. JEFFERSON SOUTHERN POND DRAINING CO.

(Filed February 10, 1905.)

1. Corporation—Draining swamp lands—Public benefit—Legislation—Constitutionality—Legislation creating a corporation for draining swamp lands near a city, and thereby improving the health of the community, is a matter of public concern, and is not unconstitutional as special legislation. The fact that it is attended by some private benefit not enjoyed by the general public does not take from the work the quality of being for the public service.

2. Uncertainty of location—An amendment to the charter of a corporation organized to drain swamp lands, which recognized the "Pond Settlement in Jefferson county," as being the district to be drained, is sufficiently explicit to refute the claim of uncertainty as to the subject of the legislation.

3. Charter—Provisions—Commissioners—Assessment of tax—Taking private property—Due process of law—Where the charter of a corporation organized to drain swamp lands provides for the appointment of commissioners, to assess a tax on certain adjacent lands, who were required to and did report their action to the Jefferson Chancery Court, which confirmed their assessment, a levy and collection of a tax so assessed is not a "taking of private property without due process of law," within the meaning of the Federal or State Constitutions, and the fact that the notice was by advertisement in the press and by posters instead of actual service of process, does not militate against the conclusiveness of the judgment of said court.

4. Estoppel—An owner of land whose grantors procured the charter authorizing the drainage of swamp lands and the assessment of the adjacent lands therefor, is estopped to deny the validity of the law under which the assessment is made.

W. McKee Duncan for appellant.

W. W. Thum and A. S. Brandels for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The Jefferson Southern Pond Draining Co. was incorporated by an act of the legislature of Kentucky in 1858, and there were amendments to the original act in 1872, 1873, 1878, 1884, 1886 and 1888. The proceedings out of which arose the controversy at bar were had under the charter as amended in 1888. The appellee company was incorporated for the purpose of draining a large body of swamp lands about four or five miles south of Louisville, in Jefferson county, Kentucky, which, by reason of the water constantly standing upon them, were worthless, and, by the consequent propagation and dissemination of malaria, were a menace to the health of the citizens of the surrounding country, and of the city of Louisville. The drainage of these lands was to be effected by the digging of deep and wide ditches at intervals through them at sufficient grade to carry off the water, so that the owners between the main ditches could, by tilling, thoroughly drain and render productive their before worthless land. The digging of these ditches, of necessity, required money, and this was to be raised by assessment and taxation authorized by the charter. By the amendment of 1888 the system of taxation was to be a graded one in accordance with the benefits received, the maximum tax being 40 cents, and the minimum 10 cents, per acre; and it was provided that upon the petition of more than one half of all the land owners within the boundary of the district established, signed either by themselves, their agents, their guardians or personal representatives, the Jefferson County Court should appoint a board of commissioners, consisting of three land owners resident in Jefferson county and not interested in the Jefferson Southern Pond Draining Co., nor owning any of the lands within the boundary, and each over twenty-five years of age; that these commissioners should, on the 1st day of July, 1888, rate, assess, apportion, charge and fix upon the land within the boundary of the district a tax for the succeeding ten years, of not more than 40 cents nor less than 10 cents per acre, in proportion to the benefits conferred, fixing the rate at such an amount per acre as should be fair and just in each case, and report their assessment and apportionment in writing to the Louisville Chancery Court, the report to be filed with the clerk of the court. This assessment and apportionment was to be in lieu of the annual assessment and apportionment theretofore authorized by the charter. The commissioners, in making the assessment and apportionment, were required to enter on the assessment roll the names of all persons who at the time were the owners or holders of lands liable to be assessed under the provisions of the charter, and opposite the names of such persons the separate tract or tracts so owned or held, with the number of acres as near as practicable, the name of the nearest resident thereto, the rate of taxation per acre, and the aggregate tax upon each tract or parcel of land for each of the ten years.

The commissioners were required to publish in one English and one German daily newspaper, printed and published in Jefferson county, by insertions made in each of them once per week for three consecutive weeks, a notice of the assessment and apportionment, and the fact that it had been filed with the clerk of the Jefferson Chancery Court. Copies of the notice were required to be posted at various places in Jefferson county. Within thirty days after the filing of the report any person feeling himself aggrieved by reason of the assessment could file with the clerk, as authorized, his complaint, in writing, specifying the land and the alleged excess or injustice. As soon as practicable after the expiration of thirty days the clerk was required to set the case for hearing, and of the justice or injustice of the apportionment the court was to determine.

The taxes provided for in the act were to be assessed as of the 1st day of July, 1888, and to be payable to the Jefferson Southern Pond Draining Company on or before the 1st day of October of the year for which the assessment was made, and become due on the 1st day of December thereafter, beginning with the year 1888, and so on for each of the ten years for which the levy and assessment was made. The corporation was given a lien for all taxes upon the land assessed, and upon all the personal property of the owner or owners found upon the premises, not exempt from execution, attachment or distraint, which was authorized to be enforced by equitable action in the Jefferson Chancery Court.

The appellant, or his grantors, owned the land in question which was within the tax limits established by the charter of appellee, and in 1888 commissioners were appointed, who assessed all of the land within the tax district, including that now owned by appellant, for the period of ten years next succeeding, and filed their report in the Jefferson Chancery Court. No complaint having been made by the then owner of the land in question of any injustice done him, the proceedings as to him were confirmed and approved, and the appellant having failed to pay the assessment, this action was instituted by the company in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, to enforce its lien. No question is raised by the appellant as to the regularity of the procedure by the appellee under its charter. The objections made are fundamental—not technical. Upon the trial of the case the chancellor granted the relief prayed for in the petition, giving a judgment for the sum of the taxes due, and enforcing the lien.

The appellant insists that the legislation creating the corporation is unconstitutional in that it grants special privileges for which no public service is rendered. It is too late to question that the draining of vast swamps, and thereby improving the health of the whole community, is a matter of public concern. All public works of the nature of the one under discussion are attended by some private benefit not enjoyed by the general public; but this private benefit does not take from the work the quality of being for the public service. It is hardly necessary to cite authority upon a proposition so obvious, and of which the books are so replete. Perhaps the last utterance of this court on the particular subject in hand is contained in Duke, &c. v. O'Bryan, &c., 100 Ky., 710, wherein the question is thoroughly discussed, and the distinction between a public and a private benefit, and the effect of the existence of the latter in public works, is pointed out. The amendment of 1888, in its preamble, recites the public benefit of the act as being the promotion of the health of the community, and this must be taken as true in the absence of any evidence in the record contradicting it.

A second objection to the charter is that the lands to be drained are not specifically located. This, we think, is error, but conceding it to be true the district to be drained was located under the original charter, and the amendments recognized this as being the locality involved. The act of 1888, under which the tax in question was assessed, speaks of and recognizes the district as located, and recites the fact that the corporation has already a system of ditches constructed, which it will redound to the public health to maintain and extend. This legislative recognition of the Pond Settlement in Jefferson county as being the district to be drained is sufficiently explicit to refute the claim of uncertainty as to the subject of the legislation. Nor is the levy and collection of the tax the taking of private property without due process of law within the meaning either of the Constitution of this State, or of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. After the assessment by the commissioners they were required to, and did, report their action to the Jefferson Chancery Court, and appellant was given his day in court to show cause against the levy of the obnoxious tax upon his land. This he failed to do, and under the terms of the charter he was concluded by the judgment. The fact that the notice was by advertisement in the press and by posters, instead of actual service, does not militate against the conclusiveness of the judgment. The proceedings taken in this case with regard to the levy of the assessment, and the right and opportunity of the appellant to show cause against its validity, are substantially the same as those with reference to every other method of taxation, either State, municipal or local. In the levy of taxes for the support of the municipality of Louisville the assessment is made by the assessor, the board of equalization meets at a stated period, and notice is given to all concerned of the time when their complaints may be heard. No actual service of this notice is ever had, nor could it be given in any other way except through the public press, and yet the rights of the citizens are concluded by the final action of the board of equalization. Substantially the same process is had where improvements of the public streets and highways are made. After the work is done by the contractor, a day is fixed, and notice given through the public press to all concerned of the time and place at which the board of public works will take up the matter of receiving and hearing complaints against it. No other notice is given, or is possible, than through the public press. The argument of appellant, if successful, would overturn our whole system of levying, assessing and collecting taxes. That the procedure adopted is not inimical to the provisions of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States with regard to the taking of property without due process of law is shown by the following adjudications: Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S., 97; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S., 701; Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S., 816; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S., 345; Fallbrook Irrigation Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S., 113, 174; Bauman v. Ross, 167 U. S., 548; Paulsen v. Portland, 149 U. S., 30, and Cooley on Taxation, 8d edition, pages 629, 68.

The objection that the review of the assessment made by the commissioners is not a judicial procedure, and could not, therefore, be imposed upon the Jefferson Chancery Court, is untenable. Reviewing the legality and validity of the actions of parties in all matters, public and private, is eminently a judicial function, and we do not know how the charter could have better secured the rights of appellant than by giving him an opportunity to show cause against the assessment, in the first instance, in the very court which finally adjudicated upon the procedure of which he now complains. (Cooley on Taxation, 3d edition, page 786; Burroughs on Taxation, page 338; Wilson v. Karle, 42 N. J. L., 612.)

But if we were less certain of the constitutionality of the act under review the case must be affirmed against appellant on this point for the reason that he, or his grantors, procured the legislation in question, and were the recipients of its benefits. It is alleged in the pleadings of appellee that appellant and his grantors procured the charter and its amendments, and obtained the appointing of the commissioners, and the levy of the assessment, and were its beneficiaries. The appellant was content with denying that he did the things charged in estoppel upon him and his grantors, leaving undenied the whole charge as against his grantors. The legislation, and the acts thereunder, constituting the basis of appellee's claim herein, were obtained and done in 1888 and prior thereto. The work was done and the benefits accrued then and shortly thereafter. The lien was fixed and became a public record, of which appellant had notice when he subsequently purchased. He can not now successfully claim that his land was not bound in the matter in question by the action of those who owned it at the time. He took the land with its burdens, and he is bound by the estoppel of his grantors. That one who procures unconstitutional legislation, and receives its benefits, is estopped to deny its validity is well settled in this State. (Cypress Pond Draining Co. v. Hooper, 2 Met., 350; Souffletown Fence Co. v. McAllister, 12 Bush, 315; Ferguson v. Landrum, 1 Bush, 548; Ferguson v. Landrum, 5 Bush, 280.)

The Constitution of 1891 did not repeal the charter of appellee, nor did it expire under the schedule of that instrument by the lapse of five years after 1891. All of the acts and proceedings had with reference to appellee's claims were performed under the Constitution of 1850, and are not affected by that of 1891. The evidence in this case, without contradiction, shows that the land of appellant has been vastly benefited by the tax which he seeks to escape. Before drainage it was worth from two to five dollars an acre, and after drainage from forty to fifty dollars an acre. Before, no crop could be successfully raised upon it; afterwards, its productivity was so greatly magnified as to produce from sixty to eighty bushels of corn per acre, and to yield crops of hay worth from twenty-five to thirty-five dollars an acre. But the public has been benefited in a still greater degree, although it can not be expressed in terms of money. Before drainage the district was uninhabitable because of the prevalence of malaria; now the health of the entire district is as good as that of any other in the State. Before, the health of the city of Louisville was seriously impaired by malaria disseminated from swamps and morasses which are now fruitful fields, and it is said, upon high medical authority, that the work of appellee has done more for the health of the municipality than its whole sewerage system, costing millions of dollars.

For these reasons the judgment of the chancellor is affirmed.

SECOND NATIONAL BANK OF RICHMOND, KY. v. FITZPATRICK, &c.

(Filed February 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Former appeal—Pleading—Upon the return of this case appellant offered to file amended petitions in two of the cases which were involved upon the first appeal, in which it sought to relinquish all claim to usurious interest. The court refused to permit them to be filed, but allowed them to be tendered and made a part of the record so as to obviate the necessity of a bill of exceptions. Held—The trial court ruled correctly in refusing to permit the amendments as tendered to be filed after the return of the case from this court.

2. Interest—Double penalty—From the evidence it appears that $475 of payments was interest paid by the borrower, and as to it he was relegated by the statute for his remedy for double penalty for usury paid, and the evidence failing to support the bank's contention that any further part of the payments credited by the judgment appealed from was paid by the debtor as interest, without this specific appropriation, the lender had no authority to apply it except as was done by the court below.

J. A. Sullivan for appellant.

J. G. Fitzpatrick for appellees.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This is the second appeal of this action. The opinion of the court on the first is found in 111 Ky., 228. The ample statement of the facts therein renders it unnecessary to repeat them here. All of the questions of law decided on the former appeal are res adjudicata on this.

Upon the return of the case to the circuit court the bank offered to file amended petitions in two of the three consolidated cases, which were involved on the first appeal, the purport of which was that it sought to relinquish its claim to all usurious interest contained therein. The court refused to permit these pleadings to be filed, but allowed them to be marked "tendered," and made a part of the record, to obviate the necessity of a bill of exceptions. It is now contended by the bank that the court erred in this ruling, and that until final judgment it had the right to what it denominates a locus poenitentiae. Conceding, for the present, that the bank may at any time before final judgment relinquish the difference between the lawful rate of interest and the usurious rate actually charged, and thus prevent a forfeiture of the whole under the Federal statute, we think this offer comes too late. In this case the bank sought a judgment for its debt and usurious interest. The defendant filed an answer pleading the statute, and praying for a forfeiture in accordance with its terms. This prayer was granted, and a judgment of forfeiture entered. From this judgment the bank appealed, and while the case was reversed for another reason, it was approved insofar as it forfeited the whole interest, the court, upon this question, using the following language: "The lender is forbidden to contract for interest at the illegal rate, and by such a contract, though unexecuted, forfeits the entire interest carried in the note." This language leaves no room for a locus poenitentiae.

The case of Talbot v. Sioux City First National Bank, 185 U. S., 179, does not, when correctly understood, support the right of the bank to relinquish the usury and recover the principal with lawful interest, although there is some general language in the opinion which, if disassociated from the real issue before the court, might appear to afford a basis for this conclusion. In that case the bank had loaned money in Iowa at a usurious rate. It brought suit to enforce its claim, and the borrower, erroneously supposing that he could not plead the Federal statute authorizing the forfeiture, pleaded the State statute, which forfeited only the excess over the lawful rate. His plea for a forfeiture, as presented, was sustained by the State court, which awarded judgment for the principal and lawful interest. Upon this judgment execution issued, which was levied upon property of the borrower, and this being sold, the proceeds were paid into court and withdrawn by the bank in satisfaction of its judgment. Thereupon the borrower, concluding that he had now paid usurious interest, brought an action under the Federal statute, seeking, not a forfeiture, but to recover the penalty of double the sum paid, as authorized by the Federal statute. Upon appeal to the Supreme Court it was held that no usury had been paid; that in the original case in the State court the borrower had, by his own action, procured the purging of all usury from the bank's claim; that according to the tenor of his own prayer a judgment had been awarded only for the principal and lawful interest; that when he afterwards paid this judgment he paid no usury. This is all that was involved in that case, and the opinion in nowise warrants us in overriding the plain letter of the statute, which provides: "The taking, receiving, reserving or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by the preceding section, when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill or other evidence of debt carried with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon."

The trial court ruled correctly in refusing to permit the amendments as tendered to be filed after the return of the case from this court. The only question involved in the former appeal left open was the proper application of certain payments upon the two notes upon which suits were instituted by the bank. It is said in the opinion: "There remains the question of the application of the payments upon the two notes upon which suit was brought by the bank. Certain of these payments appear to have been specific payments of interest, as such, by the debtor, accompanied by a renewal of the obligation for its face. Others of the payments, however, appear from the evidence to have been general payments to the bank, with no application by the debtor, except insofar as such application may be presumed by law, or from his supposed acquiescence in the bank's mode of keeping its books, to which he did not have access. As we have held, there is no such presumption of law; and we do not think the debtor can be presumed to have made an application of his payment to interest, as such, from the fact that the bank so applied the payments on its books without his knowledge."

In carrying the opinion of this court into effect the trial judge allowed three payments to be credited upon the principal. Of this the bank complains, claiming that a part of each of these was made on the interest due, and that this part ought to be disallowed as a credit, and the borrower relegated to his remedy under the Federal statute for the double penalty. The rule announced in Marion National Bank v. Thompson, 101 Ky., 277, and followed in the first opinion in this case, on the subject of partial payments on usurious contracts of national banks, so far as pertinent to the question in hand, is that, if the debtor specifically applies the payment, or any part of it, to the interest account as such, to that extent his right to a forfeiture is merged in his greater right to sue for the double penalty authorized by the Federal statute where usurious interest is paid; but if no specific appropriation is made by the debtor, then the lender has no right to appropriate any part of the payment to the interest account, but it must be applied to the extinguishment of the principal; and these principles are in line with the adjudications of the Supreme Court upon this subject.

Examining the payments applied in the judgment to the extinguishment of the principal of the debt involved here, we find the following question and answer contained in the deposition of C. N. Fitzpatrick, page 62 of the printed record:

"Q. Did you ever pay any interest on that note (the larger note sued on) after it started? If so, when?"

"A. On October 13, 1887, I paid the bank $1,011.05."

R. E. Turley, the cashier of the bank, was questioned, and made answer, as follows (page 133 of the printed record):

"Q. Was there any understanding between the bank and C. N. Fitzpatrick as to how the payments were to be applied at the time they were made?"

"A. There was no understanding except that they were made to pay interest."

"Q. How were the payments applied each time?"

"A. They were applied to the payment of interest which had accrued on the notes."

"Q. What was done with the $1,011.05 payment referred to on October 13, 1887?"

"A. Four hundred and seventy-four dollars and seventy-five cents of this payment went to pay the interest on note of $6,036.80, dated August 31, 1886, and the balance of the payment of $536.80 went to pay the interest which had previously been added to the principal of this note."

"Q. Did the $474.75 represent the interest that had accrued on the note from the last renewal up to the time that the $1,011.05 was paid?"

"A. It did."

Taking all of this evidence together, we conclude that $474.75 of the payment of $1,011.05, made October 13, 1887, was interest paid by the borrower, as such, and that as to it the borrower was relegated by the statute to his remedy for double penalty for usury paid. We do not think that the evidence supports the bank's contention that any further part of the payments credited by the judgment appealed from upon the principal of the debt was paid by the debtor as interest, and under the principles settled in the opinion on the first appeal, without this specific appropriation by the debtor, the lender had no authority to apply it in any other manner than was done by the court below.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, with directions to credit the larger note with the sum of $586.80, as of October 13, 1887, instead of the sum of $1,011.05, credited by the judgment as of that date. In all other respects the acts of the circuit judge are approved.

LEAHY v. JEFFERSON SOUTHERN POND DRAINING CO.

(Filed February 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Wm. McKee Duncan for appellant.

W. W. Thum and A. S. Brandels for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The questions of law and the evidence in this case are substantially the same as in the case of George Hoertz v. Jefferson Southern Pond Draining Co., ante, —, this day decided, and the judgment of the chancellor herein is affirmed for the reasons given in the opinion in that case.

CITY OF LEXINGTON v. BOWMAN.

(Filed February 14, 1905.)

1. Street improvements—Ten-year payments—Knowingly accepting—Request of debtor—Plea of limitation—Where a city loaned its credit to a lot owner for the cost of a street improvement paid for by the city, and which, at the implied request of the debtor, was payable in ten yearly installments, such debtor, after paying the two first installments and having knowledge that the city, in extending him the credit had acted upon the idea that he had requested it, will not be heard to say he had not requested it, and by a plea of limitation throw a loss upon the city which it would not have sustained but for his misleading it.

2. Estoppel—In such case the law must imply a request for the ten-year payment, whether it was made or not, and the debtor by his acquiescence therein is estopped to deny it.

Allen & Duncan for appellant.

Maury Kemper for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

By an act of April 13, 1890, amending the charter of the city of Lexington, it was enacted that the general council might provide by ordinance for the construction and reconstruction of the streets of the city and order a special assessment to be made by the city assessor on the property fronting on the street that was improved. The assessment was directed to be returned to the council, and if confirmed by it, after notice to the property holders, it became final, and the council was authorized to levy a special tax on the property sufficient to pay for two-thirds of the entire cost of the improvement, the other one-third to be paid by the city. A lien was given on the property for the special taxes, which were authorized to be collected as other taxes. The act then made the following alternative mode of payment

For the improvement: "The general council may, at the request of parties liable for special taxes levied, lend such parties the credit of the city for a period not exceeding ten years, as provided in this section, for an amount sufficient to pay the entire cost of said improvements. The tax levied for the cost of construction shall then be divided into ten equal annual payments, payable one-tenth each year, and so levied on the assessed value of the property liable for said improvements. Said special taxes on this ten-year plan shall be a lien on the property on which they are levied, and their collection made and enforced as other taxes. Said taxes, when collected, shall be used exclusively in paying the street bonds issued on that street or block. In cases where the general council lends the credit of the city in paying the cost of construction or reconstruction, the city shall be liable only for the interest on said bonds, the property paying the entire cost of the improvement. The general council shall make all necessary regulations and prescribe the proper forms to be used in carrying out the provisions of this section."

The city council passed an ordinance reciting that all the owners of the front feet of property on appellee's block adjoining the improvement had petitioned the council to cause Broadway to be improved on the ten year plan, and it was provided in the ordinance that the improvement of the street should be made on the ten-year plan. After the improvement was made the city passed an ordinance levying the tax, which also recited that all of the owners of property on this block had petitioned to have this improvement made on the ten-year plan; that they had requested the general council to lend them the credit of the city for a period of ten years for an amount sufficient to pay the entire cost of the improvement. The city issued its bonds and paid for the improvement and appellee paid the first and second of the ten installments assessed against his property. He refused to pay the remainder of the tax, and on February 23, 1901, filed this suit on the ground that the proceedings of the council were void, and that there was no lien on his property. Among other things, he pleaded that he did not request the city to lend him credit for ten years, or for any period of time; that his liability for the improvement attached at the time of the completion of the work in the year 1892, and that the defendant's cause of action, if any it had, was barred by the limitation of five years. In answer to this plea the defendant alleged that the above ordinances were passed by the general council under the belief that all of the property owners on the block, including appellee, had requested the ten-year plan of payment; that the plaintiff knew that the ordinances were passed by the council in reliance upon this belief; that the plaintiff had actual knowledge that the ordinances contained the recitations above referred to, and knew that the city had issued its bonds and paid the entire cost of the improvement under the belief that the plaintiff and the other owners of the property on the block had requested the loan of the city's credit as aforesaid; that the officers of the city were unable to find any record showing that the plaintiff had requested the ten-year plan of assessment, but that the plaintiff had paid the first and second installments without objection, and that he had made no objection to the mode of assessment until his amended petition was filed in the action pleading limitation on March 12, 1903; that appellee had induced it by his conduot to extend its credit to him for the period of ten years for the entire cost of the improvement; that he had accepted the credit and acquiesced in the mode of payment adopted by the city, and thereby induced it to believe that no objection to the tax would be made by him by reason of the ten-year plan being adopted, and that the city, by reason of the conduct and acts of appellee, had made no attempt to enforce the tax, and but therefor would have instituted legal proceedings within the period of five years for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the special tax, and that by reason of these facts appellee was estopped to deny that he requested a loan of the city's credit, or to say that the ten-year plan should not have been adopted, or to plead or rely upon the statute of limitations. The court sustained a general demurrer to this much of the answer, and the city declining to plead further entered a judgment in favor of appellee on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation.

In the City of Lexington v. Crosthwait, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1898, it was held that in case there was not a request by the abutting property holder to the city to permit the adoption of the ten-year plan of payment the statute made two-thirds of the cost and no more a charge against the abutting property, and made it due when the work was completed and accepted; that the city could not, without the request of the lot owner, enlarge his liability by increasing it and extending the time of its payment for ten years, and that where the property owner did not request the adoption of the ten-year plan, and notwithstanding this the city adopted that plan, the statute of limitation ran in favor of the property owner from the time the cause of action accrued. But no question of estoppel was considered in that case. The opinion proceeds on the idea that there was in that case no sufficient plea of estoppel. The question of estoppel is the only matter to be determined on the appeal now before us.

A lien was created on appellee's property when the improvement was made under the ordinances and was accepted by the council, and the cost of the improvement was assessed against the property and confirmed by the council. As to what mode of payment should be followed to release the property from the lien an option was given the property holder by the statute. He was entitled to have the ten-year plan of payment if he requested it. A request may be express or it may be implied. If the appellee did not in advance, request the council to adopt the ten-year plan, he might afterwards consent to its adoption. The choice was with him. If he knew that the city was acting on the idea that he had requested the ten year plan, and on this ground had issued its bonds and paid the contractor, or was about to do so, and instead of objecting went on and paid the first and second installments, which he knew were assessed against him on this basis, without objection on his part, and with the knowledge that the city authorities understood that he had requested the ten-year plan, he can not now be heard to say that he did not request it. If he received credit from the city knowing that the city was acting upon the idea that he had requested it, he can not be allowed, after enjoying the credit which he thus received, to say that he did not request it, and thus throw a loss on the city which it would not have sustained but for his misleading it. If A. is to pay B. $500, or at B.'s request 500 bushels of wheat, B. would not be allowed to accept the wheat from A., and after enjoying it to say that he did not request the payment of the debt in wheat. If appellee did not request the city to adopt the ten-year plan, he knew that it had adopted it, and he accepted and enjoyed the credit which the city thus gave him. The law must imply a request for what he has thus received and enjoyed, whether he expressly requested it or not. Equitable estoppels are not confined to acts willfully and intentionally done for another to act upon. If a person knows that another is altering his position for the worse on the idea that he has requested him to do something and knows that the other person is in good faith complying with the supposed request, he can not, after enjoying all the benefits, and the other party will be prejudiced thereby, be allowed to say that he made no request.

Proceedings to enforce the payment of assessments made on property for the improvement of streets are governed by the same rules as other actions. It is true that to create a lien on the property of a citizen the statute must be complied with. But here there is nothing involved but the mode of payment for an improvement already made. If appellee had not wanted the ten-year plan followed all he had to do was to go to the council and say, "you were mistaken about my requesting the ten-year plan; I will pay my assessment now on the cash basis." He was required to act in regard to this liability upon precisely the same principles as in the case of any other debt, and he can not be allowed to acquiesce in the mode of payment adopted by the council until after the lapse of five years, and then rely upon limitation in bar of the claim. (Richardson v. Mebler, 111 Ky., 408; Louisville v. Gast, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 412; Barber Asphalt Co. v. Gast, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2227.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the second paragraph of the answer and for further proceeding consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

McNEILL v. THOMPSON, &c.

(Filed February 14, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Former appeal—Res judicata—All questions of law settled upon a former appeal are res judicata upon a second appeal of the same case.

2. Same—The judgment of sale recites that it was made by agreement of all the stockholders, both in their individual and corporate capacity, and from its language the corporation entered its appearance, and is bound by the order of sale.

Sam C. Hardin and Robt. L. Greene for appellant.

W. L. Brown, J. W. Alcorn and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellees.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This is the second appeal of this case to this court. The opinion on the first is to be found in 25 Ky. Law Rep., 622, styled Thompson, &c. v. Brownlie, &c.

The action, as originally instituted in the circuit court, grew out of a controversy as to the ownership of certain shares of stock in, and the management of, the Nickle Plate Mining Co. Pending the litigation a receiver was appointed, who assumed control of the property of the corporation. Subsequently, by consent of parties, the order appointing the receiver was extended, authorizing him to sell all the property, real and personal, of the corporation at public outcry, on credit of six and twelve months, due notice and advertisement of the sale being first given. In pursuance of this judgment the receiver sold the real estate to the appellant, Jonathan McNeill, for the sum of $1,800, for which he executed two purchase bonds, each for the sum of $900, due in six and twelve months, respectively, from date, and payable to the receiver. This sale was had on August 14, 1893. On October 11, 1893, the receiver moved the court to confirm the report of sale. No action seems to have been taken on this so far as the record shows. On October 18, 1895, it being ascertained, after examination into the question, that the report of sale had theretofore been confirmed, but by misprision of the clerk the order had not been entered, a nunc pro tunc order was then made, confirming the report as of two years before. On October 25, 1895, McNeill moved the court to set aside the nunc pro tunc order, and on June 13, 1897, this motion of the purchaser was sustained, the sale was set aside, and the purchase bonds quashed. From this order the receiver appealed, and the judgment setting aside the sale and quashing the sale bonds was reversed, the case being remanded for proceedings consistent with the opinion then rendered. Upon return of the case the purchaser filed additional exceptions to the original sale, which the court overruled, and instructed the receiver to proceed with the collection of the bonds of the purchaser; whereupon he prayed an appeal, thus bringing the record a second time to this court.

We can not review the opinion rendered upon the former appeal. There is no principle of practice more firmly established in this tribunal than that all questions of law settled upon a former appeal are res adjudicata upon a second appeal in the same case. Before, as now, the purchaser was urging, though for a different reason, that the judgment of sale was void, and that he took nothing by his purchase. The court in the former opinion said: "The judgment of sale was not void. The purchaser bought only such title as the corporation had. He has received, or can receive, all that was sold. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies especially to judicial sales."

It is true that on the first appeal the point was not made that the corporation was not a party to the proceeding between the stockholders, and for that reason the judgment of sale of its property was void. But that is immaterial now. It was the duty of appellant to have presented that question, and if he failed to do so, it was his own fault.

In the case of Hopkins v. Adam Roth Grocery Co., 105 Ky., 357, the proposition that we have enunciated was thus stated: "The legal principles determined upon the first appeal of a case are not merely precedents for the guidance of this court on a second appeal of the same case, but the law as first determined, right or wrong, is the law of the case, and must control not only the lower court upon a return of the case, but also this court in any subsequent appeal. Opinions of the appellate court on the first appeal can not be revised in the same cause on the second appeal."

In the case of Simmons v. Samuels, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1870, it was said: "The case, therefore, comes simply to this, that on the former appeal the court directed a line to be established which gives appellee one and one-eleventh acres of land that clearly appellant had the better title to. If this be true, appellant can have no relief, for the reason that the opinion rendered on the former appeal is the law of the case, and is binding on this court no less than on the court below."

But passing the question of res adjudicata, all the stockholders of the corporation were before the court, either as plaintiffs or defendants. The judgment of sale recites that it was made by the agreement of all the stockholders, both in their individual and corporate capacity; and while there is a technical difference between the corporate entity and the aggregate of its stockholders, we understand the language of the judgment to mean that the corporation entered its appearance, and was bound by the order of sale. No other meaning can be given the language "in their corporate capacity."

For these reasons the judgment is affirmed.

RHODES v. NEGLEY.

(Filed February 14, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Limitation of actions—Appellee having paid appellant's taxes in December, 1897, this action to recover the amount of the money paid for her was not barred on April 2, 1902, when it was instituted.

Thos. E. & E. C. Ward for appellant.

Powell & Powell for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

In the year 1897 the appellant, Rosalie Rhodes, was the owner of real estate in the county of Henderson subject to taxation, and the tax assessed thereon for State and county purposes amounted to the sum of $280.55. She did not pay any part thereof. The appellee, Negley, who was the then sheriff, paid the same for her to the State and county. He made this payment in December, 1897. Some time after the payment by him he attached some money in the bank belonging to the appellant, and in this way collected $67, which he applied as a credit on his claim against her. Soon after he paid this money for appellant she, with her husband, Moses Rhodes, moved from the State of Kentucky, and have remained nonresidents ever since. On April 2, 1902, appellee brought this action against appellant and obtained an attachment upon the ground of her nonresidency, and that she was about to sell and dispose of her real estate. This attachment was levied upon some lots in the city of Henderson. In the petition appellee alleged that he paid this money for appellant at her instance and request. Some time after the action was instituted appellant, by her attorney, entered her appearance and filed her answer, denying that appellee paid this tax at her instance or request, or that he paid it for her accommodation, and also pleaded the statute of limitations in bar of his right of recovery.

The proof conduced to show that appellee did pay the amount of money named for appellant at the instance and request of her agent, Moses Rhodes, and that he paid it in the month of December, 1897. The court gave appellee judgment for the amount he sued for and sustained the attachment. From this judgment appellant has appealed, and contends that the lower court erred in failing to sustain her plea of the statute of limitations, claiming that her liability for these taxes was created by statute, and was barred after the lapse of five years after the taxes became due; that the taxes for the year 1897 became due the 1st of March of that year, and as the action was not brought until April, 1902, the right to recover thereon was barred. This is not an action for the recovery of taxes. Her taxes were paid in December, 1897, at her instance and request. The appellee paid them, and he instituted this action on account for the money advanced by him for her, and his right of action thereon would have been barred until December, 1903. Having brought his action within that period, he was entitled to recover.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

SPEER v. DUFF, JR., &c.

(Filed February 14, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Former appeal—Additional evidence—The additional evidence taken after the rendition of the former opinion in this case, together with the evidence in the former record, is sufficient to show that the land in controversy is covered and included in the Pickett and Marshall patent, establishing the contention of appellees. (Former opinion 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1323.)

E. E. Hogg for appellant.

J. J. C. Bach for appellees.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is the second appeal of this case, the opinion on the first appeal being in 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1323, and is referred to for the history of this litigation.

This court, in that opinion, said: "So far as the deed from Strong to Duff is concerned, it is sufficient to say that it nowhere appears from competent evidence that Strong had any title to the land he was attempting to convey. (This remark has reference to the conveyance to appellee's ancestor.) * * * Plaintiff claims under patents issued in 1873. The patent to Pickett and the Marshalls was issued long before 1873, and it is contended for appellees that the land in controversy is covered by the Pickett patent. But that contention is denied by the reply, and we do not think that there is competent evidence sufficient to sustain the averments of the answer in respect to this question."

This court in the former opinion, in response to petition for rehearing, after reversing the judgment, authorized the parties upon the return of the case to the lower court to amend their pleadings, and to take and retake proof if they so desired. Appellees took the depositions of three additional witnesses, by whom they proved that they were acquainted with the lines and corners of the Pickett and Marshall patent; that it covered and included all of the lands on the waters of Combs' branch, the land in controversy. Two of them, very old men, stated that they were shown the beginning corner of the Pickett and Marshall patent, two sugar trees and a hackberry, prior to the year 1850, and long before the patents under which appellant claims were issued. We are of the opinion that this additional evidence, together with the evidence in the former record, is sufficient to show that the land in controversy is covered and included by the Pickett and Marshall patent.

E. C. Strong, the vendor of appellee's ancestor, gave his deposition since the former reversal, and produced the patent from the Commonwealth of Virginia to Pickett and Marshall, and established the chain of title from them to himself, and professed to file the several conveyances showing this chain of title. These conveyances are not copied into this record, and there is no reason given why appellant failed to have them copied. The presumption is that they were filed as stated in the deposition.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. MOORE.

(Filed February 14, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damages—Killing of stock—Where an examination of the railroad track the morning after stock were killed by the train showed that they ran on the track for 300 yards, it can not be presumed in the absence of proof that the horses left the track and then returned to it, and in view of the fact that the horses were not seen until they were struck and that the train ran out of the fog before it reached the point where the horses began running on the track, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, as the law presumes the killing was due to the negligence of the railroad company. The fact that the engineer did not see the horses until after he had struck them, the jury was authorized to conclude that he was guilty of a want of care in not keeping a look out.

Benjamin D. Warfield and Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh for appellant.

Chas. Carroll for appellee.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

On November 8, 1903, appellant's fast southbound train, which left Louisville about 10 p. m., struck and killed two horses belonging to appellee south of Hubers Station. It was a rainy, dark night. The train ran through several fog banks, emerging from one at Hubers Station. The engineer in charge of the train testified that he did not see the horses until they were thrown up into the air by the locomotive. The collision with the horses broke the air tubes and set the brakes on the train, stopping it short distance south of where the collision occurred. While the engineer was repairing the damage he got wet from the rain. Although it was not raining when the collision occurred, this illustrates the character of the night. The fireman did not see the horses until after they were struck, as he was engaged in his work of putting coal into the engine. The train was running something like fifty miles an hour, and the testimony of the engineer showed that the collision was unavoidable. The fireman testified, and so did the engineer, that the collision took place about two hundred yards from Hubers Station. The fireman stated that the headlight would not light the track in a fog further than one hundred and twenty-five yards, while the engineer said that the headlight would permit him to see from one hundred and fifty to two hundred yards where there was no fog. The engineer also said that train could be stopped in from 2,800 to 3,000 feet.

The plaintiff proved by a witness who went on the ground the next morning that there was a cattle guard about forty yards north of where the horses were struck, and that he saw signs of the horses feet on the north side of this cattle guard where they had jumped the cattle guard, digging up the ballast with their hoofs. He followed these signs from that point to where they were knocked off, showing that they were running on the track. November 3, 1903, was Tuesday. On the following Sunday the plaintiff and his brother went upon the ground and followed the tracks from the cattle guard to the point where the horses were killed, the signs showing plainly on the rock ballast and the ties. The ties were indented by the shoes of the horses, pieces of the ties were knocked off and the ballast was dug out. They then followed the same signs north from the cattle guard a distance of 300 yards to the county road crossing. Beyond this point northward there were no signs, and there were no signs south of the point where the horses were struck. The witnesses testified that they could tell from the marks that the horses were running from the county road to the point where they were struck, a distance of 340 yards; and from the height of the embankment, as well as the tracks along the road, in the absence of some proof to this effect, it can not be presumed that the horses left the track and then returned to it.

In view of the fact that the horses were not seen until they were struck, and that the train ran out of the fog at Hubers Station, there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, as the law presumes that the killing of stock is due to the negligence of the railroad company. From the fact that the engineer did not see the horses at all until after he had struck them the jury were warranted in concluding that he was guilty at least of want of care in keeping a lookout, as it would seem that the headlight permitted him to see at least 125 yards in front of the engine. The fireman testified that the headlight would throw a light about 350 or 400 yards under favorable circumstances. No effort was made to check the speed of the train, no whistle was blown or stock signal given. The train stopped about 200 or 300 yards south of where the stock was struck.

In cases of this character the plaintiff can rarely ever show when the stock were in fact seen; he must, in the main, rely upon circumstances to show negligence, and when he shows facts establishing some negligence on the part of the railroad employes the statutory presumption of negligence is not overthrown, and it is a question for the jury whether the killing of the stock was due to the want of care.

Judgment affirmed.

SPETH v. BRANGMAN.

(Filed February 15, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Liens—Grazing stock for compensation—Construction of statutes—Sections 2500 and 2501, Kentucky Statutes, providing for the grazing of stock for compensation, provides that the lien shall not continue for a longer period than ten days after the removal of the stock from the premises with consent, and that in case of such removal the lien shall not be valid against a purchaser without notice. The statute thus recognizes the right of the keeper to retain possession of the property. Where a defendant did not detain stock without right, and they were taken from him under an order of delivery, they were properly ordered returned to him, to be held until his bill for grazing them was paid.

2. Same—Verdict—Where a verdict is not copied in the record this court can not determine whether it was in proper form or not.

Lane & Harrison for appellant.

Wolfolk & Klein for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

P. G. Speth brought this suit, alleging that he was the owner and entitled to the possession of certain horses named in the petition which were wrongfully detained from him by appellee. Appellee filed an answer, in which he set up the fact that the plaintiff owed him $107.20 for feeding and grazing the animals mentioned in the petition and four others, all of which were delivered to him by the plaintiff to be fed and grazed; that he had let the plaintiff have four of the animals upon the agreement that he would pay the bill, which he had failed to do, and Speth had then taken the other animals from him under the order of delivery in the action. He prayed judgment against the plaintiff for the amount of his bill; also that he be adjudged a lien upon the animals, and that they be returned to him. The plaintiff, by reply, denied the defendant's bill of $107.20, and pleaded that he had failed to feed the stock properly and had neglected them, suffering them to become extremely poor. The defendant, by rejoinder, controverted the allegations of the reply; the case was submitted to a jury without objection to the pleadings or the issues made so far as appears. They found in favor of the defendant on the issues, and thereupon the court entered a judgment against plaintiff for the $107.20, and adjudged a return to him of the horses which had been taken from him under the order of delivery. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals. The case is here on the pleadings and the judgment without a bill of exceptions or the verdict of the jury, except so far as it is referred to in the judgment.

The case turns on the proper construction of sections 2500-2502, Kentucky Statutes, which are as follows:

"Section 2500. All owners and keepers of livery stables, and persons feeding or grazing cattle for compensation, shall have a lien upon the cattle placed in such stable or put out to be fed or grazed by the owner or owners thereof for their reasonable charges for keeping, caring for, feeding and grazing the same; and this lien shall attach whether the cattle are merely temporarily lodged, fed, grazed and cared for, or are placed at such stables or other place or pasture for regular board; but it shall be subject to the limitations and restrictions as provided in case of a landlord's lien for rent.

"Section 2501. When such lien exists in favor of any person he may, before a justice of the peace, or a judge of the quarterly court of the county where the cattle were fed or grazed, by himself or agent, make affidavit to the amount due him and in arrear for keeping and caring for such cattle, and describing as near as may be the cattle so kept by him; and thereupon such officer shall issue a warrant, directed to the sheriff or any constable or town marshal of said county, authorizing him to levy upon and seize the said cattle for the amount due, with interests and costs; but if said cattle have been removed from the custody of the livery stable keeper, or person feeding or grazing them, with his consent, the lien herein provided for shall not continue longer than ten days from and after such removal; nor shall such lien, in any case of such removal, be valid against any bona fide purchaser without notice at any time within ten days after such removal. A warrant, as herein provided, may be issued to another county than that in which the cattle were fed or grazed; the lien may also be enforced by action as in cases of other liens.

"Section 2502. The proceedings under a warrant shall, in all respects, be the same as in cases of distress warrant, and none of the cattle so fed or grazed shall be exempt from seizure or sale."

The statute gives the person keeping the stock a lien thereon, but it provides that the lien shall not continue longer than ten days after their removal from his premises with his consent, and that in case of such removal the lien shall not be valid against a bona fide purchaser without notice within ten days after such removal. The lien may be enforced by a distress warrant or by action as in cases of other liens. The statute thus recognizes very clearly the right of the keeper to retain possession of the property. If the stock is removed from his possession without his consent, and he acquiesces in its removal, his consent to the removal will be implied and he will lose his lien after ten days, or as against a bona fide purchaser without notice within that time. The defendant, therefore, did not detain the stock without right, as alleged in the petition, and they having been taken from him under the order of delivery the court properly ordered them to be returned to him and to be held by him until his bill was paid, as he had a lien by the statute upon the stock for the payment of his bill.

The verdict is not copied in the transcript, and, therefore, we can not determine whether it was in proper form or not. Appellant has only brought up the pleadings and the judgment. The judgment entered by the court was warranted by the pleadings. While it is true that the judgment might have been in the alternative for the return of the horses, or their value, under the statute, this was not prejudicial to the plaintiff. The defendant was entitled to the possession of the property, and if the property was not forthcoming, then the court might have ordered so much of its value paid to him as would satisfy his bill; but when the property was forthcoming the plaintiff can not complain that the court ordered the property returned to the defendant which he had improperly taken from him under the order of delivery.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH, FOR USE, &c. v. RATCLIFF.

(Filed February 15, 1905.)

Sheriff—Taxes—Collecting excess—Judgment—Ca-Sa—A judgment against a sheriff for the collection of taxes in excess of the constitutional limit, is not such a judgment as will authorize an order awarding a capias ad satisfaciendum for its collection or enforcement.

Winfield Buckler for appellants.

Morgan & Hughes and Holmes & Ross for appellee.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

At the May, 1902, term of the Nicholas Circuit Court the citizens and taxpayers of that county, who sued in the name of the Commonwealth, recovered a judgment against the appellee, the then sheriff of that county, for about $3,000, with interest and costs. This recovery was on account of the sheriff having collected taxes for county purposes to that extent above the constitutional limit, that it is to say, that much more than the Constitution permitted to be collected for any one year. The fiscal court of that county made the assessment and directed the sheriff to collect, but to the extent of the amount of recovery stated the assessment was void. It would seem that that judgment had never been paid by the appellee.

This proceeding is upon a notice by appellant, and a motion made by it in court, at the February, 1904, term, asking the court to append to the judgment of 1902 an order awarding a capias ad satisfaciendum under section 1661, Kentucky Statutes. The court refused the motion of appellant and dismissed this proceeding, and the appellant has appealed. The appellant is proceeding upon the idea that the failure to append this to the judgment at the time it was rendered was a clerical misprision. This is a mistake. Even conceding that this writ should have been awarded or noted at the foot of the judgment of 1902, the failure to do so was an error of law and not clerical in its character, and appellant's remedy was by an appeal from this judgment. The failure of a court to render a judgment in conformity with the law is not a clerical misprision. (8 Bush, 164.)

By the section of the statutes referred to it is provided that a capias ad satisfaciendum may issue, except against females, upon all judgments for a trespass vi et armis, for seduction, or for slander, written or verbal, or for malicious prosecution. The appellant contends that the action of the sheriff in the collection of the taxes referred to was a trespass vi et armis. We are of the opinion that this is error. Such a trespass is an unlawful act committed with force and violence on the person, property or the relative rights of another—injuries accompanied by force. The action of the sheriff in collecting these taxes was not a trespass by force and violence in the meaning and sense as used in the statute. To commit a trespass vi et armis the trespass must have been committed with at least a knowledge that a wrong was being done, and it must be accompanied with some force and violence. These elements of wrong do not appear in this record.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HAMILTON'S EX'OR v. HAMILTON, &c.

• (Filed February 15, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Note—Assignment—Pledge—Surety—Failure of pledgee to collect—Insolvency of payor—Liability—Where one assigns and delivers a note to his surety to be applied to the payment of a note owing by the pledgor on which the pledgee is surety, the pledgee is thereby charged with the duty of collecting the note in a reasonable time and applying the proceeds as directed. and if at the time of the delivery of the note the payors were solvent and thereafter became insolvent, the pledgee is liable to the pledgor for the amount of the note.

2. Estoppel—Res judicata—Pleas of res judicata and estoppel considered by the court under the facts in the record, and held to have been properly overruled by the court.

Breckinridge & Shelby for appellant.

J. R. Morton for appellees.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

A. L. Hamilton died in Fayette county, and his father, George Hamilton, later in Bath county. Each left a will which was duly admitted to probate in the county court of the county of his residence. John M. Elliott was named in each will as executor, and duly qualified as the executor of each.

The Hamiltons, father and son, were men of considerable wealth and enterprise, and in conducting large business transactions they became frequent borrowers of money. Some time after the death of A. L. Hamilton the executor brought suit in the Fayette Circuit Court for the settlement of his estate. The widow and children of the testator were made defendants, the former in her own right and as statutory guardian for the children, all of whom were infants. Amongst the claims presented against the estate was one in favor of the estate of George Hamilton. Upon the ground that John M. Elliott was the executor of both estates, the widow of A. L. Hamilton was, by an order of the court, permitted to make defense for her husband's estate as against this claim.

It appears from the record that the indebtedness of A. L. Hamilton to George Hamilton grew out of the following transactions. The former was owing Crisman, Sawyer & Co., of Missouri, between $6,000 and $8,000, upon which George Hamilton was his surety. In order to raise the money with which to pay this debt, or to repay his father what he had paid as his surety to Crisman, Sawyer & Co., A. L. Hamilton, as principal, and George Hamilton, as his surety, borrowed $6,000 of the Farmers National Bank of Mt. Sterling. Upon the maturity of this note it was renewed, at which time it amounted to $6,256. Afterwards the Hamiltons, A. L. and George, were sued by the bank upon notes aggregating $33,000, upon which judgments went against them. Later these judgments were paid by George Hamilton except $10,000, which he at the time replevied, and also finally paid. The $6,250 was one of the notes upon which the bank brought suit. It does not appear from the record how much, if any, of the $33,000, beside the note of $6,250, A. L. Hamilton was liable for as principal or surety, but at any rate it was all paid by George Hamilton, including the $6,250 debt, and this sum of $6,250, with its accrued interest, constitutes the claim asserted in behalf of the estate of George Hamilton against that of A. L. Hamilton. There are, however, certain admitted credits shown by the record which reduce the claim to the alleged balance of $6,678 60 sued for.

In the answer filed by appellee to the petition as amended it was averred that the estate of A. L. Hamilton, in addition to the credits allowed by the executor, should receive a further credit of $3,100 as of June 14, 1885, the amount of a note executed to A. L. Hamilton by Palmer & Bowman in September, 1884, and which it was charged A. L. Hamilton assigned June 14, 1885, to George Hamilton, in payment pro tanto of the note of $6,000 held by the Farmers National Bank of Mt. Sterling against A. L. Hamilton and George Hamilton for money borrowed to pay on the debt of A. L. Hamilton to Crisman, Sawyer & Co., or to repay to George Hamilton what he had paid them for A. L. Hamilton; that the note of $3,100 was accepted by George Hamilton with that understanding and agreement, and Palmer & Bowman were then, and for some time thereafter, solvent and good for the note, and that notwithstanding the agreement under which George Hamilton was assigned and accepted the note, he failed to give A. L. Hamilton credit therefor.

The reply, in substance, pleaded a want of knowledge or information on the part of the executor of George Hamilton sufficient to form a belief as to the alleged assignment of the $3,100 note to George Hamilton by A. L. Hamilton; denied that the estate of the latter was entitled to credit therefor upon the claim asserted by the executor of the former, and averred that George Hamilton used due diligence in attempting to collect the note of Palmer & Bowman, and in fact pursued them to insolvency without being able to make the debt. Appellees by rejoinder controverted the averments of the reply as to the alleged diligence of George Hamilton in attempting to collect the Palmer & Bowman note. The cause was referred to the master commissioner to take proof and report as to the claims filed against A. L. Hamilton's estate, and after receiving and considering the proof offered by both parties, he made his report, from which it appears that he came to the conclusion that the estate of A. L. Hamilton was entitled to credit upon the claim asserted by the executor of George Hamilton for the note of $3,100 on Palmer & Bowman, assigned George Hamilton by A. L. Hamilton, as of June 14, 1885, the date of the assignment, and that after allowing credit therefor and approving the additional credits admitted by the executor of George Hamilton, there was left due his estate from that of A. L. Hamilton's the sum of $315.95.

Exceptions were filed to the report by appellant as executor of George Hamilton, but they were overruled by the chancellor, and judgment entered in accordance with the report. It is insisted for appellant that the chancellor and his commissioner erred in allowing appellee's credit by the amount of the Palmer & Bowman note. This contention should not be sustained unless the conclusions of the commissioner and judgment of the chancellor are against the weight of the evidence, or contrary to law. It seems to be admitted that A. L. Hamilton and J. C. Hamilton were in 1884 the joint owners of a herd of shorthorn cattle, and that in September of that year they sold a "Duchess" cow to Palmer & Bowman for $6,200, for which the latter executed to A. L. Hamilton a note of $3,100, and to J. C. Hamilton a note for a like sum, and it is also admitted that the $3,100 note received by A. L. Hamilton of Palmer & Bowman was by him assigned and delivered to George Hamilton about the time he became the surety of A. L. Hamilton upon the $6,000 note executed to the Farmers National Bank. The proof shows beyond question that the $3,100 note remained in the possession of George Hamilton from the time of its delivery to him until the death of A. L. Hamilton, and in fact down to the time of his own death, which occurred five years after that of A. L. Hamilton, and it is not claimed or intimated by any witness who testified in the case that he or A. L. Hamilton were ever heard to say that the latter had or owned any interest in the note after its assignment and delivery to George Hamilton. It is furthermore admitted by appellant, because averred in the reply filed by him, that suit was brought upon the note against Palmer & Bowman by George Hamilton, and that he prosecuted the action with due diligence, in his own name. Manifestly he either became the owner of the note by its assignment and delivery to him, or he held it as collateral and in pledge to indemnify himself, to the extent that it was supposed to furnish such indemnity, against loss by reason for his suretyship for A. L. Hamilton upon the bank note. There is much proof aside from the circumstances to which reference has been made conducing to prove that he became the owner of the note by the assignment and delivery thereof.

The witness, Tenny, testified that he was present when the Palmer & Bowman note was assigned by A. L. Hamilton to George Hamilton, and that the son said to his father that he could take it in satisfaction of that much of what he might have to pay, or had paid to Crisman, Sawyer & Co.

Everett Van Meter testified to a conversation he had with George Hamilton in Chicago in 1891, when associated with him and appellant Elliott in a cattle transaction, in which conversation George Hamilton told him the history of the Palmer & Bowman note, and that it had been assigned him by A. L. Hamilton, and he had accepted it in part payment of the money the latter owed him.

The only testimony found in the record that tends to contradict the proof of ownership is the following entry appearing in the ledger of A. L. Hamilton:

"I this day give to A. L. Hamilton, as shown by his books due me, $5,000 as an advancement to him. The above account runs back for a number of years. The Farmers National Bank of Mt. Sterling judgment against George Hamilton, and I believe also against A. L. H. for $6,000, and not yet paid, and the note of Bowman & Palmer for about $8,100, date September, 1884, are neither embraced in the above account. A. L. H. owes the Farmers National Bank judgment, and the Bowman & Palmer note is his. This 19th day of January, 1889.

“GEORGE HAMILTON.”

It is contended by counsel for appellant that the foregoing entry, made only nine months before the death of A. L. Hamilton, shows that it was understood between George and A. L. Hamilton that the title to the Palmer & Bowman note, notwithstanding its assignment and delivery to George Hamilton, remained in A. L. Hamilton. It is shown by the evidence that the entry or statement in question, including the signature of George Hamilton, is in the handwriting of Mrs. Ellen Hamilton, wife of George and mother of A. L. Hamilton. As no witness has testified that it was made with the knowledge of A. L. Hamilton, or George Hamilton, or by authority of the latter, its admissibility as evidence may well be questioned, but conceding for present purposes that it should be entitled to some weight as it appears in A. L. Hamilton's ledger, and was written by his mother, presumably by direction of her husband, it only proves that the Palmer & Bowman note was assigned to and received by George Hamilton to be collected and applied in payment pro tanto of the bank debt, or as collateral security and to furnish him indemnity against loss to the extent of its face value as surety of A. L. Hamilton on the bank debt. This is further shown by his treating the Palmer & Bowman note as his own, and by his bringing suit upon it in his own name. In fact after the date of the entry in question, and at the time of his death, he was prosecuting in his own name in Virginia an action against Palmer & Bowman upon the judgment he obtained in this State against them for the amount of the note. It is likewise true that he was entitled to the proceeds of the Palmer & Bowman note, for it is admitted that he paid the whole of the bank debt.

Assuming, therefore, that George Hamilton held the Palmer & Bowman note as collateral security, or in pledge for the purpose stated, it was his duty as pledgee to take care of it, to realize its value and to apply it to the bank debt. As pledgee and legal title holder of the note by virtue of its assignment and delivery to him, he was the only person having authority to collect the note or sue upon it, and in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, which has not been shown, it is to be inferred that he, as holder of the note, was charged with the duty and in law required to take the usual and ordinary steps to realize on it, that is to sue, if not paid at the proper time.

In Colebrook on Collateral Securities, section 117, it is said, in discussing the duties of the pledgee: “He must collect and apply the securities, at their maturity, to the payment of the debt, in the case of promissory notes and bills of exchange, though sale may be made when the collateral securities are long time negotiable bonds.”

In Shindler v. Hayden's Adm'r, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 859, it is said: “It is now well settled law in this State that the assignee of a note or bond taken as collateral to secure another debt must exercise ordinary diligence in collecting the collateral, and if he fails to do so, he will be responsible to his assignor for the damage sustained by reason of his default." (Nolan v. Clark, 10 B. Mon., 241; Banta v. Curry, 3 Bush, 678; Hays & Watkins v. Wheatley & Co., 7 Ky. Law Rep., 663.)

It satisfactorily appears from the evidence that George Hamilton did not use ordinary diligence in trying to collect the Palmer & Bowman note. Upon the contrary, notwithstanding their entire solvency when he received the note and for some time after its maturity, he held it until December 12, 1888, more than three years after its maturity, before instituting suit upon it in the Montgomery Court of Common Pleas, yet in that time J. C. Hamilton, by suit, collected of the same obligors the note of like amount they gave him. The only explanation found in the record of the long delay upon the part of George Hamilton in bringing suit on the note is furnished by the deposition of his son, W. W. Hamilton, who testified therein that in several conversations with his father after the assignment to him of the Palmer & Bowman note he said he considered the note perfectly good; that Palmer was a nice man, and he thought worth half a million dollars. This confidence in Palmer, and his supposed great wealth, doubtless had the effect to produce in the mind of George Hamilton such a feeling of security as to the ability of Palmer & Bowman to pay the debt that it unfortunately caused him to delay to an unwarranted degree its collection, but the widow and children of A. L. Hamilton should not be made the victims of his misplaced confidence.

It is reasonably certain from the evidence, therefore, that George Hamilton, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have collected the note, and that he did not do so was due to his laches. So whether he be regarded as the owner or pledgee of the Palmer & Bowman note under the assignment from A. L. Hamilton, his estate was liable for the amount thereof, therefore, the credit for that sum allowed the estate of A. L. Hamilton by the report of the commissioner and judgment of the chancellor was proper unless the pleas of estoppel and res judicata interposed by the amended petition were a bar. It was averred in the amended petition, in substance, that by a former judgment of the Fayette Circuit Court, rendered in the case of Emma Hamilton, &c. v. John M. Elliott, Trustee under the will of A. L. Hamilton, the contest over the claim asserted in this action by appellant as executor of George Hamilton against the estate of A. L. Hamilton was settled by agreement and adjudicated in favor of the validity of the claim, and that appellee, Emma V. Hamilton, was a party to the agreement in her own right as widow of A. L. Hamilton and also as statutory guardian of her infant children.

The facts constituting the alleged estoppel contained in the amended petition were specifically denied by the answer of the appellee, Emma V. Hamilton, widow and statutory guardian. The only competent proof offered in support of the pleas of estoppel and res judicata is furnished by the record of the former action. The action was brought by Emma V. Hamilton in her own right and as statutory guardian of her children to procure the removal of John M. Elliott as trustee under the will of her husband, and to surcharge certain settlements made by him in the Fayette County Court. George Hamilton and his wife, Ellen Hamilton, were made parties to the action. Thereafter George Hamilton filed answer, denying the statements of the petition, to the effect that his claim against the estate of A. L. Hamilton was unjust or unfounded. George Hamilton died March 4, 1895, but no order of revivor was ever taken against his executor, J. M. Elliott, nor was the executor ever made a party to the action. The written agreement between the parties referred to was made October 16, 1895. The only parties to the agreement were Emma Hamilton, in her own right and as guardian of her children, and John M. Elliott, individually and as trustee under the will of A. L. Hamilton. In effect the agreement provided, first, that John M. Elliott should resign as trustee of A. L. Hamilton's estate; that the Security Trust and Safety Vault Co., of Lexington, should be appointed trustee in his stead, and that he should be allowed $100 compensation for the year 1895; second, that the contest over the claims of George Hamilton and J. M. Elliott should be abandoned, and the exceptions thereto withdrawn, and that no action should be taken by J. M. Elliott, as executor of A. L. Hamilton, to enforce the claim of George Hamilton's estate against that of A. L. Hamilton until the result of a claim in favor of the estate of A. L. Hamilton against certain parties in Virginia should be ascertained. This agreement was signed by Emma V. Hamilton, in her own right and as guardian of her children, and by J. M. Elliott, individually and as trustee.

The agreement, together with the resignation of John M. Elliott as trustee, was filed in the case of Emma V. Hamilton v. J. M. Elliott, Trustee, in the Fayette Circuit Court, and at the same time an order was entered accepting the resignation of Elliott as trustee, and appointing the trust company as trustee under the will of A. L. Hamilton. The order further directed a reference of the case to the commissioner to make final settlement with Elliott of his accounts as trustee under the will of A. L. Hamilton. It does not appear that the provisions of the agreement as to the claim of George Hamilton's estate against the estate of A. L. Hamilton was made a part of, or referred to, in the judgment of the court. There was in fact no express recognition of its validity in the written agreement, and one of the grounds assigned in the petition in the suit against J. M. Elliott, trustee, for his removal as such was that he had improperly allowed the claim of George Hamilton. As the judgment is silent as to the claim of George Hamilton, and yet shows the removal of Elliott as trustee and the appointment of his successor, the inference to be drawn from these facts would be that the judgment sustained the contention of the plaintiff in that action that Elliott as trustee had improperly allowed the claim of George Hamilton. The judgment, therefore, does not support the plea of res judicata.

Is the estoppel pleaded by appellant sustained by the written agreement? An examination of the agreement and of the record in the former action will show that the question as to the ownership of the Palmer & Bowman note was not in issue in that case, the reason of which is patent. The action instituted by George Hamilton in Virginia against Palmer & Bowman upon the judgment obtained upon the note in Kentucky was pending at the time the agreement was made, and it was doubtless then believed by the parties that the claim could probably be collected, in which event the money would have been appropriated by the executor of the estate of George Hamilton in part satisfaction of his claim against the estate of A. L. Hamilton, which arose out of what he had paid as surety for A. L. Hamilton, and if such had been the result this controversy would not have arisen. The real object of the agreement, we are satisfied, was to hold in abeyance the claim asserted for the estate of George Hamilton until it could be ascertained whether the Palmer & Bowman note could be collected; if so, and A. L. Hamilton's estate received credit for it, it would have been immaterial whether the Palmer & Bowman note became the property of George Hamilton by the assignment, or he took it as collateral security to indemnify him against loss as surety for A. L. Hamilton. But when it was ascertained that the Palmer & Bowman debt was lost, the question as to how it was held by George Hamilton arose for the first time, the contention of appellees being that whether he took it as owner or pledgee, the estate of A. L. Hamilton should not be the loser. J. M. Elliott was not a party to the agreement as executor of the will of George Hamilton. If the agreement had provided that the estate of A. L. Hamilton should have credit upon the claim of George Hamilton's estate by the amount of the Palmer & Bowman note, would the estate of the latter, or his executor, been bound thereby? Undoubtedly not. If the agreement was not binding upon appellant as executor of the will of George Hamilton with respect to a matter in which the widow and children of A. L. Hamilton were interested, how could it operate as an estoppel against them or the estate of A. L. Hamilton?

We are of opinion that the pleas of estoppel and res judicata were properly overruled by the chancellor, and as his conclusions in all respects seem to be supported by the weight of the evidence, the judgment is affirmed.

Judge O'Rear not sitting.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

VOL. 27.

MARCH 15, 1905.

No. 4.

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. KEEBLER.

(Filed February 15, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Master and servant—Unsafe place to work—Damages—Verdict—Where a servant of a railroad company was put to work in a building where the floor had been removed, leaving nothing but the "sleepers" on which to stand and do the work, and in doing which he was compelled to turn a heavy boiler plate without assistance, and in doing so he slipped off the sleeper and was ruptured, a verdict for $1,250 damages will not be disturbed.

2. Obvious danger—Knowledge of servant—Question for jury—The question whether the danger in doing the work was so obvious to the servant that none but a reckless person would have undertaken it, having been submitted to the jury under proper instructions, their finding in favor of the plaintiff is conclusive.

3. Release of claim—Consideration—Fraud in procuring—Where a servant of a railroad company was injured in being required to work in a dangerous place, and after his recovery was induced to sign a release of his claim for damages in consideration of $1 and a promise of continued employment by the company, and was discharged the next day, the fact as to whether the release was obtained by fraud and without consideration was a question for the jury under proper instructions of the court.

Wheeler, Hughes & Berry, J. M. Dickinson and Pirtle & Trabue for appellant.

Hendrick & Miller for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment of the McCracken Circuit Court for $1,250. The substance of the facts as they appear in the record are as follows: Appellee was engaged as a machinists' helper in the shops of the appellant at.

Paducah, Ky. In the month of March, 1908, the foreman in charge of the shops directed him to leave the place where he was working as a helper and go to a machine in another part of the shop, known as a drilling machine, used in boring holes in boiler plates. When appellee went to this machine he found that the floor in front of and partly around it had been removed, leaving nothing but the sleepers exposed, which were about twelve inches in width by four inches across, and about two feet apart, upon which he was required to stand to perform his work. He went to the foreman and explained the situation, and was directed by him to go to work and work up some light material; that he would send him assistance in drilling a couple of boiler plates, each weighing about 400 pounds. Appellant performed this light work and two assistants were sent him, who remained until he had completed one and had the other on the machine and a "wooden horse," when these assistants were sent to another portion of the shop by the former. Appellee, without assistance, drilled the holes along one side of this boiler plate. It then became necessary to turn the plate around to drill holes in the other side, and he went to the foreman and told him that he needed assistance for this purpose. The foreman told him to go ahead and perform the labor; that he was in a hurry to have that work completed, and that the assistants were busy in another part of the shop at that time.

Appellee testified that he then believed he was able to turn this plate, by exercising care, and he undertook to do so under the direction of the foreman, and while attempting it, with one end of the plate upon his shoulder, one of his feet slipped off of a sleeper, he fell astride the wooden horse, the boiler plate slipped down upon and severely injured him by producing permanent hernia. He was sent to appellant's hospital and remained there until the 20th of April, when, believing he was able to resume his labor, he returned to the shops. Before being permitted to work he was sent to one of the officials in charge of the shops and required to sign a writing, the terms of which released the appellant of all liability for this injury, and as well as all others he may have received while in its employment. The recited consideration was one dollar, and the further consideration, proven without contradiction, that he was to have continuous employment in the service of appellant. It was also proven, without contradiction, that appellant required its employes to sign such a release after receiving injuries before they were allowed to resume work for it. This release was signed on the 20th of April, but it bears date the 4th of April. On the next morning after appellee signed this writing he was discharged by the foreman of the shops for the alleged reason that it had been reported to him that appellee had been bringing beer upon the premises and drinking it there. This appellee denied at the time. He testified, and was not contradicted, that he had never drunk any beer or other liquors in the shops or on the premises, and had never brought any there except upon one occasion, which was some time before the signing of this release, and then he was given some money by the machinist in the shop under whom he was working, who told him to go and bring a bottle of beer, which he did; that he did not drink any of it himself.

Appellant asks a reversal of this judgment because, as it claims, appellee's testimony showed that his injuries were the result of his own negligence; that the danger to appellee, incident to the performance of the labor at that place, was obvious, and in undertaking the performance of it he assumed the risk; also that this written release signed by the appellee was a bar to his right of recovery. It is well settled that if by reason of defects in the machinery, appliances or place the employer is aware of the danger incident to the work to be performed under the circumstances, and notwithstanding this he directs the employe to perform the labor, the employer takes the risk, although the employe knew of the danger, unless the danger is so obvious and the probable injury so imminent that a reasonably prudent person would not have undertaken it under the circumstances. (Lasch v. Stratton, 101 Ky., 672; Wake & Co. v. Price, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 696; I. C. R. R. Co. v. Langan, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 500.)

The question as to whether or not the danger in performing this work was so obvious and the probable injury so imminent that none but a reckless person would have undertaken it under the circumstances was submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and the jury found in favor of appellee. The jury, under instructions not prejudicial to appellant, found that the release referred to was obtained by fraud and without any consideration, and we are of the opinion that the evidence sustains their verdict, as the reason for his discharge, if there was any, existed prior to the time his signature was obtained, and it is evident appellant intended to discharge him at the time he signed this release. Under the circumstances of this case the one dollar paid him in consideration of a substantial injury was in fact no consideration. The real consideration which induced appellee to sign it was the expectation of continuous employment, and that failed.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed, with damages.

SQUIRES, &c. v. O'MALLEY.

(Filed February 17, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Land—Written contract—Creating equitable trust—S., who was a widower without children, but had reared a foster daughter who married O., induced O. to give up his trade and move to S.'s farm under a written contract stipulating that O. was to cultivate and control the farm, pay the taxes, and have all the proceeds thereof, with the right to sell it, and have all the proceeds of the sale in excess of $4,000, which S. reserved to himself. Held—That under the contract S. held the legal title to the land in trust for O. after paying himself $4,000 out of it.

2. Sale of land—Reinvestment of proceeds—Parol agreement—After making some improvements O. sold the farm for $5,500, with the consent of S., who made the deed, and invested the proceeds in a Kansas farm, which he afterwards sold and invested the proceeds in another Kentucky farm, in both of which farms the legal title was taken to S. Held—That this did not destroy or annul the original equitable trust between the parties, the oral agreement for the two last trades being nothing more than a recognition of the trust created by the original written contract. The trust followed the property, and may be enforced as long as the subject of the trust can be traced and identified.

3. Abandonment of farm—Devise by S.—Recognition of trust—The fact that O. before the death of S. procured a divorce from his wife, by her fault, and left the farm and went back to his former trade, was not an abandonment of his equitable trust in the property, and the further fact that on the death of S. he by his will devised the divorced wife of O. $4,000, and made no other devise except $200 for tombstones, was a recognition of his obligation to O. under the original contract.

4. Sale of last farm by S. before his death—S. contracted to sell the last farm to C. for $7,000, on which C. paid $411 to S. In an action by O. to recover the proceeds of this sale in excess of $4,000, Held—That he was entitled to recover the excess of the purchase money over $4,000, less $411 paid to S.

A. E. Cole & Son, Owens & Burroughs and Hazelrigg & Chenault for appellants.

W. D. Cochran and E. L. Worthington for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

W. H. Squires died in Nicholas county, Kentucky, in January, 1900, at about seventy years of age. He was a widower, and childless, but had reared, without adopting her, one Mary Lulie Sims, who went by the name of Mary Lulie Squires. She continued to live with her benefactor after the death of his wife and until her own marriage with the appellee, Patrick O'Malley.

W. H. Squires left a will by which, after providing for the payment of his debts and funeral expenses and the erection of a monument for himself and wife, to cost not exceeding $200, he gave $4,000 to Mary Lulie O'Malley. The will made no disposition of any other property of the testator, and it is contended by appellee that he had no other property. The marriage of appellee and Mary Lulie Squires occurred in October, 1887, at which time W. H. Squires owned a farm of 100 acres in Nicholas county, about two miles south of Carlisle, worth about $4,000, on which he lived. The appellee at the time of his marriage lived in Carlisle, where he was conducting a profitable business as a blacksmith, and his wife, after the marriage, as a matter of course, took up her residence with him in Carlisle, which left W. H. Squires unprovided with a housekeeper, and alone on his farm. He soon began to importune the appellee, Patrick O'Malley, and his wife to live with him upon his farm, which the former at least seemed reluctant to do, but Squires assured him that if he would live with him on the farm and take charge of it he would give him all he could make on it; that the farm was worth $4,000, and appellee could also have all over $4,000 he could make out of it by improving, trading or selling it. Appellee finally accepted the offer of Squires, and upon the terms indicated abandoned his blacksmith shop and business, and removed his family to the farm and residence of Squires, but before doing so he and Squires entered into the following written agreement:

"Articles of agreement made and entered into this 22d day of February, 1888, between W. H. Squires of the first part, and Patrick O'Malley of the second part: That the party of the first part agrees to give the party of the second part full control of his farm, which contains about 100 acres, this farm located about two miles south of Carlisle, in Nicholas county, Kentucky, and valued at about $4,000. The party of the first part further agrees that whatever improvements that the party of the second part puts on said land shall be his. The party of the first part further agrees that if the party of the second part wants to trade or sell said land to a better advantage, he is at liberty to do so, the party of the first part reserving in any trade that may be made the amount of land or money above mentioned. In case either party becomes dissatisfied the party of the first part agrees to turn over all the property except $4,000, or its equivalent, to the party of the second part. The party of the second part, or his estate, is responsible for taxes, or any other necessary debt made by him, and it is further agreed by both parties that neither of them is to go any one's security unless agreed to by both parties. The party of the first part reserves his horse, bridle and saddle. The party of the second part is at liberty to cultivate said land to the best advantage that he may deem proper.

"W. H. SQUIRES,

"P. O'MALLEY."

After going upon the farm of Squires appellee took charge of it, his wife keeping the house and Squires living with them as one of the family. Portions of the farm were rented by appellee, and the rents collected by him; he paid all taxes on the land, erected a barn, crib and probably other buildings thereon, and otherwise improved the farm, thereby considerably enhancing its value. Under the right given him by the written contract he, in 1892, sold the farm for $5,500; the sale was approved by Squires, who duly executed a deed conveying it to the purchaser. Appellee and Squires took $4,650 of the money realized for the Nicholas county farm, and re-invested it in a farm in Kansas, the title to which was taken to W. H. Squires, to be held by him, as claimed by appellee, under the same agreement as was the Nicholas county farm. Appellee, his wife and children, and W. H. Squires, went to Kansas to reside, and the Kansas farm was controlled and managed by appellee just as he had managed the Nicholas county farm.

In October, 1895, the Kansas farm was exchanged by appellee for a farm in Mason county, Kentucky, of 265 acres, and appellee, his family and W. H. Squires then returned to Kentucky, and to the Mason county farm, the title to which was taken, as in the case of the Kansas farm, in the name of W. H. Squires, but, as claimed by appellee, under the same agreement and understanding between Squires and himself that their respective rights therein should be the same as in the other farms. The entire trade, with reference to the Mason county farm, as in the case of the sale of the Nicholas county farm and the purchase of that in Kansas, was conducted by appellee alone, W. H. Squires having nothing to do with it except to execute the deed conveying the Kansas land, and to give his note for the difference between the value of the Kansas land and the price agreed to be paid for the Mason county farm, which was $1,400. After the purchase of the Mason county farm appellee assumed and exercised absolute control of it, as he had of the Nicholas county and Kansas farms, and W. H. Squires continued to live with him as a member of his family. In other words, the same relations between them continued until domestic trouble arose between appellee and his wife some time in the year 1899, for which she was wholly to blame, and by reason of which a separation occurred, and he left their home and the farm and went to Oklahoma, but soon returned, and took up his residence in Carlisle, his former home, where he resumed his old trade as a blacksmith. Later he and his wife were divorced by judgment of the Nicholas Circuit Court, which judgment gave him the sole custody of their five children.

Notwithstanding the domestic infelicitities of appellee and his wife, and the consequent divorce proceedings, no disturbance seems to have resulted to the agreeable relations that had long existed between him and her foster-parent, W. H. Squires. They remained friends until the death of Squires, which occurred very soon after the separation of appellee and his wife.

This action was instituted by appellee soon after the death of W. H. Squires to enforce his rights under the contract of February 22, 1888, and to recover his interest in the Mason county land by the sale of the whole and the payment to him of the proceeds in excess of the $4,000 reserved to W. H. Squires under the contract between them, and which, under the provisions of his will, should be applied in discharge of the legacy to Mary L. O'Malley. The executor of W. H. Squires' will, his heirs at law and Mary L. O'Malley were made parties defendant to the action, all of whom, except Mary L. O'Malley, made defense to appellee's claim. By amended petition the court was advised that one Josiah Coons had some sort of claim to the land under an alleged purchase from W. H. Squires, and he was also made a party. The answer of Coons disclosed the fact that he had shortly before the death of W. H. Squires purchased of him the land at the price of $7,000; for $1,500 of this sum he gave his note, to be paid March 1, 1900, and when paid Squires was to make him a deed to the land, upon the execution and delivery of which Coons was to execute his note for $5,500, the remainder of the consideration, payable five years after date, with 6 per cent. interest from date, payable annually, the payment of the note to be secured by a lien upon the land retained in the deed. A title bond signed by W. H. Squires containing the terms of the sale as set forth in the answer was delivered to Coons at the time of his purchase of the land, and this bond is filed with and made a part of the answer. The answer also averred a part performance of the contract, in that $411 of the $1,500 note was paid by him prior to the death of Squires, and before the maturity of the note, and that the death of the latter had prevented a further performance of the contract, but that he was able and ready to pay the balance of the $1,500 note at once, and would, upon the execution of a deed by the proper parties conveying him the land, execute the note for the remaining $5,500 of the consideration as of the date and upon the terms stipulated by the title bond.

By the judgment rendered in the court below appellee's claim was sustained, but a sale of the land refused on account of the executory contract under which it was purchased of W. H. Squires by Coons. The judgment, however, recites that: "Inasmuch as said Coons made said contract in good faith, and is claiming a right to said land under it, the court is of opinion that he is entitled to have said land conveyed him, provided he complies with the terms of said contract on or before April 1, 1908, and that the purchase money for said land should be paid as follows: Four thousand of it, less the $411 paid to said Squires in his lifetime, to his executor, Turley M. Squires, and the balance to plaintiff."

The judgment then specifically enforced the contract made between Josiah Coons and W. H. Squires, by ordering Coons, on or before the first day of the next term of the court, when the deed should be made to him by the commissioner, to pay the master commissioner $1,088.50 (being $1,500 and interest, less $411.50 that the title bond from W. H. Squires provided should be paid March 1, 1900), and to execute his promissory note for the sum of $5,500, with 6 per cent. interest from March 1, 1900, payable annually. This note to be secured by lien retained in the deed from the commissioner. The judgment further directs the master commissioner to collect the $5,500 note when due, and to apply the entire proceeds of the land received of Coons as above stated. The executor and heirs at law of W. H. Squires excepted to so much of the judgment as allowed appellee any part of the proceeds of the land, and appellee excepted to so much of the judgment as enforced the contract between W. H. Squires and Coons. An appeal was prayed by all the parties excepting to the judgment, but appellee does not now appear to be dissatisfied with the judgment.

The question that first presents itself is, what effect should be given the written contract of February 22, 1888, between appellee and W. H. Squires? It undoubtedly gave appellee the exclusive possession and control of the Nicholas county farm, the right to cultivate it as he chose, and to appropriate to his own use the profits resulting from such control and cultivation. It gave him the right to rent it and retain the rents; to put whatever improvements upon the land he thought proper, and made him the absolute owner of such improvements. It also made him responsible for all taxes that might be assessed against the land, and gave him the right to trade or sell it when, or to whom, he pleased, and at whatever price he chose, except that he could not sell it for less than $4,000 in money, or trade or exchange it for other land of less value than $40,000, as W. H. Squires was to have that sum in money or land in the event of appellee's disposing of it.

If at any time during his occupancy of the Nicholas county land appellee or W. H. Squires had become dissatisfied with the arrangement existing between them, the contract would have compelled W. H. Squires to "turn over" to appellee all property on or belonging to the farm, and to pay him the value of the farm in excess of $4,000, or its equivalent. Manifestly the contract gave to appellee an equitable claim to the land, and took away from Squires all his rights therein except the naked legal title, and a claim thereon for $4,000. Or, to put it in other words, after the contract was made W. H. Squires held the legal title in trust for appellee after paying himself $4,000 out of it.

It is contended by counsel for appellants that the written contract applies alone to the Nicholas county farm, and that the contract by which appellee was to have the same right to the Kansas and Mason county farms was in parol, and, therefore, invalid under the statute of frauds; and though Squires held the legal title to the first farm in trust for appellee to the extent provided in the written contract, that the parol trust as to the last two farms was a resulting trust, which, under the Kentucky Statutes, can not be enforced. Trusts by operation of law, more generally known as constructive trusts, have been established by parol agreement in numerous cases in Kentucky. (Sweet v. Stevens, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 407; Williams v. Williams, 8 Bush, 241; Caldwell v. Caldwell, 7 Bush, 515; Pendleton v. Patrick, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 878; Green v. Ball, 4 Bush, 591.)

We find the law on this subject well stated in Crutcher v. Muir, 90 Ky., 144: "There is a marked distinction between a legal title to real estate acquired under circumstances that make a trust upon the holder in favor of a person other than the immediate grantor and that conveyed by an absolute deed from the vendor to purchaser. An action for equitable relief may be brought and maintained in the first-mentioned case without either charging a person upon a contract for the sale of real estate, or contradicting or varying the terms of a deed under which the legal title is held, though the result may be to change a conveyance, absolute on its face, into a mortgage or deed of trust, or divest the holder of a title altogether. Consequently an agreement upon which claim for relief is in such case founded may, though not in writing, exist, and be enforced, without violation of the statute referred to, and be established by parol, notwithstanding the general rule of evidence mentioned."

A limitation was placed upon this doctrine in Sherley v. Sherley, 91 Ky., 512, which is that a court of equity will not enforce a parol voluntary trust, that is, a trust created by parol agreement, without valuable consideration.

In the case at bar the agreement by which the trust was created was not voluntary, but based upon a valuable consideration, viz., the moving of appellee to the Nicholas county, Kansas and Mason county farms, the taking care of and paying the taxes on them, and furnishing W. H. Squires with a home and home comforts. But, independently of this question, we think the trust sought to be enforced in this case is not one created by parol agreement. It is an express trust, and was given being by the original written agreement. That agreement was not a contract for the sale of land that could be embraced by our statute, which provides that no action can be brought "upon any contract for the sale of real estate" unless the contract be in writing; it was rather a trust in land, or an equitable right in land, which was created by the written agreement. By the agreement appellee was given the right to sell the farm or trade it. When sold or traded by him Squires was bound to convey the legal title which he held to the purchaser, but was entitled to receive in land or money $4,000 in any trade that should be made. So if the farm was exchanged for another, or its proceeds invested in another under the contract, Squires was to have $4,000 in that other farm, and appellee the balance in that other farm. In other words, by the terms of the contract, fairly construed, it was the evident intention of the parties that in case the Nicholas county farm was sold and the money re-invested in another farm, then the rights of the parties should be the same as if one farm was traded for the other, with or without boot. So the trust as to the Kansas and Mason county farms should be treated as the trust created by the written agreement, and the oral agreements subsequently made amounted to no more than a recognition of the trust created by the writing.

If one should convey to a trustee land to be held in trust for his son, with power to the son to sell it and cause the trustee to convey it, and re-invest the proceeds, or permit him to do so, as often as he thought proper, and the land thus conveyed should be sold by the son, conveyed by the trustee, and the proceeds invested in other land, and that in turn exchanged for yet another tract, the legal title to each trust successively all the time remaining in the trustee without any other written evidence of the trust than what was expressed in the first deed, the one from the father, what is it that gives the son an equitable right in the property in which the trust fund was last invested? Manifestly it is the same instrument that created the trust in the first place. The trust simply follows the property, and may be enforced as long as the subject of the trust can be traced and identified.

In this case the proof is conclusive of the fact that W. H. Squires never claimed to have an interest in the Kansas and Mason county farm, in excess of the $4,000, and that he to the last recognized appellee as entitled to an interest in the several farms to the extent of their value in excess of $4,000. The recognition of appellee's right and interest is also manifested by the will of W. H. Squires, for though it was known to him that the Mason county farm was worth $3,000 in excess of his interest, he by his will only disposed of his own interest, the $4,000, by bequeathing it to appellee's erring wife. We, therefore, conclude that there was no error in the judgment of the lower court. We think the action was properly brought in the Mason Circuit Court, as it sought to recover an interest in real estate claimed by appellee. The venue of the action is fixed by section 62, Civil Code.

Judgment affirmed.

GRIFFIN'S ADM'R v. EQUITABLE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, &c.

(Filed February 15, 1905.)

1. Life insurance—Policy to creditors—Fraud on company—Payment by company—Liability to administrator of insured—Where policies of insurance were taken out on the life of the insured by persons claiming to be his creditors and who paid the premiums, and on the death of the insured the policies were paid by the company to the beneficiaries named therein under the belief that they were in fact creditors of the insured, the company is not liable to the administrator of the insured for the sums so paid, although the parties to whom the money was paid were not in fact creditors of, and had no insurable interest in, the life of the insured.

2. Gambling scheme—Where the beneficiaries named in a life insurance policy were not in fact creditors of the insured and procured the policies by falsely representing themselves to be such creditors, the transaction was a speculation upon the hazard of a human life, and a gambling scheme, and the policies are void as against public policy, and no cause of action can be maintained on them by the administrator of the insured.

8. Consent of insured—Void policy—Payment of premium in good faith—Where an insurance policy is taken out upon the life of another without his consent or knowledge it is void, but in such case, where one in good faith paid the premium on such a policy, he would be entitled to recover the premiums so paid.

W. D. O'Neal, Jr., and H. C. Sullivan for appellant.

Humphrey, Hines & Humphrey for appellees.

Appeal from Lawrence Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, Equitable Life Assurance Society, issued two policies of life insurance upon the life of Morris Griffin, one for $9,500, of date May 19, 1893, payable to the firm of Howe & Johnson, the premium on which was $266, payable each year during the continuance of the contract. The other policy was for $7,000, of date June 24, 1893, payable to J. Gano Johnson, in consideration of an annual premium of $196.

It is claimed by appellee that in applying for the policies Griffin repre sented that the beneficiaries were his creditors, and the latter in the proofs furnished appellee of Griffin's death swore that they were creditors of his, and that by reason thereof had respectively a valid interest to the amount issued in the life of the deceased. It also appears that the beneficiaries, Howe & Johnson, and Johnson, respectively, paid all premiums on the policies as long as Griffin lived. His death occurred July 10, 1900, and proofs thereof having been promptly furnished, appellee, on August 15, 1900, paid to the beneficiaries respectively the amounts of the two policies, less certain deductions resulting by corrections of the decedent's age to correspond with the date of birth shown in the proofs of death.

Suits were brought in the Lawrence Circuit Court on December 4, 1900, by the appellant, John Hays, as administrator of the estate of Morris Griffin, against appellee and Howe & Johnson for the proceeds of the $9,500 policy, and against appellee and J. Gano Johnson for the proceeds of the $7,000 policy. Summons as to Howe & Johnson and J. Gano Johnson were quashed by the lower court upon their motion and the actions dismissed as to them. The cases were subsequently consolidated, and after the taking of proof by deposition were submitted. By the judgment rendered the petitions were dismissed at the cost of the appellant. We will not undertake to state the several issues presented by the voluminous pleadings. It is only necessary to say that the pleadings presented the claim upon appellant's part, controverted by appellee, that Griffin applied for the insurance payable to himself, and paid, or caused the premiums to be paid, but that appellee fraudulently and secretly issued the policies payable to Howe & Johnson and J. Gano Johnson; that neither Howe nor Johnson was a creditor of Griffin, and neither had an insurable interest in his life, as the contracts of insurance were purely speculative upon the part of Howe & Johnson and J. G. Johnson; and further, that the designation in one policy of Howe & Johnson, and in the other of J. G. Johnson, as beneficiaries, was invalid, for which reason the proceeds of the policies were entitled to be received by Griffin's administrator.

The legal issue as to whether Howe & Johnson were creditors was tried by a jury, and decided by them in the negative. All other issues were tried by the court. We think the following facts were established by the evidence: First, that Howe & Johnson in the one policy and J. Gano Johnson in the other were named as beneficiaries; second, that all the premiums on the policies during the continuance of the insurance contracts were paid by the beneficiaries respectively; third, that neither at the time of the issue of the policies nor when they were paid did appellee know that Howe & Johnson or J. Gano Johnson were not creditors of Griffin, if such was the case; fourth, that appellee did not know at the time of paying the policies, or at any time previous thereto, that any person or persons other than the beneficiaries had any claim upon or interest in the proceeds of the policies. Upon the facts as thus presented we think the judgment rendered by the lower court was proper. We can find no reason to hold that appellant is entitled to recover of appellee the proceeds of the policies in question. If, as seems to be admitted by counsel for both appellant and appellee, the persons named as beneficiaries in these policies were not in fact creditors of Griffin, yet they and he fraudulently procured the policies by falsely repre-senti g them to be creditors, the transaction as to each policy was clearly a speculation upon the hazard of human life, and consequently a gambling scheme, pure and simple, which rendered the policies void because against public policy; and if void, no cause of action against appellee exists in favor of Griffin's administrator for the recovery of their proceeds. (Basye v. Adams, 81 Ky., 368; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S., 779; Keystone Mut. Benefit Association v. Norris, 115 Pa., 446.)

Upon the other hand, if the policies were taken upon the life of Griffin without his knowledge or consent they were also void, but any one who in good faith paid premiums upon them would be entitled to recover the premiums so paid. (Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Monohan, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 992; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Black, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 580; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 868.)

The appellant's first contention that Griffin applied for the insurance payable to himself, and paid, or caused to be paid, the premiums, but that by fraudulent collusion between appellees, Howe & Johnson, and Johnson the policies were, without Griffin's knowledge or consent, made payable to them respectively, is wholly unsupported by proof. Equally untenable, we think, is appellant's further contention that though Griffin consented that the policies be made payable to Howe & Johnson and Johnson respectively, the fact that they were not creditors of Griffin, as represented, rendered the policies void as to them, but valid as against appellee in favor of Griffin's administrator, to whom they must be paid, notwithstanding the settlement made by appellees with the beneficiaries, without any notice on its part of their want of interest, or of any claim on the part of Griffin's administrator. The authorities cited by appellant's counsel in support of the last proposition do in the main hold that the designation of a beneficiary "outside the prescribed class" does not render the policy void, but merely renders that designation invalid. It will be found, however, that these were all cases of benevolent aid societies, the charters of which provided that only the families of the members could be the beneficiaries of the insurance, therefore, the opinions hold that where one was named as beneficiary in a certificate or policy issued on the life of a member of the society to whom it would be ultra vires for the society to pay the insurance, because not a member of the class authorized by the charter to be beneficiaries, the insurance should nevertheless be paid to the persons designated by the charter.

Other cases cited by counsel for appellant, such as Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S., 460; Mayer v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 87 Texas, 775, and Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S., 781, seem to hold that where policies are issued to beneficiaries who have no insurable interest, and the circumstances are not such as to make the policies absolutely void as wagering policies, then the beneficiaries are to be treated as assignees or appointees, for the purposes of receiving the money for whoever may be lawfully entitled to enjoy it. The doctrine applied in these cases can not obtain here. It is disclosed by the record that the applications made and signed by Griffin for the policies in question can not be considered as evidence, because not attached to or accompanying the policies. (Kentucky Statutes, section 679.) There was, therefore, no evidence to show upon whose application the policies were issued. In this view of the matter it would seem that the policies are to be regarded as mere wagering policies, and if so they were void, and appellee could not have been made to pay their proceeds to the beneficiaries named therein, nor can there be any recovery of such proceeds by Griffin's administrator. But if the evidence had shown that the transactions were not purely speculative, or the circumstances were not such as to make the policies absolutely void as wagering policies, as, according to the evidence, the appellee in good faith settled the insurance with the persons named in the policies as beneficiaries, who would be treated by a court of equity as having received the same as assignees or appointees for those entitled thereto, and this settlement was made without knowledge on its part that they were not creditors of the insured, and without notice of the claim of the latter's administrator, we know of no principle of law or equity that would compel it at the suit of the administrator to pay the second time the amount of the policies. If the administrator has a cause of action against any one for the proceeds of the policies it is against the beneficiaries named in them, who received such proceeds, and not appellee. But we are not now called upon to say whether or not such cause of action exists against the beneficiaries.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Whole court sitting except Judge O'Rear.

GREENE v. LOUISVILLE RY. CO.

(Filed February 16, 1905.)

Street railway—Use of street by wagons—Injury to drivers—Relative duties—The driver of a wagon in a public street has the right to use any part of it, although occupied by the track of a street railway, and if while driving on the street car track he is struck by the car without negligence on the part of those in charge of the car, when his presence on the track could not be discovered by them in the exercise of ordinary care in time to avert the injury, he can not recover. But he is not a trespasser on the track, and has a right to anticipate that a proper lookout would be kept by those in charge of the cars, and that ordinary care would be exercised by them to avoid running into him.

B. H. Young and M. W. Ripy for appellant.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant, Gus Greene, was driving his wagon eastward at the intersection of Twenty-third and Portland avenues, in the city of Louisville, when a street car propelled by electricity came up behind him and ran into his wagon, throwing him to the ground, turning his wagon over, and injuring him, his horse and his wagon. He was driving at the time on the track of the street railway, laid in the street, because that was the smoothest part of the highway, traveling at an ordinary trot, the wheels of the wagon being in the car tracks. He had a man on the hind end of his wagon to keep the boys from stealing the apples with which the wagon was loaded, and appellant had asked him if he saw a car coming to let him know. The first that appellant knew that a car was coming was when the man in the rear told him so. Appellant then turned his horse and tried to get out of the way, but before he could do so the car ran into him. As shown by the proof for appellant, the car was running very rapidly and gave no signal of its approach. An electric street light was burning at the intersection of Twenty-third and Portland avenues, and the wagon was only ten or fifteen feet north of the crossing when struck. The motorman testified that he was not running fast, and did not see the wagon until he was within thirty feet of it, and after that he could not stop before he ran into it. He also testified that there was a dark place there from the shade of the trees. Appellant's proof was that there was a good light. The jury found for the defendant under the instructions of the court and the plaintiff appeals. The court gave the jury these instructions:

"1st. The court instructs the jury that if the plaintiff was injured in the manner complained of in the petition, and that the accident and consequent injury, if any there was, was caused by the failure of the defendant, or its employes, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care in the operation of its car, then the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find. However, the court further instructs the jury that the plaintiff was bound to exercise that degree of care and caution for his own safety that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same and similar circumstances, and if the jury believe that the plaintiff did not exercise such a degree of care and caution, and the accident was occasioned thereby, then the law is for the defendant and the jury should so find, unless the jury should further find that the defendant did or could have discovered the peril of the plaintiff in time to have avoided the injury to him by the exercise of reasonable diligence.

"2d. The court instructs the jury that the defendant company has the superior, but not the exclusive, right to the use of that portion of the street occupied by its tracks, and that when the plaintiff undertook to use that portion of the street it was his duty to use reasonable diligence to keep out of the way of the defendant's cars using the same track.

"3d. If the jury believe from the evidence that after the motorman in charge of the car should, by the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered or did see plaintiff's vehicle upon the track, such motorman exercised ordinary diligence and brought into operation all the means at his command to prevent a collision with the plaintiff's vehicle, then the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find.

"4th. Ordinary care, as used in these instructions, means that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances."

Appellant complains especially of the second instruction given by the court and of the refusal of the court to give the following instruction, which he asked: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the motorman in charge of the defendant's car to keep a lookout for persons on the track, and if by the exercise of ordinary care the agents and servants of defendant in charge of the car could have discovered the presence of plaintiff in time to have stopped the car, or did see the plaintiff in time to have stopped the car, then the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find."

It is incumbent on all travelers on the highway to exercise ordinary care for the safety of others using the highway. The operators of street cars are bound by this rule no less than other persons on the highway. The only difference between a street car and other vehicle is that it can not turn aside as other vehicles, but must stay on the track, and it is entitled to the use of the track without obstruction from other vehicles; but it can no more run down another vehicle by negligence than any other traveler on the highway may do so, although the vehicle may be upon its track. In operating in public streets rapidly moving cars, propelled by electricity, it is incumbent on those having charge of them in the crowded highway to exercise care commensurate with the circumstances for the protection of others, and to this end they must keep a lookout ahead of the car. The failure of the court to so instruct the jury was prejudicial to appellant under the facts of the case. (Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, section 485; Thompson on Negligence, section 1388; Robinson v. Louisville Railway Co., 112 Fed. Rep., 484; Louisville Railway Co. v. Wood, 2 Ky. Law Rep., 387; Central Passenger Railway Co. v. Chatterton, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 663; Owensboro Railway Co. v. Hill, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1638.)

If appellant was obstructing with his wagon the railway track he might be punished for this under the city ordinance; but he was lawfully upon the highway and had the right to use one part of it no less than another, although occupied by the track of the street railway. If while on the street car track he was struck by the car without negligence on the part of those in charge of the car when his presence on the track could not be discovered by them in the exercise of ordinary care in time to avert the injury, he can not recover. But he was not a trespasser on the track, and he had the right to anticipate that a proper lookout would be kept by those in charge of the cars, and that ordinary care would be exercised by them as in the case of other vehicles to avoid running into him.

In 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 70, the rule is thus stated: "While it is the duty of vehicles moving along street railway tracks to leave the tracks on the approach of cars, so as not to obstruct their passage, still those in charge of the cars must use reasonable diligence to prevent collisions, and the company is liable for injuries resulting from their failure to do so. Thus where a vehicle is seen moving on the tracks ahead of a car the motorman, gripman or driver should bring his car under control if possible, so as to avoid a collision if the driver of the vehicle fails to leave the track, but he is not required to bring the car to a stop unless the vehicle is sufficiently near to be reasonably considered in a position of danger. It has been held that where a street car approaching from the rear runs down a wagon driving along the track, this is of itself sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the street railway company, in the absence of special circumstances excusing such act, to carry the question to the jury. Where a street car is approaching from the rear a vehicle moving along the track, the person operating the car has not the right to proceed without regard to the presence of the vehicle, in anticipation that the vehicle will leave the track in time to give free passage to the car."

Instruction 2 was misleading, and should not have been given. In lieu of instruction 2 given by the court, and in lieu of instruction 2 asked by the plaintiff, the court should have told the jury that the plaintiff was lawfully upon the street and had the right to use any part of it; that the defendant was entitled to the use of its tracks for the free passage of its cars; that it was the duty of those in charge of the defendant's car to keep a lookout for persons and vehicles upon the track and to exercise ordinary care to discover and avoid injuring them; and that it was the duty of the plaintiff in using the street to exercise ordinary care for his own safety and the safety of others. As the court used in instruction 1 the words "reasonable diligence" and "reasonable care," he should, in instruction 4, have told the jury that reasonable diligence or reasonable care is ordinary care.

Instruction 3, given by the court, should be omitted. In so far as it was the converse of the last clause of instruction 1 it is unnecessary. There was evidence tending to show want of due precaution in other respects on the part of the operators of the car, and the instruction was an improper limitation on the first clause of instruction 1.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SCOVILLE v. BAUGH, &c.

(Filed February 16, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Counties—Fiscal affairs—County judge—Employment of attorney—Authority—The fiscal affairs of a county are under the control of the fiscal court, and the county judge has no authority to make any contract for the county unless specially authorized to do so by statute, and there is no statute authorizing him to employ counsel for the county or to contract with attorneys for their fees.

2. Sheriffs—Railroad tax—Collection—Attorney's fee—Payment—Order of county judge—An order of the county judge directing the sheriff to pay an attorney 25 per cent. of the sum collected by the sheriff from the railroad as franchise tax was void, and the sheriff was properly refused a credit for said payment in his settlement with the county commissioner.

Jas. Sparks for appellant.

Walker Moren and George G. Brock for appellees.

Appeal from Laurel Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant Scoville is the sheriff of Laurel county, and as such collected from the L. & N. R. R. Co. its franchise taxes due the county for the years 1896-1901, amounting in all to $2,485.47, under an order of the Laurel County Court directing him to collect the money. The county court also made an order employing James Sparks to assist as an attorney in the collecting of the taxes, and agreeing to pay him for his fee 25 per cent. of the amount recovered. The railroad company paid the sheriff the taxes upon demand, and the county judge then made an order for the sheriff to pay Sparks $621.43, or one-fourth of the amount collected, which Scoville did. At its following October term the Laurel Fiscal Court appointed a commissioner to settle with the sheriff, who refused to give him credit in the settlement for the amount which he had paid Sparks under the order of the county court. The county court confirmed the settlement and an appeal was taken by appellant to the Laurel Circuit Court, who affirmed the judgment of the county court, and from this judgment the sheriff prosecutes the appeal before us.

The fiscal affairs of the county are by law under the control of the fiscal court. The county judge has not jurisdiction or authority, either in chambers or when sitting as the county court, to make any contract for the county, unless specially authorized to do so by statute. There is no statute authorizing him to employ counsel for the county or to contract with attorneys on behalf of the county for their fees. The authority to make such contracts is in the fiscal court and not in the county judge. The order of the county court employing Sparks and contracting with him as to his fee was, therefore, void. The order directing the sheriff to pay Sparks $621.43 out of the money of the county in his hands was also void as the county judge was without authority to make an appropriation of the county's funds. These orders being void, were nullities, and were no justification to the sheriff for the payment of the money to Sparks. His legal standing is just the same as it would have been if he had paid the money out without an order of any kind. Sparks not having been legally employed by the county, had no claim against it for services, and so far as appears had performed no services as the railroad company paid the money to the sheriff on demand. It is also insisted that as this money was for taxes of previous years the sheriff's sureties are not responsible for it, as they only undertook for the collection of the taxes of that year. What basis there may be for this contention we need not determine as they are not parties to the record. Appellant has received the money of the county and must account for it.

Judgment affirmed.

HESS, &c. v. TRUMBO, &c.

(Filed February 16, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Corporation — Insolvency — Stockholders—Action by creditors—In an action by creditors of a defunct "investment company" against the stockholders to enforce payment of the balance due on their stock, alleging the insolvency of the corporation and for the appointment of a receiver, a failure to allege any indebtedness on the part of the corporation to the plaintiffs, or a failure to pay any supposed indebtedness due from the corporation to plaintiffs, and no proof that the stock was purchased with notice of its infirmity or in bad faith to defraud creditors, the petition of the plaintiffs was properly dismissed by the chancellor.

Lane & Harrison and Caruth, Chatterson & Blitz for appellants.

O'Neal & O'Neal for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellants in the Jefferson Circuit court, Chancery Branch, against the Louisville Savings Bond Co., W. B. Trumbo and others, the latter alleged to be indebted to the corporation.

The proceeding is under section 547 of the Kentucky Statutes to enforce, the payment by the stockholders of the unpaid balance on their shares in the corporation. Upon the trial the chancellor dismissed the petition because of its failure to state a cause of action, in that it was not alleged that appellees, at the time they purchased the stock from the owners in the open market, knew it had not been fully paid up; and from this judgment this appeal is prosecuted. The defendant corporation appears to have been what is commonly called an "investment company," of which the petition, after stating it to have been incorporated under the laws of Kentucky, contains this allegation: "Plaintiffs say that the defendant corporation has heretofore been engaged in the business of what is known as an investment company, selling its certificate of investment upon weekly payments and contracting to create and reserve a reserve fund of 25 per cent. of all monthly payments and a redemption of 50 per cent. of all payments as shown by said contract, to wit: 'All monthly payments, when received at the home office of the company, are credited to the various funds as follows: Fifty per cent. to the redemption fund for the purpose of paying coupons; 25 per cent. to the reserve fund, with all fines, lapses, transfers and interest the moneys in the reserve fund, are invested for the protection of all outstanding bonds and held so long as a coupon represented by such deposit is unpaid, a liability against such above mentioned fund; and 25 per cent. to the expense fund for the paying of the expenses of the company.' "

It is then alleged that the plaintiff had been induced to purchase certain certificates of the company, giving the numbers thereof, upon which they had paid certain sums in monthly payments of 25 cents, amounting in the case of Charles A. Hess to $80, as to August A. Fusts $28, and as to Lizzie Kronenberger $36; that the defendant company had sold a great number of these investment bonds or certificates to various other people, the names and residence of whom were unknown to the plaintiffs, and who were too numerous to bring before the court; that the defendant corporation had wasted all its assets, and violated its contract, in that it had failed to accumulate or keep invested a reserve fund for the protection of the outstanding liabilities of the company and the outstanding bonds and coupons, and that it had ceased to do business, and was hopelessly insolvent; that its co-defendants were indebted to the corporation in various sums and amounts, which were unknown to the plaintiffs, or either of them, wherefore, they prayed for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the affairs of the defunct corporation; that its affairs be wound up and settled, and the plaintiffs be permitted to sue for and on behalf of all the other creditors.

There is a total failure to allege any indebtedness on the part of the corporation to the plaintiffs. It is stated that they were induced to purchase certain certificates of the company, upon which they had made certain weekly payments, aggregating certain sums, but there is nothing to show that the appellants still owned the bonds or certificates in question, and we are left in the dark as to the terms of the contract contained in them, if there was a contract. There is no allegation of a promise to pay, or a failure to pay, any supposable indebtedness due from the corporation to the appellants. On page 24 of the transcript we find the following entry by the clerk: "Amended petition and exhibits of John H. Weller (the receiver appointed by the court), filed on the 11th day of January, 1902, is missing from the papers, and can not be copied herein." The opinion of the chancellor is as follows: "While this case is argued by counsel for plaintiff as though it was submitted in chief against all the defendants, there is no sheriff's return upon the summons against the individual defendants except the defendant, Mary Speth, and only she and Trumbo have answered. The ruling upon this submission will, therefore, be confined to these two defendants. This action is brought under section 547, Kentucky Statutes, to collect from stockholders the unpaid portion of the purchase price of the stock. In Trumbo's case the stock was originally subscribed for and issued to Sherman and Garrison, and was by them transferred to Trumbo, while in Mrs. Speth's case the stock was originally subscribed for and issued to McCabe, and was by him transferred to Mrs. Speth. Little or nothing was paid to the company for the stock by the original subscribers. Are these stockholders, who did not buy from the company, liable to the company's creditors for the unpaid purchase money of their stock? The stock upon its face purports to be paid-up stock. The statute makes 'stockholders' liable to creditors for the full amount of the unpaid part of the stock subscribed for by them. (Section 547.) It is claimed by defendant that the statute contemplates the original owner of the stock, and not a subsequent transferee, because none but the first owner can subscribe for stock. It would seem, however, that a broader meaning should be given the statute in order to accomplish the purpose of the legislature in protecting creditors of corporations. Thompson on Corporations, section 2929, citing Walker v. Lewis, 49 Tex., 123, as authority, says that the stockholder is liable for whatever remains unpaid on his shares at their par value, according to the tenor or effect of the contract of subscription entered into by him or his assignee. The evident purpose of the statute is to have in the treasury of the corporation a full equivalent for the outstanding stock. When that has been once done the statute has been satisfied, regardless of what may have subsequently happened in the transfer of the stock, or what, if anything, was paid for such subsequent transfer. But in order to hold a subsequent bona fide transferee of stock liable for the unpaid purchase price of the original holder it should be alleged that he took it with notice that it had not been paid for. (Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Texas & R. Co., 27 Fed., 250; Thompson on Corporations, section 2934, and cases cited.) The stock in this case purports to be fully paid up, and there is no charge in the petition against these defendants that they knew it had not been paid for when they bought it, or that they had notice of any kind on that point. They acted in good faith and bought the stock in the open market, and in order to bring them within the provisions of the statute supra it should be alleged and proved either that they took the stock with notice of its infirmity with regard to its relation to the corporation, or that they took in bad faith for the purpose of defrauding the creditors. As nothing of this kind appears in the petition (or amended petition), it will have to be dismissed as to Trumbo and Mrs. Speth, with judgment for their costs."

The statements in the opinion of the court, that the appellees, Trumbo and Speth, were stockholders in the defunct corporation, and the law applicable to them as stockholders, are evidently based upon allegations contained in the lost amended petition of the receiver, and we must conclusively presume, in the absence of this material part of the record, that it upholds the judgment of the trial court.

The original petition failing to state a cause of action, as we have pointed out, and the amended petition and exhibits filed with it not being in the record, and for the additional reasons given in the opinion of the chancellor, which we approve, the judgment is affirmed.

SKIDMORE v. SMITH, &c.

(Filed February 16, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Land—Title—Evidence—Pleading—In a controversy involving the title to unoccupied and uninclosed land an allegation of ownership which is denied will not authorize a recovery in the absence of the title papers being filed or other evidence showing title.

2. Common grantor—Deed—Title bond—Prescription—Burden of proof—Where two parties claim title to a tract of land under the same grantor, one by deed and the other by title bond, neither of which is filed or proven, and neither the pleading nor the evidence tend to establish a title by prescription in either of the parties, it is incumbent on the plaintiff to exhibit a superior paper title in order to a recovery.

J. Smith Hays and N. B. Hays for appellant.

Clay & Hardin for appellees.

Appeal from Harlan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This is a controversy as to the title of a boundary of land on Gray's branch of Martin's Fork in Harlan county, Kentucky. All of the land on Gray's branch prior to 1878 belonged to Hezekiah Hall, Sr. An agreed statement of facts in the record stipulates that Hall, the common, remote grantor of the parties litigant, had a perfect title in fee simple deducible from the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

Conceiving that the appellee was wrongfully asserting a claim to a part of his land, and trespassing thereon by cutting timber, the appellant instituted this action in the Harlan Circuit Court, setting out a boundary of which he alleged he was the owner and in possession, and such other facts as were necessary to constitute a cause of action, and praying an injunction restraining the appellee from trespassing upon his property, and clouding his title by wrongful claims of ownership thereto. The answer controverted appellant's title to so much of the boundary of land described in the petition as constituted a part of the boundary set out in the answer, and of which it was therein alleged the defendant (appellee) was the owner and in actual possession. Evidently believing there was no conflict between the two boundaries as pleaded, the appellant, by reply, denied that any of the land contained in the boundary described in the answer constituted a part of the boundary described in the petition; whereupon the appellee amended his answer, and alleged, specifically, that he claimed the westernmost fork of Gray's branch as his western line, and that he owned all the land between this westernmost fork and "Barnrock Ridge." The appellant joined issue with the appellee as to his ownership of this latter boundary, and the title to this is the matter in controversy.

In the second paragraph of the reply to the amended answer the appellant (plaintiff) set out specifically his title to the land between "Barnrock Ridge" and the westernmost fork of Gray's branch, alleging that in the summer of 1878 Hezekiah Hall, Sr. (now dead), who was then the owner and in actual possession of all the land on Gray's branch, including that now owned by both the parties litigant, sold that in controversy to one William F. Farmer, and delivered to him a bond for title therefor, and put him in actual possession of it; that Farmer sold the land to William Mc. Hall, who in turn conveyed it to Jerome Skidmore, who transferred it to the appellant, J. F. Skidmore. Appellant then proceeded to allege appellee's title to the land, which is stated as follows: "The plaintiff further states that he believes and alleges as true that defendant claims title to the land in controversy under a deed executed by said Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to Noble Smith on the 10th day of September, 1878. Now plaintiff states that the above-described title bond was executed, and the possession of the land in dispute was given, by said Hall to William F. Farmer under said title bond before the execution of the deed to said Noble Smith by said Hall; that it was not the intention of said Hezekiah Hall to convey to said Noble Smith, under said deed, any of the land west of Barnrock Ridge, and said Smith had due notice of the previous sale by said Hall under said title bond to said William F. Farmer."

The appellee accepted as true the allegation of appellant as to his (appellee's) title, but controverted the sale by Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to Farmer, the execution and delivery of the bond for title, and his (appellee's) notice of the existence of the title bond alleged. This allegation by the appellant of appellee's title, together with the stipulation of facts before referred to as to the title of Hezekiah Hall, Sr., and a reference by Hezekiah Hall to the fact that he had deeded land to the appellee's grantor, Noble Smith, constitutes all of the evidence in the record of the appellee's ownership of the land in controversy. Neither of the two deeds forming his chain of title from Hezekiah Hall, Sr., was placed in evidence. The trial court evidently was of opinion that the allegation in the amended reply, as to the title of appellee, was sufficiently broad and comprehensive to warrant the latter in dispensing with other evidence of his title to the land in dispute than the admission referred to. This, we think, was error. While it is true the allegation of a pleading must be construed most strongly against the pleader, and, therefore, every intendment legitimately deducible from the allegation in question should be taken as true in considering the title of appellee, still we think that the allegation, as it stands, does not constitute an admission that the deed from Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to Noble Smith contains the land in dispute within the boundary conveyed; and if this be sound, there is no evidence whatever in the record showing a conveyance of it from Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to the appellee, or his grantor, Noble Smith.

There is a total failure on the part of the appellant to establish the execution and delivery of the bond for title from Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to Farmer prior to September 10, 1878, or that either the appellee or his grantor, Noble Smith, had notice of the existence of such a bond. On page 98 of the transcript William F. Farmer, who was giving his deposition in appellant's behalf, was asked these questions, and made the following answers thereto:

"Q. State when, or about when, you bought said boundary of land from said Hall, and took said title bond for same. State also whether or not you lived within the said boundary at any time, and if you did, when and how long."

"A. The best I remember in 1878; I lived on it in the same year, but only a short time."

"Q. What time in the year 1878 did you buy said land and live on same?"

"A. I do not know the exact time, but in the warm part of the year."

"Q. Was it before or after September of that year?"

"A. Don't remember."

"Q. State why you remember it was in the warm part of the year."

"A. Because when I bought it and went to look at it the timber was green."

Bearing in mind that the deed from Hezekiah Hall, Sr., to Noble Smith was dated September 10, 1878, it is perfectly apparent that Farmer fails to show that his bond for title, which appears to have been lost, or at least was not placed in evidence, was executed prior to the date of Noble Smith's deed. His statement that the weather was warm, and that the trees were green, does not militate against the position that his purchase was after September 10. Some of the warmest weather of this climate occurs in the latter part of the month of September, and the leaves do not, as a rule, lose their verdure until after that date. But in the absence of the title deeds of appellee this bond for title, together with the deed of William Mc. Hall from his father in 1881, and the subsequent conveyances to appellant, establish at least a prima facie title in him to the land in controversy.

The self-serving declarations of Hezekiah Hall, Sr., as to what he conveyed, made after the deed to Smith, are incompetent as against his grantee, or the vendees of the latter. Neither the pleadings nor the evidence tend to establish a title by prescription in either the appellant or appellee; in fact they show that the land is wild, unfenced, unoccupied, mountain timber land, and it was, therefore, incumbent upon the appellant (plaintiff) to exhibit a superior paper title, which we think he has done in the absence of appellee's muniments of title showing a conveyance to his grantor of the boundary in dispute September 10, 1878, and the conveyance to himself afterwards. When the case returns to the lower court justice requires that both parties be permitted to introduce additional evidence, if they desire.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with the opinion herein.

UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. SPINKS.

(Filed February 15, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Life insurance—Where a life insurance policy provides that any indebtedness of the assured to the company will be deducted from the face of the policy, a note owing to the company by the assured should be credited on the sum payable by the company.

L. J. Crawford and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellant.

Robt. Ramsey, Maxwell & Ramsey and W. W. Helm for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Judge O'Rear delivered the following extended opinion:

The policy provides that any indebtedness of the assured to the company will be deducted from the face of the policy if the latter becomes a claim against the company. The note for $396.80, and interest from December 15, 1897, spoken of in the opinion, ought to have been credited on the sum payable to appellee under the terms of the policy. For the error in failure to do so the judgment must be reversed and cause remanded to enter judgment in the verdict subject to the credit herein indicated.

The opinion in other respects is adhered to.

THARP v. NOLAN.

(Filed February 17, 1905.)

1. Slander—Charge of being bribed—Indictable offense—Special damages—The following words, viz.: "I bribed him in a railroad case; I know he was bribed and can do it again; he sold out in the railroad case and received a bribe," when spoken of one who, at the time the bribe was alleged to have been accepted, was not an officer, do not import a crime for which the accused may be indicted, and are not actionable unless special damages are shown.

2. Private citizen—Officer—There is no statute punishing the bribery of a private citizen, and in order to constitute an officer guilty of taking a bribe it must occur while he is such officer, and a reference to a matter that occurred whilst he was a candidate, and before he was elected to the office, was no charge of bribery.

3. Alleged words must be proven—Not their import—The rule in slander is that the plaintiff must prove the words as alleged by him, and not other words of like import, and for this reason the defendant is not allowed to plead that he used other words, and attempt to justify them.

Nesbitt & Watson, O. H. Pollard and R. L. Greene for appellant.

L. A. West, Riddell & Riddle for appellee.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee sued appellant for slander, charging that he said about him on or about July 10, 1899, and on divers other days, the following words: "I bribed him in the railroad case; I know he was bribed and can do it again; he sold out in the railroad case and received a bribe."

He alleged that the defendant thereby meant that he had committed the crime of receiving a bribe and being bribed as a citizen and justice of the peace, which office he then held, to vote on a matter to be decided by the plaintiff as such officer in regard to withdrawing a suit by the county of Estill against the Richmond, Nicholasville, Irvine & Beattyville R. R. Co. as to the delivery of the bonds of the county to the company, which matter was then to be decided by the plaintiff and associate justices of the peace of the county as to the withdrawal or dismissal of that suit. The defendant filed answer traversing the allegations of the petition on April 1, 1901. A change of venue was then granted to Powell county, and the case was finally tried in Powell at the June term, 1902. On the trial the defendant offered to file an amended answer, in which he reiterated his denial that he had spoken of the plaintiff the words set out in the petition, but alleged that he had spoken of him these words, and that they were true: "I furnished the money to elect him justice of the peace for Estill county in consideration of his agreeing to vote for the dismissal of a suit then pending in the Estill Common Pleas Court in favor of said county against the Richmond, Nicholasville, Irvine & Beattyville Railroad Co., and after his election he did vote to dismiss said suit."

The court refused to allow the amended answer to be filed, and the case went to trial under the denials of the original answer. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $500, and the defendant appeals. The proof showed that Estill county had made a subscription to the Richmond, Nicholasville, Irvine & Beattyville Railroad Co., and that the county had instituted a suit in the Estill Circuit Court to restrain a delivery of the bonds, and that at this stage of the proceeding an effort was made by the railroad company to get the fiscal court to order the suit dismissed. An election of magistrates was held, at which the plaintiff was elected, and after his election he, with others, voted for the dismissal of the suit, and it was dismissed. The proof for the plaintiff on the trial tended to show that after this suit had been dismissed the defendant said of the plaintiff that he had bought him in the railroad case, and if necessary he could buy him again, but the evidence taken as a whole, which was introduced on the behalf of both parties, tended to show that the defendant stated at the time that he furnished the money to elect the plaintiff to the office of justice of the peace; that for this the plaintiff agreed, when elected, to vote to dismiss the suit, and that he did vote to dismiss it. On this evidence the defendant testifying that he had furnished the money as indicated, and had said of the plaintiff in substance the words alleged in his amended answer, and only those words, the court instructed the jury as follows:

"1st. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant, A. J. Tharp, on or about the 10th day of July, 1898, spoke of and concerning the plaintiff, O. K. Nolan, the words: 'I bribed him in the railroad case; I know he was bribed and I can do so again; he sold out in the railroad case and received a bribe;' or those words in substance, they should find for the plaintiff and fix his damages at such a sum as the jury may believe from the evidence will fairly and reasonably compensate the plaintiff for the disgrace, shame, humiliation, mortification or anguish of mind suffered by the plaintiff. If they believe he suffered such by reason of the speaking of said words, or substantially said words, if they believe from the evidence that the defendant spoke them, and the jury may also allow such punitive damages as they may deem proper under all the circumstances introduced in evidence, not exceeding in all $5,000.

"2d. Unless the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant spoke of and concerning the plaintiff the words mentioned in the first instruction, or substantially those words, they should find for the defendant."

To be actionable, unless special damages are shown, the words spoken must import that the person accused is guilty of a felony or other crime of such turpitude as to render him liable upon indictment to punishment. (McNamara v. Shannon, 8 Bush, 558.) Thus to charge that one is an insurgent or an embezzler, before the statute was passed punishing embezzlement, or to charge that a person is a rogue, has been held not actionable. There is no statute punishing the bribery of a citizen. The only statute which seems applicable in section 1866, Kentucky Statutes, which is as follows: "If a member of the general assembly, or if any executive or ministerial officer, shall take, or agree to take, any bribe to do, or to omit to do, any act in his official capacity, he shall forfeit his office, and be fined in a sum not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, and, moreover, be disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit, and from the right of suffrage for ten years."

The taking, or agreeing to take, a bribe constitutes the offense under this statute, for if the officer, after getting the bribe, should fail to keep his contract he would be none the less guilty than he would be if he had performed it. To be guilty, therefore, under the section the taking of the bribe or the agreement to take it must occur while the person is an officer. The statute does not punish the acts or agreements of private citizens. If the defendant furnished money to elect the plaintiff justice of the peace for Estill county in consideration of his agreeing to vote for the dismissal of the suit then pending against the railroad company, and he afterwards voted against the dismissal of the suit, it would hardly be maintained that he was guilty of receiving a bribe as a public officer on account of his agreement made before his election when after his election and as an officer he had done nothing wrong. If the transaction was within the statute, as we have said, his guilt or innocence in no manner depended upon his standing to his agreement. The proof on the trial showed, or at least was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding, that the defendant explained at the time he used the words complained of by the plaintiff just what he referred to, and if he did so and his words were so understood by those who heard them, what he said was not actionable. The court should have presented this view of the case to the jury, for if, taking all that the plaintiff said at the time, it was apparent that he only referred to a matter that took place before the plaintiff's election as justice of the peace, there was no charge of bribery.

The only testimony introduced on behalf of the plaintiff as to the words used by the defendant was that the defendant said that he bought the plaintiff in the railroad case, and, if necessary, he could buy him again. The rule in slander is that the plaintiff must prove his words, as alleged by him, and not other words of like import. For this reason the defendant is not allowed to plead that he used other words, and justify them. The court properly refused to allow the amended answer to be filed; but the words proved on the trial were not the words alleged in the petition, nor substantially so, within the rule excluding words of like import. The rule is thus stated in Townsend on Slander, section 865: "The plaintiff need not prove all the words laid, but he must prove enough of them to sustain the action. It is sufficient if the gravamen of the charge as laid is proved, and unless the additional words qualify the meaning of those proved so as to render the words proved not actionable, the proof is sufficient. It is necessary for the plaintiff to prove some of the words precisely as charged, but not all of them, if those proved are in themselves slanderous; but he will not be permitted to prove the substance of them in lieu of the precise words."

Again, in section 869, it is said: "Where the words set forth, in their ordinary sense, import a charge of crime, if they are proved to have been so spoken in connection with other words as to rebut the idea of criminality, there is a fatal variance."

In section 871 a number of variances are collected which have been held fatal, none of them stronger than the case before us. (Taylor v. Moran, 4 Met., 188; Sproul v. Reed, 1 Ky. Law Rep., 407; Catlett v. Brumley, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 322; 18 Ency. Pl. & Pr., 63.)

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. WINSLOW.

(Filed February 21, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Passenger—Insult by employe—Peremptory instruction—Where the evidence shows that a brakeman abused a passenger in a caboose on a freight train, and threatened to "knock a lung out of him," the court properly refused to give a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the defendant.

2. Res gestæ—Incompetent evidence—Subsequent statements of brakeman—On the trial of an action by a passenger against a railroad company for damages for abusive, insulting and threatening language used towards him while a passenger on the train, it was incompetent to admit evidence of statements made by the brakeman of the occurrence some days after it happened, as such statements were no part of the res gestæ and were prejudicial to the defendant.

Robbins & Thomas, J. M. Dickinson, Pirtle & Trabue and O. L. Price for appellant.

W. J. Webb and B. Gardner for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellee by verdict of a jury and judgment of the court below recovered of appellant $200 in damages.

It appears from the statements of the petition that appellee, while a passenger in a caboose of one of appellant's freight trains, traveling from Wingo to Mayfield, Ky., upon a first-class ticket which he had purchased before taking the train, was insulted and threatened with violence by appellant's brakeman, who was charged with the duty of seeing to the comfort and safety of appellee and other passengers on the train; that the alleged insulting, offensive and threatening language of the brakeman was addressed to appellee because he had accidentally expectorated upon the stove of the caboose; that all that was said and done by the brakeman was in the hearing and presence of other passengers in the caboose, and appellee was, by reason of the wrongful acts and misconduct of the brakeman, subjected to great humiliation of feeling and mental suffering, as well as bodily fear.

The answer contained a traverse of the material statements of the petition, and pleaded the alleged misconduct of appellee in expectorating upon the stove, which it was averred he persisted in doing after being requested by the brakeman to desist; that such use of the stove by appellee made a bad odor and was offensive to the other passengers, and when politely requested by the brakeman, as it was his duty to do, to stop expectorating upon the stove, appellee became angry and created the only disturbance that occurred in the car. Two grounds for a reversal are presented by appellant's counsel, viz.: The admission by the lower court of incompetent evidence in the trial, and the refusal of that court to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the appellant when appellee's testimony was concluded. A careful examination of the bill of evidence convinces us that the court did right in refusing the peremptory instruction, as the evidence introduced by appellee was sufficient, standing alone, to authorize a verdict for some amount in his behalf. Upon the other hand, that of appellant strongly tended to show that the altercation that occurred between appellee and the brakeman was caused mainly by the misconduct of appellee.

In other words, the testimony of appellee himself was to the effect that he expectorated upon the stove one time by accident; that upon being reproved by the brakeman, Hamlet, therefor, he told him it was accidental, but instead of accepting his excuse, the latter said to him, in an insulting and domineering manner: "What did you want to spit on that stove for? Was it to hear it fry? You better go home and spit on your grandmanma's bed, and see what she would do;" that Hamlet continued to talk to appellee in an angry and insulting manner, and appellee said to him: "I understand what you mean, and I think you have said enough about it." Whereupon Hamlet turned to the conductor, who had just entered the caboose, and asked him if appellee was a passenger, and upon being told that he was, he said, again turning to appellee: "If you wasn't, damn you, I would knock your lungs out." Upon being told by appellee: "No, he wouldn't, either," he said: "Yes, I would," and started towards appellee, who, according to his further statements, said no more, as he was afraid Hamlet would strike him.

Two of the passengers, a man and a woman, corroborated appellee in large measure, though they did not hear all that was said by either appellee or the brakeman. Their testimony, however, went to show that the brakeman's language was rough and his conduct aggressive, and both heard him say if appellee were not a passenger he would slap a lung out of him.

For the appellant three witnesses were introduced, Hamlet, the brakeman, Parker, the conductor, and Saxon. Hamlet's testimony was, in substance, as follows: "It was a very cold evening and we were coming this way on 192, the local freight, coming north, and this gentleman was sitting there spitting on the stove, and I asked him to stop it. There were some old ladies in the car, and one in particular was coughing right smart, and it seemed to me it was offensive to her. It was offensive to me, and I use tobacco myself, and I remarked to him, if you was to spit on your mother's stove she would take a stick of stove wood and blam you up by the side of the head with it, and he seemed to get highly insulted, and he says, you have said enough; don't speak to me any more, and spoke very loud, and I asked the conductor if he was a passenger, and he says yes, and I says it is a very good thing he is, I would slap a lung out of him."

The conductor corroborated Hamlet in full, but Saxon's statements were more corroborative of appellee's testimony than of Hamlet's. It is evident from Hamlet's testimony that he was angry and his manner aggressive on the occasion in question, and if the jury placed full credit in the testimony of appellee and his witnesses, they no doubt came to the conclusion that Hamlet was insulting, and his manner threatening, not to say violent. At any rate it was the province of the jury to determine whether his conduct was such as to justify a verdict for damages against appellant, whose servant he was, with reference to the duty of a common carrier towards its passengers.

"The doctrine is now well established that the law implies a contract for the protection of the party carried from the insults and wanton interference of strangers, fellow passengers, and the carrier and his servants, and for every violation of the implied contract, by force or negligence, the carrier is liable in an action of contract or tort." (Addison on Torts, volume 1, page 88, note, and authorities there cited.)

In discussing this doctrine in Winnegar's Adm'r v. Central Passenger Railway Co., 85 Ky., 547, this court said: "It is not material whether the violation consists in putting the passenger off at a point before his destination is reached, or by insulting him, or in assaulting him; they are all plain violations of duty for which a recovery may be had."

Again, in the same case, the court further said: "The law makes the carrier responsible for the acts of the person in charge of the car, and who for the time has the voluntary custody of the passenger, with the implied obligation that he will exercise the highest degree of diligence to transport him safely. In Godard v. The Grand Trunk Railway, 57 Maine, 202, it was held that the carrier was obliged to protect his passengers from violence or insult from whatever source it arises. He must use all such reasonable precautions as are necessary for that purpose." (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ballard, 85 Ky., 811; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ballard, 88 Ky., 159; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Donaldson, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 1834; Memphis & Cincinnati Packet Co. v. Nahel, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 743; Dawson v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 6 Ky. Law Rep., 668; Strull v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 678.)

We deem it unnecessary to comment upon the instructions given by the trial judge as no complaint is made of them by counsel for appellant. It is only insisted that a peremptory instruction should have been given. It is enough to say that the instructions were as favorable to appellant as it could have been asked. It is, however, complained that the substantial rights of appellant were prejudiced by the admission of the testimony of Elvis Lamb. This witness was introduced in chief for appellee for the purpose of proving by him a conversation with appellant's brakeman, Hamlet, a few days after the altercation between the latter and appellee out of which this action arose. It appears that Lamb arrested Hamlet under a warrant charging him with some offense connected with his treatment of appellee on appellant's train, and that Hamlet was fined in a police court for the offense charged, and it was on the day and at the time of the trial that the conversation in question took place. Lamb was permitted by the court to testify as to that conversation, and he said Hamlet told him in substance if it was going to cost him anything he wished he had slapped a lung out of appellee, and that he started to slap a lung out of him, and was sorry he didn't do it.

This testimony was clearly incompetent. In Greenleaf on Evidence, volume 1, section 113, we find this statement of the law: "The party's own admissions, whenever made, may be given in evidence against him; but the admission or declaration of his agent binds him only when it is made during the continuance of the agency in regard to a transaction then depending et dum fervet opus. It is because it is a verbal act and part of the res gestæ that it is admissible at all, and, therefore, it is not necessary to call the agent himself to prove it; but whenever what he did is admissible in evidence, there it is competent to prove what he said about the act while he was doing it; and it follows that where his right to act in the particular matter in question has ceased the principal can no longer be affected by his declarations, they being mere hearsay." (Taylor on Evidence, volume 1, section 588.)

In C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Reeves' Adm'r, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 14, the above rule of evidence was considered, and in discussing it the court said: "The testimony of the witness as to the conversation with Hinch, the conductor, in which he is said to have admitted his neglect, was incompetent. * * * In this case the conversation occurred after the accident happened and after the conductor had left the station, when he was expressing his regret caused by the occurrence, and attaching blame to himself for the injury to the unfortunate man. If this conversation with the witness is to be regarded as a part of the res gestæ, then the agent, by his declarations, can bind his principal after as well as at the time the accident happened, or the transaction takes place." (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ellis' Adm'r, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 259; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Webb, 99 Ky., 332; Parker's Adm'r v. Cumberland Tel. and Tel. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1391.)

It is insisted that the proof of the statements of the brakeman, Hamlet, were not prejudicial in view of his admissions made on the trial of this case of what he said to appellee. All that he then admitted saying to appellee was, if he were not a passenger he would slap a lung out of him, but in his conversation with Lamb the statement calculated to prove hurtful to appellant was that he started to slap a lung out of appellee, and was sorry he had not done so. The statement was a corroboration of appellee's testimony that he started towards him as if to strike him. We can well imagine that it must have had great weight in causing the jury to find for appellee. At any rate, it was not part of the res gestæ, and, therefore, incompetent, and the court should have excluded it. Appellee, upon the cross examination of Hamlet, might have laid the foundation for contradicting him by obtaining his denial of the statements attributed to him by Lamb, in which event Lamb could have been introduced in rebuttal to prove the statements, but even then it would have been the duty of the court to tell the jury that the statements as testified to by Lamb might be considered by them, not as substantive evidence, but only for the purpose of contradicting and discrediting Hamlet.

Because of the error of the court in admitting proof of the conversation between Hamlet and Lamb the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial and other proceeding consistent with the opinion.

Whole court sitting.

GREER v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 21, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Malicious shooting—Self-defense—Instruction—Qualification—Brought on difficulty—In a prosecution against one charged with maliciously shooting another with a pistol with intent to kill, it is error in the court in giving an instruction on self-defense to qualify it by adding thereto: "Unless you believe from the evidence that the defendant brought on the difficulty," without explaining to the jury how or by what means the difficulty was brought on by the defendant.

2. Shooting in sudden affray—An instruction under Kentucky Statutes, section 1242, for shooting in a sudden affray, etc., should follow the language of the statute.

3. Separation of witnesses—Under section 601 of the Civil Code the trial court may, in its discretion, allow one of the witnesses for the Commonwealth to remain in the court room to aid the attorney for the Commonwealth during the trial.

R. L. Greene and M. H. Rhorer for appellant.

N. B. Hays and L. Mix for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Sarah Greer was indicted under section 1166, Kentucky Statutes, on the charge that she willfully and maliciously shot at Emma Calloway with a pistol with intent to kill her, and wounded Elizabeth McWilliams. The proof by the Commonwealth was to the effect that while Mrs. Calloway and Mrs. McWilliams, who were sisters, were walking along the street, in Middlesboro, and just as they got even with the side door of the house in which Sarah Greer was, she came to the door and made some remarks, and threw her pistol at Mrs. Calloway as if she were going to shoot her; that Mrs. McWilliams ran toward the pistol to prevent the defendant from shooting her sister and as she did this was shot in the arm; that Mrs. Calloway then grabbed the defendant and a struggle ensued between them over the pistol outside of the door.

On the other hand, the proof for the defendant was that she was sitting in the house talking to two other women, and was sitting farthest from the door when Mrs. McWilliams and Mrs. Calloway appeared at the door, and Mrs. McWilliams said: "Is Sarah Greer here?" That she answered yes, and Mrs. Calloway then rushed towards her, with a pistol pointed at her, saying: "What did you part me and my husband for;" that she jumped up and grabbed the pistol and Mrs. McWilliams grabbed her, and that in the scuffle the pistol went off and struck Mrs. McWilliams in the arm. The two women who were in the house with Sarah Greer, and one or two other witnesses, give testimony confirming her version of the transaction, while the other version of it, which was given by Mrs. Calloway and Mrs. McWilliams was confirmed by other witnesses on behalf of the Commonwealth.

The proof showed that the difficulty occurred in April, and that in the preceding August, while Mrs. Calloway, then unmarried and sixteen years old, was on a train, Sarah Greer came up and said she wanted to see the girl who was going with Lapps Calloway, and she would put her lights out. A man who was sitting by the girl made her go away. Calloway and his wife were married the following February, and in March he left her, and the intimacy between him and Sarah Greer seems to have continued. There was also proof that Sarah Greer, on the day of the shooting, had insulted Mrs. Calloway, and had followed her from place to place along the street.

On this evidence the court instructed the jury that if the defendant maliciously shot at Emma Calloway with intent to kill her, and wounded Elizabeth McWilliams, they should find her guilty, as charged in the indictment, and fix her punishment at confinement in the penitentiary at not less than one nor more than five years; or if the shooting was done in sudden heat of passion and sudden affray, they should fix her punishment at a fine and imprisonment in the county jail, as provided in section 1242, Kentucky Statutes. He also gave the usual self-defense instruction, but with this qualification: "Unless you believe from the evidence that the defendant brought on the difficulty, then the law of self-defense does not apply, unless the defendant in good faith abandoned the difficulty."

Under this qualification the jury might have thought that if the defendant brought on the difficulty by estranging the husband and wife, or by insulting Mrs. Calloway that day, or by following Mrs. Calloway as she had done, then the right of self-defense did not exist. This qualification of the self defense instruction has been often condemned by this court. (Allen v. Commonwealth, 9 Ky. Law Rep., 784; Wilcoxon v. Commonwealth, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 261.) There was no evidence that appellant abandoned the difficulty before the shooting. The court should have made this part of the instruction read thus: "Unless you believe from the evidence that the defendant brought on the difficulty by presenting a pistol at Emma Calloway, or aiming to shoot her with it, then the right of self-defense does not exist."

The second instruction given by the court does not follow the language of section 1242, Kentucky Statutes. The language of the statute is: "If any person shall in a sudden affray, or in sudden heat and passion, without previous malice and not in self-defense, shoot, etc."

The instruction should follow the language of the statute. None of the instructions given by the court presented to the jury the version of the transaction as proven by the defendant and all her witnesses. In addition to the instructions given the court should have told the jury that if Emma Calloway made an attack on the defendant with a pistol, and she in her necessary self-defense caught the pistol in her hand, and in the struggle between her and the defendant over the pistol it was accidentally discharged, wounding Mrs. McWilliams in the arm, they should find the defendant not guilty. It has been held by this court that section 601 of the Civil Code, as to the separation of witnesses, applies to criminal cases, but that the court is permitted in its discretion to allow one witness to remain in the court room for the purpose of aiding the Commonwealth attorney. (Baker v. Commonwealth, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1778; Gilbert v. Common- wealth, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1094.) The ruling of the court on this subject will not be ground for reversal here unless the discretion is palpably abused. The record is very obscurely made out on this subject, but as the question may occur on another trial we will say that the Commonwealth attorney should be allowed to keep in the court room, if he so desires, either Mrs. Calloway or Mrs. McWilliams. We do not see that there was any error in the admission or rejection of evidence.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

WILLIE v. EAST TENNESSEE COAL CO.

(Filed February 21, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Master and servant—Mining coal—Injury to servant—Knowledge of danger—Pleadings—Proof—In an action by a servant against the master for damages for injury sustained in mining coal, where it appears that the servant had full control of the room of the mine in which he was injured, working there alone at his own will, setting up props to support the roof when and where he pleased, and failed to allege or prove any duty on the master to inspect or keep the roof of the mine in safe condition, or that he did not know it was dangerous, he can not recover for an injury by some slate falling on him while so engaged at work.

Tye & Denham for appellant.

Sharpe & Siler for appellee.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This action was instituted by the appellant to recover damages for a severe injury received while performing labor in the mines of appellant. He merely alleged in his petition that he was digging coal for appellant at so much per ton; that he was "necking" a room in the mine when a large piece of slate from the roof of this neck fell upon and injured him; that his injuries were the result of the negligence of the appellee. He failed to allege that he did not know of the dangerous and unsafe condition of the roof of his neck. He also failed to allege that it was the duty of the appellee to inspect and keep this roof in safe condition, by props or otherwise. It is not shown by the petition whose duty it was to look after and keep in repair and safe condition this neck or room.

From the evidence, as it appears in the record, it is clear that it was the duty of the appellant to perform this duty. He was mining coal by the ton, commenced and ceased working at his own will, was working in the room alone, set up the props to support the roof when and where he pleased; and it is shown that he put up a prop under this piece of slate, which fell and injured him, and also that it was removed, but it is not shown who took the prop down. The proof does show that he knew it was down for some time before he received his injury. From all the facts proven it clearly appears that appellant had full and complete charge of that room or neck, and that the appellee did not fail to perform any duty that it owed to him while he was performing labor in this place.

In cases where death ensues by reason of the negligence of an employer, it is not necessary to allege in the petition that the deceased did not know of the danger incident to his employment; but in cases where a servant is suing his employer to recover for injuries sustained by reason of the negligence of the employer, it is incumbent upon the party injured to aver and show that he was not aware of the danger. (Lexington and Carter County Mining Co. v. Stephens, Adm'r, 104 Ky., 504; Williams v. L. & N. R. Co., 111 Ky., 824.)

We are of the opinion that the allegations of the petition did not support a cause of action in favor of appellant. If the petition had been sufficient, we are of the opinion that the appellant's proof failed to support a cause of action and the lower court did right in giving a peremptory instruction. (Ashland Coal and Iron Ry Co. v. Wallace, 101 Ky., 626 and 644, and the authorities therein cited.)

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

LEXINGTON RAILWAY CO. v. O'BRIEN.

(Filed February 21, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Street railway—Ejection of passenger—Amended petition—Limitation—In an action by a passenger against a street railway company for damages for being assaulted and thrown from the car by its conductor after tendering his fare, an amended petition filed after the expiration of twelve months from the time of the alleged assault, explaining plaintiff's mistake in presenting an improper ticket for his fare, is not a new cause of action and not barred by the one-year statute of limitation.

2. Ejection of passenger—Unnecessary force—Liability—A street car conductor has a right to eject a passenger from the car for a failure to pay his fare, but he has no right to use more force than is reasonably necessary to do so, and if he uses more force than is reasonably necessary to do so the company is liable for the damages to the passenger resulting from such excessive force.

3. Instructions—Punitive damages—An instruction to the jury that if they believe from the evidence that the conductor in ejecting the passenger "was inspired to use excessive force, if he did so, by actual malice or ill will towards the plaintiff, the jury may, in their discretion, allow punitive damages," was more favorable to the defendant than it was entitled to. The court should have added after the word "plaintiff" the words "or wantonly or recklessly threw him from the car."

R. C. Stoll and Morton, Webb & Wilson for appellant.

Allen & Duncan for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment of the Fayette Circuit Court rendered against it for $2,000 in favor of appellee for personal injuries sustained by him as the result of being thrown from one of appellant's street cars by the conductor thereof.

The appellee received his injuries on the 6th of November, 1899. He alleged, in substance, in his petition that he had paid his fare and was a passenger on the car, and that appellant's agents and servants in charge thereof unlawfully, willfully, maliciously and wantonly assaulted the appellee and pushed and threw him from the car to the street below; that by reason of this wrongful act he fell upon the street and received severe injuries. (Describing them.) The appellant filed an answer traversing the allegations of the petition, and in the second paragraph thereof alleged that appellee got on the car and the conductor asked him for his fare, when he produced a blue transfer ticket, of the form issued by the appellant company for its own convenience and that of its passengers, to be used within a definite time as shown by the punch mark on the margin of it, and to be used only by persons getting on appellant's cars at its transfer station, located on Main street, at the intersection of Cheapside. The ticket had printed upon it the following stipulations and agreements, which were accepted and assented to by all persons receiving the ticket, viz.: "Not good on route or after time punched; nor unless presented by the person to whom issued on first car passing transfer station for desired route, and will not be honored unless holder boards car at transfer station." That appellee was informed that this ticket was not good because he did not get on at the transfer station. He refused to pay his fare, and appellant's conductor ejected him from the car, using no more force than was necessary in doing so. Appellee traversed these allegations by a reply.

In the month of November, 1901, more than twelve months after he had received his injuries, he filed an amended petition as follows: "The plaintiff, John O'Brien, says that on the 8th day of November, 1899, that he boarded an East Main street car by mistake, thinking it was a Dewees street car; that he paid his fare, and when reaching Dewees street found his mistake; that the conductor on the Main street car gave him a transfer slip, properly punched, and directed him to transfer to the Dewees street car; that the plaintiff believing that he had the right to use this transfer slip in payment of his fare on the Dewees street car, boarded same and presented the slip to the conductor, who refused to accept it, and demanded an additional fare; that upon plaintiff's declining to pay same the conductor undertook to, and did, eject plaintiff from the car, and in doing so used far more force than was necessary, and pushed the plaintiff violently off of the car upon the ground, by reason of which he received the injuries complained of in his original petition."

Appellant traversed these allegations, and by a separate answer to the amended petition pleaded the statutes of limitations of one year as a bar. The appellant contends that by this amended petition appellee abandoned his original cause of action and set up a different and distinct cause of action other than that alleged in the original petition. The court sustained a demurrer to appellant's answer pleading the statute of limitations, and this is the first alleged error complained of.

We are of the opinion that the court did not err in this. The appellee's cause of action was for the injuries received by him at the hands of appellant's servants in charge of the car. The object of the amendment was for the purpose of correcting a mistake made in the original petition with reference to facts leading up to the time when he received his injuries. (Smith v. Bogenschultz, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 805.)

There were three trials of the case in the lower court. On the first one the jury failed to agree. On the second appellee recovered a verdict for $5,000, which was set aside on motion of appellant. The last trial resulted as above stated. It appears from the evidence that the appellee, in good faith, believed that this transfer ticket entitled him to ride upon this car. When he presented it the conductor, without examining it, tore it to pieces and threw it upon the floor of the car, and demanded of appellee his fare. Appellee claimed that he had a right to ride upon this transfer ticket and undertook to explain to him what the conductor who gave him the transfer ticket had said. The conductor told him that the ticket was not good, and that he would have to pay his fare or he would put him off. Appellee told him that he could not put him off. The conductor stopped the car, grabbed appellee by the lapel of his coat, jerked him around so that his back was toward the steps of the car, and suddenly gave him a shove in the breast, which threw him off, and he fell on the macadam street, and was severely and seriously injured. There is no conflict in the evidence as to the extent of appellee's injuries, but appellant claims that his crippled condition is partly due to an injury he sustained about the year 1883, and complains because the court failed to give an instruction upon this hypothesis, and cites the case of L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Kingman, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 82. In that case the verdict was for $12,000, and the court had instructed the jury, in effect, to disregard the evidence as to Kingman's physical condition caused by the injury received four years prior to the negligence complained of.

The court in the case at bar, in its instructions, confined the jury to giving appellee compensation for any injury done to him by any excessive force used by defendant's agent in ejecting appellee from appellant's car, if in fact such excessive force was used. The court, in giving its instructions, acted upon the idea that appellee's right of recovery, if any he had, was based solely upon the excessive force used by appellant's conductor in ejecting him from the car, and said, in effect, that if he used more force than reasonably appeared to him to be necessary to accomplish that purpose, then they should find for the appellee; otherwise, they should find for the appellant. Appellant does not complain of the court's action in this, but does complain of the instruction authorizing punitive damages. The court in submitting the question of punitive damages used this language: "And if the jury further believe from the evidence that said agent was inspired to use such excessive force, if he did so, by actual malice or ill will towards the plaintiff, the jury may, in their discretion, allow punitive damages, etc."

This instruction was more favorable to appellant than it was entitled to.

The court should have added after the word "plaintiff" the words "or wantonly or recklessly threw him from the car."

Without referring to the evidence on this subject in detail, we are of the opinion it authorized the court to submit this question to the jury.

Perceiving no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant the judgment is affirmed.

WARTH v. BALDWIN.

(Filed February 21, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Passway—Adverse use—Presumption—Rebuttal—While the continuous and uninterrupted use of a passway for fifteen years creates a presumption that the use was a matter of right, and adverse, such presumption may be overcome by proof that the use was permissive.

2. Permissive use—Evidence—Where the owner of land over which a passway runs erected gates and kept them in repair for his own use, and as a favor to his neighbors allowed them to use the gates and the passway, such use was permissive merely.

Lafferty & King for appellant.

W. S. Hardin for appellee.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

For many years, and up to twenty or twenty-five years ago, there was an old dirt road or passway leading from Leeslick to Cynthiana, which ran between the farm now owned by appellant and appellee. At this time a turnpike was built between these two places, leaving the farm of appellant between the pike and this old dirt road. Soon after the building of the pike one end of this dirt road was closed and the other end of it was closed two or three years ago, leaving the only passway from appellee's farm to the pike through the center of the farm of appellant, which passway had been used for thirty or forty years. Persons using this passway through the farm of appellant had to go through gates on entering and leaving the farm, there being no lane or open way through it. Shortly before the institution of this action appellant removed these gates and closed the passway, and appellee, by this action, seeks to compel appellant to open same.

Appellee did not allege or prove any formal grant or dedication of this right of way, consequently her claim is by prescription alone. She proved a continuous and uninterrupted use of this way by herself and vendors, immediate and remote, for more than thirty years, but she did not prove by a single witness that this use of the passway was claimed and exercised as a matter of right or adverse to the owner of the land through which the way passed. She did not prove a single act or circumstance to indicate that the use thereof was as a matter of right.

This court has repeatedly decided that a continuous and uninterrupted use of a passway for more than fifteen years creates a presumption that such use was a matter of right and adverse, but in this case such a presumption has been overcome by the proof that the use was permissive. Appellant shows that he has owned this farm for only a year or so, but he shows that the prior owners of this land always regarded the use of this passway as merely permissive. They erected the gates and kept them in repair for their own use and as a favor to their neighbors, and received no aid whatever in making the gates, repairing them or in keeping the passway fit for travel. (Magruder v. Potter, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1336; Clay v. Kenney, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2084; Abel v. Payne, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 243; Patterson, &c. v. Griffith, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 834, Conyers v. Scott, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 784.) In this last case the court said: "To create the presumption of the grant of the right of way the circumstances attending its use must be such as to make it appear that it was established for the benefit of the claimant, or that its use was accompanied by a claim of right, or by such acts as manifested an intention to enjoy it, without regard to the wishes of the owner of the land. The use must have been enjoyed under such circumstances as will indicate that it has been claimed as a right, and has not been regarded by the parties merely as a privilege revokable at the pleasure of the owner of the soil."

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

FISHER v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Filed February 21, 1905.)

Telegram—Error in transmission—Liability of company—Where, in an action against a telegraph company, the petition alleges that the plaintiff addressed a telegram to a lumber dealer, offering to sell him lumber at $35 per 1,000 feet, and by negligence of the company the telegram transmitted read $25 instead of $35, and that the lumber was delivered to the purchaser before the mistake was discovered, whereby the plaintiff lost $494.10, the difference in the price of the bill of lumber at $25 instead of $35 per 1,000 feet, for which difference the plaintiffs ask judgment against the company. The petition states a cause of action for which the company is liable.

J. B. Bennett for appellant.

Richards & Ronald and George H. Fearons for appellee.

Appeal from Greenup Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This action was instituted by the appellant in the Greenup Circuit Court. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained; he declined to plead further, and a judgment was rendered dismissing the petition, from which he appeals.

The petition discloses the following facts: That appellant was engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber in Webbville, Lawrence county, Kentucky, and that on the 11th of January, 1901, he delivered to the agent of the appellee the following message:

"Webbville, Ky., January 11, 1901.

"N. Fisher, Vermillion, Ohio:

"Will furnish bill at thirty-five net to me Cleveland.

"H. N. FISHER."

Meaning that appellant would sell and deliver 19,410 feet of lumber at Cleveland, O., at the price of $35 per 1,000 feet net. It was alleged that this message was delivered to the sendee, N. Fisher, by the appellee, reading exactly as the above, except the word "twenty" was used instead of "thirty."

On January 12, 1901, N. Fisher wired the appellant as follows:

"Vermillion, O., January 12, 1901.

"H. N. Fisher, Webbville, Ky.:

"Get out Bradley bill as soon as possible. Will write.

"N. FISHER."

It was alleged that the expression "Bradley bill," used in this message, referred to the lumber quoted in the message sent by the appellant to N. Fisher, and that in pursuance of this message appellant at once shipped and delivered at Cleveland, O., to one Bradley, the number of feet referred to above; that he delivered this lumber to Bradley upon the faith of his message, and that he was to receive therefor the price of $35 per 1,000 feet; that when he presented his bill to N. Fisher for payment he refused to pay more than $25 per 1,000, and presented to this appellant the telegram reading $25 per thousand; that this bill of lumber having theretofore been delivered by him to Bradley, upon the order of N. Fisher, he could not, and did not, collect from N. Fisher more than $25 per 1,000 feet.

Construing the petition as a whole, it charged that appellant did not discover, and had no knowledge of the error committed by the appellee in the transmission and delivery of his telegram first herein copied, until after the delivery of the lumber to Bradley, at Cleveland, O. It was also alleged that by reason of the failure of the appellee to keep and perform its agreement and undertaking to properly and correctly transmit and deliver the telegram first herein named to N. Fisher, as it undertook to do, the appellant had been damaged in the sum of $494.10, and he asked judgment against appellee for that sum.

The appellee insists that the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer was correct, and cites as the only authority sustaining this position the case of Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Schaefer, &c., 110 Ky., 907. In that case the mistake was discovered while the potatoes were in transit and before any delivery had been made to the consignees, and it was the duty of Schaefer to stop the potatoes in transit and to prevent their delivery to the consignees, if he could have done so by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, and thereby have prevented as much loss as possible. In that case the court said, in substance, where a telegraph company negligently delivered a different message from that it was authorized to deliver, so that the sender was represented as offering goods at a lower price than that at which he had in fact offered them, and the supposed offer was accepted in ignorance of the mistake, there was no contract, and the sender was not bound to deliver the goods at the lower price. But in the case at bar there was a delivery of the goods before the mistake was discovered, and the delivery was to a third party, Bradley & Co., lumber dealers, in the city of Cleveland, O., with whom appellant had no contract or dealings. Whether or not appellant had any cause of action against N. Fisher, the sendee of the message, we do not decide, as that matter is not now before us. But even if he did have, he has refrained from incurring extraordinary expense in litigating the matter in a foreign State, and is seeking to recover from the party primarily liable by reason of its alleged negligence. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the lower court erred in sustaining a demurrer to appellant's petition.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

THE KENTUCKY CITIZENS BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION'S ASS'EE, &c. v. DAUGHERTY, &c.

(Filed February 21, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Building and loan associations—Insolvency—Assignment for creditors—Borrowing members—Where a building and loan association is insolvent and in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, a borrowing member will not be allowed to apply to his debt the amount paid by him to the association as dues on his stock, but as to these he stands as any other stockholder, and must take such dividends as are coming to the stockholders on the settlement of the affairs of the corporation.

2. Old companies—Consolidation—Effect—Where two old companies were consolidated and a new one formed which simply succeeded to their rights, took all their assets and liabilities, the renewal of a note to the new company in no way changed the situation of the parties or affected any of their rights, and the case must be determined as though the new corporation had continued to hold the note executed to the old association.

3. Accepting new stock—Election to continue as stockholder—The fact that appellee accepted the new stock and was credited thereon for the dues he had paid on the old stock, was an election to continue as a stockholder, and an acquiescence in the dues he had paid to the old company being applied as payments on the stock issued to him in the new. He was thus entitled to all the profits which might accrue to him as a stockholder in the new concern, and took the risk of whether there would be such profits.

James C. Poston, Burnett & Burnett and C. B. Blakey for appellants.

L. A. Faurest for appellees.

Appeal from Hardin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

On November 26, 1892, G. W. Daugherty subscribed for ten shares of stock in the Kentucky Building and Loan Association, a corporation created under the laws of this State, and paid it $10 admission fee, $6 as dues on stock for the month of December, and $6 as dues on stock for the month of January. On the 1st of February, 1893, he borrowed of the association $300, and as part security therefor pledged eight shares of his stock, it being agreed that when these eight shares were paid up they should be cancelled and the loan treated as paid. From that time until July 30, 1894, he paid the association monthly $8 for interest and premium on the loan, and $6 for dues on the stock. On July 30, 1894, he borrowed from the association the further sum of $200, and as part security therefor pledged his remaining two shares of stock under a like agreement that when the stock should be fully paid up it was to be cancelled and the loan treated as paid. From that time until February 1, 1897, he paid the association monthly $10 for interest and premium on the loan and $6 for dues on the stock. About February 1, 1897, the association, while it was a going concern, and another building and loan association, organized under the laws of this State, consolidated and formed the Kentucky Citizens Building and Loan Association. The Kentucky Building and Loan Association prior to February 1, 1897, assigned and transferred to the new company all of its assets, including the note for a $1,000 held by it, and a mortgage which had been executed to secure it. The Kentucky Building and Loan Association then ceased to have a corporate existence.

The new company credited Daugherty with $100 on the principal of his debt and took a new note from him for $900. The stock which he held in the old company was cancelled and the new company issued to him nine shares of its stock, and credited him thereon for the dues paid by him on the stock theretofore issued to him by the old company. From that time he paid to the new company monthly $9 for premium and interest on the loan, and $5.40 for dues on the stock for some months.

On July 2, 1897, the new association made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and subsequently this suit was brought by the assignee against Daugherty on his note for $900, and to enforce the mortgage securing it. Daugherty pleaded usury, insisting that all of his payments to the old company, whether made on the stock or on the debt, should be applied to the debt, and that the $900 note was to a large extent without consideration.

The court below sustained this view, and the plaintiff appeals.

It is unquestioned that the new association is insolvent. The rule is that where a building and loan association is insolvent and in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of its creditors, a borrowing member will not be allowed to apply to his debt the amount paid by him to the association as dues on his stock, but as to these he stands as any other stockholder, and must take such dividends as are coming to the stockholders on the settlement of the affairs of the corporation. Where the association is solvent a different rule applies. There the whole transaction is regarded simply as a borrowing of money, and all sums paid will be treated as paid upon the debt. It is conceded for appellee that he is not entitled to credit on his debt for the dues paid on the stock of the new company, and the question to be determined is whether the same rule should be applied to the dues paid on the stock of the old company. Where an assignee purchases a note in consequence of assurances from the obligor that it is good and will be paid, he will not be allowed to set up against the assignee defenses which would otherwise have been good against the assignor. (Smith v. Stone, 17 B. Mon., 171; McBrayer v. Collins, 18 B. Mon., 838.) The same rule is applied where after the assignment the obligor by a valid contract for indulgence, as by executing a new note to the assignee payable in the future, lulls the assignee into security, and thus causes him to lose his recourse. (Stone v. McConnell, 1 Duvall, 55; Beal v. Bethel, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 897; Burks v. Cheek, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 953.) The rule rests upon the ground of estoppel. It applies to usury as well as to other defenses; but it will not be applied where the assignee has lost nothing, and is in no worse situation by the renewal of the note. In the case at bar the two old companies were consolidated and a new one formed which simply succeeded to their rights, took all their assets, debts and liabilities and stood in their shoes. The renewal of the note to the new corporation in no way changed the situation of the parties or affected any of their rights, and the case must be determined as though the new corporation had continued to hold the note executed by Daugherty to the old association.

If the new association had continued to hold the old note and Daugherty had continued to hold his stock in the old corporation under an agreement.

of the parties that it should be treated as stock in the new corporation and have the same right, it could not be maintained that he is now entitled to credit on his debt for the dues on this stock. But the issuing of the new stock was merely for convenience. It was only a form of accomplishing what would have been done under the agreement suggested. When the two companies consolidated and formed a third, their stockholders were the stockholders in the new corporation. The issuing to them of new certificates of stock in the new company was only to give them due evidence of their rights. Daugherty was credited on this new stock for the dues which he had paid upon the old stock, and he accepted the stock thus credited. He was not entitled to credit on the stock for his dues and also to credit on the note for the same money. He might then, if he had so elected, given notice of withdrawal, and as the concern was then going, he would in this event have been entitled to credit on his debt for all that he had paid; but he did not elect to do this. He accepted the new stock and was credited thereon for the dues he had paid on the old stock. He thus elected to continue as a stockholder and acquiesced in the dues which he had paid to the old company being applied as payments on the stock issued to him in the new. He was thus entitled to all the profits which might accrue to him as a stockholder in the new concern, and took the risk of whether there would be such profits. When the company failed, his legal situation is in no effect different from what it would have been if no new stock had been issued to him, and he had still held his old stock as representing his interest in the new concern. His stock was reduced from ten shares to nine because his debt was reduced, and this saved him paying dues on one share of stock. He was not prejudiced by the reduction of his stock as he was credited on the nine shares for what he had paid on the ten old shares of stock. To make a distinction between the dues he paid the new company and those he paid to the old company on his stock under such circumstances, would be to disregard the substance and look only at the mere form of the transaction. The case falls squarely within the reasons for the rule refusing to allow a borrowing stockholder credit on his debt for the dues paid on his stock where he has given no notice of withdrawal before the failure of the association. The rule rests on the idea that if this were allowed the stockholders would not be placed upon an equality, and the borrowing stockholders might receive the greater part of the assets of the company, leaving little or nothing for the nonborrowing stockholders, and in some cases not enough to pay the creditors.

Where a stockholder has severed his connection with the company before its insolvency he stands as any other debtor; he is no longer a stockholder, and, therefore, a different rule is applied to him. But in the case before us Daugherty remained a stockholder and was entitled to share in all the profits which might have come to the stockholders, and every reason which would apply to other borrowing stockholders in the association applies to him.

We concur in the conclusion of the circuit court that Daugherty paid $160, which was not credited to him. But it is equally clear that this money was paid for ten months' dues at $6 a month and interest and premium on the loan at $10 a month. He is entitled to credit on his debt for the ten payments of $10 a month for interest on the loan, making $100 as of date February 1, 1897. The circuit court properly added the cost of insurance paid by appellee to the amount of the debt.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment as herein indicated.

HAGER, AUDITOR, &c. v. LOUISVILLE TITLE CO.

(Filed February 14, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Taxation—Franchise taxation—The appellee not being embraced by section 4077, Kentucky Statutes, and being authorized by its charter to transact an entirely different character of business from the companies named in that section, it is not subject to assessment for a franchise tax. The fact that it is required to set aside a part of its capital stock by the provisions of section 734, Kentucky Statutes, as a guarantee fund for certain investments, does not result in a special privilege. It is intended as a benefit to those to whom it has given guarantees, and is, therefore, to that extent a burden upon it.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellants.

John C. Strother for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This appeal involves the question whether the Louisville Title Co. is or is not subject to the assessment for a franchise tax under section 4077, Kentucky Statutes. It was organized under the act of March 19, 1894, of which section 725 to 743 are a part. Section 4077 authorizes the imposition of a franchise tax on numerous corporations, including banks, trust companies, guarantee and surety companies and other like companies, corporations or associations, and also on other corporations or associations having or exercising any special or exclusive privilege or franchise not allowed by law to natural persons or performing any public service. If the appellee is not one of the companies embraced by section 4077, then it is not subject to assessment for a franchise tax.

This court in Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Coulter, 106 Ky., 165, held that corporations generally are not subject to a franchise tax; that a corporate existence is not a special or exclusive privilege; that the corporations subject to a franchise tax are such as enjoy a special or exclusive privilege or a franchise not allowed by law to natural persons or that perform a public service. It was held in Ætna Insurance Co. v. Coulter, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 193, that insurance companies do not enjoy special or exclusive privileges or perform a public service, therefore, were not subject to the assessment for a franchise tax. The appellee is empowered to contract, sue and own property. And by section 728, Kentucky Statutes, it is given the power: "To examine titles to real estate and chattels real; to procure and furnish information in relation thereto; to make and guarantee the correctness of searches for all instruments, liens or charges affecting the same, and to guarantee or insure bonds and mortgages, and the owners of real estate and chattels real and others interested therein against loss by reason of defects of title and incumbrances thereon."

The appellee is unlike a bank, as it can not receive deposits, sell exchange, etc. Neither is it like a trust company. In fact it is authorized to transact an entirely different character of business from the companies mentioned in section 4077. It is not necessary to continue to point out wherein a title company differs from other companies enumerated in the section. Its business is to examine titles to real estate and chattels real, and procure and furnish information in relation thereto and guarantee the correctness of its information, and to do other things enumerated in section 728. Any individual might carry on the same character of business as a title company. It was held in the Ætna Insurance Co. case that to insure lives and guarantee the fidelity of persons is not a special or exclusive privilege.

It is insisted for the Commonwealth that under section 784, which requires appellee to set aside a part of its capital stock as a guarantee fund for investment only in certain designated securities, and that the funds so set apart shall be maintained and applied only for the security and payment of losses and expenses incurred by its guaranties, and shall not be subject to other liabilities of the corporation, is a special and exclusive privilege. It is not a privilege which the appellee enjoys, but it is intended as a benefit or protection of those to whom the appellee has given guarantees. If it were a privilege, they might or might not set apart the fund. Instead of it being a privilege, it is a burden imposed. The law requires insurance companies to deposit securities with the State treasurer for the benefit of the policy holders. This was not regarded as a privilege enjoyed by the insurance companies when the court had under consideration the question of the liability of insurance companies for a franchise tax.

If tobacco warehouse companies do not perform a public service (as it was so held in Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Coulter), then certainly real estate insurance companies can not be said to perform a public service. For the foregoing reasons we conclude that the appellee is not subject to the assessment for a franchise tax.

The judgment is affirmed.

HAGER, AUDITOR, &c. v. KENTUCKY TITLE CO.

(Filed February 14, 1905.)

Corporations—Created prior to Constitution—Old charter—Restrictions—Franchise tax—Under Kentucky Statutes, section 744, providing that "existing corporations transacting the business provided for in this act may * * * continue in business as though incorporated under this act," a title insurance company created by special act of the legislature prior to the adoption of the present Constitution, although acting under its old charter, is restricted to the exercise of powers specified in Kentucky Statutes, section 728, adopted March 19, 1894, and is not subject to assessment for franchise tax.

N. B. Hays and Loraine Mix for appellants.

Thos. W. Bullitt for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The question involved in this case is the same as was involved in the case of Hager, Auditor v. Louisville Title Co., ante, 845, this day decided. The reasoning and conclusion of the court in that case are applicable to this case, except there is another question which we will here consider. The appellee was created by special acts of the legislature passed before the adoption of the present Constitution. It was given powers and privileges which real estate title insurance companies do not have under the act of March 19, 1894 (sections 725 to 743, Kentucky Statutes). By section 573, Kentucky Statutes, provisions of charters given by the legislature "inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter (chapter 82, Kentucky Statutes), concerning similar corporations" and "all powers, privileges and immunities" conferred by such charters "which could not be obtained under the provisions of this chapter," stood repealed on September 25, 1897. This chapter seems to have contained no provision for the incorporation of title companies, and the legislature seems to have been of that opinion, because the act of March 19, 1894, makes special provision for the incorporation of such companies. It is provided in that act, section 744, that existing corporations "transacting the business provided for in this act may * * * continue in business as though incorporated under this act." It is clear from the statute that real estate title insurance companies, although acting under charters previously given, are restricted to the exercise of powers specified in section 728.

It is argued for the Commonwealth that because the Kentucky Title Co. did not accept the present Constitution until 1903, it gets no benefit from the present legislation, and, therefore, it is estopped to deny that it continues to exercise the special privileges by its legislative charter and amendments thereto. If the position of counsel for the Commonwealth is correct, then a corporation which enjoyed privileges under legislative charters could keep them in force by failing to accept the Constitution, although the legislature had repealed the acts granting them. The effect of this would be to give corporations irrevocable privileges. We are of the opinion that the appellee is not subject to assessment for a franchise tax.

The judgment is affirmed.

FORD, &c. v. AZBILL, &c.

(Filed February 16, 1905.)

1. Land—Judicial sale—Misdescription of property—In an action to enforce a purchase-money lien on a dwelling house and lot and two adjoining lots, the pleading described all three of the lots, and the judgment directed the sale of the dwelling house and the two vacant lots adjoining, but in giving the boundary the decree omitted the boundary of the dwelling house lot. The commissioner sold all three of the lots, but in his deed to the purchaser he gave the boundary of the vacant lots and omitted the boundary of the dwelling house lot. Held—That in an action by the former owner to recover the dwelling house that the purchaser at such sale was entitled to hold the entire property.

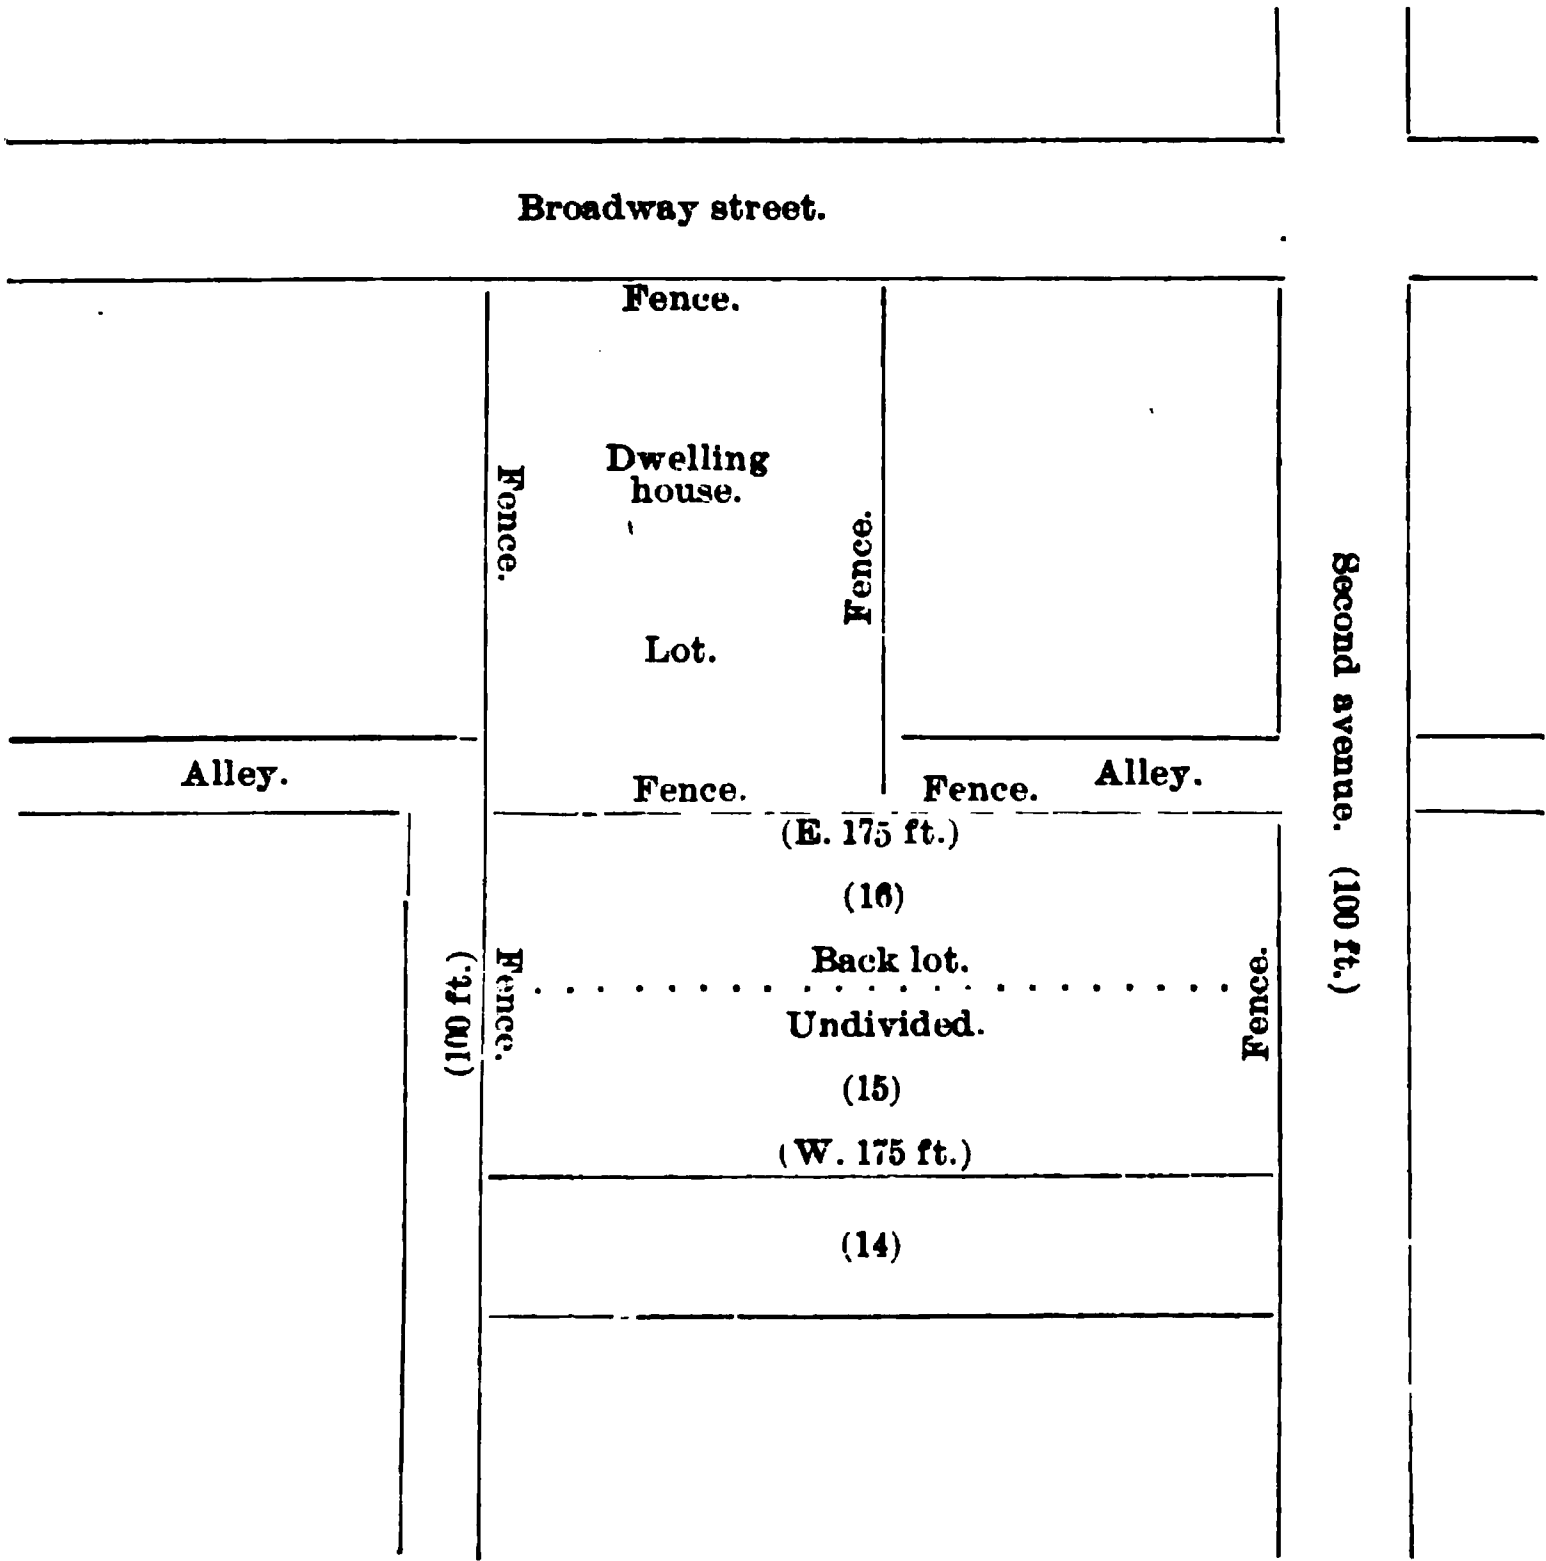

2. Ambiguous judgment—Reference to pleadings—Where the entry of a judgment is ambiguous or so obscure as not to clearly express the exact determination of the court, reference may be had to the pleadings and other proceedings, and if with this light thrown upon the entry its obscurity is dispelled and its intended significance made apparent, the judgment will be upheld and carried into effect as it was intended.

Pendleton & Bush for appellants.
B. R. Jouett and J. Smith Hays for appellees.
Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.
Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee, Mattie J. Azbill, purchased of Mrs. Alice M. Owen a house and lot situated in Massie's Addition of the city of Winchester, and two vacant lots adjoining the house and lot, but in the rear of it. The consideration was $500 cash and two notes, each for $1,150. One note was assigned to James Flannigan, who instituted an action thereon to enforce the purchase-money lien. The petition correctly describes the property sought to be sold, and the deed which Mrs. Owen had made to the appellee was filed and made part of the petition, also correctly describes the property. The court also adjudged that the property could not be divided without materially impairing its value. The following plot shows the situation of the property:

In the judgment enforcing the lien the property is described as follows:

"It is further adjudged that said debt is a lien on a certain dwelling house and two lots, situated in the city of Winchester, Ky., and in Massie's Addition to said city, which are bounded as follows: 'Beginning at a stake in the margin of Second avenue, corner of alley; thence in line of said alley E. 175 feet to an alley; thence 100 feet in line of alley to a stake, corner of lot No. 14 in said Massie's Addition; thence in line of said lot W. 175 feet to a stake in the margin of Second avenue (thence S. with avenue) 100 feet to the beginning.' Said lots are Nos. 15 and 16 in said Addition, and that the plaintiff has a right to enforce said lien on said house and two lots, the dwelling being located on one of said lots."

The property was sold by the commissioner of the court under that judgment. Flannigan became the purchaser. The sale was confirmed and a deed made in accordance with the description contained in the judgment. The appellee, under the purchase at the decretal sale, took possession of the house and lot and the two vacant lots and remained in possession of them about five years when this action was brought to recover the house and lot upon the claim that it was not sold at the decretal sale, but only the two vacant lots. The question here for our determination is whether the entire property was sold, or only the two vacant lots. The property brought $1,800 at the sale. The vacant lots were worth about $250 at that time. There was a lien upon all the property for the purchase money. There was no dwelling upon lots Nos. 15 and 16. The judgment recites that there is a lien upon the dwelling house and two lots; that the plaintiff has the right to enforce the lien on "said dwelling house" and two lots; that "said dwelling house and two lots" be sold. The commissioner was directed to advertise the dwelling house and lots. The report of the sale shows that the "dwelling house and two lots" were appraised at $1,650. The order confirming the report of sale describes the property as a dwelling house and two lots, situated on East Broadway. It is further recited that Flannigan was the purchaser of the dwelling house and two lots. The parties to the action, including the appellee, supposed the entire property was sold, because the possession of it was taken under the judgment, and the appellee recognized that the entire property had been sold, because she never questioned it until the appellants discovered what they supposed was a defect in the description of the property, and sought to have the appellee correct it. The property sold was on East Broadway, and unless the lot upon which the dwelling was situated was sold the property could not bind on East Broadway. No dwelling house could have been sold unless the lot fronting on East Broadway was included in the sale. The appraisers could not have valued a dwelling house unless it was the one fronting on East Broadway. No dwelling house was ordered sold or sold under the judgment unless it was the one on the lot fronting on East Broadway. It is impossible to believe that the plaintiff would have paid $1,800 for the vacant lots, worth only $250, when a lien existed upon the entire property. The difficulty arises from the fact that the judgment after giving a general description of the property ordered sold, it then, in giving the metes and bounds, describes the vacant lots. Counsel for the appellee in the opening statement of their brief say: "This record presents a strange case. It might correctly be styled a request that the Court of Appeals take from appellee her property, and give it to the appellant."

In this view we do not concur. The question is whether the court will allow the appellee to take from the appellant property which she actually purchased, and in which the appellee for many years acquiesced, and give it to the appellee, because of an error in the description of it. No one could examine this record without reaching the conclusion that the entire property was intended to be sold, and the appellee and the purchaser both understood that it was sold. The deed and petition correctly describe the property upon which the lien existed, and which was ordered sold. The fact that the court adjudged that the property upon which the lien existed could not be divided without materially impairing its value, shows that the court did not intend to order sold only part of it. To sustain the contention of the appellee we would have to hold that the court only intended to sell part of the property instead of the whole. To do this we would disregard the declaration of the court that the entire property was intended to be sold. To ascertain what the court meant we must take the whole judgment, not merely part of it. We must take that recitation in the judgment that the dwelling house is ordered sold; that the lot fronts on East Broadway. In that connection we must consider that the court adjudged that the whole property in lien should be sold. This court in Hildebrand, &c. v. Bunnschu, &c., 19 Ky. Law Rep., 430, said: "It is true that the description of the land, as set out in the judgment sale and conveyance relied on by appellees, is in some respects essentially different from that in the deed to Andree, yet the deed to Andree was referred to in said suit and other known objects, hence it is manifest that the intention was to sell and convey the identical land sued for."

In section 3, volume 1, 2d edition, Black on Judgments says: "It remains to be stated that in case of ambiguity a judgment should be construed with reference to the pleadings, and when it admits of two constructions, that one will be adopted which is consonant with the judgment which should have been rendered on the facts and law of the case."

Again, in section 123, it is said: "The rule for construction of ambiguous judgments is clearly stated by the Supreme Court of Kansas in the following language: 'Wherever the entry of a judgment is so obscure as not to clearly express the exact determination of the court, reference may be had to the pleadings and the other proceedings; and if, with the light thus thrown upon such entry, its obscurity is dispelled, and its intended significance made apparent, the judgment will be upheld and carried into effect in the same manner as though its meaning and intent were made clear and manifest by its own terms.' This rule also applies to decrees in equity. The meaning and effect of a decree may, in case of doubt, be ascertained by reference to the bill and other proceedings, particularly when these are referred to in the decree itself. And for this purpose recourse may be had to duly attested stipulations between the parties. * * * A mistake apparent on the face of a judgment, amounting to an impossibility, will not destroy the judgment if enough remains, after it is corrected or eliminated, to disclose the actual judgment rendered."

We have reached the conclusion that the appellant is entitled to hold the entire property.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

SMITH v. PARK'S ADM'R.

(Filed February 22, 1905—Not to be reported.)

R. H. Tomlinson and R. L. Greene for appellant.

W. I. Williams and R. L. Davidson for appellee.

Appeal from Garrard Circuit Court.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

Under the facts of this case it was a question for the jury to determine whether the services of appellant were gratuitous or not. The rule in this State is, if there is any evidence supporting the plaintiff's claim it must be submitted to the jury.

If the witness, Higginbotham, lives within twenty miles of the courthouse, his deposition can not be read on another trial unless he is physically unable to attend, or some other reason is shown which, under the Code, makes the deposition admissible in lieu of the oral testimony of the witness. Appellant can only recover so much of his claim as accrued within five years next before the institution of his action. The action was not brought within one year after the qualification of the personal representative, and, therefore, the provisions of section 2628, Kentucky Statutes, do not apply.

Petition overruled.

STEELE v. STEELE.

(Filed February 22, 1905—Not to be reported.)

B. H. Young and M. W. Ripy for appellant.

J. E. Conkling for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following response to petition for rehearing:

Under the evidence we see no reason to disturb the judgment of the chancellor on the question of alimony.

Petition overruled.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS PACIFIC R. R. CO. v.
TAYLOR.

(Filed February 22, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damages—Evidence—The pleadings support the judgment rendered in this action, and the only question presented is whether the court erred in refusing a peremptory instruction which was asked by appellant. Upon the facts it was manifest that the question was for the jury to determine whether proper care was exercised for the protection of the passengers, and the jury having found in favor of appellee, and it not appearing excessive, the verdict will not be disturbed.

John Galvin and C. H. Rodes for appellant.

Robert Harding for appellee.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant did not except to any ruling of the court in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the giving or refusing of instructions. The pleadings support the judgment, and the only questions that are presented by the record are whether the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant and whether the verdict of the jury is so palpably against the evidence as to indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jury.

The facts of the case are that the appellee left Cincinnati about 8 p. m. for Junction City on appellant's fast train. Her husband came with her to the station, and being unable to find seats for her, the nurse and children in the day coach, took them back to the sleeper and left them there when the train started. She had with her two children, one five years and the other two years old, who soon went to sleep. When they were about ten miles out the sleeping car conductor came around. She gave him the railroad tickets and a $5 bill, offering to pay for the section in which she was sitting to Junction City. He refused to take the money and said that she would have to get out and go into the day coach. She then offered to pay for the section clear through to Chattanooga. This he refused to accept, and still insisted that she should get out. She then made three trips to the day car in search of seats, but the seats were all taken and people were standing in the aisles. She returned to the sleeper and soon after this the railroad conductor came along. She explained to him the situation and he told her to stay right where she was; that he was running that train. He had not been gone long when the sleeping car conductor came back and again told her she must get out. She then went in search of the railroad conductor, whom she found in the stateroom of the sleeper. He took her and the children into the stateroom and told her to stay there. Not long after this the sleeping car conductor told her she must leave the stateroom, and ordered the porter to move them out. The porter took up the oldest child, the nurse took up the younger, and appellee followed. When they got to the door of the day coach it was locked. The porter put the child down on the platform and went back, as he said, to get a key, leaving appellee, the children and the nurse on the platform, the vestibule or side door being open. The train was pulling out from Georgetown and running about fifty miles an hour. Appellee caught hold of the door knob with one hand and caught hold of the child with the other. They stayed there waiting for the porter to return. When they reached Lexington three drunken men got on the platform where they were, who made signs that alarmed her very much; one of them had a big stick, and finally seized her by the arm. She stood there crying for a while, and in desperation, when the train had reached Nicholasville, hearing nothing from the porter or the other railroad men, she took the nurse and children into the smoking room of the sleeper. Soon after this the drunken men appeared at the door of the smoking room, again making signs which alarmed her, and set her to crying again. After a while she got hold of another porter and got the railroad conductor, who then told her to stay in the smoking room, and he looked for the drunken men. She stayed in the smoking room until she got to Junction City.

We think it manifest on these facts that the question was for the jury whether the railroad people used proper care for the protection of the passengers. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff, and fixed the damages at $900. While the evidence of the railroad people in some particulars contradicted the evidence of the plaintiff, we are not prepared to say that the jury were not warranted in believing her version of the transaction, and if they did, we can not say that the verdict for $900 was so excessive as to warrant us in disturbing it on the ground that it indicates passion or prejudice.

Judgment affirmed.

COLBURN, &c. v. GIVIDEN.

(Filed February 22, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Conveyances—Descent—Construction of will—Where property was conveyed to Wilson and wife for life, with remainder to their child or children, but if no child or children be alive at their death, then to the heirs of Wilson, the children took a defeasible fee, conditioned upon their being alive at the death of the survivor of their parents; and if at that time no child of the marriage should be alive then the property is to descend to the collateral heirs of Wilson. Therefore, upon the death of Wilson, his widow and children could not convey the property.

Pryor, Sapinsky & Castleman for appellants.

Thos. A. Barker for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The question for adjudication upon this record is the title of Mary T. Colburn and her children to a lot of ground in Louisville, Ky. The facts are agreed. William A. Kliessendorf and wife conveyed the land in question to Victor P. Wilson and his wife, Mary T. Wilson (now Mary T. Colburn), and the proper construction of this deed constitutes the question here involved.

The granting clause of the deed is as follows: "William A. Kliessendorf and wife, Mary E. Kliessendorf, do by these presents hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said parties of the second part for and during their mutual lives with the remainder in fee unto their child or children, if any there be alive at the time of the deaths of the said parties of the second part; and in case of no such child or children then being alive, unto the heirs at law of said Victor P. Wilson."

By the habendum clause it is provided: "To have and to hold the same unto the said parties of the second part for and during their natural lives, with the remainder in fee to their children, if any such be alive at the time of the deaths of the said parties of the second part, and in the event of no such children then being alive, unto the heirs at law of said Victor P. Wilson."

• Victor P. Wilson died intestate, domiciled in Jefferson county, Kentucky in April, 1898, leaving surviving him his widow, Mary T. Wilson, and three children, Allie May, Victor G. and Raymond Wilson. Raymond Wilson died intestate, unmarried, and without issue. The widow, Mary T. Wilson, has since intermarried with C. P. Colburn. Allie May and Victor G. Wilson, the children, are now of lawful age and unmarried. They and their mother entered into a written contract to sell the land in question to the appellee, Sadie Elizabeth Gividen, who, after examination of the title, declined to accept it; whereupon this action was instituted. Upon the trial of the case, the facts being agreed of record, the chancellor held that the vendors did not have a merchantable title to the property, and dismissed their petition. From this judgment the record comes up on appeal.

The conclusion of the chancellor is undoubtedly correct. The language of the deed leaves no room for construction as to the title of the grantees. Victor P. Wilson and his wife were given a life estate, "with remainder in fee unto their child or children, if any there be alive at the time of the deaths of the said second parties; and if there be no such child or children then alive, the property is to descend unto the heirs at law of Victor P. Wilson." The children took a defeasible fee in remainder conditioned upon their being alive at the death of the survivor of their parents, and if at that time there should be no child or children of the marriage alive, then the property is to descend to the collateral heirs of Victor P. Wilson. It can not be said now, considering the uncertainty of life, who will take the property at the death of Mrs. Colburn, the time fixed in the deed for the fee-simple estate to become indefeasible, and no judgment now rendered can bar the rights of those not now before the court who may be entitled at that time to the property. This being true, the appellee, Sadie Elizabeth Gividen, can not receive by the deed tendered her a title to the property in question which may not be hereafter defeated by the possible death of both of the children before that of Mrs. Colburn.

Judgment affirmed.

USHER v. TYLER, &c.

(Filed February 23, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Limitation of actions—The plea of the statute of limitations as to the first item in this action must prevail, the period provided for by statute having elapsed and no reason sufficient to stay it having been shown. In the matter of the set-off relied upon in an amended answer it is apparent from a careful reading of the record that the due bills referred to were mere memorandums of money loaned and were settled in adjusting the accounts between the parties, and, therefore, the chancellor's finding will not be disturbed.

Ed. Thomas for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas for appellees.

Appeal from Fulton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This is an action by appellant, F. M. Usher, to recover of the appellee,

James P. Tyler, surviving partner of the late firm of H. D. Murphy & Co., the following sums alleged to be due him: Eleven hundred and thirty-three dollars and thirty-five cents, with interest from April 18, 1895; $100, with interest from February 10, 1896; $250, with interest from April 2, 1889, and $250, with interest from February 21, 1890. The indebtedness as to the first sum is alleged to have arisen by reason of appellant's having been the surety of H. D. Murphy & Co. on their note to a Mrs. Ford for the sum of $1,000 borrowed money, which, with accrued interest, amounting in all to $1,133.35, appellant paid on the 18th day of April, 1895. The other three sums are evidenced by due bills bearing dates as above given.

The first item of the alleged indebtedness, $1,133.35, may be disposed of as follows: Assuming it to be true (although denied by appellee) that appellant, as surety of H. D. Murphy & Co., paid the note in question for his principals on the 18th day of April, 1895, the plea of the five years' statute of limitations interposed by appellee must prevail, the action having been commenced on the 18th day of September, 1901, and no reason sufficient to stay the running of the statute being shown. In his testimony appellant admits that he was in error as to appellee's being indebted to him on both the notes for $250 each, and withdrew his claim as to one of them. This leaves, of the cause of action originally set up, the two due bills, one for $250 and the other for $100, undisposed of.

By an amended answer, filed on the 18th day of May, 1903, the appellee pleaded a set-off for goods sold and delivered and money advanced to appellant by H. D. Murphy & Co., with a balance due and unpaid amounting to something over $5,000. The validity of this set-off is placed in issue by an amended reply and counterclaim; and upon these questions of fact the parties and their witnesses deposed at great length. As this set off, and what is called the counterclaim thereto, involves the dealings between the firms of H. D. Murphy & Co. and Usher & Berry, and their mutual accounts against each other, covering a period of nearly ten years, amounting to over $100,000, containing many hundreds of items, and all long since barred by the statute of limitations, we shall not enter into any further discussion of their merits than to say that we are convinced by a careful reading of the record that the two due bills left undisposed of were mere memorandums of money loaned, understood at the time to be settled in adjusting the mutual accounts of the respective parties, and that we are not willing to reverse the chancellor's conclusion, that they should be so settled and adjusted.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to examine into or decide whether or not the $250 note, evidencing money loaned for the purpose of prosecuting an action to recover what is called in the record the "Blythe estate," in which the parties to the transaction had only a speculative interest to a part of the proceeds of a favorable judgment, was or not champertous and void under chapter 15 of the Kentucky Statutes.

The judgment is affirmed.

ABRAMS v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 23, 1905—Not to be reported.)

K. Criminal law—Larceny—Breaking into and entering outhouse—Where the evidence upon the trial of appellant was to the effect that an outhouse of Mrs. Hunt was broken into and three chickens were stolen therefrom; that in order to get into the outhouse the door had to be unfastened, and that it was securely fastened the night before the breaking into it, after it was seen that all the chickens were there; that the chickens were found the following morning in the hands of a merchant who had bought them from Heisler, who bought them from appellant, the jury was authorized to conclude that appellant was guilty.

2. Same—Instructions—An instruction which in substance told the jury that if they believed the house of Mrs. Hunt was feloniously broken into, and chickens taken therefrom by a person other than appellant, yet if they believed that at the time appellant was present aiding and abetting such other person in the commission of the crime, they should find him guilty, while inaptly worded was the law, and was authorized by the evidence.

8. Same—Competency of evidence—Upon the trial of appellant the Commonwealth proved by Felty that he had a conversation in the jail with appellant, in which the latter told him he got the chickens from Worthington, but did not know where the latter got them, and that witness after this asked Heisler where appellant told him he got them and Heisler said that he told him from Worthington. Held—That this was incompetent, but instead of being prejudicial to appellant was beneficial to him, as it tended to contradict Heisler who testified that appellant told him the chickens were his.

W. T. Cole for appellant.

N. B. Hays and C. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Greenup Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellant was indicted in the Greenup Circuit Court for unlawfully and feloniously breaking and entering into an outhouse, belonging to and used in connection with the dwelling house of Mrs. Belle Hunt, and stealing therefrom three chickens of value, the property of Mrs. Hunt. The trial resulted in appellant's conviction at the hands of the jury and the fixing of his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for two years.

He now insists that he should have been granted a new trial by the lower court, and that the judgment of conviction should be reversed by this court upon the following grounds:

1st. That the trial court should have given a peremptory instruction directing his acquittal because there was no evidence upon which to base a conviction.

2d. That the court erred in instructing the jury.

8d. That incompetent evidence was admitted in behalf of the Commonwealth to his prejudice.

An examination of the bill of evidence contained in the record convinces us that the first contention is unsustained. The facts as proved by the Commonwealth were in brief that three of the chickens of Mrs. Hunt were stolen from her chicken house in a building adjoining her dwelling house, Saturday night, in April, 1904; that the person by whom they were stolen had to unfasten the door of the building in which they were confined to get them, which had been securely fastened by Mrs. Hunt the evening before, after seeing that all her chickens were there. On the following morning at an early hour she discovered the theft of the chickens, and though the door of the building from which they were taken had been refastened by the thief, the gate through which he entered the lot from a back alley was left open by him, and the fastening broken. The mere raising of the latch of the door, and the opening of the door, and thereby effecting an entrance to the chicken house, was a sufficient breaking under the indictment, if done with the felonious intent and accompanied by the taking of the chickens as charged.

Mrs. Hunt, on the following day, found and identified the three stolen chickens in the possession of Peters, a merchant, who had bought them of one Heisler, to whom they were sold by appellant at 8 o'clock that morning (Sunday). In selling the chickens to Heisler appellant said they were his, and that he had brought them from his father's farm Saturday evening. He sent John Worthington to tell Heisler that he had the chickens for sale, and Heisler found him in his (Heisler's) shed with the chickens, ten in all; in this number were Mrs. Hunt's three chickens. Heisler paid appellant the money for the chickens at the rate of 30 cents apiece.

Appellant was in the town of Greenup Saturday afternoon and night, and at that time, as well as on Sunday, appeared to have been somewhat under the influence of whisky, but not so much so as to obstruct his locomotion or becloud his mind. His defense was that Worthington stole the chickens, and that he, without knowledge of that fact, assisted him in the sale to Heisler. He likewise made some effort to account for his whereabouts on Saturday night, and thereby establish an alibi. The evidence in his behalf did not, however, so situate him as to prove that he could not have had an opportunity to commit the crime with which he was charged, and as to Worthington's connection with it the evidence conduced to prove that he was particeps criminis, and his absence at the trial and bad reputation tended to confirm this theory. The jury no doubt came to the conclusion that he and appellant were equally guilty, and we see no reason to dissent from that view of the case.

Instruction No. 8, which is the one complained of by appellant's counsel, is inaptly worded, but we do not think the jury could have failed to understand it, or that it was in any sense prejudicial. It in substance told the jury, and such was its meaning, that though they might believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the house of Mrs. Hunt was feloniously broken into and her chickens taken by a person other than appellant, if they further believed from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that appellant was at the time present, and that he aided, advised or abetted such other person in the commission of the crime, they should find him guilty. This was undoubtedly the law, and the giving of the instruction was authorized by the evidence in the case. The other instructions given by the court are not complained of, and they seem to be free from objection.

The alleged incompetent evidence complained of by appellant is found in the testimony of Nando Felty, by whom the Commonwealth proved that he had a conversation with appellant while in jail, in which the latter told him he got the chickens from John Worthington, but did not know where Worthington got them, and that the witness (Felty) afterwards asked Heisler where appellant told him he got the chickens, and Heisler said appellant told him he bought them of Worthington. This testimony was mere hearsay and incompetent, but instead of being prejudicial to appellant, it was beneficial to him, as it tended to contradict Heisler's statement that appellant told him the chickens were his, and had been brought from his father's farm. We fail to see why the attorney for the Commonwealth should have introduced this statement of Felty, or understand why it should have been objected to by appellant. We are of the opinion that appellant received a fair trial, and that no error was committed by the lower court to his prejudice.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

VOKES v. EATON, &c.

(Filed February 23, 1905.)

1. Private corporations—Act authorizing—A statute authorizing the formation of private corporations for mining, manufacturing, mechanical, quarrying and other industrial pursuits, and "for any other lawful business," is sufficiently broad to include the incorporation of the National Bond and Security Co. for the purposes indicated by its title.

2. Placing bonds—Terms and conditions endorsed thereon—Unlawful business—Where an incorporated investment company, in placing its bonds on the market, printed on the back thereof the terms and conditions on which they are issued and upon which the "entire scheme" of the company is based, it can not be said to be doing an unlawful business because it was bottomed on a scheme that did not "finance out," but proved to be unprofitable.

Stricklett & Arnett for appellant.

Myers & Howard and Furber & Jackson for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

The National Bond and Security Co., incorporated under the laws of South Dakota, was engaged in the business of selling certain installment bonds, with coupons attached, and appellant invested $1,600 therein. The appellees were officers and stockholders of the corporation; that company on the 16th of April, 1901, was merged in the National Bond and Security Co., a corporation formed under the laws of the State of West Virginia, and this company shortly thereafter became insolvent and was placed in the hands of a receiver. Appellant then filed this suit against the appellees, charging that his money had been procured to be paid to the corporation by means of false and fraudulent representations which the defendants made as its officers, and which they knew, or ought to have known, were untrue; that the corporation was not legally organized, but was a mere dummy, and that the scheme upon which the bonds were based could not finance out; that this he did not know, and that the defendants knew this, or ought to have known it. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and the plaintiff appeals.

The question of the validity of the incorporation of the company turns upon the statute under which it was formed, which is as follows: "Purposes of private corporations—Private corporations can be formed by the voluntary association of three or more persons upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, for the following purposes, namely: Mining, manufacturing, mechanical, quarrying, and other industrial pursuits, and for any other lawful business; the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, irrigation ditches; for seminaries, colleges, churches, libraries, benevolent, charitable and scientific associations; banks of deposit and discount (but not of issue) for loan, trust and guaranty associations: Provided, however, That no insurance company shall be incorporated under the provisions of this act, except by the voluntary association of seven or more persons."

It is insisted for appellant that the words "and for any other lawful business" must be construed as referring to such corporations as have been above named, and that the rule of noscitur a sociis should be applied. The difficulty of this is that after naming mining, manufacturing, mechanical and quarrying purposes, these words are added, "and other industrial pursuits." If only things like those which were named were meant this would have been covered by the words "and other industrial pursuits," and the words "and for any other lawful business" would have been unnecessary. Taking the statute as a whole, we are satisfied that the words were used in their broad and natural sense, otherwise corporations for a great many purposes for which corporations are formed in nearly all the States could not be formed under the statute, such as title companies, mercantile companies, holding companies, and the like. The statute was evidently intended to be broad in its operation from the fact that so many things are named, and the words "and for any other lawful business" are added to make it include things other than those named.

It is not claimed that the proper steps were not taken to form the corporation under the act. It is simply claimed that the act does not authorize the incorporation of such a company. This, we think, can not be maintained in view of the broad language of the act. But it is also insisted that the company was not incorporated for a lawful business, and that, therefore, it does not come within the act. This position is based upon the idea that the bonds issued by the company contain a scheme which was in and of itself illegal. The bonds are as follows:

"THE NATIONAL BOND AND SECURITY CO., OF COVINGTON, KY., U. S. A.

"By this certificate, does hereby promise to pay Chas. E. Vokes, or order, upon maturity or redemption of any of the ten coupons hereto attached, an amount equal to the total deposits made hereon, together with interest at the rate of six and two-thirds per cent. for the period of ten years from the date of the said maturity or redemption. The terms and conditions printed on the back hereof and in the application herefor are a part of this contract as fully as if recited herein. In testimony whereof, the said National Bond and Security Co. has, by its duly authorized officers, signed, sealed and delivered this contract, this the 28th day of January, in the year of 1901.

(Signed) "GEO. H. DAVISON, President.

(Signed) "IRVING J. ISBELL, Secretary."

The terms and conditions printed on the back of the bonds or contracts are as follows, to wit: "Terms and conditions—This contract is issued to the holder hereof in consideration of a membership fee of $10 and an installment of $5, and thereafter a monthly installment of 50 cents on each unredeemed coupon until the redemption or maturity. The monthly dues of this contract are due and payable without notice on the first day of each month hereafter, and must be paid on or before the 10th of each month or a fine of 10 cents on each coupon will be assessed, and if not paid on or before the 25th of each month this contract shall become null and void and the holder thereof shall forfeit all payments hereon to the several funds.

"Redemption of coupons—Any coupon of this contract shall be surrendered to the company at any time when called for by the redemption, and the holder thereof shall receive for such surrender the guaranteed redemption value at the month in which the redemption shall occur.

"The monthly redemption shall occur after the close of business of the last day of each month, except where the last day falls on a legal holiday, in which case they shall occur on the day following, and shall be determined as follows:

"Seventy-five per cent. of the redemption fund shall be used each month to pay off one coupon on each contract in numerical order, commencing the first month with the first coupon on contract No. 1, and so on in like manner until the first fund is exhausted; commencing each succeeding month with the first coupon on the next contract, following the last one paid the previous month, continuing in like manner each month until the entire list has been passed through, and then reverting back to the lowest numbered coupon in force, and pay off the second coupon on each contract in force in like manner. Twenty-five per cent. of the redemption fund shall be used each month to pay off one coupon on each contract in numerical order, commencing each month with the lowest number contract in force.

"Cash surrender or withdrawal value—At any time after thirty-six monthly installments have been paid hereon, the holder hereof may file a withdrawal and receive an amount equal to the total amount previously contributed to the reserve fund plus the estimated earnings to the date of withdrawal, the estimated earnings to be paid from the general redemption fund for the month in which the withdrawal is made, the reserve contributions to be drawn from the reserve fund.

"Loan value—At any time after thirty-six monthly installments have been paid hereon, the holder hereof may, upon depositing this certificate as security, borrow from the reserve fund an amount equal to the cash surrender or withdrawal value hereof, at the month in which the loan was made.

"Paid-up value—At any time after thirty-six monthly installments have been paid hereon, the company will, at the request of the holder hereof, in writing, issue a paid-up certificate for the redemption value (in the month issued), due in ten years from the date thereof and payable out of the reserve fund.

"Extended payments—At any time after thirty-six monthly installments have been paid hereon, the company will voluntarily extend the payments due hereon for such a time as the contributions previously made to the reserve fund will pay, and when all the money in the reserve fund, as above stated, has been exhausted, the holder hereof shall pay in cash the installments then due, together with the amounts charged against this certificate as extended payments of this contract shall become null and void, and the holder hereof shall forfeit all payments hereon.

"Death benefit—In the event of the death of the holder hereof the legal representatives may avail themselves of either of the following options:

"1st. Continue the installments until redemption or maturity.

"2d. Surrender the same within ten days after the death of the holder hereof, and (upon the satisfactory proof of the death being furnished to the company) receive the redemption value for the month in which the death occurred, same to be paid from the general redemption fund at the next redemption following the filing of satisfactory proof.

"Maturity—The coupons on this contract will mature at any time when the contributions in the reserve fund plus the reserve accumulation shall equal the total deposits hereon, with interest at the rate of six and two-thirds per cent. for a period of ten years: Provided, however, That 118 monthly installments have been paid hereon.

"Division and distribution of funds—Monthly installments when paid are apportioned each month to the several funds, as follows:

"Sixty per cent. to the redemption fund, and is used each month in retiring coupons.

"Twenty per cent. to the reserve fund, which must be deposited each month in such bank or trust company as may be decided on by the board of directors, and can not be drawn for any purpose, except to mature coupons, cash surrender extended payments and for granting loans to be supervised by a committee of three appointed by the board of directors.

"Twenty per cent. to the current expense fund, and shall be used for the expense of the company in conducting its business.

"All moneys received on account of fines, transfer fees and interest earnings on reserve loans shall be placed to the credit of the reserve fund.

"Transfers—This certificate will be transferred on the books of the company, when all the requirements are complied with, and a fee of $1 is paid, and the form hereon has been properly filled out.

"FINANCIAL SCHEDULE.

"No. of months.	Cost of Coupon.	Estimated earnings.	Return value.	C. S. or loan value.	Extended payment.
"1	$1 50	$1 00	$2 50
"2	2 00	1 33	3 33
"3	2 50	1 67	4 17
"4	3 00	2 00	5 00
"5	3 50	2 33	5 83
"6	4 00	2 67	6 67."

It is insisted for appellant that the ordinary investor would never understand the terms of the bond, and that by the scheme some must be enabled to obtain more than they had invested, while others receive less; that it was impossible that all the contract holders should receive the same return upon the money invested, and that the scheme, taken as a whole, was deceptive and gotten up for the purpose of getting the unwary into a trap.

Whether the scheme would finance out under ordinary conditions we need not consider. There was nothing of a lottery about it. The coupons were chosen for redemption in their numerical order, beginning one month where they left off the month before. How much the fund would be swelled by lapses no one could tell. If there was a greater profit on the coupons which were redeemed than the company could reasonably make on the money in its hands, this profit went to the investors on their investment, each bond being taken in its numerical order each month. To say that this was an unlawful business because it was bottomed upon a scheme which would not finance out would not be to give the words of the statute their ordinary meaning. A majority of the schemes for which corporations are formed it is said do not finance out. The cases relied on for appellant are cases where a receiver was applied for or some similar remedy was sought, and the court in using the language relied on by appellant was simply determining that the appointment of the receiver was essential for the protection of the persons interested. Some of the cases were direct proceedings by the State to annul the charter of the corporation or revoke its charter. In such cases a very different question is presented from that in the case before us. The court may well appoint a receiver for a corporation when the further conduct of its business would only make its condition more disastrous, and in a proceeding by the State to revoke the charter of a corporation great effect could be given the fact that the tendency of the business was to deceive investors into making an investment which must necessarily disappoint them. But many insurance companies have failed because the scheme of premiums proved insufficient to pay the losses, and it was perfectly apparent in the end that this was the necessary consequence of the false principles on which the scheme was based. Thousands of co operative companies have gone under, and even yet the proper basis of co-operative insurance is imperfectly understood. A few years ago the boom fever spread all over the country and numbers of corporations were formed in which thousands of dollars were invested in chimerical schemes which soon failed. But in none of these cases, so far as we have known, were the stockholders or the officers of the company held liable to the investors upon such allegations as are before us. The plaintiff does not charge that the defendants misrepresented any fact to him. Their entire scheme was set out in the bonds which he bought and accepted. It is not charged that there was any misrepresentation as to the terms of the bonds, or that he was misled in any way as to the contract. It is only charged that the defendants represented that the scheme would finance out, when they ought to have known it would not do so. This was a mere matter of opinion on which the plaintiff could exercise his judgment as well as they. Puffing by sellers is universal, and every one buys knowing that he must exercise his own judgment on matters of opinion expressed by the seller.

Judgment affirmed.

SMITH, &c. v. SMITH, &c.

(Filed February 28, 1905.)

1. Wills—Devise to son and his children—T. J. Smith by his will, among other devises, made the following: "I also give to my wife 100 shares of bank stock in the Farmers National Bank of Richmond, Ky., at her death this property goes to my son and his children. I also give to my wife during her life 140 acres of land upon the Irvine pike, and known as the Collins place, at her death to my son and his children." Held—That the word "children," as here used, must be construed as a word of purchase and not of limitation, and by the will the testator's wife was given the "bank stock" and "Collin's place" during her life, and at her death to the testator's son for his life, and at his death to his children.

2. Bank stock—Liquidation of bank—The fact that the bank in which the stock is held will soon go into liquidation, or have to be reorganized because of its charter, can not affect the rights of the remaindermen or other parties in interest. In case the bank should go into liquidation the chancellor may, upon the petition of the parties in interest, direct the reinvestment of the proceeds in other good securities, to be held for the benefit of the devisees as provided in the will.

C. H. Breck, T. J. Smith and W. S. Moberly for appellants.

R. E. Roberts for infant appellees.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This action was instituted by the appellants, T. J. Smith, Fanny Smith, his mother, and Elise Bennett Smith, his wife, against the appellees, Jesse Cobb, Elise Smith and T. J. Smith, Jr., the two last being the infant children of T. J. Smith and Elise Bennett Smith, and represented by a guardian ad litem, upon whom summons was served for them. The object of the action is to obtain a construction of certain clauses of the will of T. J. Smith, Sr., deceased, who was the father of the appellant, T. J. Smith, and the husband of the appellant, Fanny Smith. The will in question was duly admitted to probate by the Madison County Court soon after the testator's death, which occurred in Madison county, where he was at the time domiciled. The will is as follows:

"I, Thomas J. Smith, of Richmond, Madison county, Ky., being of sound mind and disposing memory, do make and declare this to be my last will and testament.

"1st. I wish all my debts and funeral expenses promptly paid.

"2d. I give to my wife, Fanny Smith, during her life, the home place where I now reside, on Lancaster avenue, and all the household and kitchen furniture, with all its belongings, except what belongs to my son; also my father's and mother's portraits, which I give to my son. I give to my niece, Rosa May Moberly, my large silver ladle, an heirloom given me by my mother, and at the death of my wife this property to go to my son or his heirs. I also give to my wife the storehouse, situated on Main street, in Richmond, Ky., during her life, and at her death to go to my son and his heirs. I also give to my wife 100 shares of bank stock in the Farmers National Bank, of Richmond, Ky. At her death this property goes to my son and his children. I also give to my wife during her life 140 acres of land upon the Irvine pike, and known as the Collins place. At her death to my son and his children. I give in trust to Curtis F., W. S. and Thomas J. Moberly, for the benefit of my sister, Bettie, for her sole and separate use and benefit, free from the debts of her husband, 110 or 112 acres of land, situated in Fayette county, Kentucky, at her death this property goes directly to her children or their heirs.

"I give in trust for the benefit of my son and his children to S. S. Parks, W. W. Watts and Thomas J. Moberly, my farm on the Barnes Mill pike, known as the Old Major Turner farm, containing about 840 acres of land. I also give to the same parties, in trust for the benefit of my son and his children, fifty-four acres of land recently bought by me from J. Stone Walker, on the Barnes Mill pike. I also give to the same parties, in trust for my son and his children, ninety acres of land on the Lancaster pike, known as the Best land.

"I also give my son absolutely eight acres of land in Kansas City, Mo., in East Bottom, in the old city limits, in Kansas City, Mo. I give to his wife, Elise Bennett Smith, my corner lot on the summit recently purchased by me from W. B. Smith.

"I give in trust to Thomas J. Smith, for the benefit of Thomas Jones, my body servant, the house and lot where he now lives, fronting on Catholic Church street fifty feet and running back to Stofer's line. I charge Thomas J. Smith's estate with 100 bushels of coal to be delivered each and every Christmas to the said Jones during his life. I also charge Thomas J. Smith's estate with all county, town and State taxes each year during said Jones' life. At the death of said Thomas Jones this house and lot is to go directly to the children that he now has and may have by his present wife, Mary.

"I give to Tabitha White $50 in cash, to be paid in six months after my death.

"All the residue of my estate of every kind and character, real, personal or mixed, all choses in action, to my son, Thomas J. Smith, and I appoint him my sole executor, without bond, to act for me and in my stead, and sign all necessary papers and deeds the same as if I were living.

"I do not desire or want an inventory taken of my estate.

"I direct a monument (shaft) in the center of my father's lot, in the Richmond cemetery, to cost $800, with the name of my father and mother only inscribed thereon.

"In winding up my estate I desire no public sale to be made of anything belonging thereto.

"Having the utmost confidence in my son's honesty and integrity, he knowing that my prosperity commenced with my father and mother, if he should die without legal heirs of his body, I desire him to give my sister's children all the property that he may be seized with at his death, but first to provide amply for his wife, in whom I am well pleased. I direct my executor at my death to pay my wife $500 in cash.

"This January 28, 1899.

"THOMAS J. SMITH.

"Test—

"W. W. WATTS,

"J. STONE WALKER,

"H. C. JASPER."

It appears from the agreed facts found in the record that the 140 acres of land on the Irvine pike, called the Collins place, has, since the death of the testator, been sold and conveyed by his son, T. J. Smith, and his widow, Fanny Smith, to the appellee, Jesse Cobb, and since sold by Cobb to one Theodore Wilson, who declined to accept the deed thereto tendered him by Cobb on the ground that the son and widow of T. J. Smith, Sr., were by the will devised only a life estate each, successively, in the land, with remainder in fee to the son's children. Consequently that the deed from them to Cobb only conveyed him the life estate of each in the land, and the deed tendered by Cobb to Wilson could convey only such title as Cobb had received from his grantors.

It is insisted for appellants that the will gives the "Collins place," to the testator's widow for life, with remainder in fee to their son, and that the bank stock also given the widow for life by the will at her death goes to the son absolutely. And this court is asked to say what interest, if any, the children of appellant, T. J. Smith, take in the "Collins place" and bank stock under their grandfather's will.

The chancellor from whose judgment this appeal was taken decided that the "Collins place" and the 100 shares of bank stock are given by the will to the widow of the testator for her life, and at her death to his son, the appellant, T. J. Smith, for his life, and at the latter's death to his children. The provisions of the will which we are asked to construe are as follows:

"I also give my wife 100 shares of bank stock in the Farmers National Bank of Richmond, Ky., at her death this property goes to my son and his children.

"2d. I also give to my wife during her life 140 acres of land on the Irvine pike, and known as the 'Collins place,' at her death to my son and his children."

The word "children," as here used, must, we think, be considered as a word of purchase and not of limitation, and must always be so regarded when so used in a devise, unless there is some qualifying word or phrase in juxtaposition thereto to show that it is intended as a word of limitation; or unless in some other part of the will there are words or phrases which explain that the testator used the word "children" in the latter sense.

In Carr v. Estill, 16 B. Mon., 245, a will devised to "Mary Baker Didlake and her children" a farm. At the time of making the will Mary Baker Didlake had no children, but one was thereafter born to her. It was held by the court that she took under the devise an estate for life, and the child the remainder. In Mifford v. Dougherty, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 157, it was held that a devise to a son and to his children, heirs of his body, gave the son a life estate, with remainder to his children. The court said the qualifying words "heirs of his body" did not make the word "children" a word of limitation.

In Frank v. Uuz, 91 Ky., 621, it is said: "It may be regarded as settled law in cases where the devise is by the husband directly to his wife and children that the wife takes a life estate only, unless there is something else in the will showing a contrary intention." (Weaver v. Weaver, 92 Ky., 491; Koenig, &c. v. Kraft, &c., 87 Ky., 95; Poland v. Chiam, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1072.)

In Adams v. Adams, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 655, the language of the devise was: "It is my will and desire that all the income of my estate, real, personal and mixed, I give and bequeath to my daughter, Martha Jane Adams, and her children in their exclusive right." The contention of the appellant was that the wife took jointly with her children in fee one-third each, but the court, Judge Hazelrigg writing, said: "We think the intention of the testator was to give the whole estate to his daughter for life, and at her death to her children. This seems to be the trend of the modern decisions on the use of the words here involved."

An examination of the authorities relied on by counsel for appellant will show that they do not conflict with those from which we have quoted. They are cases in which from the use of qualifying words, or from other parts of the will, it was made to appear that the word "children" was used exclusively in the sense of heirs, and consequently as a word of limitation. By the will in this case, except the $500 in money directed to be immediately paid her by the executor, all that the testator devised to his wife was for life only. He, however, made a distinct difference in the devises to his son, that is, certain real estate was devised to him absolutely. Other similar property was by the will put in the hands of trustees for his and his children's benefit, but as to the property in which the testator's wife was given a life estate by the will and the son the remainder, in the matter of the residence property on Lancaster avenue, and the store house in Richmond, the devise was to the wife for life, with remainder to the son and his "heirs." In respect of the bank stock and 140 acres of land known as the "Collins place" the devise was to the wife for life, with remainder to the son and his "children."

It would perhaps do no violence to the intention of the testator to hold that the word "heirs" in the other clauses of the will was used in the sense of children. If so it would limit the son's interest in the storehouse and residence property to a life estate as in the case of the "Collins place" and bank stock. Though the chancellor seems to have thought otherwise, as he held that T. J. Smith, the testator's son, was given by the will the remainder in fee in the store house and home place. In other words, it was held that as to that property the children of T. J. Smith took no interest whatever under the will. It may be that the word "heirs" was used by the testator in that connection advisedly, and for the purpose of excluding his son's children from any interest in that property, but if so it but strengthens the conclusion that the word "children" was also used advisedly, and for the express purpose of investing them with just such interest in the Collins place and bank stock as was adjudged them by the chancellor in his construction of the will.

It follows from what has been said that the deed from T. J. and Fanny Smith to Jesse Cobb conveyed only the life estate of each of the grantors in the Collins place; and further, that the children of T. J. Smith have under their grandfather's will the same interest in remainder in the bank stock that they have in the Collins place. The fact that the bank in which the stock is held will soon go into liquidation, or have to be reorganized because of its charter, can not affect the rights of the remaindermen or other parties in interest. The same limitations and conditions may be placed upon a devise of personal estate as upon a devise of real estate. (Miller v. Simpson, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 518.) And if the bank in which the stock is held should go into liquidation, the chancellor may, upon the petition of the parties in interest, direct the reinvestment of its proceeds in other bank stock, good securities or other property, to be held for the benefit of the devisees as provided by the will. As we are not asked in the briefs of counsel to construe those parts of the will which relate to the devises in regard to the storehouse in Richmond and the residence property on Lancaster avenue, we do not pass upon the same.

Judgment affirmed.

WARD, &c. v. PUTNAM, &c.

(Filed February 21, 1905.)

Wills—Signature of testatrix—Words following signature—Validity—Kentucky Statutes, section 4820, provides that no will shall be valid unless it is in writing, with the name of the testator subscribed thereto, and section 468 provides that when the law requires any writing to be signed, it shall not be deemed to be signed unless the signature be subscribed at the end or close of such writing. Where a testatrix in making her will placed her signature at the close of the substantial provisions of the document, and the writing as signed is sufficient to effectuate the intention of the party signing it, the statute is substantially complied with although there may be words following the signature which are unessential to the validity of the will.

Robert C. Simmons for appellants.

Ernst, Cassatt & McDougall for appellees.

H. B. Mackoy for guardian ad litem.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Margaret E. Ward requested Robert C. Simmons, as her attorney, to prepare her will, which he did, and sent it to her. Afterwards, and before the will was signed, she requested him to write a codicil to it; this he did, and returned the paper to her. After her death the paper was offered for probate in the county court, and was admitted to probate in part. An appeal was taken from the judgment of the county court, and in the circuit court a judgment was rendered rejecting the entire paper on the ground that it was not subscribed by the testatrix, and this is the only question to be determined upon the appeal. The entire paper is in these words:

"I, Margaret E. Ward, of Covington, Ky., being of sound mind and memory, do constitute this instrument of writing my last will and testament.

"1st. I direct the payment of all my just debts and funeral expenses first out of my estate.

"2d. I will and devise to my daughter, Margaret E. Putnam, my house and lot on Eighth street, Covington, situated immediately east of the property deeded by me to my daughter, Sarah F. Ward, and adjoining the Donnelly property, to have and to hold for and during her natural life, with remainder to her children, if any she may have living at the time of her death, or their descendants; if none, then said property is to go as follows:

One-third to my daughter, Sarah F. Ward; one-third to my son, Edward W. Ward, and one-third to my daughter, Eliza B. Miller.

"8d. One-third of the rest and residue of my estate of whatever character, whether real, personal or mixed, or wherever situated, I will and devise to my daughter, Sarah F. Ward, for and during her natural life; at her death said interest to be disposed of in the manner provided in the section next following to my children, Edward and Eliza, and their children.

"4th. All the rest and residue of my estate not hereinbefore devised shall be divided into seven equal parts, and one of such equal parts shall be received by my son, Edward W. Ward, one part by my daughter, Eliza B. Miller, one part by Roberta Ward, one part by Logan Ward, one part by Anna Ward, one part by Ward Miller, and one part by Virginia Miller. Should any one of said grandchildren die before me without issue, his or her part shall go to his or her brother, or his or her sister or sisters, or sister, Mrs. R. D. Ward, and brother, as the case may be.

"MRS. R. D. WARD.

"I hereby appoint Dr. Vincent Davis, of Louisville, Ky., and my son, Edward W. Ward, executors of this my will, and empower them to sell and dispose of my property in order to effect the division herein provided for, if, in their opinion, a sale by them would be expedient or desirable.

"In witness whereby I hereunto sign my name this the 19th day of April, 1902, in the presence of, ....."(Signature).

"Subscribed and attested by us at the request and in the presence of the testatrix, and in the presence of each other.

"(Witnesses sign here).

"E. M. PUTNAM,
"C. B McVOY."

"As a codicil to the above will I direct that any one contesting this will, or any of its provisions, shall forfeit any and all devises or bequests therein made to them, or any of them, and that such person shall have no interest in my estate, or any part thereof.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand this the — day of —, 1902, in the presence of,

....."(Sign here).

"Subscribed and attested by us in the presence of and at the request of the testatrix, and in the presence of each other.

"(Witnesses sign here.)"

The paper is in the handwriting of Mr. Simmons. There is no question as to the authenticity of Mrs. Ward's signature, or of the signature of the attesting witnesses, or that she signed the paper and had it witnessed as her will. By section 4820, Kentucky Statutes, no will shall be valid unless it is in writing, with the name of the testator subscribed thereto, and by section 468, Kentucky Statutes, when the law requires any writing to be signed, it shall not be deemed to be signed unless the signature be subscribed at the end or close of such writing.

In Soward v. Soward, 1 Duvall, 126, it was held that under the statute the subscription was insufficient if there was an unnecessary and unreasonable blank space between the conclusion of the will and the signature of the testator or the names of the witnesses. On the other hand, the rule is that in the attestation of wills a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient, and if the object and intent of the statute is reached without a violation of its express language nothing more is required. (Upchurch v. Upchurch, 16 B. Mon., 102; Porter v. Ford, 82 Ky., 191; Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky., 607.)

The county court admitted to probate the first, second, third and fourth clauses of the will, or so much thereof as is above the signature of the testatrix, rejecting the last clause of the will and the codicil. Mr. Simmons wrote on the paper when he sent it to the testatrix the words in pencil, "Signature," "Witnesses sign here," and "Sign here," as they appear on the paper. It is insisted for appellees that the right to make a will being purely statutory, the entire instrument is invalid as Mrs. Ward did not subscribe the paper at the end thereof. In support of this position we are referred to the cases of Sisters of Charity v. Kelley, 67 N. Y., 409, and Wine-land's Appeal, 118 Pa. State, 87.

On the other hand, it is insisted for appellants that the intention of the testatrix should be given effect if possible, and that to this end she should be presumed to have signed the paper at the conclusion of the part which she desired to make her will, and that the omitted clause simply appointed an executor, and did not affect in any way the disposition of her property made by the will. In support of this view we are referred to the case of the estate of John McCulloch, Myr. Prob. (Cal.), 76; Woerner on the Law of Administration, section 89; Schouler on Executors, section 8; Baker v. Baker, 51 Ohio State, 217; Brady v. McGrosson, 5 Redf., 481; Matter of Acker, 5 Dem. (N. Y.), 19.

Some question is made on the ground that the signature of the attesting witnesses is separated from the signature of the testatrix by a small space; but this space being taken up by the written matter which Mr. Simmons put there, the fact that the witnesses signed as they did being clearly explained on the face of the paper, the rule laid down in Soward v. Soward does not apply, as here there was no unnecessary space left. So the case comes to this: Can that part of the instrument which is above the signature of the testatrix be probated as her will?

It will be observed that the testatrix signed the paper in fact twice; once in the next to the last line of the fourth clause and once at the close of the fourth clause. It will also be observed that the entire disposition of her estate contemplated by her is above her signature. The only thing following is the appointment of the executors, with power to sell the property for division, if necessary. The fact that she did not sign the codicil we do not regard as material. If she had signed the will at its close, the fact that she did not sign the codicil, which is a separate instrument, would have in no manner affected the validity of the will. As to whether or not the placing of the signature above the end of the will invalidates the entire instrument seems to depend upon the effect of the part following the signature. If the part following the signature is a dispositive clause which adds to or revokes previous bequests, the whole instrument is invalid; but if the clause added below the signature does not affect the disposition of the estate, it is usually held not to invalidate the instrument. (Page on Wills, section 186; Schouler on Wills, section 8.)

As to whether the instrument is invalid where the clause below the signature merely appointed an executor the authorities are conflicting. In New York and Pennsylvania the whole instrument is held invalid. Thus in Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y., 409, the will was signed thus:

"Likewise, I make, constitute and appoint Edward McCarthy to be executor (J. Kelly) of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills by me made.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal, the 24th day of July, 1874, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty.

"Witnesses:

"EDWARD McCARTHY,

"DANIEL VAN CLIEF."

The entire paper was held invalid, though the opinion was in the first place rested on the ground that it did not appear that the testator had intended the words "J. Kelly" as his signature to the will. The same rule was followed in Wineland's appeal, 118 Pa. State, 37.

In Glancey v. Glancey, 17 Ohio State, 154, it was held that the instrument was invalid because the part above the signature alone did not contain the testator's whole purpose or scheme for disposing of his property, and that to probate only that part of the instrument would not be to effectuate his intention. In the subsequent case of Baker v. Baker, 51 Ohio State, 217, following the signature of the testator were these words: "My sister-in-law is not required to give bond when probated."

The sister-in-law referred to was by the will made executrix. It was held that this addition did not invalidate the will. The court among other things, said: "While, however, the dispositive part of a testamentary instrument should be above or precede the signature of the testator, words or clauses written before the will is executed and below the place where the testator and witnesses signed may be excluded from probate, and yet not invalidate the entire instrument. * * * The testator by his will had appointed his sister in law executrix. If nothing had been said as to bond, the omission would not have rendered the will inoperative. And a request in the body of the will that an executor be not required to give bond would be subject to the discretion of the court admitting the will to probate, which might grant letters testamentary with or without bond, as it might seem expedient. And when granted without bond, the court might, at any subsequent period, upon the application of any party interested, require bond to be given."

In Brady v. McCrossom, 5 Rodf., 431, which is cited with approval in the above case, it was held that the appointment of the executor not being essential to a will, a subsequent clause naming an executor would not invalidate the will, and probate was allowed of all except the appointing clause. In that case the court said: "It was the ancient rule that no paper in the nature of a will would be valid as such unless it contained the appointment of an executor, but such long since ceased to be the law. The statute makes provision for the appointment of an administrator with the will annexed, where no executor is named in the will. I think the will properly executed as such, and that it should be admitted to probate."

The same conclusion was reached in McCulloch's estate, Myr. Prob. (Cal.), 76. While at common law the appointment of an executor was essential to a will, under our statute it is entirely unnecessary. The court may not only require him to give bond although the will otherwise provides, but may remove him and appoint another, and every power conferred by the will upon the executor may be exercised by the administrator with the will annexed. (Kentucky Statutes, sections 3891, 3892.)

The power to sell and dispose of the property in order to effect the division provided by the will if, in the opinion of the executors a sale by them would be expedient or desirable, in no way affected the disposition of the estate. The discretion of the trustees would be controlled by the court of chancery, and a sale may be made, if necessary, by the chancellor without this clause of the will. So the omission of this clause from the will in no way affects the disposition of the estate as proposed by the testatrix. The instrument above her signature contains her will, and the probate of this much of the paper will effectuate her intention as fully as the probate of the whole paper would have done. In Flood v. Pragoff, 79 Ky., 607, these words followed the signature: "Louisville, Ky., April 8, 1877."

It was held that this addition did not invalidate the paper. There are numerous other cases to the same effect. (Page on Wills, page 206.) We see no reason why the same principle should not apply to additions which in nowise affect the disposition of the estate contemplated by the testator; and where the intention of the testator is plain and may be carried into effect without violating the words of the statute it must be done. To hold that an addition which appoints an executor invalidates the entire instrument is to ignore the change made by our statute in the common-law rule and to allow a thing which is not essential to the will to invalidate it. Our statute applies not only to wills, but to all contracts or other writings which the law requires to be signed by the party thereto, and by the same act it is provided that its provisions are to be liberally construed with a view to promote its objects. (Kentucky Statutes, section 460.) If the instrument before us had been drawn as a deed and had been signed, acknowledged and delivered by the grantor, with a clause following the signature appointing trustees to divide the property, would it be maintained that the deed was void? Or, if after a surety signed a note complete in itself, would it be maintained that he was not bound because other words were added below his signature not essential to the obligation? The same rule must be applied to wills as to other documents required by the statute to be signed. Where the signature is placed at the close of the substantial provisions of the document and the writing as signed is sufficient to effectuate the intention of the party signing it, the statute is substantially complied with, although there may be words following the signature which are unessential to the validity of the instrument.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment as herein indicated.

372 LETZLER'S ADM'R V. PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO.

LETZLER'S ADM'R v. PACIFIC MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
OF CALIFORNIA.

(Filed February 23, 1905.)

1. Life insurance—Contract—Three years' premiums—Extension—Lapse—Under a policy of insurance, which provides that after it has been in force for three full years should it lapse and not be surrendered, the full amount thereof at date of lapse (any indebtedness being repaid within three months) will be extended without request or demand therefor, where the yearly premiums are to be paid in quarterly installments, in advance, a payment of the premiums for two years and for two quarters of the third year will not have the effect to continue the policy in force, where the insured died shortly after the expiration of the third year.

2. Printing rules, by-laws, etc., on policy—Use of small type—Co-operative companies—So much of section 679, Kentucky Statutes, as provides that the policy, or certificate, application, constitution, by-laws or rules shall be plainly printed, and no portion thereof shall be in type smaller than brevier, applies only to co-operative companies.

Caruth, Chatterson & Blitz and Thum & Clark for appellant.

Henry Burnett for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee issued to Theodore Harry Letzler the following policy:

"The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., of California, in consideration of the application for this policy, which is made a part of this contract (a copy of which is hereto annexed), and of the payment in advance of the sum of $53.20 (which payment may be made in semiannual installments of $27.70, or quarterly installments of $14.10, covering the period of half years or quarter years insurance for which the installment is paid in advance), hereby insures the life of Theodore Harry Letzler, of Louisville, county of Jefferson, State of Kentucky, for one year from the date hereof, payable in the amount and to the beneficiary hereinafter named; and in consideration of the further payment of a like sum on or before the 1st day of October in each year thereafter during the continuance of this policy, and until nineteen years' premiums have been paid (which sum may be paid in like installments as aforesaid, but subject to the same conditions), hereby promises to pay $2,000, less the balance of any partially paid annual premium, to Theodore Harry Letzler's executors, administrators or assigns, or to such other beneficiary as may be designated by the insured as hereinafter provided, at the home office of said company in San Francisco, Cal., upon due notice and satisfactory proof of the death of said insured.

"The benefits, conditions and values on the next page of this policy are hereby made a part hereof.

"In witness whereof, the said The Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co., of California, has, by its president and secretary, signed and delivered this contract at the city of San Francisco, this 1st day of October, 1898.

"GEORGE H. MOORE, President.

"J. V. PATTON, Secretary."

On the back of the policy was the following provision:

"After this policy has been in force three full years, should it lapse and not be surrendered as provided above, the full amount of the policy at date of lapse, any indebtedness being repaid within three months thereafter, will be extended, without request or demand therefor, as nonparticipating term insurance, but only for the period specified in the 'Schedule of extended insurance' following: Provided, That the said term insurance shall be based upon completed insurance years only, and that if the insured dies within three years from such lapse, all unpaid premiums, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, shall be deducted from the amount insured. * * *

"Schedule of extended insurance—At end of third year, years three, days 162." * * *

The application which was attached to the policy, but printed in minion type, which is smaller than brevier, contained, among other things, this clause: "That such policy shall lapse and be void if any premium or installment thereon is not paid as therein provided, and that then all previous payments shall be forfeited to the company, except as therein otherwise provided."

Letzler paid the premiums on the policy for the first and second years and paid the first and second quarterly installments of the third years' premium, but failed to pay the third and fourth quarterly installments. After this, and shortly after the expiration of the third year, he died, and this action was brought by his administrator on the policy. At the conclusion of the evidence for the plaintiff the circuit court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals. It is insisted for him that as the application, although printed on the policy, is printed in smaller type than brevier, it can not be considered, and that the policy itself containing no clause forfeiting the insurance for the nonpayment of the quarterly installments, it was in force at the end of the third year, and that, therefore, by the schedule of extended insurance he was entitled to insurance for three years and one hundred and sixty-two days. Section 665, Kentucky Statutes, which applies to the old line companies, provides that they shall not "make any contract of insurance or agreement as to such contract other than is plainly expressed in the policy issued thereon." Section 679, Kentucky Statutes, which is a part of the law governing co-operative companies, provides that the "application, constitution, by-laws and other rules" of the company, unless attached to the policy, shall not be received as evidence or considered a part of the policy. In Provident Savings Life Assurance Society v. Puryear's Adm'r, 109 Ky., 881, and in several subsequent cases, it was held that these provisions as to the old line companies and the co-operative companies were intended to establish the same rule as to both classes of companies, and that the meaning is that the paper which is delivered to the insured, and which is held as evidence of his rights, shall contain the whole contract. The rule rests upon the idea that the legislative purpose was to cut off other papers, though referred to in the policy on the idea that the insured was frequently misled in this way as to his contract. The court did not rule that all parts of section 679 are applicable equally to the old line as well as the co-operative companies. The statute is divided into subdivisions—one of the subdivisions refers to the old line companies; another refers to the co-operative companies. The purpose of the legislature in thus dividing the statute was to make one set of rules for the government of one class of companies and another set for the government of the other class. The law relating to the co-operative companies is not applicable to the old line companies, unless there is something in the statute showing that the legislature so intended. The ruling in the cases referred to rests upon the ground that there is enough in the statute, taking the two sections together, to show that the legislature had in mind the same thing as to both companies in providing that the policy must contain the whole contract. But the policy in the case before us does contain the whole contract, the application being printed upon it and in main type. The latter part of section 679 is in these words: "The said policy or certificate, application, constitution, by-laws or other rules shall be plainly printed, and no portion thereof shall be in type smaller than brevier."

This provision, as shown on its face, only applies to the co-operative companies, for it refers to the constitution, by-laws or other rules, and to the policy or certificate, thus treating the two words as synonymous. There is no such provision in the subdivision of the act regulating the old line companies, and there is nothing in the statute to indicate that the legislature intended this provision to apply to any other companies than the co-operative companies. The objection, therefore, that the application can not be considered because printed in type smaller than brevier is untenable, as appellee is not a co-operative company.

Moreover, the contract of the insurance company, as shown by the policy, is in consideration "of the payment in advance of the sum of $52.20 (which payment may be made in semiannual installments of $27.70, or quarterly installments of $14.10, covering the period of half years or quarter years insurance for which the installment is paid in advance). * * * and in consideration of the further payment of a like sum on or before the 1st day of October in each year thereafter, etc."

When the first year expired the insurance which had been paid for expired; and if nothing more had then been paid, the policy would by its terms have expired. It is inaccurate to call this a forfeiture. The payment of the premium is the condition upon which the continued existence of the policy depends, and when the premium is not paid the insurance ceases. The second year's premium, however, was paid. When the third year began the insured paid the first quarter. This carried the insurance through the first quarter. He then paid the second quarter. This carried his insurance to the end of that quarter. But when he failed to pay the third quarter his insurance ceased. If the rule were as contended for by appellant, the insured, when he paid the first quarter on the third year, need have paid no more, and he would not only have been insured for the rest of that year, but would have been entitled to the extended insurance just as much as he would have been if he had paid all four of his quarterly installments in advance, according to the terms of his contract. It was not contemplated by the parties that the insured should get insurance for the full year by making one or two of the quarterly payments. The policy expressly provides that the quarterly payment covers the insurance for which the installment is paid, and is to be paid in advance. This utterly excludes the idea that the insured could get insurance for a whole year by paying one of his quarterly installments, or two of them, as in the case before us.

Judgment affirmed.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE v. ROBINSON'S EX'OR, &c.

(Filed February 23, 1905.)

Municipal taxes—Lien—Personal liability of owner—Agent or personal representative—Under sections 8003 and 8005, Kentucky Statutes, not only a lien may be enforced, but a personal judgment may be rendered under either section against the owner of the property or against the trustee, personal representative or agent in his fiduciary capacity for taxes due the city, and which became due more than five years before the filing of the petition.

H. L. Stone for appellant.

Lane & Harrison for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment of the Jefferson Chancery Court, First Division, refusing to give appellant judgment on tax bills for the year 1896 against appellee, executor.

This action was instituted on the 8th of August, 1900, by which it was sought to recover taxes, not only for the year named, but also for the years 1898, 1899 and 1900. A personal judgment was prayed for against the personal representative of Robinson, deceased, and for all other equitable relief. On the 19th of April, 1902, the appellant filed an amended and supplemental petition against the executor and all other parties interested in the property described in the original petition. The appellees on July 15, 1902, filed their answer, and stated that the executor of Robinson, deceased, did not own or have any interest in the property taxed, and sought to be subjected to the payment thereof by this action, and pleaded that more than five years had elapsed after the accrual of the cause of action for the taxes due for the year 1896 before the amended petition was filed in 1902. The executor also pleaded the statutes of limitations.

The appellant filed an amended pleading by which it sought to avoid the effect of the plea of the statutes of limitations by the executor, and alleged that he, prior to the year 1895, and ever since that date, had collected the rents and income from the property described in the petition, and that he had enjoyed the profits thereof and the occupancy of same; that he had never made any settlement of his accounts as executor of the estate of Robinson, deceased. This seems not to have been controverted.

The lower court rendered a personal judgment against the executor for the taxes for all the years sued for, except the taxes for the year 1896, and the court disposed of the plea of limitations in the following words: "It is further adjudged that for the sum of $485.99 for the taxes for the year 1896, and the interest thereon as aforesaid, the plaintiff's action thereon as against all of the defendants except the defendant, Bennett H. Young, executor under the will of Stuart Robinson, deceased, is barred by the statutes of limitations, but the plaintiff, for said sum, for the taxes for the year 1896, and the interest thereon, as aforesaid, has no lien on the right, title and interest of Bennett H. Young, executor of Stuart Robinson, deceased, which he has or had in that capacity at the institution of this action thereon against him as such executor August 8, 1900."

It appears that the lower court did not sustain the executor's plea of limitations, but refused any judgment against him for the taxes. The court was right in failing to sustain his plea, but erred in refusing to render a judgment against him for the taxes for the year 1896. It appears from sections 3003 and 3005 of the Kentucky Statutes that when an owner of property or any trustee, personal representative or agent is sued for taxes, that not only a lien may be enforced on the property, but a personal judgment may be rendered under either section against the owner of the property or against the trustee, personal representative or agent in his fiduciary capacity.

It will be observed, by reference to the sections of the statutes supra, that a personal liability is imposed upon the fiduciary by the statutes for the taxes on lands and improvements of which he has the management, or who enjoys the rents, income and profits of lands and improvements by occupying the same, and it is made his duty to pay such taxes before September 15th of each year, before applying or paying the same to the beneficiaries, and in default of so doing he becomes personally liable, which liability may be enforced in equitable proceedings. The court properly sustained the plea of the statute of limitations as to the defendants other than the executor, but should have rendered a judgment against him for taxes for the year 1896, as proceedings were instituted and a personal judgment sought against him, as such executor, from the inception of the action. The appellee contends that the action of the lower court in relieving the executor from the payment of the taxes for the year 1896 was based upon the ground that the appellant's amendment filed in 1902 was in effect an abandonment of its first cause of action; that his first cause was based upon section 3005 of the statutes, and by this amendment a new and another action was instituted under the provisions of section 3003, and that his plea of the statutes of limitations should have been sustained.

We are unable to agree with the contention of the appellee in this. The cause of action was the same from the beginning, to wit, the recovery of the taxes for 1896, and a personal judgment was at all times sought against him as such executor, which both of the sections of the statutes supra authorized, and the amendment only stated additional or other reasons why he should be compelled to pay the taxes, statutory as well as equitable reasons.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SHEPHERD v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed February 24, 1905.)

1. Homicide—Debauching defendant's wife—Threats of deceased to kill defendant—Communicated by wife to husband—Competency—In a prosecution against one for murder in killing a man who had debauched the de fendant's wife and caused their separation, it is competent for the defendant to testify that his wife told him immediately before the shooting that deceased had threatened his life, and would kill him rather than let her return and live with him.

2. Emotional insanity—Reduction of offense—Submission to jury—If the fact be that deceased had violated the sanctity of defendant's home, estranged his wife's affections, debauched her person, and threatened his life if he interfered with a continuance of his illicit relations, forcing his presence on them for that purpose, it may well be supposed that the passion of the husband was aroused to an uncontrollable extent; and whether it was such as to have created an emotional insanity so as for the time to dethrone the reason of the outraged husband, or whether it merely reduced the homicide to manslaughter, was a question which, under the circumstances, should have been submitted to the jury.

3. Evidence—Criminal acts of defendant—Competency—On the trial of one for murder in the killing of a man who had debauched his wife it was error in the court to admit evidence that the defendant had committed adulterous acts himself, or that he had shot another man, or that he had said that deceased was the third man he had shot.

4. Misconduct of Commonwealth's attorney—On the trial of one for murder it was error in the court to allow the attorney for the Commonwealth, against the objection of the defendant, to refer to an affidavit admitted as evidence for the defendant, as the "supposed testimony of the absent witnesses, but was not in fact their testimony, but merely an affidavit filed on behalf of the defendant."

B. B. Golden, David Hays, D. D. Field & Son and J. G. Forrester for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant was convicted of the charge of murder, committed upon Riley Webb. The defense was emotional insanity and justifiable homicide under an apparent necessity. Appellant and his wife had become estranged, and had temporarily separated about two years before the killing of Webb. Appellant claims that the separation was because of Webb's interference with the domestic relations of appellant and his wife. Just before the killing appellant and his wife had agreed to be reconciled, and to resume the married relation. For that purpose appellant visited her at her father's home in Letcher county. Past offenses were condoned, and appellant started to his home, in Leslie county, to prepare for taking his wife there some days later. He was turned back, however, and returning somewhat unexpectedly, found his wife and Webb in company, from which it was reasonably apparent, and proved to be a fact, that they had again been guilty of adultery. The next morning appellant was talking to his wife at her father's, when Webb came to the house. Appellant claims that his wife told him that Webb had threatened his life rather than that she should leave with him. Incensed at the continued provocation, as he claims, appellant picked up a rifle and shot Webb fatally. He also claims that at the moment of the shooting Webb turned upon him with something in his hand, which appellant thought was a pistol.

The verdict of the jury found appellant guilty, and sentenced him to life imprisonment. Upon the trial there occurred a number of errors, for which the judgment must be reversed. In the first place it was error for the trial court to have admitted evidence to the jury that appellant had committed other crimes, or that he had been guilty possibly of adulterous acts himself; that he had shot another man, or that he had said that Webb was the third man he had shot. The fact that appellant had shot Webb was not in dispute. His admission of the fact that he had shot him, and that he was the third man that he had shot, could serve no useful or proper purpose in the trial, as it was testified to, appellant having said merely, according to Commonwealth's evidence, "he is the third one I have knocked down." Its tendency was rather to lead the minds of the jury away from the consideration of the main facts before them, and tended to prejudice appellant's cause in their minds, for it might be argued, not unreasonably, that if appellant had shot two men before, and was boasting of it, he was a bad man, and one very likely to have committed a crime of a similar nature in this case. In fixing his punishment the jury were apt, too, to regulate it somewhat by his previous offenses, whereas the only matter legitimately before the jury was whether appellant had feloniously killed Webb, and if he had, the proper measure of punishment for that act.

Appellant offered to testify that his wife told him immediately before the shooting that Webb had threatened his life, and would kill him rather than let her return with him. The court excluded this evidence upon the ground, it is said, that it was in the nature of a confidential communication between husband and wife, and as such was incompetent as evidence under the Code. In Arnett v. Commonwealth, 114 Ky., 593, it was held that a dying statement made to the wife of the declarant could be proved against his slayer; that section 606, Civil Code, "that the wife was incompetent to testify even after the cessation of the marriage relation to any communication made to her by her husband during marriage," did not apply to criminal prosecutions. With respect to these the common law is in effect in this State, of which Greenleaf on Evidence, section 387, says: "The great object of the rule is to secure domestic happiness by placing the protecting seal of the law upon all confidential communications between husband and wife, and whatever had come to the knowledge of either by the means of the hallowed confidences which that relation inspires can not be afterwards divulged in testimony, even though the other be no longer living."

The rule is founded upon the policy of the law, the object of which is to secure domestic happiness by protecting that state in the inviolability of its confidences. What would tend to create a breach of such confidences is, therefore, disfavored by the law. But under the circumstances shown in the case at bar the liberty or life of one accused with a high crime is involved. The main ingredient of his act, aside from the death inflicted by it, is its motive. If the act were inexcusable, done in cold blood, as the saying is, and, therefore, in malice, the perpetrator became a criminal, subject under the law to capital punishment. On the other hand, if the act was excusable, he has in law done no wrong; or, if the act was done under such provocation as to inflame passion beyond control under the circumstances, the offense is greatly reduced. Instead of being a capital one, it might be punished by a short confinement in the State penitentiary. The State is concerned in eliciting the truth with respect to homicides committed within her borders, and in no sense is it the purpose of the State to convict for a higher degree of crime than is really justifiable by the facts in the case. No other policy of the law can override the State's desire to do justice, and no more to those charged in her courts with crime. If the fact be that deceased, Webb; had violated the sanctity of appellant's home; had estranged his wife's affections; had debauched her person, and had threatened appellant's life if he proposed to interfere with deceased's continuance of his illicit relations, forcing his presence upon them for that apparent purpose, human nature is so constituted that the passion of the husband may well be supposed to have been aroused to an uncontrollable extent. Whether it was such as to have created an emotional insanity, so as for the time to dethrone the reason of the outraged husband, or whether it merely reduced the homicide to manslaughter, was a question which, under the circumstances, should have been submitted to the jury. It was not enough, though, to have instructed them appropriately as to the law ordinarily applicable to murder and manslaughter. They should have been allowed to consider in connection with the instructions the facts which probably entered into shaping the conduct of the accused on the fatal occasion. If the fact should be, as appellant claims, that his wife had been debauched by the person whom he afterward slew, and that the debauchee was flaunting his successes in the face of the victimized husband, it would assuredly be competent to prove the fact before the jury, at least in mitigation of the husband's act in taking his life on the spot. The sole question here is whether the husband might show that he got his information from his wife; that he did so get it, for the purposes of this discussion, will be assumed. Having it, it is for the jury to say to what extent, if at all, it palliated his act. But, as shown in this record, that fact could not be brought to the knowledge of the jury except defendant proved, or some one else proved, that defendant had got such information; that he got it from his wife could take nothing from the sting of it. Its effect upon his mind and conduct must have been at least the same, if not indeed worse, than if it had been communicated by some third person. If one is informed by his wife that she had been raped, or that a rape had been attempted upon her person, or that she had been grossly insulted and assaulted, pointing out the perpetrator of the act at the time, it would not be unnatural for the husband to act upon that information. To allow it to be proved that he acted drastically, without being permitted to show why, or upon what basis his belief rested, would be applying the rule for the protection of domestic felicity so as to make it hurt instead of help those for whose benefit it was primarily intended. We perceive no good reason for extending the rule invoked so as to exclude the evidence discussed. The court is of opinion that the evidence should have been admitted, to be weighed by the jury as other facts and circumstances in the case.

Appellant filed an affidavit to procure a continuance on account of the absence of certain witnesses. The Commonwealth consented that the affidavit should be read under provisions of the Code as the depositions of the absent witnesses, whereupon appellant's motion for a continuance was overruled, and the affidavit was so admitted. In the concluding argument to the jury the Commonwealth's attorney said, in evident response to the argument made on behalf of appellant, that the supposed testimony of these absent witnesses was not in fact their sworn testimony, but was merely an affidavit filed on behalf of the defendant. From which it was argued, or at least the inference was necessarily invited, that the testimony of the absent witnesses was not in fact, nor was it to be received by the jury, as their evidence in the case. This was an abuse of privilege by the Commonwealth's attorney, and objections of appellant should have been sustained to the argument, and the jury admonished appropriately. The law gives to the defendant in such case the benefit of such statements as the depositions of the absent witnesses. That is the least that he is entitled to under the guaranty of the Constitution and the law affording one charged with crime compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses on his behalf at his trial. If the practice should be indulged by the prosecution of discrediting the affidavit by informing the jury that it was not in fact the deposition of the witness, it would be to nullify the provisions of the statute, and to deprive the defendant of a valuable privilege, which the legislature in its wisdom has deemed a necessary one in the proper administration of justice. In condemning a similar remark (Redmond v. Commonwealth, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 331) this court said: "The defendant was entitled to the full benefit of the statements therein as coming from Purcell (the absent witness). This same practice is indulged in, to some extent, throughout the State, but should not be permitted by the court."

The other evidence complained of, we think, was admissible.

But for the reasons indicated the case must be remanded for a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

MONARCH, &c. v. OWENSBORO CITY RAILROAD CO.

(Filed February 24, 1905.)

1. Contracts—Common Law—Time—Essence of—Precedent covenants—In an ordinary action for breach of contract the general rule is that time is always of the essence of the contract, and a party who seeks damages for a breach of contract must show a compliance by himself of his own precedent covenants within the time required by the agreement.

2. Same—Even in equity, if it be apparent from the contract that the parties so intended, time will be considered of the essence of the contract, and a strict performance within the time fixed will be considered a condition precedent to an action for a breach.

3. Street railway—Granting franchise—Validity—The granting of a franchise to operate a street car line over the streets of a city to any person except to the highest and best bidder, after due advertisement, is in direct conflict with section 164 of the Constitution, and is void.

Little & Slack, Eli H. Brown and Wilfred Carrico for appellants.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney and R. S. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellant, R. Monarch, owned a tract of land containing about twenty-seven acres in Daviess county, Kentucky, within a short distance of the city of Owensboro. Conceiving that the connection of this tract of land with the city by a street car line would greatly enhance its value, he obtained a franchise from the municipality to operate a street car system over certain of its streets, presumably with the intention of extending it to his own property. Appellee also had a franchise to operate a street car system through the streets of the city of Owensboro.

Appellant deeming that appellee, in extending its system along Triplett street, was invading his exclusive right to operate a line of cars on that thoroughfare, instituted an action against it for an injunction, during the pendency of which the parties litigant entered into the following contract:

"This memorandum of agreement made and entered into this 12th day of June, 1898, by and between R. Monarch, of Owensboro, Ky., of the first part, and the Owensboro City Railroad Co., of Owensboro, Ky., of the second part,

"Witnesseth: That the parties hereto have made the following contract:

"R. Monarch has granted, and hereby agrees to convey by proper conveyance, to be hereafter made by himself and wife to the said company, a right of way ten feet wide from the Roost or Main street road, west of Owensboro, near Paradise Garden, and from a point on said road which lies between the land of Dr. G. B. Tyler and Dr. J. Hale, extending south the same width to Monarch's land, as may be required for necessary siding, and assigns, transfers and sets over to said company all rights of every description under an ordinance of the Owensboro City Council passed and adopted on the — day of —, 1892, giving him and such persons as he might associate with him the right to construct and operate a street car system in Owensboro on all the streets named in said ordinance, and said Monarch agrees to transfer said grant and franchise to said company by any proper writing to be hereafter made and delivered, and to ask the consent of the Owensboro City Council to such transfer, and said Monarch further agrees to dismiss his suit now pending in the Daviess Circuit Court against said company.

"In consideration of the above, the city railroad company agrees to construct the extension of its railway from said point on said Roost road to the Lancaster road on Monarch's land and on the right of way described; thence up Fifth street to the terminus of the present street car line on said street, or as near said street as practicable, as soon as the right of way can be procured to the terminus of said Fifth street line.

"The said extension is to be completed as soon as practicable from this date, and is to be operated during the period of said company's original franchise.

"The said company agrees to put in and maintain three cattle guards on the line from Main street to Monarch's land, at points to be selected by said Monarch, and said parties are to procure the right of way up said Lancaster road and Fifth street, and if any expense is attached thereto it is to be borne jointly.

"In witness whereof the said parties hereunto have subscribed their names, this the day and year first herein written.

(Signed) "R. MONARCH,

"OWENSBORO CITY R. R. CO.

"By W. E. WHITELEY, President."

After the execution of the foregoing contract appellant dismissed his action, and sought to obtain a right of way over a county road leading from the city limits of Owensboro to a point near his land, which was essential to appellee's performing its contract of extending its line to his property. The right of way sought by appellant over this road was refused by the county authorities having the matter in charge, and it then became evident that an extended time would be required in which to secure the right of way necessary to enable appellee to perform its contract. With this fact confronting them, on the 18th day of September, 1893, the original agreement was modified by the parties as follows: "In pursuance of the agreement of June 12, 1893, R. Monarch has this day made and delivered to the Owensboro City Railroad Co. a written transfer of all rights and privileges acquired by him under the ordinance of the common council of the city of Owensboro, enacted October 19, 1892, and requesting said council to approve said transfer; and it is now agreed by said Monarch and said city railroad company that each is to have until the 1st day of May, 1894, in which to execute and complete the stipulations of their aforesaid agreement in regard to said city railroad. This the 18th day of September, 1893."

In 1896 appellant made a tender to appellee of what he seemed to consider a fulfillment of his agreement, and demanded performance of its covenants, which, being refused, he instituted this action in equity, alleging the foregoing facts and the terms of the contract, and praying as a relief a judgment requiring appellee to specifically perform the terms of the contract, or, if that was deemed impracticable, for a judgment against it in damages for the sum of $57,000. The manner of his performing the conditions precedent to his contract by appellant, his demand of performance from appellee, and its refusal, are thus set forth in the petition: "Plaintiff states that on the — day of May, 1896, he tendered and offered to deliver to the defendant a properly executed conveyance to defendant by his wife and himself of the right of way over the land mentioned in said contract of June 12, 1893, to be conveyed by him to it. At the same time he tendered and offered to deliver to defendant certified copies of the ordinance of October 19, 1892, of the city council of Owensboro, and a certified copy of the ordinance of April 6, 1896, of the trustees of the town of Herrwood, granting rights of way in said city and town, respectively, and accompanied said copies with a written transfer of all the right, title and interest in and to the privileges, rights, immunities and franchises granted to him by said ordinances of said city and town, respectively, and upon the tender and offer to deliver to the defendant said deed, said ordinance and said written transfer of same, he demanded that said defendant should proceed, without unnecessary delay, to perform its said contract of June 12, 1893, upon its part, by constructing lines or street railroad tracks, and operating street car tracks thereon when constructed as contemplated and provided for in said contract. He says the defendant, then and there, through and by its president, refused to accept said deed or ordinances, or the written transfer of same, or either or any of them, and declared it would not perform said contract of June 12, 1893, on its part, nor construct car lines, nor operate them as provided in said contract, or at all."

To this petition appellee filed an answer containing several defenses, among which was pleaded the modification of the original contract on the 18th day of September, 1893, by which it was agreed that each of the parties should have until May 1, 1894, in which to execute and complete the stipulations of the original agreement, and the failure on the part of appellant within the stipulated time to comply therewith by performance on his part of the conditions precedent to the covenants of appellee. After the issues were made up appellant dismissed so much of his petition as sought a remedy by specific performance, and moved to transfer the action from the equity to the common-law side of the docket for the trial of the legal issues remaining in the case. This motion, over the objection of appellee, was sustained by the court. Upon the trial, after all of appellant's evidence was in, the court, on motion of appellee, awarded a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for it as in case of nonsuit, which was done. Appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled, he is here on appeal.

By the original contract appellee was to extend its line to appellant's property as soon as practicable after the necessary right of way could be procured from his property to the terminus of its Fifth street line. By the agreement of September 18, 1893, the time in which each of the parties was to perform his part of the contract was definitely fixed to the 1st day of May, 1894. The obtention of the right of way was a condition precedent to the extension of the line. The petition shows, affirmatively, that this right of way was obtained by appellant and tendered to the appellee on the — day of May, 1896, two years after the date fixed in the amended contract of 1893. Passing the question of variance between the contract sued on and that proved, in our opinion this tender was too late. Having determined upon a definite time in which the contract was to be performed, it was necessary, before he could maintain an action against the appellee for a breach of its covenant, to allege and prove, if it was denied, the performance by him, on or before May 1, 1894, of those covenants necessary to be performed to enable it to carry out its contract. Upon his failure to tender the necessary right of way by the stipulated time appellee had a right to consider the contract rescinded. It must be borne in mind that before the trial of the case appellant abandoned his claim to the equitable remedy of specific performance, and caused the action to be transferred to the common-law docket, and, therefore, the authorities cited in support of the equitable rule, that time will not be considered as of the essence of the contract unless the party invoking it is put in a worse condition by its lapse than he otherwise would have been, have no application. The general rule at common law is that time is always of the essence of the contract, and a party who seeks damages for a breach must show a compliance by himself of his own precedent covenants within the time required by the agreement. In 9 Cyc., 605, the rule is thus stated: "At common law time is always of the essence of the contract, that is to say, if a person promises to do a certain thing by a certain day, in consideration that the latter will do something for him, the thing must be done by the date named, or the latter is discharged from his promise." (Cromwell v. Wilkinson, 18 Ind., 365; Allen v. Copper, 22 Me., 133; Hill v. Milburn School District, No. 2, 17 Me., 316.) And even in equity, if it be apparent from the contract that the parties so intended, time will be considered of the essence of the contract, and a strict performance within the time fixed will be considered a condition precedent to an action for a breach.

"By the weight of authority, however, it is always open to the parties, even in equity, to make time of the essence of the contract by express agreement. And where time is not made of the essence of the contract by express stipulation, it may, however, be held to have been so intended from the nature of the contract. In mercantile contracts, such as contracts for the manufacture and sale of goods and the like, it is generally so fixed. In contracts for the sale of land, for the performance of services, or the construction of buildings and the like, time will be held of the essence if, from the nature of the property and the circumstances, it seems that the parties must have so intended; but generally in such contracts time is not of the essence. A new agreement extending the time of performance of a contract is evidence that the parties considered time material." (Id., 605, note c; Wiswall v. McGown, 2 Barbour, N. Y., 270.)

Newman in his work on Pleading and Practice, page 285, says: "The time fixed for the performance of a written agreement should always be stated in the petition, for it is of substance; and it is a general rule that where time is essential or material to the rights of the parties it must be alleged with certainty and precision. Thus in an action to deliver property on a certain day or at a certain period fixed by the parties, at which time it was to be paid for, the failure to allege the time, or a variance between the time alleged and that proved on the trial, would be fatal to the action, unless the pleading should be so amended as to state the true time."

Conceding in full the principle stated by appellant, that where a party to a contract has received a substantial part of the consideration, he can not, as a rule, urge the nonperformance of the remainder within a stipulated time without placing the other party in statu quo. That principle has no place in the facts of this case. Admitting, for the purposes of the argument, that appellant made a proper tender of his rights under the ordinance of the council of the city of Owensboro granting him the franchise to operate a street car line over its streets; that the franchise was valid, and also that he in due time dismissed his action for an injunction, this had all been done prior to the amending of the contract on September 18, 1893. With this partial compliance of his contract before him, he fixed the time for the performance of all the remaining covenants by the 1st day of May, 1894. But that which he claims as a partial performance was without value, either to himself or to appellee. The granting of the franchise to operate a street car line over the streets of the municipality was in direct violation of section 164 of the Constitution, which forbids the granting of such franchises except to the highest and best bidder after due advertisement. In the case of Nicholasville Water Co. v. Board of Councilmen of the City of Nicholasville, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 592, it was said: "The granting of the franchise by the town of Nicholasville to the Kentucky Water Heating and Illuminating Co. in June, 1892, may be treated as void, because of the failure of the municipality to receive bids publicly after due advertisement, as provided in section 164 of the Constitution. The prohibitory provision of that instrument became operative upon its adoption."

To the same effect is Keith v. Jackson, 109 Ky., 426, wherein it is said:

"We believe that it is mandatory on the municipality to award the franchise to the highest and best bidder." This being true, the grant of the franchise to appellant was void, his assignment carried no rights to appellee, and the dismissal of his action placed him in no worse position than he was before. (Maraman v. Ohio Valley Telephone Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 784.)

Judgment affirmed.

EVERSOLE v. EVERSOLE, &c.

(Filed February 24, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Sale of lands—Rescission of contract—Appellees having purchased a tract of land from appellant, and it appearing that prior to this sale appellant had sold the mineral rights in the land to Bright, appellees are entitled to a rescission of the contract because a perfect title to the land could not be conveyed as appellant had covenanted to do.

2. Notice—The fact that the deed conveying the mineral rights had been recorded does not alter the question, because if the case turned upon that question either appellees would lose or Bright would lose, and in either event appellant would be the gainer, and it would be violative of equity to enter a decree to the effect that the appellees should have discovered that the conveyance to Bright had been made, or that the index to the record should have put them upon notice, and, therefore, adjudge specific performance.

Lewis & Calvert for appellant.

Logan & Jeffries for appellees.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

In 1891 the appellant sold the appellees a tract of land situated on Wooten creek, Leslie county, Kentucky, and executed and delivered to them a title bond therefor, by the terms of which he covenanted to convey the land to them by deed with a covenant of general warranty. A note was executed by the appellees to the appellant for $339, the balance of the purchase money. After all the purchase money had been paid, except about $150, the appellees discovered that previous to their purchase the appellant had conveyed to Arthur D. Bright all the coal, gas, salt water, oil and mineral rights of every description in, upon and under the tract of land. The appellant instituted the action upon the note which had been executed by the appellees for the purchase money, less the sums previously paid on it. Appellees resisted the payment upon the grounds that the appellant could not comply with the terms of his title bond, because he had previously divested himself of certain interest in the land to Bright. The court refused to enforce specific performance of the contract, but decreed a rescission upon equitable terms. The deed by the terms of which the mineral rights, etc., were sold to Bright was executed by W. T. Browning and wife and appellant and his wife, and was duly recorded, but the index book made it appear that W. T. Browning and wife alone were the grantors in the deed.

It is earnestly urged by counsel for the appellant that the index should have put the appellees on inquiry, and, therefore, they should have discovered that the appellant had previously divested himself of the title to the mineral rights, etc., in the tract of land which they purchased, and, therefore, it is insisted that the contract should have been enforced. If the case was made to turn upon the question of notice, and we do not think it does, Bright would either lose the interest which he purchased in the land or the appellees would do so. The appellant would be the gainer regardless of which of the others might lose. So the proposition is that the appellant should have specific performance of the contract, and make either Bright or the appellees sustain the loss resulting from his wrongful act. It would be violative of good conscience to enter a decree which would produce such consequences. If there was a question between appellees and Bright as to who should sustain the loss, then the question would arise which is so ably discussed by counsel for appellant.

The appellant covenanted to convey the land to the appellees, but he is unable to do so. The appellees can not be compelled to accept the deed under the contract when the appellant had divested himself of the title to perhaps the most valuable interest in the land. He could not convey a perfect title to the land, hence, under the facts of this case, appellees were entitled to a rescission of it.

The judgment is affirmed.

GUTMAN, &c. v. TURNER, &c.

(Filed February 28, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Wills—Undue influence—Incapacity—Anna Maria Sewher owning an estate of something like $15,000 died, leaving it all to a daughter except $150 each to the four children of her deceased son, and $100 to their mother. The daughter and the four grandchildren were her only heirs at law. The paper was admitted to probate, but upon appeal to the circuit court the jury found it not to be her will. The son's widow and children had nothing but a home worth about $1,000, and it not fully paid for. There was proof showing the testatrix to be seventy-five years of age; that she was childish and had to be looked after like a child; that she did not realize what was going on about her, and was not deemed by her family as competent to be trusted on the street some time before her death. There was other evidence sufficient to support the will, but the question was for the jury. There was no sufficient reason shown for giving the bulk of the estate to the daughter, to the exclusion of her dead son's children, and there being no error in the admission or rejection of the evidence the verdict will not be disturbed.

James P. Tarvin and H. D. Gregory for appellants.

Wm. A. Byrne for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Anna Maria Schwer died a resident of Kenton county on July 1, 1903, owning an estate worth $12,000 or $15,000. After her death a paper purporting to be her will was probated in the Kenton County Court. By this paper she devised to the four children of her deceased son $150 each and $100 to their mother. The remainder of her estate she devised to her daughter, Elizabeth Gutman, absolutely. Her daughter, Elizabeth Gutman, and the four grandchildren were her sole heirs at law. The grandchildren prosecuted an appeal from the order of the county court probating the will. In the circuit court the case was heard by a jury, who found the paper not to be her will. The circuit court overruled a motion for a new trial and entered judgment pursuant to the verdict of the jury, and the propounders of the will appeal.

By the will Joseph F. Gutman, the husband of Elizabeth Gutman, was made executor without bond. It is insisted for appellants that there was no evidence of incapacity or undue influence, and that on all the evidence a judgment should be entered probating the paper. The testatrix was seventy-five years of age. The will was made on February 25, 1902. The son died in the year 1892, leaving his widow and children in a home worth something over $1,000, which was not entirely paid for. His widow had no other means except her earnings from sewing and such help as her father-in-law gave her. The old gentleman died on December 4, 1901, and by his will he left everything to his wife. Her will was made on the 25th of February following his death, and she lived about eighteen months after her will was made. The daughter-in-law testified that Mrs. Schwer was weak-minded, and had been for four years before her death; that at the death of her husband she acted like she had a house full of company and did not realize that anything had happened, and that Mrs. Gutman then said to her, "just look at mother, she is so childish I have to tend to her like a baby, she does not realize at all what has happened;" that at this time the old lady was looking around and laughing and talking to the people who had come in to the burial as though nothing had happened. She also testified to similar expressions on other occasions by Mrs. Gutman, and these were proved by a number of other witnesses. The testimony of the daughter-in-law is sustained by her children, and by several other witnesses. The grandchildren lived about two or three squares from the old lady. Mrs. Gutman lived next door, and in cold weather in the same house. She looked after her mother, and they substantially constituted one family much of the time. The old lady would tell the grandchildren not to come to her house; that Mrs. Gutman did not want them there. She would go to see them under the guise of going to church, and would tell them that she went two squares out of her way so that Mrs. Gutman would not know that she had come to see them. She told them that they would come in for their father's part of the estate. She would make them presents, but charged them not to let Mrs. Gutman know of it. There is also evidence that she said in speaking of the estate, that one must have peace at home, and one witness testifies to a conversation between Gutman and his wife from which the jury were warranted in inferring that they were discussing the disposition of the property and proposing just such a division of it as was made by the will. A disinterested witness said Mrs. Gutman used to him these words: "Mamma is getting awful ugly; I can't trust her alone in the house. If I go out I am afraid something will happen." Another said she said this: "She is so nervous; she is getting real childish; we have got to watch her all the time; she gets up in the night and wants to run out." The evidence also shows that the old lady was not deemed by any of the family competent to be trusted on the street for some time before her death.

Appellants proved by a number of witnesses, who knew the testatrix and had more or less business dealings with her, that her mind was good, and that she transacted her own business, and was fully competent to make a will. They also proved by the physician who attended her that her mind was good up to six or eight weeks of her death; that after this she suffered from Bright's disease and senile dementia. The evidence was sufficient to justify a finding in favor of the will, but under the proof the question was for the jury. No sufficient reason is shown for her cutting out her dead son's children and giving substantially the entire estate to the living daughter, who was plainly in much more comfortable circumstances than they. We think there was sufficient evidence of both incapacity and undue influence to submit the question to the jury, and under all the facts we see no reason for disturbing the verdict of the jury. There was no error in the admission or rejection of evidence. In fact these matters are not complained of.

Judgment affirmed.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS PACIFIC RY. CO. v.
MARRS' ADM'X.

(Filed February 28, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Trespasser in switchyard—Drunken—Lying between tracks—Knowledge of servants—Duty of servants—Liability of company—Where defendant's servants in charge of its switchyard saw a drunken man helped off the train, and shortly thereafter found him lying in a drunken stupor between the tracks in the switchyard, in the night time, from which they aroused him, although he was a trespasser they owed him a duty to either safely conduct him from the yard, or in subsequently moving their engine in the yard to keep a lookout so as to avoid injuring him, and in such case where the man was run over and killed in moving the engine in the yard, in an action by his administratrix against the company for negligently causing his death, the trial court properly refused to give the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant.

John Galvin and Thornton & Kerr for appellant.

Matt O'Doherty and Hunt & Hunt for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

William H. Marrs, a resident of Lexington, Ky., on a visit to Louisville, became intoxicated, and while in this condition his friends purchased a ticket for him over the Louisville Southern Railway to his home, put him on the train, and gave his ticket to the conductor. When the train arrived at the depot in Lexington he was in the smoker, asleep, with his head and arm hanging out of the window. One of the brakemen aroused and required him to go from the car to the platform of the station.

The Louisville Southern Railway uses the depot of the Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Railway Co. at Lexington. Near this depot are the private switchyards of the latter corporation. These yards are, perhaps, more than a half mile in length, and covered with a network of tracks and switches, there being, probably, as many as eighteen or twenty separate tracks.

The train on which Marrs was a passenger arrived at the Lexington depot at about 10:40 p. m. Within thirty or forty minutes after the drunken passenger left the car he was found by the yardmaster, Savage, asleep in the switchyard between tracks Nos. 8 and 4. Appellant's switching crew with their engine, coming along at this time, were stopped by the yardmaster, who called to some of them to come and assist him in arousing the sleeping man. This was responded to by James H. Joyce and John Haney, who left the engine and went to where Marrs was lying. Joyce shook the sleeping man, who looked up, and, with an oath, said: "Kid, did you expect to find a man with his head cut off?" To which Joyce replied: "No, but if you lie around here in this way you will have your head cut off." Whereupon Marrs got upon his feet, "hitched up his trousers," and walked off in the direction of the Versailles pike, cursing, as he went, the men who had disturbed him. The switching crew then went to their supper (a midnight lunch), and returning in an hour, started with their engine along one of the tracks in the switchyard for the purpose of getting a car of stock which was to be transferred from one track to another. The engine was being backed, with several of the crew in front on the tender, keeping a lookout for the car of stock which they intended to shift. While proceeding at the rate of six or seven miles an hour the engine ran over Marrs, who had again fallen asleep (this time on the track), inflicting injuries from which he in a few days died. To recover damages for the death thus occasioned this action was instituted by the administratrix of his estate against both the Louisville Southern Railway and appellant. A trial resulted in a peremptory instruction being awarded in favor of the Louisville Southern Railway, and a verdict and judgment against appellant for the sum of $4,500, of which it now complains. Was appellant entitled to a peremptory instruction? This is the substantial question presented in the record.

There was no relation of passenger and carrier between Marrs and appellant, and, therefore, his entrance into the private switchyard of the corporation made him a trespasser, and if those in charge of the switch engine had run it over him when he was first found in the yard, then undoubtedly appellant would have been entitled to a peremptory instruction under the evidence as adduced on the trial, because he, being a trespasser, its employees owed him no duty except to refrain, after his peril was discovered, from injuring him, if this could be done by the exercise of ordinary diligence. But having found him drunk and asleep in the yard, could they arouse and start him wandering in the dark through the network of switches and tracks, and then say, when they afterwards ran over him, that they owed him no lookout duty because he was a trespasser? We can not sanction so cruel and inhuman a principle. Both Savage, the yardmaster, and Haney, the foreman of the switching crew, saw Marrs on the Louisville Southern train when it reached the depot, and knew that he was a passenger thereon, and drunk. When they saw him in the switchyard asleep, and aroused him, they recognized him as the man they had seen on the train. They knew he was still intoxicated, and the fact that within so short a time he was found by them asleep in the switchyard, was all the evidence that reasonable men required to know that, owing to his condition, he was unable to take care of himself, and more than probably was dazed and lost. Under these circumstances it was their duty, either to see him safely out of the yard, or, in default of this, to exercise at least ordinary care to avoid injuring him, in moving the switch engine about where, under the circumstances, it was reasonable to anticipate his presence. Haney and Savage, within forty minutes before they found Marrs asleep in the switchyard, had seen him asleep on the train. They had seen him aroused from his stupor by the brakeman and put upon the platform, and when they found him within so short a time after being aroused by the brakeman, again in a stupor in the switchyard, they were bound to know that his condition was such as to render him incapable of taking care of himself; and this being true, as we have before said, common humanity forbade them simply to arouse him from where they found him asleep, and start him on another walk, merely to sink into a torpor in the yard a second time. Indeed the action of these men was a positive injury to the decedent, for as he lay between tracks Nos. 3 and 4, he was then at least safe from being run over. When they aroused him from this position, and started him on his walk in the dark through the yards, they subjected him to the perilous chance, when again overcome by the liquor, of assuming a position of greater danger than he was occupying at first. This chance subsequently became a reality. When the unfortunate man was overcome a second time in the yard, he went to sleep on one of the tracks instead of between them. Under the circumstances the switching crew should have done either more or less than they did, so far as the safety of the decedent was concerned.

We fully concede that Marrs' being drunk did not make him any the less a trespasser when he first went into the yard of the corporation, and his intoxication added no new duty from it to him then. But when its servants actually discovered him, trespasser though he was, they owed him the duty to refrain from injuring him, and this duty was as comprehensive as the helplessness of his condition demanded to insure his safety from injury by them. The fact that his senses were overcome by liquor was demonstrated by what the servants of the corporation actually knew at the time they found him in the yard. It was no longer a question of surmise, but one of positive knowledge; that he was not a tramp awaiting an opportunity to steal a ride they knew from the fact that they had seen him arrive in Lexington as a passenger on the Louisville Southern train, and we think we have a right to assume, from all the evidence in the case concerning Marrs, that his appearance indicated him to be what he really was, an unfortunate man on a spree. The servants of the corporation, after finding him in the yard, could not shut their eyes and close their faculties to what must have been apparent to the most casual observer, and say that, under the circumstances surrounding Marrs, they owed him no duty and could after that treat him as a trespasser; they knew he was intoxicated and in the yard, and having seen him twice before within an hour in a drunken stupor, they had no right to assume that, when left to himself, he would not again sink into a torpor as he had done twice before.

This case comes within the principle of Fagg v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., 111 Ky., 80. In that case the employees of the railroad knew a drunken man had entered a deep cut through which a train was soon expected. They knew that if this train passed while he was in the cut his life would be in peril. With this knowledge, they permitted the train to run into the cut without informing those in charge of the perilous position of the unfortunate man. He was killed, and we held the corporation responsible. The principle in that case is identical with that at bar, although the facts on the surface are somewhat variant. The servants of appellant knew that Marrs was in the yard in a drunken condition; they had seen him asleep in a stupor; they were bound to know that the chances were that as soon as the stimulus of their presence was removed he would again succumb to the benumbing influence of the liquor with which he was intoxicated. This being true, they owed him one of two alternative duties, either to see him safely out of the yard, which common humanity required, or, failing in this, to watch out for him as the engine was moved about in the corporation's business.

The case of Brown's Adm'r v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., 103 Ky., 211, does not support appellant. In that case the servants of the corporation had no right to suppose, after the drunken passenger was removed from the train at London, he would seek the railroad track as a bed. In this case the employees of appellant knew that Marrs was likely to do this, for they had just aroused him up from such a position. Nor is the case of Railroad v. Boswell's Adm'r, 82 Va. R., 933, authority in favor of appellant's claim to a peremptory instruction. In that case the track-walker found the trespasser lying on the railroad track. He accosted him, whereupon the man aroused up on his elbow, and apparently assented, when told to get off the track, as a train would presently be coming along. The corporation's servant did not know that the trespasser was drunk, or in any other way physically incapacitated, the court on this point stating: "There was nothing in the conduct of Boswell which could lead Harrison to suspect that he was drunk or physically disabled. When accosted by Harrison, and told that he must get up and get off the track; that the train was coming presently, he, Boswell, got partly up, leaned on his elbow and assented to the suggestion in such a manner as to convince Harrison that he understood him; and, under these circumstances, Harrison had the right to presume that Boswell would take such measures to protect himself from danger as reasonable persons would be sure to take under such circumstances."

In the case at bar appellant's servants knew Marrs was drunk, and the circumstances surrounding him were such as would lead any reasonably prudent person to believe that he was incapable of caring for himself.

Under these circumstances we think they, after having discovered his perilous condition, owed him the duty of refraining from injuring him by exercising the care for his safety which we have indicated. The trial court correctly overruled appellant's motion for a peremptory instruction, and the instructions given were as favorable to the corporation as it merited.

Perceiving no error in the record prejudicial to appellant's substantial rights the judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY AND GUARANTY CO. v. BLACKLEY' HURST & CO.

(Filed February 28, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Appeals—Practice—It is elementary that on a second appeal the opinion on the first appeal must be treated as the law of the case, and all questions which were then properly before court are as conclusively settled as if each were specifically referred to in the opinion. The pleadings upon the second trial being the same as the first and the evidence substantially the same, the finding of the jury will not be disturbed.

Bodley, Baskin & Flexner for appellant.

Dodd & Dodd for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

The facts of this case are fully stated in the opinion rendered on the former appeal. (United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Blackley, Hurst & Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1271.) In reversing the judgment which had then been rendered in favor of appellees this court, in concluding its opinion and stating the reasons for the reversal, said: "Whether appellee used ordinary care to post himself as to the condition of Barnett's accounts before he made the statement to appellant was a question for the jury. For the same reason we think the jury, under proper instructions, should have been allowed to determine whether the plaintiff prior to the execution of the bond knew that Barnett was engaged in any gambling or speculative business, would have materially enhanced the hazard of the risk assumed by appellant."

On the return of the case to the circuit court it was tried again, and there was again a verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs. The defendant again appeals, insisting that the court should have peremptorily instructed the jury, to find for the defendant; that the court did not properly instruct the jury and that the court excluded proper evidence offered by it. It is elementary that on the second appeal the opinion on the first appeal must be treated as the law of the case, and all questions which were then presented and properly before the court are as conclusively settled, though not referred to in the opinion, as if each was specifically mentioned and considered. The pleadings on the second trial are the same as on the first. The evidence is not substantially different. It is insisted that a peremptory instruction should have been given because C. M. Barnett, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, was engaged in buying tobacco, and this was not disclosed by the plaintiffs in their answers to the questions asked by the defendant at the time of the application for the bond. This precise question was presented by the record on the former appeal, and the court in deciding what instructions should be given the jury in effect determined that a peremptory instruction should not be given.

The court on the second trial instructed the jury pursuant to the opinion of this court above quoted. The error in the instructions now relied on is that the court did not instruct the jury that they should find for the defendant if Barnett was engaged in the tobacco business, and the defendants knew it at the time they made the answers referred to. Instruction 6, which was asked on the former trial and refused, presented this idea, and in reversing the case this court not only did not hold that the instruction should have been given, but the principles set out in the opinion were to the effect that it ought not to have been given. The evidence which it is complained that the court improperly rejected, consisted of proof offered to be made by Thomas S. Dugan, to the effect that if the facts had appeared in the employer's statement, as shown by the proof, he would not have accepted the application. But the proof showed that the application did not pass through his hands, and that he had nothing to do with the acceptance of the application. His statement as to what he would have done if he had known the facts was the mere expression of his opinion, and had no connection with the action which the company took. There have been two verdicts for the plaintiffs, and under all the evidence we are unwilling to disturb the finding of the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

AMERICAN BONDING CO. OF BALTIMORE v. FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF COVINGTON, &c.

(Filed March 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Subrogation—Sureties—This being an action to recover of appellee bank the amount that the agent of an ice company had procured from the bank by fraudulent means, which amount appellant was compelled to pay, a demurrer to the petition was properly sustained. Appellant for a valuable consideration had guaranteed the fidelity and honesty of the agent, and it is not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the ice company as against the bank.

F. M. Tracy for appellant.

S. D. Rouse for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The case grew out of the case of the Champion Ice Manufacturing and Cold Storage Co. v. American Bonding and Trust Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 239. Upon a return of that case to the lower court a judgment was rendered in favor of the ice company against the bonding company for $500, the amount lost by the conduct of the agent who had been guaranteed by the bonding company. Upon the payment of the judgment the bonding company (appellant) then brought this suit against the bank, the appellee, for the amount which it is claimed Weltkamp, the agent, succeeded in appropriating by means of raised checks. The appellant sues the ice company with the bank, and seeks to be subrogated to the rights of the ice company as against the bank.

A demurrer to appellant's petition was interposed, which was sustained, and the petition was dismissed, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted. We deem it unnecessary to pass upon the question as to the liability of the bank to the ice company for the amount lost by reason of the fraudulent conduct of Weltkamp, the agent of the ice company, as we think the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer was correct upon another principle. It appears that the appellant, for a valuable consideration, had guaranteed the fidelity and honesty of the agent, Weitkamp; in other words, had become his surety and had agreed, for this consideration, to pay any losses sustained by reason of the dishonesty of Weitkamp. In view of these facts, we can not understand upon what principle of equity the appellant here is entitled to be subrogated.

In the case of Stewart v. Commonwealth, &c., 104 Ky., 489, the accommodation sureties of a clerk, who had been compelled to refund to the State money fraudulently collected of it by reason of the fraudulent act and forged certificates of the clerk, sought to recover of one Stewart, the person who had received the money from the State as the assignee of the clerk. They claimed that as the Commonwealth had a cause against Stewart for the money wrongfully paid him on these forged certificates, and as they had been compelled to pay this money to the State, that they should be subrogated to the right of the Commonwealth as against Stewart. The court held that they had no such right. The principles enunciated in this case settle the one at bar.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CO., &c. v. AVRITT, &c.

(Filed March 1, 1905.)

Land—Right of way to turnpike company—Erecting telephone line thereon—Compensation to original owner—Additional servitude—Public purpose—Where a right of way has been granted by a land owner for the building of a turnpike thereon, an agreement by the turnpike company to allow telephone poles and wires to be erected thereon being for a public purpose, is not an additional servitude on the land, for which the original owner can maintain an injunction or recover compensation from the telephone company.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh and John McChord for appellants.

Sam'l Avritt for appellees.

Appeal from Marlon Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

The Lebanon and Bradfordsville Turnpike Co. in the year 1855 built a turnpike road from Lebanon to Bradfordsville. For the distance of about half a mile the pike was constructed through the farm of John Avritt. From the time the road was built it was used as a toll road until a few years before this suit was brought, when it was bought by Marlon county and became a free public highway. Before the sale to the county, however, in July, 1895, the Lebanon, Louisville and Lexington Telephone Co. was given the right to build and maintain a telephone line by the turnpike company over the turnpike right of way from Lebanon to Bradfordsville. Under this grant the telephone company in the summer of 1895 built a telephone line from Lebanon to Bradfordsville on the turnpike right of way, and after that operated the line, furnishing telephone service between those points. The Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. succeeded to the rights of the Lebanon, Louisville and Lexington Telephone Co.

In the year 1894, or the year before the telephone line was built, John Avritt died and the farm descended to his widow and children. Two of his children finally purchased the interest of the others, and on April 27, 1903, filed this suit, alleging that the telephone company had entered upon their lands against their consent, and built and maintained a telephone line thereon against their wishes, and within a short time before the filing of the petition, against their protest, had entered upon their lands and stretched an additional wire, and unless prevented by the court would enter upon their lands, set additional poles and string additional wires. They prayed that the defendants be enjoined from doing these things, and that they be compelled to remove the old line erected in the year 1895. The defendants pleaded the facts above stated, alleging that the telephone line was built on the right of way of the turnpike company which had been granted it by John Avritt. They also pleaded that the plaintiffs were residing on the land and knew that the telephone line was being built, but made no objection to the building of the line in 1895, and that a considerable sum of money had been spent in building the line by the defendants on the idea that the plaintiffs acquiesced in their right to build the telephone line. On final hearing the circuit court entered a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, granting them an injunction as prayed in their petition, and the defendants appeal. The only question we deem it necessary to consider on the appeal is whether a telephone line upon a public highway is an additional servitude which gives the original owner of the land, or those claiming under him, a cause of action.

In Lexington & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, it was held by this court that a steam railroad on a public highway is not an additional servitude for which the original owner of the land may bring an action. In Louisville Bagging Manufacturing Co. v. Central Passenger Railway Co., 95 Ky., 50, it was decided that an electric street railway on the streets of a city is not an additional servitude, and in Georgetown and Lexington Traction Co. v. Mulholland, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 578, the same rule was applied to electric railroad running on country highways. (Ashland & Catlettsburg Street Railway Co. v. Faulkner, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 151.)

We are unable to distinguish a telephone line from a steam railway or an electric railway on the public highway. The telephone line is certainly a much less serious burden than either of these. It in no way interferes with the use of the property as a public highway. The use of the land by the telephone company is no less a public service than the use of it by a railroad company. The telephone takes the place of the private messenger. The transmission of messages by telephone is a business of a public character which is conducted under public control in the same manner as the carriage of persons or property. The easement of the public is not limited to the particular methods of use in vogue when the easement is acquired, but includes improved methods which the progress of society finds necessary for business. The public easement in a highway is not confined to the transportation of persons or things in vehicles. The streets of a city may be used for constructing sewers and laying gas or water mains and the like for the public use. There is no sound distinction between urban and rural highways as to the purposes for which they may be used. Public highways are designed as avenues of communication, and a telephone line along a country road is no more an additional servitude than a telephone line along a railroad right of way. No use of the highway can be made which practically subverts its use by the public in the ordinary way, nor may it be used for any purpose not public. The wires of a telephone company are no less immovable than the rails of the railroad, and they are no more a burden to the adjoining property than the rails. The great weight of authority is to the effect that a telephone line on a public highway is not an additional servitude in those State maintaining the Kentucky rule that a railway is not an additional servitude. (Pierce v. Drew, 49 Am. Rep., 7; Julia Building Association v. Bell Telephone Co., 57 Am. Rep., 398; Magee v. Overshiner, 40 L. R. A., 370; Carter v. Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co., 28 L. R. A., 810; Herschfield v. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co., 12 Mont., 103; Southern Bell Telephone Co. v. Frances, 109 Ala., 224; Kirby v. Citizens Telephone Co., South Dakota, 97 Northwestern Rep., 8; Irwin v. Great Southern Telephone Co., 87 La., 63.)

The case of Ward v. Triple State Natural Gas and Oil Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 116, is not in conflict with these views. The highway may be used for public, but not for private purposes. In that case, so far as appears, the company rendered no public service. The highway can not be used for a pipe line by a corporation performing no public service and operating the pipe line only for its private purposes. Such use of the highway is not within the purposes of the grant. We, therefore, conclude that the plaintiffs failed to make out a cause of action, and that their petition should have been dismissed.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment as herein indicated.

MINNIARD v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Criminal law—Beginning of trial—Application for change of venue—Where a petition accompanied by the necessary affidavits were tendered and motion entered for change of venue before the jury was sworn, it was error to overrule the motion on the ground that it came too late because the preparation for trial had been begun. The trial had not begun until the jury was sworn, and, moreover, the state of facts presented authorized the change of venue, and until they were controverted the court did not have the discretion to refuse the application.

B. B. Golden, John B. Minniard, C. M. Horn and Chas. Wooten for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Chas. W. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

The only question deemed necessary to be decided on this appeal is the action of the circuit court in refusing to consider or pass upon appellant's petition for a change of venue. Appellant was put upon his trial two days after the return of the indictment against him. His application for a continuance was refused, and the selection of the jury completed. His counsel stated that they intended applying for a change of the venue of the case, but that owing to the great prestige of the family of the prosecution in that community, and owing to the odium attending defendant therein, he found it difficult to find the persons who would voluntarily make the requisite affidavits, although many citizens had expressed themselves as being of the opinion he could not get a fair and impartial trial in that county at that time; but that, owing to the very great domination of the prosecution which was the basis of the application, they were unwilling to appear as voluntarily siding with appellant in the matter. The jury was not sworn till the following morning. Notice was given the Commonwealth attorney of the application for the change of venue, and on the following morning, before the plea of the defendant had been entered or the jury sworn, a petition, accompanied by sufficient affidavits, was tendered to the court, and the motion entered. The court refused to permit the petition or affidavits to be filed, and refused to entertain the motion because, as the order says, it came too late; that an application for continuance had been overruled and the preparation for the trial had been begun.

We are of opinion this ruling was error. The trial had not begun till the jury was sworn. If the state of affairs existed, as shown in the petition and affidavits, it was evident that the application for change of venue ought to have been granted, and until they were controverted the court had not the discretion to refuse the application. (Greer v. Commonwealth, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 489, 111 Ky., 94.)

The judgment of conviction is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

RUTHERFORD v. ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO., &c.

(Filed March 1, 1905.)

1. Joint action—Concurring negligence—Separable causes—Petition for removal—Conclusion of pleader—Where a joint action for personal injuries was filed against a foreign corporation and three of its resident employees, alleging that the injuries were caused by the joint and concurring negligence of the company and its codefendants, as its agents and employees, in the operation of a railroad train, on which plaintiff was a passenger, a petition by the corporation for removal of the cause to the United States Circuit Court, which alleges that its codefendants were joined with it, for the sole and fraudulent purpose of preventing a removal of the action from the State court, and that all the statements in the petition as to such codefendants are untrue, amounts to nothing more than a conclusion of the pleader, and does not state a single fact from which the court might determine that the cause of action is separable.

2. Jurisdictional facts—In a petition by a nonresident defendant, sued jointly with resident defendants, for the removal of the action from the State court to the United States Circuit Court, a denial therein of the alleged negligence of its codefendants, and an allegation of the purpose of the plaintiff in joining its agents and servants as defendants with it, was for the fraudulent and wrongful purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court, are conclusions of the pleader, and do not state a single jurisdictional fact.

8. Wrongdoers—Liability—Joint and several—It is a well-established rule that for an injury inflicted by two or more wrongdoers an action may be maintained against one or all of them. The liability is joint and several, and the injured party can elect whether he will proceed against one or all of them.

Lee & Hester for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas and Trabue, Doolan & Cox for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant, Sallie A. Rutherford, filed her petition in the Graves Circuit Court against the appellee, Illinois Central Railroad Co., and George F. Mullinix, Tom Hudson, Tom Caulder and C. H. Hendrix, in which she alleged in substance that on or about the 15th day of July, 1904, she bought a ticket and took passage on one of appellee's trains at Fulton, Ky., for her home at Mayfield, Ky.; that she was a passenger upon this train and was entitled to be conveyed to her home with care and safety; that appellee had its codefendants, Mullinix, Hudson, Caulder and Hendrix, its agents, servants and employees, in charge of this train, and that they so negligently managed and operated it as to cause the coach in which she was riding to be suddenly and unnecessarily jerked and bumped, and this was done in such a violent and reckless manner that it threw her violently against a seat and other objects in the coach, thereby injuring her, both externally and internally, wounding and bruising her so that her health has been permanently impaired, for which she prayed judgment for $5,000 against all of the defendants.

All the defendants were duly served with process. The appellee appeared within the proper time, and filed its petition and a bond, and sought a removal of the action to the U. S. Circuit Court. This petition, omitting the formal parts, is as follows: "Your petitioner further alleges and shows that the cause of action attempted to be set up in the plaintiff's petition against it and the other defendants is separable, and is wholly a controversy between citizens of different States, viz., the plaintiff, Sallie A. Rutherford, a citizen and resident of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and your petitioner, the Illinois Central Railroad Co., a citizen and resident of the State of Illinois. Your petitioner further alleges and shows that the allegations in the plaintiff's petition, that she received injuries which were the result of any negligence on the part of the defendants, George F. Mullinix, Tom Hudson, Tom Caulder and C. H. Hendrix, by reason of either of them moving said train or coach in which plaintiff was a passenger, suddenly or roughly, or that the train or coach was so operated by either of them, by negligently pushing, pulling, striking, jarring or jerking the car and coach in which she was a passenger, with such suddenness and violence and in such reckless manner that it threw her down violently, were and are wholly untrue; and she received no injury which was the result of any negligence or carelessness on the part of either of your petitioner's codefendants; and the plaintiff, at the time this action was instituted, knew, or had good reason to believe, that the allegations of her petition, to the effect that her injuries were the result of negligence on the part of your petitioner's codefendants, or either of them, were wholly untrue; and it says that the defendants, George F. Mullinix, Tom Hudson, Tom Caulder and C. H. Hendrix, were joined as defendants in this action for the sole and fraudulent purpose of preventing your petitioner from removing this action from the State court, and for the sole purpose of fraudulently defeating the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court; and your petitioner further alleges that the averments of fact on which the joint liability of your petitioner and its codefendants is asserted are so palpably untrue and unfounded as to make it improbable that the plaintiff could have asserted them in good faith."

Upon the filing of this petition and the bond the court granted appellees' prayer for a removal of the cause, of which action appellant complains. The appellee contends that the action of the lower court was correct, for the reason that it alleged in its petition for removal that appellant's cause of action, stated in her petition, was a separable one. This allegation amounted to nothing more than a conclusion of the pleader. There is not a single fact stated in the petition for removal from which the court might determine as to whether or not the cause of action was a separable one. But, on the contrary, it is shown in the petition of appellant that her cause of action was a joint one against all of the defendants named therein. It is averred by her that appellee's codefendants, as its agents and servants, were in charge of and so negligently operated and managed the train as to cause the injuries complained of.

It is a well-established rule that for an injury inflicted, produced by two or more wrongdoers, an action may be maintained by the person so injured either against one or against all of them. The liability of the wrongdoers is joint and several. The injured party can elect whether he will proceed against one or all of them. While several may be guilty of several and distinct acts, yet if their concurrent effect is to produce an actionable injury, they are all liable therefor. The action, properly speaking, is not to recover for the negligent act or acts, but it is to recover damages for the injury which they produce. (101 Ky., 77.)

The appellee also contends that the removal of the cause by the lower court was correct, for the reason that it denied, in its petition for removal, the negligence of its codefendants, as charged in her petition, and that it also alleged that her purpose in joining its agents and servants as defendants with it was for the fraudulent and wrongful purpose of defeating the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court. These allegations are likewise mere conclusions of the pleader, and do not contain a single jurisdictional fact. As well might the appellant, on the other hand, say that these allegations and conclusions were stated for the sole purpose of ousting the State courts of jurisdiction. In the case of I. C. R. R. Co. v. Jones, Adm'r, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 81, in discussing the unseemly conflict between State and Federal jurisdictions, the court said: "To avoid these, the congress has wisely made the condition of the Federal court's jurisdiction to depend upon the filing in the State court in due time of a petition, in which, according to the unbroken current of the decisions of the Federal courts construing the act, all necessary facts to show prima facie a right in the petitioner for the removal must be set out, not as conclusions of law; or such necessary facts must affirmatively and explicitly appear elsewhere in the record when the application to the State court is made."

It was further determined in that case that it was the duty of the judge of the State court to determine, from the petition and record, whether or not there was presented a Federal case. The question as to the purpose of one party to avoid the Federal court, or the other to avoid the State court, is immaterial. (Winston's Adm'r v. I. C. R. R. Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1283; C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Dixon's Adm'r, 179 U. S., 131; Powers v. C. & O. R. R. Co., 169 U. S., 92.)

Appellee contends that, by reason of its denial of the negligence of its codefendants, its employes, it was the sole and real defendant, and that its codefendants were improperly made parties thereto. We are unable to accept this. The averments in a petition for a removal of a cause of action from a State to a Federal court must be restricted to matters of fact touching the jurisdiction of the court, and all allegations concerning the merits of the case are superfluous and immaterial. The merits of the case are exclusively within the province of the jury trying the case in the court having jurisdiction thereof. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Wanglin, 132 U. S., 599; Blackburn v. Portland F. & M. Co., 175 U. S., 281; Bushnell v. Cooke, 148 U. S., 682; I. C. R. R. Co. v. Jones, Adm'r, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 31.)

We are of the opinion that there are not sufficient facts alleged in the petition for removal or appearing in the record which would deprive the State court of jurisdiction to try this case.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Whole court sitting.

MANION v. MANION.

(Filed March 1, 1905.)

1. Complicated accounts—Settlement—Transfer to equity—In an action between parties embracing about 500 items in the petition, the most of which are controverted and a counterclaim filed involving the settlement of mutual complicated accounts of great detail, it was proper for the court, on motion of defendant, to transfer the case to the equity docket and refer it to the commissioner for settlement.

2. Constitution—Trial by jury—Section 7 of the Constitution, providing "that the ancient mode of trial by jury is to be held sacred and the right thereof to remain inviolate," was not intended to be so strictly construed as to prevent the due and proper administration of justice in cases of complicated accounts when the remedy at law was deemed inadequate, so that a jury could not arrive with accuracy upon the condition of the account between the parties.

3. Variance—Party misled—In the settlement of complicated accounts a variance between the pleading and proof of certain items is not material where the form of the plea is not objected to unless the party complaining was misled thereby to his prejudice.

4. Transcript—Cost—Where, in an equitable action, appellant ordered only a partial transcript of the record, the appellee not knowing what grounds of reversal would be relied on, had the right to have the entire record copied, and should not be taxed with the cost of the additional record.

Ward & Ward and Montgomery Merritt for appellant.

Yeaman & Yeaman for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant, John C. Manion, began this action in the Henderson Circuit Court by a petition in ordinary, in which he alleged that the plaintiff was indebted to him in the sum of $927.07 for balance of money advanced, paid and furnished to and for him and for his use and benefit at his special instance and request, and for labor and services performed for him at his like request, particulars of which were set out in an itemized account filed with the petition, and it was alleged that each item of the account was just and reasonable. The itemized account which was filed with the petition covers seventeen pages of the transcript and embraces something like five hundred items. The defendant filed an answer in which he denied that he bought of the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff furnished to or for him at his instance or request, any of the goods, wares or merchandise charged on the account sued on, except as therein stated, and he denied that he ever had of the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff ever furnished to or for him, or that the defendant ever in any way got the benefit of any of ninety-four items of the account which were set out in the answer. Among other things the plaintiff claimed services for six months at $100 a month. The defendant denied that the plaintiff rendered services for more than five months, and alleged that his services were rendered under an agreement that he was to pay therefor what the services were worth, and that they were not worth over $25 a month. The defendant also alleged that the plaintiff had, while in his employ, put on the defendant's pay roll and paid out of the defendant's money two persons who were not in the defendant's service, amounting to $199.55. He also alleged that the plaintiff was employed to keep time books and to take care of the feed which the defendant provided for his teams, which was placed in plaintiff's keeping, and that he wasted the feed to the amount of $500. He also alleged that the plaintiff sold whisky to his employes without license, and that the whisky so sold was charged to him on the account. Finally, he alleged that he had paid the plaintiff, and more than paid him for all the goods, wares, merchandise or cash he ever had of the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff ever used for him and for all the services he ever rendered him. The plaintiff, by reply, controverted the affirmative allegations of the answer. The defendant entered a motion to transfer the case to the equity docket, and refer it to the master commissioner to audit the accounts between the parties. The plaintiff objected to the motion, but the court being of opinion that a transfer was necessary because of the peculiar questions involved, and because the case involved accounts so complicated and such great detail of facts as to render it impracticable for a jury to intelligently try the case, the motion was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted. The commissioner to whom the case was referred reported in favor of the defendant. Numerous exceptions were filed to his report, but the court overruled the exceptions and entered judgment in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals, insisting that the court erred in denying him a jury trial.

In O'Connor & McCulloch v. Henderson Bridge Co., 95 Ky., 683, this court held that as the ancient mode of trial by jury is by section 7 of the Constitution to be held sacred and the right thereof remain inviolate, subject to such modifications as may be authorized by the Constitution, section 10 of the Civil Code of Practice, which provides for the transfer of an action from the ordinary to the equity docket because of the peculiar questions involved, or because it involves accounts so complicated or such great detail of facts as to render it impracticable for a jury to intelligently try the case, adds nothing to the authority of the court to try an action in equity. But it was held in that case that section 7 of the Constitution was not intended to be so strictly construed as to prevent in any case the due and proper administration of justice; that courts of equity have for a long time necessarily had jurisdiction in all cases of mutual accounts upon the ground of the inadequacy of the remedy at law; that in a complicated account a court of law would be incompetent to examine it before a jury with the necessary accuracy, and that courts of equity constantly act by taking cognizance of matters which, though cognizable at law, are so involved with complex accounts that they can not properly be tried at law. In that case it was also said as follows: "This court has uniformly held that a court of equity has concurrent jurisdiction on matters of account, and 'should be exercised when otherwise there may be serious doubt as to the true state of the accounts, or difficulty in satisfactorily adjusting them, and safely striking a balance.'"

In City of Covington v. Limerick, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 880; Sallee's Adm'r v. Eades, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 109, and Brashears v. Letcher County Court, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1763, the rule announced in the case cited was followed and the transfer of the action from the ordinary to the equity docket was upheld. In the case before us there were mutual accounts or claims. It was incumbent on the plaintiff as agent of the defendant to render to him an account of his stewardship, and of such settlements courts of equity have always had jurisdiction. In none of the cases cited was there a greater complication of accounts than in the case before us. In none of them was it more evident that it was impracticable for a jury to intelligently try the case. For a jury to have attempted to pass on the disputed items of the account between the parties would have been not to arrive with any accuracy at the condition of the account, but to have made a rough guess at it. We, therefore, conclude that the court properly transferred the action to the equity docket, and referred it to his commissioner to make a settlement of the accounts.

The defendant, moreover, testified that certain items of the account were paid by the plaintiff out of money which he had furnished him for that purpose. It is insisted that this proof is incompetent as there was no plea to this effect. The answer of the defendant denied that the plaintiff furnished him these items, or any part of them. He also pleaded affirmatively that he had paid the plaintiff all the money which he furnished for him. We can not see how under these allegations, the form of which was not objected to, the plaintiff could have been misled. Both the parties took a large amount of proof, and it in fact appears from the record that they went into the case on its merits and that the plaintiff was not in fact misled, but took proof on all the questions involved. It is provided in the Code that the variance shall not be material unless the party complaining was misled thereby to his prejudice. We fail to see that there was any variance here, and clearly it does not appear that the plaintiff was misled to his prejudice. The plaintiff ordered for the appeal a partial transcript of the record, and the defendant then ordered the clerk to copy the remainder of it so as to make a complete transcript. The appellant has entered a motion that the cost of this additional record shall not be taxed. But either party was entitled to have a complete transcript of the record for the appeal. Appellant was not compelled to file an assignment of errors, and, therefore, the appellee not knowing what ground of reversal might be relied on, had the right to have the entire record copied so as to take no chances. The motion that appellee shall be taxed with the cost of the additional record is overruled. On the merits of the case we see no reason for disturbing the chancellor's judgment confirming the report of the commissioner.

Judgment affirmed.

CHENAULT v. GRAVITT.

(Filed March 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Passways—Adverse use for fifteen years—Matter of right—Injunction—Where the weight of the evidence shows that appellant and his vendors have had the use of a passway over an adjoining tract of land as a matter of right adversely to the claimant of the land and all others, continuously for more than fifteen years, he is entitled to a mandatory injunction for the removal of all obstructions to his free use thereof.

2. Change in part by owner—A temporary or even permanent change in a part of a passway by the owner of the land over which it runs without the consent of the one entitled to its use, or with the understanding that he is to continue its use as changed, gives him the same right to its use as changed as he had before the change.

3. Convenience—Necessity—In an action for the obstruction of a passway claimed as a matter of right by prescription, the question of the convenience or necessity thereof to the plaintiff can not be considered, but only its adverse use as an easement for more than fifteen years.

Pendleton & Bush for appellant.

Leland Hathaway for appellee.

Appeal from Clark Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant is the owner of sixty-seven acres of land in Clark county, seven acres of which he purchased from Lewis Haggard about twenty-nine years ago, and the remainder from Rodney Haggard about ten years later. He lived on the seven-acre tract until he erected a few years ago, and removed to, a more commodious dwelling house upon the parcel of land last purchased by him, where he still resides.

His land adjoins a 200-acre tract owned and occupied by appellee, and this suit was brought by him to recover of appellee damages for obstructing and closing a passway through and over his land from appellant's residence to a public highway, whereby appellant's use of the same has been prevented. The relief asked included a prayer for a mandatory injunction to compel appellee to remove all obstructions from the passway. The answer merely traversed the material allegations of the petition as amended, and upon the issues thus made, and proof taken by the parties, the chancellor held that appellant was not entitled to the relief sought, consequently his petition was dismissed at his cost, and of that judgment he now complains. Appellant claims the passway by prescriptive right, it being his contention that he and his vendors, the Haggards, have had the free and uninterrupted use thereof adversely to appellee, and those under whom he claims title, for more than fifteen years continuously before the closing of the passway by appellee. The passway runs from a point almost in front of appellant's home in a practically straight line over appellee's land along a ridge, down a hill and out to the public road, passing near and to the left of the latter's house, not far from the public road.

A large number of witnesses were introduced by each party, and the testimony was somewhat conflicting, but the weight of it conduced to prove that the land upon which appellee now resides was owned and occupied by Ivan Henry from 1855 to 1878, at which time he sold and conveyed it to one Ecton, who lived upon it two years, and then resold and conveyed it to Ivan Henry and his son, John Henry. They owned it jointly until 1887, when by deed from his father the son became the owner of the father's undivided half, and he (John Henry) continued the owner of the whole until 1895, and it was then sold under execution and purchased by the appellee, who shortly thereafter moved upon and took possession of it under a deed from the sheriff of the county. The appellant testified that when he purchased his land of the Haggards they informed him of the existence of the passway over the land of appellee, and that he was entitled to the use of it, and that one of them, Lewis Haggard, pointed it out to him. The record discloses that Judge Rodney Haggard, appellant's other vendor, was his attorney in this case, and that his name appears to the petition as such, though his death occurred before the trial.

Ivan Henry is dead, but his son, John Henry, and grandson, James Henry, testified that the passway always ran as appellant now claims it to be, and that Ivan Henry, John Henry and Ecton during their ownership respectively of appellee's land, which covered altogether a period of nearly fifty years, always recognized the right of the Haggards and appellant, as their vendee, to the use and enjoyment of the passway in question. The witnesses named were corroborated by Wood Ecton, son of the former owner of appellant's land, Oliver, Parker and others. Indeed it appears from the evidence that appellee himself recognized, and did not interfere with, appellant's right to the use of the passway for about six years after he became the owner of the land over which it runs. It also appears that there has been all the time in the fence dividing appellant's land from that of appellee, draw bars, or a "slip gap," at that end of the passway, through which appellant, his family and others had access to the passway on appellee's land, and that a gate was, until about the time of the bringing of this suit, maintained on appellee's land at the other end of the passway through which to reach the public road.

It was admitted by appellee and his witnesses that appellant and others were in the habit for years of passing over his land, but claimed by him and some of them that the passway most generally used was not that now claimed by appellant, but one that ran to the left of and some distance from the one in controversy. It is true there appears to have been such a passway that was occasionally used by pedestrians and horsemen, but it ran for much of the distance through a ravine in the bed of a branch, and up a steep hill before reaching appellant's land, and it was well nigh impassible for horsemen, and wholly so for vehicles.

It was further contended by appellee and testified by some of his witnesses that at one time during Ivan Henry's occupancy of the land a field on the ridge through which the passway as claimed by appellant runs was enclosed by a fence and cultivated in corn. This was admitted by appellant, but both he and the Henrys (John and James) stated that the field was closed and cultivated with his consent, and one year it was cultivated by appellant himself, but that while it was in cultivation appellant was given by Ivan Henry a temporary road around the field, and when the field was no longer in cultivation he resumed the use of the old passway through it. A temporary or even permanent change in part of a passway by the owner of the land over which it runs, if made without the consent of one entitled to its use, or with the understanding that he is to continue its use as changed, gives him the same right to the use of such passway as changed that he had to it as formerly located.

It is also insisted for appellee that as appellant has a roadway over his own land to the public road in the rear of his farm, known as the "Indian creek" road, by which he can reach his church, the mill and county seat, he should be excluded from the use of the passway over his land. It appears that appellant's land lies between the Indian creek road, and what is called the "New Cut road," and that the passway claimed by him over appellee's land leads to the "New Cut road." We do not think it material which of the two public roads is the better or more convenient for appellant to travel.

The question of convenience or inconvenience is not before us for consideration, as the passway in controversy is not claimed by appellant upon the ground of necessity or convenience, but by adverse use, as an easement for more than fifteen years, and we are of opinion that the weight of the evidence shows him to be entitled to it upon that ground.

In other words, we think appellant has sufficiently shown by testimony of witnesses, who were in a better position to know of the existence of the passway and of the appellant and his vendor's use of it than were the witnesses of appellee, that he and those under whom he claims have had the use and enjoyment of the passway as a matter of right, and adversely to appellee, his vendors and all others, for nearly fifty, and certainly more than fifteen, years, continuously.

In O'Daniel v. O'Daniel, 88 Ky., 185, this court said: "It was not necessary for the plaintiff to show by positive testimony that he had claimed this use as a matter of right, and so proclaimed to his neighbors, the burden being on the defendant after such a long use of his premises to show that the use was merely permissive. Under our statute of limitation the continued use of a passway over another's land for fifteen years unexplained creates the presumption that the use he did claim was adverse." (Wilkins v. Barner, 79 Ky., 323; Bowen v. Cooper, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2065; Anderson v. Southworth, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 776.)

Being of opinion that the conclusion reached by the chancellor is not supported by the weight of the evidence, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a decree adjudging appellant entitled to the passway claimed by him, and granting a mandatory injunction requiring appellee to remove all obstructions to his free use of same and for such other proceedings as may be consistent with the opinion.

SMITH v. BANK OF LEWISPORT.

(Filed March 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Fraud—Purchasing corporation stock—In this action upon a note executed by appellant for shares of stock in a chair company, in which plaintiff alleges fraud and misrepresentation in its purchase, evidence examined, and Held—That there was neither fraud nor misrepresentation in said sale.

2. Affirmance—Even if there had been misrepresentation in the sale, the fact that appellant was elected a director and president of the chair company, and after knowing all about its financial condition, continued to pay the interest on the note executed therefor, was an acquiescence in, and an affirmance of, the purchase.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney and W. T. Morrison for appellant.

G. D. Chambers for appellee.

Appeal from Hancock Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee, Bank of Lewisport, sued the appellant, H. G. Smith, in the court below upon a note of $699.50, of date March 4, 1901, due four months after date, with interest from date.

The answer of appellant set up the defense that the note sued on was executed in payment of thirty-two shares of the capital stock of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co. of the face value of $25 per share, which it was averred one J. M. Combs assigned to appellant at the time of the execution of the note; that appellant was induced to purchase the stock and execute the note therefor by the alleged false and fraudulent representations of T. B. Pell, the president of the appellee bank, and B. H. Poindexter, its cashier, and also president of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co., in regard to the financial condition and prospects of success of the chair company. The alleged false representations were that the indebtedness of the chair company was about $8,000, and that its property and assets were of the value of about $6,000; that the chair company had shortly theretofore made a contract with the Evansville Furniture Co., whereby the furniture company agreed to purchase the output of the chair company for a period of one year, at prices that would enable the chair company to realize a profit of $1.85 for each dozen chairs furnished under the contract, or $27 per day, which would enable the chair company to pay all its indebtedness within six months, and justify the directors in declaring a large dividend to the stockholders by the end of the year.

It was further averred in the answer that Pell and Poindexter also represented at the time of the execution of the note that the thirty-two shares of stock in the chair company was worth its par value or more, and that the capacity of the company was twenty dozen chairs per day; that each and all of these representations were untrue, and the property and effects of the chair company were not in fact worth over $1,000, and its indebtedness was $4,000, or more; that no such contract as was represented had been made between the chair company and the Evansville Furniture Co., and that the thirty-two shares of stock for which the note was executed by appellant were then, and are now, worthless, for which reason the note given therefor by appellant was without consideration and void, and the court was asked to cancel it, and adjudge a rescission of the contract.

A demurrer was filed by appellee to the answer, which the court overruled. Appellee thereupon filed a reply, containing a specific denial of the material averments of the answer, and in addition alleging that the thirty-two shares of capital stock owned by the appellant were purchased by him from J. M. Combs, and paid for by appellant with the note sued on, which he executed to appellee for a note of the same amount it held against Combs, secured by the thirty-two shares of stock that Combs sold and assigned appellant, and that appellant's note was accepted by appellee in satisfaction of that of Combs, and the thirty-two shares of stock were upon Combs' written order delivered by appellee to appellant when it accepted his note in lieu of that of Combs; that at the same time the thirty-two shares were transferred upon the books of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co. to appellant, the old certificate was cancelled, and a new one issued by the officers of the chair company to appellant.

The reply contained the further averment that appellant inquired of B. H. Poindexter, appellee's cashier and president of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co., about the value of the stock and condition of the company, and the latter informed him before his purchase from Combs of the thirty-two shares of stock that he (Poindexter) could not give him any definite or accurate information of the condition of the chair company, but that its liabilities at the time amounted to $3,000 or $3,500, and that the plant and its other property had cost about $5,000; that it had some money owing to it, and with proper management he believed the company would succeed and its capital stock become profitable, and that he had been informed by the manager of the chair company that a contract had been made with the Evansville Furniture Co., whereby the latter company had agreed to buy the output of the chair company for a period of one year, from which the chair company would derive a profit of about $1 per dozen for the chairs it might make and furnish the furniture company. The reply also averred that appellant was, after his purchase of the stock in question, elected a director and the president of the chair company, at which election he was present and voted his stock; that he immediately assumed the active management of the affairs of the company as its president, and continued as its president and manager as long as the company maintained its corporate existence, and that by his acceptance of the directorship in and presidency of the company appellant ratified his contract of purchase of said stock, and by reason thereof was estopped to deny his liability upon the note given therefor. The chancellor upon the issues and proof presented by the record held the defense relied on insufficient to defeat a recovery upon the note, hence the appellee was given judgment against the appellant for the amount sued for. We think the appellant's own testimony establishes the fact that he purchased the stock of Combs. It was to the effect that he met Combs on the train some weeks before the contract of sale was made, and was asked by him as to the prospects of the chair company, and Combs proposed to sell him the thirty-two shares of stock. Appellant told Combs the factory was running all the time and seemed to be in a flourishing condition, but declined at that time to buy the stock. Soon after the meeting between Combs and appellant the latter received a letter from Combs, again proposing to sell his stock for the amount of the note held by the appellee and an account of $84 he was owing Pell Bros., and after making inquiries, as he claimed, of Poindexter and Pell, and satisfying himself as to the value of the stock, appellant wrote Combs accepting his proposition of sale. Combs thereupon gave appellant an order in writing, which directed Poindexter, as president of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co., to transfer to appellant his stock therein, upon the latter's assuming the payment of his note to the bank and the small account to Pell Bros.

Poindexter filed the written order from Combs with his deposition, in which he testified that he transferred the stock to appellant as directed by the order, and that as cashier of the bank he accepted appellant's note in lieu of that of Combs, as had been arranged between appellant and Combs, and surrendered to Combs the old note. Appellant in his deposition admits in effect that the matter was arranged as testified by Poindexter, and there was no evidence that Poindexter, or any other officer of the bank, had anything to do with negotiating the sale of the stock further than what was done by Poindexter in making the transfer of the stock and accepting the note of appellant. But if it be conceded that the sale of the stock was made by the bank, we are unable to see that appellant would be in any better attitude to assail the transaction, as his claim that there was fraud in the sale to him of the stock is not, in our opinion, sustained by the evidence.

As to the alleged false representations upon the part of Poindexter and Pell, appellant himself testified that Poindexter, in response to his inquiries about the affairs of the chair company, said he thought the "stock was good;" that the indebtedness of the company was about $3,000, though Poindexter did not profess to state the amount precisely; that he also told him that the property and assets of the company would amount in value to $6,000, and that it had a contract with the Evansville Furniture Co., under which that company was to take the entire output of the chair company for a year, at a price that would give the company a profit of $1 per dozen chairs, and that the capacity of the chair company's plant was twenty dozen chairs per day. Appellant admitted, however, that he did not believe Poindexter had intentionally made a false statement to him. He further admitted upon cross-examination that Poindexter might in the same conversation have informed him that P. Best, the manager of the chair company, had told him (Poindexter) that he had made such a contract with the Evansville Furniture Co. as Poindexter mentioned. The conversation between appellant, Pell and Best, testified to by the former, seemed to have occurred upon a different and perhaps a later occasion, but before his purchase of the stock. Appellant upon entering the bank found Poindexter, Pell and Best talking about the affairs of the chair company. He said that he then inquired about the financial condition and prospects of the company, and they "figured" its property and assets at $6,000, but said it cost a good deal less, and also figured that the company, under its contract with the Evansville Furniture Co., would be able to pay all its indebtedness within six months, and that Best, the manager, made a statement of the cost of manufacturing chairs, and the profit thereon, and announced the result to be a profit of $20 a day.

It does not appear from the deposition of appellant that he ever told Pell of his purpose to buy of Combs his stock, or that either Pell or Best knew at the time of the conversation referred to that he had such purpose. While appellant testified that he had no knowledge of the affairs of the chair company except what he learned from Poindexter, Pell and Best, yet an answer which he made to the following question would indicate that he had some information from other sources:

"Q. Now, Mr. Smith, I will ask you to state whether you knew anything about the financial condition of the chair company and its prospects of business at the time Mr. Combs offered to sell you his stock."

"A. Well, I knew nothing, but I gathered from the general talk around here that it was doing well, or very well. They were running all the time, and had been running for some time. I don't know just how long, month or two, or maybe longer."

The force of this statement is realized when we find it disclosed by the record that the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co.'s plant is located in the town of Lewisport, and that appellant lives in that community. His opportunities, therefore, for obtaining information of the work and financial condition of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co. at the time of his purchase of the stock were equal to those of other residents of the neighborhood unconnected with the company. There was some conflict between the testimony of appellant and that of Poindexter, Pell and Best; that of Poindexter was to the effect that he informed appellant the liabilities of the chair company amounted to about $3,000 or $3,500, and that the plant and its assets invoiced from $5,000 to $6,000; but that he also told appellant that he had made no examination of the books, and did not pretend to give accurate statements, and that he never said to appellant that the stock was worth par, or any definite amount. Poindexter further testified that in the same conversation he told appellant that his statement as to the contract between the chair company and the Evansville Furniture Co. was based upon what had been reported to him by Best, the manager of the chair company. Poindexter also testified that the conversation between Pell and Best occurred in the rear of the bank; that he was not present a part of the time; did not hear all that was said, and that he then made no representations at all about the affairs of the chair company. Pell and Best admitted that while they were in the bank, in a conversation about the affairs of the chair company, and making estimates as to its business and probable profits, appellant came where they were and engaged in conversation, in the course of which they gave him the benefit of their estimates, but did not do so with the purpose of inducing him to buy the stock of Combs, and did not then know that he was negotiating for, or contemplating buying it. Pell was president of the appellee bank and a stockholder in the chair company, but was never a member of its board of directors.

Under the circumstances attending the conversation between appellant and Poindexter, and the later one between him, Pell and Best, there is no ground for the contention that he was deceived by anything they, or any of them, said, and certainly it can not fairly be claimed that they intended to mislead or deceive him. Even if Poindexter and Pell, or either of them, could be regarded as the agents of the appellee bank, or of Combs, to sell the stock, the evidence would not justify the conclusion that they misrepresented the financial condition or prospects of the chair company to appellant, or that he was deceived by what they said, or thereby induced to purchase the stock in question.

"It is likewise the experience of mankind that sellers use expressions of commendation and praise concerning the article being sold, and particularly as to what can be done with it. Where such commendatory laudations do not amount to knowingly misstating some fact not patent to the observer, or to the concealment of some latent infirmity, at the same time inducing the buyer to believe that it does not exist, such action does not make the seller liable for deceit." * * * (German National Bank's Receiver v. Nagel, &c., 26 Ky. Law Rep., 748; Marshall v. Peck, 1 Dana, 609; Perkins, Adm'r v. Embry, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1990; Beach Modern Law of Contracts, sections 1436-1439)

The evidence discloses the fact that Poindexter's statements to appellant as to the financial condition of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co., though made from memory and upon information from others, was approximately correct. This is shown by the deposition of S. T. McGill, who was secretary of the chair company March 4, 1901, the date of appellant's purchase of the stock from Combs. His testimony was based upon the showing made by the books of the company, from which it appeared that its assets at that time were $5,809.35, and its liabilities amounted to $3,610.80, and McGill was corroborated by R. B. Prentiss, who succeeded him as secretary of the company.

We also think the weight of the evidence is to the effect that there was a bona fide contract between the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co. and the Evansville Furniture Co., as stated by Poindexter to appellant. The only witnesses as to that contract were Peter Best, the manager of the chair company, and Gus Nonweiler, superintendent of the Evansville Furniture Co. The former testified that the contract was made between the companies, and that by its terms the Evansville company was to take the output of the chair company for one year at prices that would allow the latter company a profit of $1.35 per dozen chairs. The contract does not seem to have been reduced to writing, and was denied by Nonweiler, who, however, admitted that he had made some sort of a contract with the manager of the chair company, without disclosing what it was. In short, he proved to be an unwilling and unsatisfactory witness. He testified that he ordered of the chair company after Best became its manager only two small lots of chairs, fifteen dozen to the lot, and that they were so bad he refused to take them. Whereas, the fact was, as shown by a statement from the books of the chair company filed with the deposition of McGill, that he received of the chair company after Best took control $1,857.70 worth of chairs in four months.

Nonweiler was required to file with his deposition several letters received by the chair company from the Evansville Furniture Co., which clearly sustain the testimony of Best that there was such a contract as claimed. Best, at the time of giving his deposition, occupied the position of a disinterested witness, as he was not in the employ or interested in the business of the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co., but Nonweiler at the time of deposing was still superintendent of the Evansville Furniture Co., and as that company's violation of its contract with the Kentucky Chair Manufacturing Co. seems to have largely contributed to the financial disaster that befell the latter company, he will probably become involved in such liability as may be fastened upon his company growing out of its breach of the contract. We think, therefore, that the chancellor's conclusion, that there was such a contract between the two companies as claimed by Best was authorized by the evidence. So if Polidexter represented to appellant before his purchase of Combs' stock, as claimed by the latter, that there was such a contract between the companies, the statement was not a misrepresentation, but the truth.

We are unable to understand why appellant did not sooner complain of the alleged fraud which he says was practiced upon him in the sale of the Combs stock. He testified that in July, 1901, about four months after his purchase of the stock, he discovered that the chair factory was not running, and upon inquiry he learned that it was overstocked with chairs because the Evansville Furniture Co. had repudiated its contract. Yet after receiving this information, he twice paid the interest on his note to the appellee bank without complaint, and still later attended a meeting of the stockholders of the chair company, participated in the election of directors which was then held, was himself elected a director, and by the board of directors was also elected president of the company. In fact, from the time of his election as director and president, he was in charge of the factory, its property and assets, and managed its affairs until it finally went out of business.

In Beach's Modern Law of Contracts, volume 1, section 812, it is said: "The rule is well settled in equity that after knowledge of the fraud, the party must, within a reasonable time, make an election as to whether he will affirm the trade, notwithstanding the fraud, or offer to restore the property and demand the return of his purchase money; if after the knowledge of the facts which entitle him to rescind he deal with the property as owner, this is evidence of his acquiescence and affirmance of the contract."

Under the rule supra it is evident that the chancellor could not have adjudged a rescission of the contract, and, besides, Combs, the person of whom appellant purchased the stock, was not before the court, nor a party to the action, and there was never an offer to return to him the stock, or to return his note with the stock as collateral security to the bank. But independently of this question, we are satisfied from the evidence that there was neither fraud nor misrepresentation in anything that was said by Poindexter, Pell or Best to appellant at the time of his purchase of the Combs stock in regard to the financial conditions and prospects of the chair company. The views herein expressed being conclusive of the correctness of the judgment appealed from, it is unnecessary to notice other questions presented by counsel.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

SUTTON'S ADM'R v. WOOD, &c.

(Filed March 1, 1905.)

1. Druggists—Negligence—Selling poison—Action for causing death—Pleading statute—In an action by the administrator against druggists for causing the death of his intestate by selling her strychnine for morphine, and which was administered to her by her nurse, without the knowledge of either herself or nurse that it was strychnine, it was error in the court to strike out of the petition the averment that the defendant, Mudd, who sold and delivered the strychnine, "wrapped it in a paper without any mark or label on the outside of the package, designating the name of the poison contained therein, or the name of any antidote therefor; that at the time he, Mudd, was not a registered pharmacist, nor did he have a certificate of registration from the Kentucky State Board of Pharmacists authorizing him to sell or dispense drugs, medicines or poisons, nor was he at the time legally authorized by law to sell or dispense drugs, medicines or poisons; that at said time defendant Mudd did not make any inquiry as to the purpose for which said strychnine was to be used, nor did he satisfy himself that said poison was to be used for legitimate purposes."

2. Statutory regulation—Failure to observe—Per se negligence—The failure to observe a statutory regulation in the sale of poisonous drugs is per se a neglect of duty as well as neglect of care, and, where special damage flows from it, there exists, prima facie, a case of actionable negligence, and it is, therefore, a material and appropriate averment in setting out a cause of action to have charged a specific breach of the statute, although defendants may have been otherwise negligent in the transaction so as to have been liable to the plaintiff therefor.

3. Improper joinder—Striking out—Election—In an action by an administrator against druggists for causing the death of his intestate by selling her strychnine for morphine, it was error in the court to strike from the petition an allegation that "plaintiff's intestate was caused to suffer intense pain and anguish in consequence of having had the strychnine given to her." The proper practice was, by motion, to require the plaintiff to elect whether he would prosecute his action for his "intestate's death" or for her "pain and suffering."

4. Instructions—Contributory negligence—Where death is caused by the negligent sale by a druggist of strychnine for morphine, which was negligently administered to the deceased by her nurse, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that "if they believe from the evidence that the decedent or her agents, or servants acting for or attending on her, negligently failed to open the package (containing the strychnine), or negligently failed to look at the label thereof, or negligently failed to discover the nature and warning of said label, or negligently failed to examine the character of the drug purchased and administered to the decedent, then, in law, the decedent is chargeable with contributory negligence, and in that event the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find."

5. Negligence of nurse—Concurring negligence of defendants—If decedent herself was so negligent in the matter, but for which the injury to her would not have occurred, her estate ought not to recover, under the rule of contributory negligence prevailing in this State, but the fact that her nurse or attendant was negligent in administering the strychnine to her, will not excuse the concurrent negligence of the druggists in furnishing the drug whereby the wrong drug was provided. Both the servant and the druggists in such case are joint tort feorsors, and both liable in damages.

6. Proper instructions—The jury should have been instructed that if the defendant, Mudd, who was not a licensed pharmacist, sold to Allen Sutton, for his mother, strychnine, in quantity of five grains or more, without inquiring the purpose for which it was intended, and without entering in a book kept for that purpose the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold, and the purpose for which it was intended, and that Nannie Sutton came to her death by reason of such failure, if any there was, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find.

7. Care in furnishing poison—A druggist and his customer are not under the same degree of care in the furnishing and taking of poison. The latter's duty is to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, while the former is required to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of the public dealing with him.

W. C. McChord, John W. Lewis and W. D. Claybrook for appellant.

I. H. Thurman and J. W. S. Clemments for appellees.

Appeal from Washington Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellees were druggists at Springfield. On of their firm, appellee Mudd, was not a registered pharmacist, nor did he know anything about the mixing of drugs, or technically of their nature and qualities.

Mrs. Sutton, through her son, bought of appellees, so the petition charges, a bottle of morphine for medicinal purposes. But instead of delivering morphine, it is claimed appellee Mudd wrapped up and handed young Sutton a bottle of strychnine. Some days later Mrs. Sutton, who was ill and had been taking morphine under the prescription of a physician, called on her daughter, who was acting as her nurse, to give her a dose of the morphine. Without unwrapping the bottle, as is claimed, the young woman removed the stopper and administered what she supposed was morphine, giving of the powder an equivalent of the ordinary dose that had been prescribed. In the course of an hour Mrs. Sutton was dead, having in the meantime suffered horrible agony, from the effect of strychnine poisoning. It was not discovered till after her burial that she had been given the wrong drug.

This suit, brought by her administrator against the druggists, charges that they carelessly, and through gross negligence, sold and furnished to decedent the wrong drug, the strychnine, without taking any of the precautions required of them by the statute, in consequence of which the strychnine came to be administered to her, causing her great physical pain and suffering and destroying her life. The circuit court struck out of the petition certain matter alleged, of which appellant complains. After alleging the facts set out above, and stating that appellees delivered to intestate's son a package containing one-eighth of an ounce, an unusual quantity of strychnine, the petition continued: * * * "Wrapped in a paper without any mark or label on the outside of said package designating the name of the poison contained therein, or the name of any antidote for such poison; that at the time said strychnine was so sold and delivered by defendant, Herman Mudd, he was not a registered pharmacist, nor did he have a certificate of registration from the Kentucky State Board of Pharmacists authorizing him to sell or dispense drugs, medicines or poisons as authorized by law, nor was he at the time legally authorized to sell or dispense drugs, medicines or poisons. Plaintiff says that at said time defendant Mudd did not make any inquiry as to the purpose for which said strychnine was to be used, nor did he satisfy himself that such poison was to be used for legitimate purposes."

The averment just quoted was stricken out of the petition on motion of defendants and over the plaintiff's objection. The basis of the court's ruling was doubtless that the rejected matter was evidential merely, and not properly pleadable. It was supposed that the averment of negligence covered the particular failures specifically set forth, if indeed the court deemed them as relevant at all. Whether the stricken matter was relevant depends on whether they show a cause of action, taken in connection with the other averments of the petition.

Section 2630, Kentucky Statutes, is as follows: "No person shall sell at retail any poisons, except as herein provided, without affixing to the bottle, box, vessel or package containing same, a label printed or plainly written, containing the name of the article, the word 'poison,' and the name and place of business of the seller, with the common name of two or more readily accessible antidotes, nor shall he deliver poison to any person without satisfying himself that such poison is to be used for legitimate purposes. A poison in the meaning of this act shall be any drug, chemical or preparation, which, according to standard works on medicine or materia medica, is liable to be destructive to adult human life in quantities of sixty grains or less. It shall be the further duty of any one selling or dispensing poisons, which are known to be destructive to adult human life in quantities of five grains or less, before delivering them, to enter in a book kept for that purpose the name of the seller, the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold or disposed of, and the purposes for which it is intended, etc."

Other sections (2631-2) prohibit all persons not registered pharmacists or physicians from selling drugs or medicines, except proprietary or patent medicines, and nonpoisonous medicines which may be sold by country stores in small places or rural districts. These sections, enacted under the police power of the State, were designed for the protection of the public health. Their breach is denounced as a crime, punishable by fine. But this punishment may be administered whether any damage is done by the act or not. When, however, damage results from the neglect, the fact that it may also be punished as an offense against the criminal law will not prevent one especially damaged by it from recovering for it. Indeed such right of recovery is specifically granted by statute. (Section 466, Kentucky Statutes.) Before the statute above quoted an action would lie against a druggist who negligently furnished a customer a poisonous drug instead of some other and different one which had been bought of him, not calling the customer's attention to the substitution, where damage resulted from the act. By the statutes regulating the practice of pharmacy a comprehensive system has been devised to guard the public against incompetent, inexperienced handlers of subtle, dangerous drugs, designed and sold to be administered to people. Great care has been observed in prescribing rules, which in their application are believed to minimize the dangers incident to this business. As the legislation was to enhance the public's protection, the duties imposed on the druggists were intended as statutory tests of care, in so far as the statutes went. Their nonobservance is per se neglect of duty, as well as neglect of care. When special damage flows from it there exists prima facie a case of actionable negligence. Speaking of this class of actions, this court, in Henderson v. Clayton, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 288, said: "From time immemorial, where a statutory duty for the protection of individuals has been violated, an action at common law may be maintained."

In Monteith v. Kokomo Wood Enameling Co., 58 L. R. A., 944, the Supreme Court of Indiana approved this rule, deduced from English cases, and followed by a considerable number of American cases as well: "Where a statute of public character prescribes in regard to a class of persons the performance of certain acts as reasonable precautions for the health or safety of a class of persons having to do with them, the neglect of such a statutory precaution gives a right of action to any person within the scope of the intended benefit who, by reason of the neglect, suffers damages of the kind intended to be provided against." (Thompson on Negligence, section 10, page 12.)

It was, therefore, a material and appropriate averment in the setting out of his cause of action for the plaintiff to have charged a specific breach of the statute quoted, although defendants might have been otherwise negligent in the transaction so as to have been liable to the plaintiffs therefor. The action of the court in striking out was erroneous. Another averment of the petition stricken out on motion of the defendants was the statement that plaintiff's intestate was caused to suffer intense pains and anguish as a consequence of having had the strychnine given to her. This action of the court was presumably upon the idea that causes of action for physical suffering and for death could not be joined. But each being sufficiently pleaded, it was not the province of the defendant to select which of them he would have stricken out. The proper practice was by motion to require the plaintiff to elect. The court's action in the ruling was erroneous, and under the facts of this case was, in our opinion, prejudicial.

The instructions to the jury, while submitting unobjectionably the question of defendant's negligence, aside from their statutory duties omitted, were erroneous in not also submitting the latter phase of the case. The jury should have been told that if defendant Mudd, who was not a licensed pharmacist, sold to Allen Sutton, for his mother, strychnine in quantity of five grains or more, without inquiring the purpose for which it was intended, and without entering in a book kept for that purpose the name of the seller, the name and residence of the buyer, the name of the article, the quantity sold, and the purpose for which it was intended, and that Nannie Sutton came to her death by reason of such failure, if any there was, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find. The measure of damages and the law as to punitive damages were correctly stated to the jury.

The instructions given on contributory negligence are marked "2" and "4," respectively, and are as follows:

"2. The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the decedent, Nannie Sutton, and of her agents and servants attendant upon her, to use ordinary care to discover the true and real contents of the bottle from which the poison is claimed to have been administered, and if the jury believe from the evidence the said Nannie Sutton, or her agents or servants acting for and attendant upon her, negligently failed to open the package delivered to Allen Sutton for the said decedent, or negligently failed to look at the label thereof, or negligently failed to discover the nature and warning of said label, or negligently failed to examine the character of the drug purchased and administered to the said decedent, or negligently failed to discover the nature of same, then in the law the decedent is chargeable with contributory negligence, and in that event the law is for the defendants, and so the jury should find.

"4. Contributory negligence, as used in these instructions, mean such negligence upon the part of decedent, Nannie Sutton, or her agents or servants acting for her, as that but for same her death would not have occurred."

If Nannie Sutton was herself so negligent in the matter but for which the injury to her would not have occurred, it seems clear that her estate ought not to recover under the familiar rule governing contributory negligence prevailing in this State. But we do not understand, though, that Mrs. Sutton had no right of action because of defendant's negligence if somebody else's negligence than her own concurred in producing her injury. We understand the law to be just the contrary. If Mrs. Sutton's nurse or servant negligently administered the wrong drug or poison, inflicting death, the servant would be liable to the decedent's estate in damages. This, however, would not excuse the druggist who had also been negligent in furnishing the drug, whereby the wrong drug was provided. Both the druggist and the servant might be liable. If the agent neglects his duty to the principal, inflicting an injury on the latter, he is liable just as the negligent master is who inflicts an injury on his servant. If the master and another by their joint or concurring negligence injure the servant, both tort-feasors are liable in damages. Upon the same principle, if the servant's negligence concurs with a stranger's in injuring the master, both should be liable. There is no merit in the proposition that the stranger is not liable for his negligence because the injured person's servant was also negligent, and aided thereby in inflicting the injury. The doctrine of respondeat superior does not work that way. It makes the master liable for the servant's negligence towards others, but does not excuse the servant from his duty toward the master.

It is not true, either, as stated in the 6th instruction, that the druggist and the customer are under the same degree of care in the furnishing and taking of the drug. The fact alone that one is prohibited from acting in the matter at all except under a license, and after a technical training, evinces that there is a difference, and a necessary one, between the care to be observed by the pharmacist and by his customer. The latter's duty is to exercise ordinary care for his own safety. The former's, to exercise the highest degree of care for the safety of the public dealing with him.

The judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial consistent herewith.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

Vol. 27.

APRIL 1, 1905.

No. 5

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY.

WITT v. WILLIS.

(Filed February 24, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Boundary of—Shifting of channel of river—It appearing that the land in controversy was cut off from the main tract by the shifting of the channel of the Kentucky river, and that the river is the boundary between Madison and Jessamine counties, to determine the question as to the location of the land and jurisdiction judicial notice of the act creating the counties must be taken. The shifting of the river occurred since the creation of the counties, and the rule is that where a stream imperceptibly changes its course so as to cut off a strip of land and leave it beyond the thread of the stream the ownership will not be changed, and the shifting of the channel herein does not affect the boundary between the two counties, which remains where it stood before the channel of the river was changed.

2. Amendments—Forcible entry and detainer—In an action for forcible entry where an amendment does not change the cause of action, but only perfected the cause of action aimed to be stated originally, such amendment to the warrant should be permitted to be filed.

Grant & Lilly for appellant.

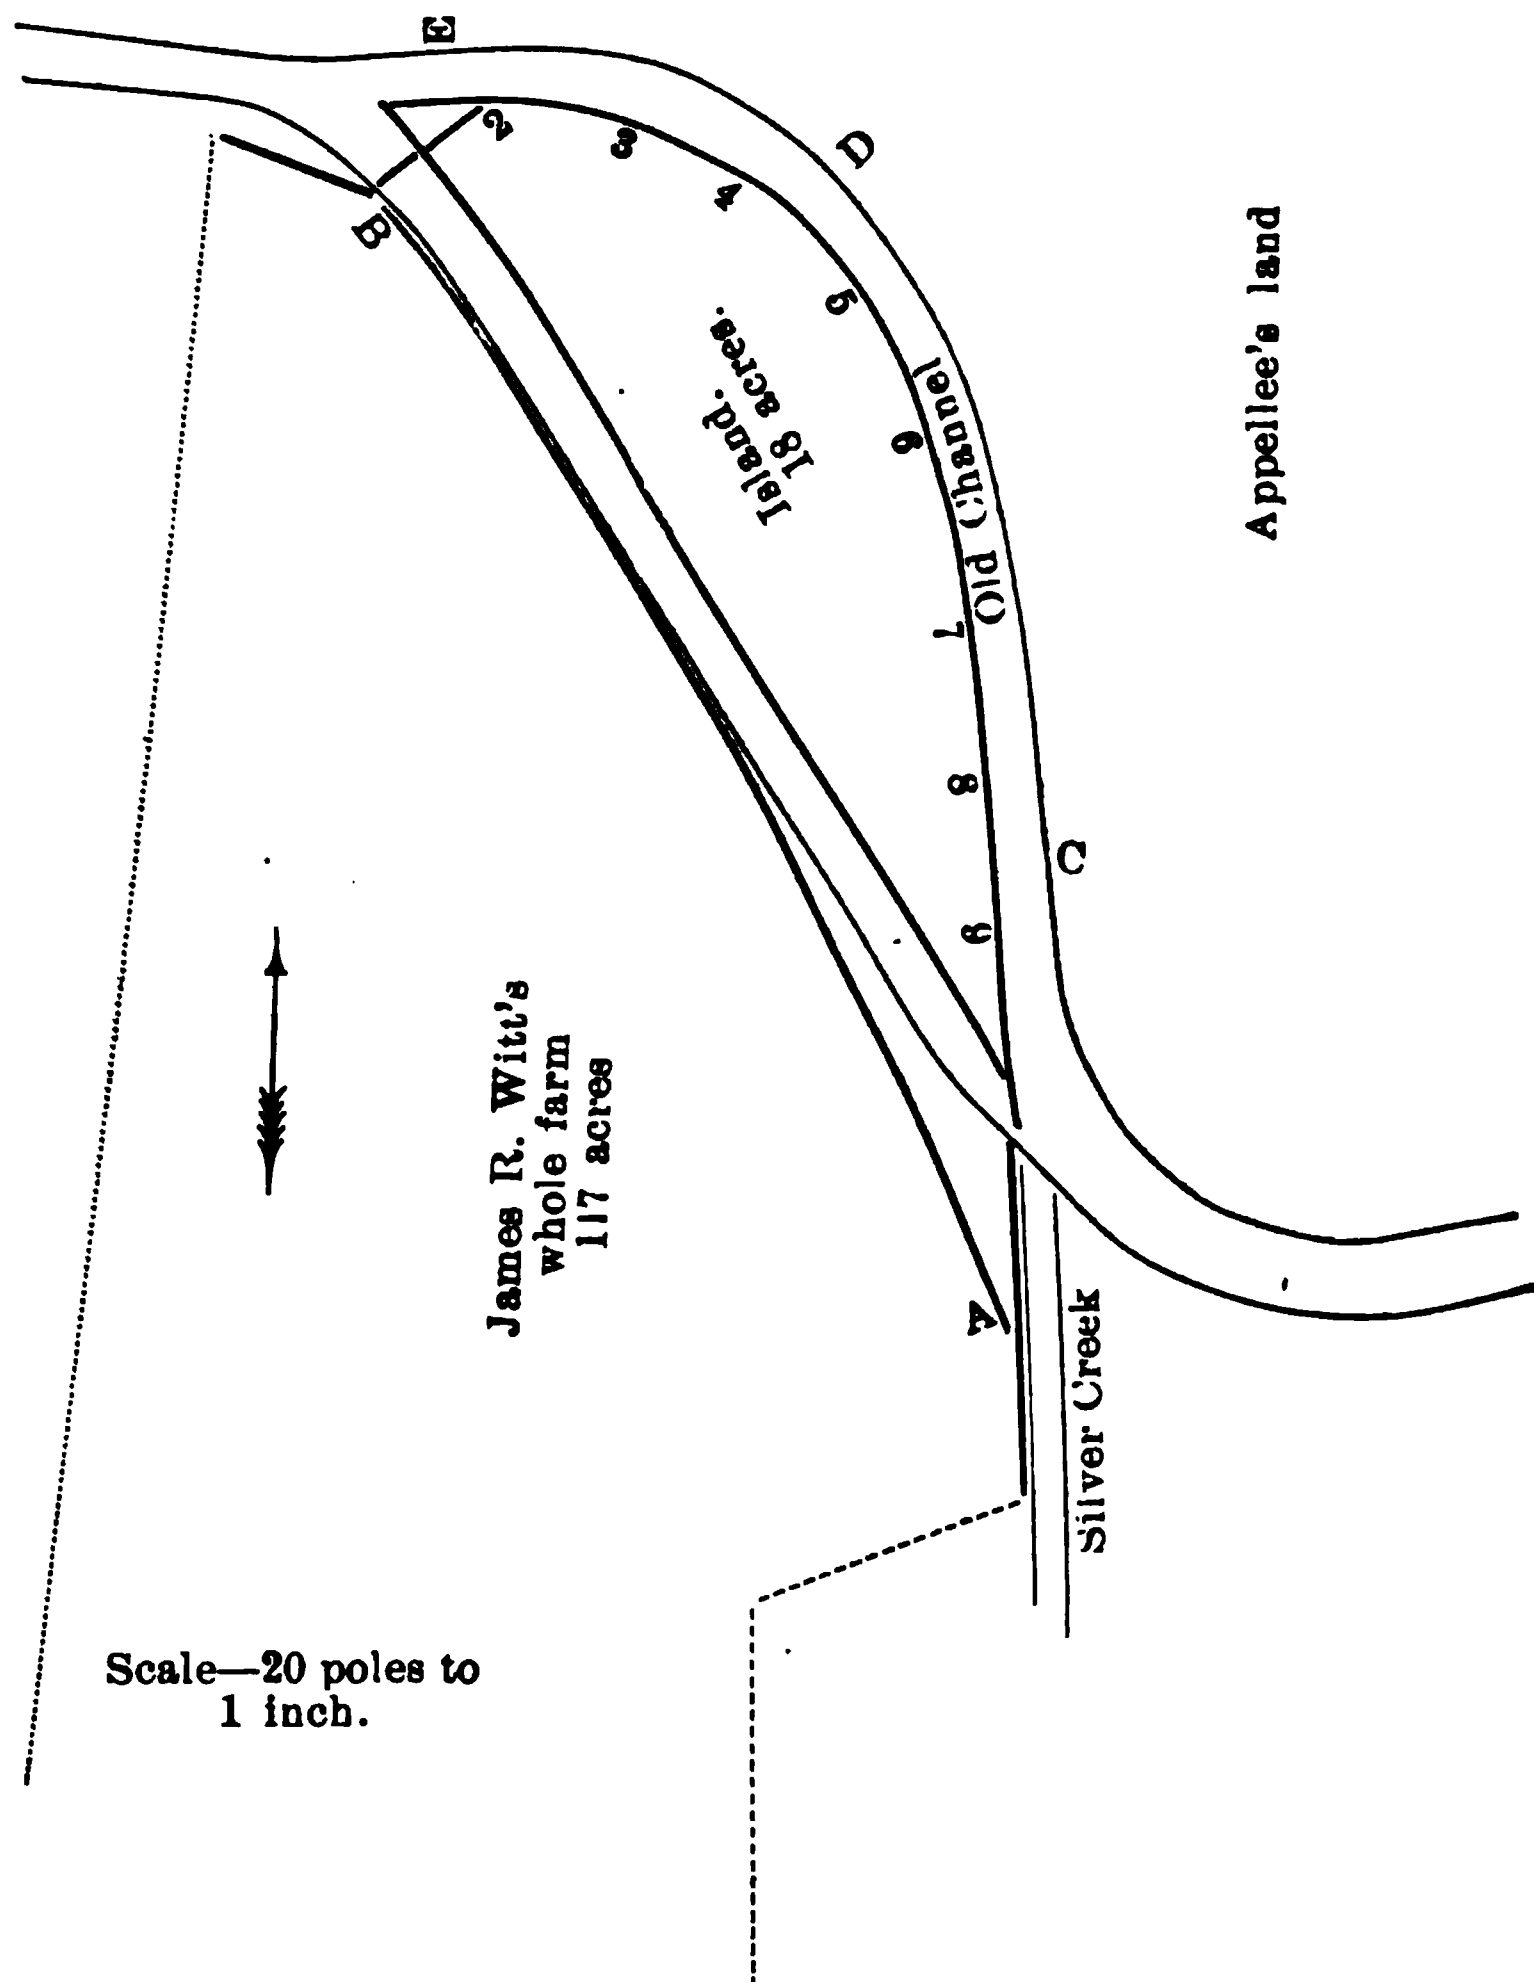

John H. Welsh for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellant filed with the county judge of Madison county his affidavit, stating that he was the owner and in the actual possession of eighteen acres of ground in Madison county, particularly described in the affidavit, and that the defendant had forcibly and against his will entered thereon and detained the same from him. Thereupon a warrant of forcible entry was issued, and an order of survey was made. The surveyor reported that the eighteen acres of land was within the calls of the plaintiff's deed, and that he had run the land in the year 1896 before slack-water, or before any change in the Kentucky river; that the old channel to which the deed runs is now dry and that the defendant owns fifty acres of land on the opposite side of the river in Jessamine county, which is bounded on the east by the river. Accompanying the report of the surveyor is the following plat, which illustrates the situation, the defendant's land being on the opposite side of the river from appellant. The eighteen acres in controversy is the strip between the old channel and the new, indicated on the plat:

On the trial before the county judge the jury found the defendant guilty of the forcible entry complained of. He traversed the inquisition and took an appeal to the circuit court. In the county court the defendant filed a plea to the jurisdiction of the county judge, alleging that the land in con-controversy lay in Jessamine county. In reply to this plea the plaintiff alleged that the land on which the defendant entered is a large tract, containing one hundred and seventeen acres, lying in Madison county, and defined as shown in the report of the surveyor. In the appeal to the circuit court the plaintiff moved the court to permit him to amend his writ so as to embrace his entire farm of one hundred and seventeen acres, insisting that the writ had been orally amended in the lower court. The court refused to allow the amendment. Thereupon the following agreement of facts was filed by the plaintiff: "That his whole farm contains about one hundred and seventeen acres; that about two years ago the United States government built a lock and dam across the Kentucky river below his farm; that this backs the water for some miles above his farm, and that at the time this proceeding was instituted, and now, the main current of the Kentucky river runs on the southeast side of, and the main bed of said river is on the southeast side of, the eighteen acres of land, which is described in the original affidavit and writ; that he and his father have been in possession of said farm since 1859, and that he was in the quiet possession of same on the day that appellant entered upon the land described in the writ."

On these facts the circuit court sustained the defendant's plea to the jurisdiction, and dismissed the proceeding on the ground that the land lay in Jessamine county and not within the jurisdiction of the courts of Madison county. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The Kentucky river is the boundary between the counties of Madison and Jessamine, and whether the eighteen acres of land in controversy lies in Madison or in Jessamine county depends upon whether the old channel or the present channel of the river is the line. In determining this question the court must take judicial notice of the statutes creating the counties. The county of Madison was formed in 1785. The county of Jessamine was formed in 1798. The river has shifted from the old channel to the new since the establishment of the counties. The rule is that if a stream imperceptibly changes its course the thread of the stream continues to be the dividing line between the adjoining proprietors, and the accretion on one side belongs to him on whose side it is formed. But where a stream changes its course so as to perceptibly cut off a point of land and leave it beyond the thread of the stream the ownership will not be changed. (Sweatman v. Holbrook, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 870; Holcomb v. Blair, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 975.) In Gould on Waters, section 159, the rule is thus stated: "When a tidal river does not work a shifting of the shore, but by the irruption of its waters forms an entirely new channel in private lands, not only does the right to the soil thus covered remain in the owner, but the right of fishery is his and not in the public, though the public right of navigation may extend to the new channel. If an unnavigable stream, in which the title of the riparian owners extends ad filum aquæ, slowly and imperceptibly changes its course, the boundary line is at the center of the new channel. But if the change is violent and visible, and arises from a known cause, such as a freshet or a cut through which a new channel is formed, the original thread of the stream continues to mark the limits between the two estates." (5 Cyc., 904.)

In the case of Indiana v. Kentucky, 186 U. S., 479, the question was whether Green River Island lay in Kentucky or Indiana. It was shown that at the time of the trial the Ohio river ran south of the island, and there was no water between it and the mainland at ordinary stages. But it was also shown that at the time of the grant from Virginia the waters of the Ohio river ran between the island and the Indiana shore. It was held that the shifting of the river to the south of the island did not affect the claim of Kentucky to it. So here the shifting of the channel of the Kentucky river from one side of the island to the other does not affect the boundary between Madison and Jessamine counties, which remains where it stood before the channel of the river was changed.

In Willis v. McNeal, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 411, it was held that on an appeal to the circuit court from a justice's court the plaintiff may not amend his pleading so as to set up a new cause of action, but that amendments may be allowed by the plaintiff or the defendant to perfect the cause of action or defense relied on as the case is to be tried de novo. In Puff v. Hatcher, 78 Ky., 146, the plaintiff failed to file his petition in the magistrate's court, and on the appeal to the circuit court he was allowed to file an amended petition setting up his cause of action. In Commonwealth v. Cantrill, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 24, a bastardy warrant was defective, and it was held that the warrant might be amended in the circuit court after appeal to that court, and the judgment of the circuit court dismissing the warrant and refusing to allow it to be amended was reversed. (N. N. & M. V. Co. v. Henderson, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 486.) In Louisville v. Wemhoff, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 995, it was held that in a criminal proceeding for a misdemeanor the warrant may be amended in the circuit court on appeal. In Forsythe v. Huey, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 147, it was held that a warrant for forcible detainer may be amended in the circuit court, to make the description of the land claimed more definite, and in Hoffman v. Mann, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 255, this case was followed, it being there held that after appeal to the circuit court the warrant may be amended so as to show that the plaintiff was in peaceable possession of the land at the time of the forcible entry complained of.

The statement in the opinion in Bailey v. Kelly, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 718, that a warrant of forcible entry may not be amended after trial in the country, was unnecessary to the decision of that case, as the amendment there was made before the trial in the country. It is purely a dictum, and is in conflict with the rule laid down in the cases above referred to. The circuit court should have allowed the warrant to be amended as asked by appellant. The amendment did not change the cause of action. It only perfected the cause of action aimed to be stated originally.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

SPRINGFIELD FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE CO., &c. v. GRAVES COUNTY WATER AND LIGHT CO.

(Filed March 1, 1905.)

1. Water company—Contract to supply city—Unavoidable accident—Loss by fire—The appellee, Graves County Water and Light Co., contracted with the city of Mayfield to furnish it an ample supply of water for all purposes,

It being known by all parties that the water had to be obtained from deep bored wells. Appellee sunk three wells, two of which were ample to supply the city at ordinary times. A few days prior to the loss sued for, without the fault of appellee, the plunger at the bottom of one of the wells got fastened and would not work, and after diligent efforts to remedy it, finally had to be abandoned and a new well bored. During the time of this accident (the water supply having diminished by reason of a long drouth) a fire occurred, destroying property for the loss of which this action was brought against appellee. Held—That under the contract an instruction to the jury, that "if they believe from the evidence that the failure of the defendant to furnish an ample supply of water at the time of the burning of the property was due to accidental causes, not the result of defendant's negligence, and which it could not, by the use of ordinary diligence, have foreseen and prevented, the law is for the defendant and the jury should so find," was proper.

2. Contracts—Rule for construction—The general rule for construing a contract is to take it as a whole, and, if possible, ascertain the true meaning and intent of the parties, and where there is any ambiguity in a contract or any doubt concerning its meaning, it should always be resolved against the party preparing it, if it can be done without doing violence to the rights of the parties thereto.

Wm. M. Smith, W. J. Webb and S. H. Crossland for appellants.

Robbins & Thomas for appellee.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On the night of June 26, 1901, a fire occurred in the city of Mayfield, Ky., destroying a large amount of property, of the value of about $200,000. About $48,000 worth of this belonged to a firm of tobacco dealers, known as Ligon, Allen & Co., who instituted suit against the appellee herein for damages on account of its failure to furnish water under its contract, with which to extinguish the fire. The appellee in this case demurred to that petition, which demurrer was overruled. It filed an answer, but subsequently withdrew it, and stood by its demurrer. The court in that case instructed the jury to find for Ligon, Allen & Co. the amount sued for, less the insurance on the property and salvage. The verdict of the jury was for $12,000, and from that judgment the water company appealed to this court, and endeavored to have this court overrule its decision in the case of the Paducah Lumber Co. v. Paducah Water Supply Co., 89 Ky., 340, and other opinions following it. This court declined to overrule these cases, but approved them, and affirmed the judgment of the lower court. (23 Ky. Law Rep., 2149.)

The appellant, Springfield Fire and Marine Insurance Co., having previous to the fire insured the property of Ligon, Allen & Co. for the sum of $5,000, paid the insurance after the loss and took from the assured an assignment of all their rights, interests and claims they had for the loss of this property against all persons, and especially against the appellee, Graves County Water and Light Co. The appellant insurance company, together with Ligon, Allen & Co., who joined for the use and benefit of appellant company, instituted this action against the appellee to recover the $5,000, with interest from the date of payment, alleging in substance that the loss of this property resulted from the failure of appellee to comply with its contract that it had made with the city of Mayfield and the citizens thereof to furnish at all times sufficient water to extinguish fires. There appears not to have been any contract other than the ordinance passed by the city, which was accepted by the water company, and constituted the contract. The ordinance was filed with the petition, and consists of fourteen sections. By the first section it is shown that the contract was for the supplying of water and electric lights to the city and its inhabitants, both for public and private uses. By the second it is provided that the supply shall be from the most available source where good water can be obtained. This is to be determined by the company. It was also provided therein that the company should keep a sufficiency of engine and boiler power so if one engine or pump should get out of fix that there should be another which could be used for pumping water. By the third it was provided that all mains and pipes used in construction by the company should be of suitable size to furnish an abundant supply of water for present and future requirements for the city, and should be laid in trenches, with not less than thirty inches cover. It is further provided by that section that the company should give a public test of the power and capacity of the waterworks, of which the council should have notice, and at the test they should throw from separate hydrants, in the business part of the city, not less than three simultaneous streams of water through fifty feet of hose and a one inch ring nozzle to the height of eighty feet on a horizontal distance corresponding therewith. By the fourth it is provided that the company shall not unnecessarily obstruct the streets, sidewalks, etc., in constructing or repairing its plant. By the fifth it is provided for the extension of the plant whenever it becomes necessary. By the sixth it is provided how the water company should be paid for the water furnished during the faithful operation of the plant. By the seventh it was provided that the water from the fire hydrants should be used only in the extinguishment of fires, and should furnish effective streams without the aid of portable engines. The eighth section was as follows: "The said Graves County Water and Light Co. shall keep all fire hydrants rented of it supplied with water, and shall maintain them in effective working order, except during the time of repairing or removing any hydrant which has become ineffective by accident or other cause than willful negligence on the part of said company, and the hydrants shall be in charge of such person as the city council shall appoint to that place."

By the ninth the water company agreed to furnish free certain drinking fountains and water for city purposes. By the tenth it was provided the minimum dimensions of the standpipe and mains and also that an arrangement should be made whereby the water could be pumped into the mains direct as well as into the standpipe. By the eleventh it was provided for communication between the pump house and the city. By the twelfth it was provided that the city should protect the company in its property and from waste of water by the consumers. By the thirteenth it was provided as to how the city might purchase the plant at the expiration of the contract. By the fourteenth it was provided when the plant should be completed. It was agreed that the city should organize, equip and maintain a competent fire company, with all necessary appliances for extinguishing fires. It was alleged in the petition that the city complied with all the requirements on its part, and that the loss of this property was occasioned by the failure of the appellee to comply with its contract in failing to furnish the water as it obligated itself to do.

The appellee answered this petition, denying all the material allegations, and alleged that at the time of the organization of the appellee water company, and the entering into the contract stated, it was known by all the parties that the water supply could be obtained only by means of deep bored wells, there being no other available source to obtain it; that it sunk three wells for this purpose, two of them eighteen inches in diameter and the other twelve; that two of them were, under ordinary circumstances, sufficient to supply all the water ordinarily used by the city and private persons; that at the time of the fire they would have had an ample supply of water but for the fact that a few days prior to the fire the "plunger" at the bottom of one of the eighteen-inch wells became fastened and would not work, and rendered this well useless; that this accident was unavoidable and could not have been anticipated, and that it did not occur by reason of any negligence of any character, or by reason of any want of care or caution on the part of appellee; that immediately after the accident they began working to repair and make this well effective, and continued this work from the accident, day and night, and were working on it at the time of the fire, and eventually had to abandon it and sink another well; that notwithstanding the loss of the use of this well, the remaining wells would have furnished sufficient water for all purposes had it not been for the existence of an unusual drouth and excessive heat which had existed for several weeks prior to the fire, and had not the citizens of the city used the water extravagantly and wasted it, which was permitted by the city, contrary to its contract with the appellee; that but for the unavoidable accident stated it would have had its hydrants supplied with water and maintained them in effective working order. The affirmative matter of the answer was controverted.

The facts admitted and proven on the trial are in substance as follows: This fire occurred in the tobacco warehouse district of the city near the hour of midnight, and destroyed the buildings on about ten or twelve acres of ground. The weather was very dry and hot, with the wind blowing a gale sufficiently strong to carry parts of shingles several miles into the country. The proof is somewhat conflicting as to the progress of the fire at the time of its discovery and the arrival of the wagon with the hose at the scene. Appellant's proof was to the effect that there was only one building on fire at that time, and that was about a half a block away from the building of Ligon, Allen & Co. Appellee's proof was to the effect that there were two buildings mostly destroyed and the third was igniting at the time of the arrival of the hose wagon at the place, and that there was but one building between the building of Ligon, Allen & Co. and the third one which had taken fire; that the wind was blowing in the direction of Ligon, Allen & Co.'s building from the fire.

The proof is also somewhat conflicting as to the efficiency and equipment of the fire company. Appellee's proof conduces to show that none of the fire company, except the driver of the hose wagon, were present until some twenty or thirty minutes after the wagon arrived at the fire; that the captain of the company was not there at all, and that whatever company there was, was made up of inexperienced volunteers; that there was only one hose there when they began to fight the fire. Appellant's proof shows that at the beginning there was one other fireman besides the driver, and that the volunteers were efficient. It was admitted that at the time there was an insufficient supply of water, and that the hydrants were not in an effective working condition to successfully fight the fire at the beginning, and for some little time thereafter. There was much proof to the effect that even if they had had a full supply of water they would have been unable to have successfully fought the fire, owing to the stage of it when discovered and the prevailing conditions of the wind and weather. There was much testimony to the contrary, but this question was submitted to the jury, and it found in favor of the appellee.

The appellee proved that the construction and equipment of its plant in every way filled the requirements of the ordinance, and that it was not deficient in any particular; that its engines and pumps were of the latest and most approved patterns, comparatively new, and apparently in the best of condition and repair; that a few days before the fire the plunger at the bottom of one of its wells became fastened and could not be made to perform its work; that they worked night and day from the time of the mishap, and were working on it at the time of the fire, endeavoring to make it work, but could not do so, and finally had to abandon the well and sink a new one; that this accident happened without any notice to it and could not have been anticipated or foreseen, and occurred without any fault whatever on its part, and by reason of this unavoidable accident it failed to have its mains and hydrants supplied with the usual quantity of water, and in good working condition. It also proved that notwithstanding this, that the two wells, in working condition, were sufficient under ordinary circumstances to have supplied the usual and necessary amount of water, but on account of the unusual drouth and waste of water by the citizens it was unable at the moment of the fire, and for a short time thereafter, to supply the necessary amount of water. The court, under instructions, submitted these questions to the jury, who found in favor of appellee. The court overruled appellant's motion for a new trial, and it has appealed.

The appellant makes serious objection to the following instruction: "The court further instructs the jury that, although it may believe from the evidence that at said fire there was on hand, in time to have extinguished the fire, such fire company, as stated in instruction number '1,' and that it was sufficiently equipped with apparatus for fighting fire as therein stated, and that such fire company so situated and equipped could and would have prevented the loss or damage to said tobacco as therein stated, and that their failure to do so was because such hydrant or hydrants were not supplied with water, and it or they were not in effective working order, yet if the failure of the hydrants to be supplied with water, or to be in effective working order, was due to accidental causes, not the result of defendant's negligence, and which it could not, by the use of ordinary diligence, have foreseen and prevented, then the law is for the defendant and the jury should so find; and the court further says to the jury that by the use of the term 'hydrant' in this instruction is meant any of the means or parts of the defendant's waterworks system by which it supplies the public fire plugs with water."

The appellant contends that, under the contract, the appellee was not excused from furnishing a sufficient supply of water by reason of any accident of any character to the water plant, except it be the act of God or the public enemy, and that the only question to be determined by the jury was whether or not, if there had been a sufficient supply of water, the fire company as organized and equipped could have extinguished and saved the property under all the circumstances proven in the case. Whether or not appellant is right in this contention depends upon the proper construction of the contract.

The general rule for construing a contract is to take it as a whole, and, if possible, ascertain the true meaning and intent of the parties. Another general rule is that where there is any ambiguity in a contract, or any doubt concerning the meaning and intent of any part of it, it should always be resolved against the party preparing it, if it can be done without doing violence to the rights of the parties thereto. With these principles in view, let us consider the contract before us, to wit, the ordinance of the city prepared by its council for the benefit of the city and the citizens thereof, and accepted by the appellee.

By section 8 it is provided that the appellee should keep all fire hydrants supplied with water, and should maintain them in effective working order except during the time of repairing or removing any hydrants which had become ineffective by accident or other cause than willful negligence on the part of appellee. Is it reasonable to presume that the parties to this contract intended to relieve the appellee for the failure to supply water when an unavoidable accident occurred to the small thing called the "hydrant," and yet to hold it responsible when an unavoidable accident happened to the water mains, standpipe, the engine, pumps or plunger, or other material part of the plant which supplied the hydrants? Certainly the parties in entering into this contract did not intend it to have that meaning and effect. If appellants' contention be correct, that appellee was bound at all hazards to furnish water, the act of God or the public enemy alone excusing it, then why specify in the contract the character and dimensions of the standpipe, the size of and the depth to which the water mains were to be laid under cover, the character and number of pumps, engines, the public test and requirements of it, and especially why incorporate the language as used in section 8 and the other things specified in the ordinance? If appellant's contention be correct, all these things were useless and superfluous. In such case the only contract necessary would have been for the appellee to have bound itself to furnish at all times a supply of water sufficient to throw three simultaneous streams through a one inch ring nozzle to a height of eighty feet in the business part of the city, or to have obligated itself to furnish a supply of water sufficient for the uses of the city and the citizens, and an ample supply to put out fire.

We are of the opinion that the parties on entering into this contract did not mean this, but, upon the contrary, taking the whole contract, they meant and intended that the appellee should furnish an ample supply of water for all purposes and at all times, unless prevented by an accident to the water plant, which, by ordinary prudence, could not have been anticipated or foreseen and provided against. Entertaining these views, we are of the opinion that the instructions given by the lower court were proper, or at least not prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellant. (Owensboro Water Co. v. Duncan's Adm'x, &c., 17 Ky. Law Rep., 755.)

As to the question of whether or not the appellant is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of Ligon, Allen & Co., under the terms of the contract as provided in the policy, we do not determine, as it is not necessary to the disposition of the case.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

MATTINGLY V. SHORTELL.

(Filed March 2, 1905.)

1. Accounts—Pleading—Burden of proof—In an action on an account, part of which is denied and payment of the balance pleaded, the burden on the whole case is on the defendant, who is entitled to the closing argument.

2. Entry by bookkeeper—Evidence of character—An entry on the books of the employer by his bookkeeper of a transaction between them, in the way the bookkeeper understood it, and which differs from the understanding of the employer, is an issue of a civil and not of a criminal nature, and does not put the character of the bookkeeper in issue so as to permit him, in a controversy over the transaction, to introduce evidence, over the objection of the employer, of his general reputation for honesty.

3. Account stated—Proof—Variance—Where an account is stated between a debtor and creditor and a balance struck and agreed upon, this constitutes the cause of action, and must be proved, as alleged, and if not so proved, there will be a variance unless the pleadings are amended.

4. Hearsay evidence—Competency—An entry made by a bookkeeper upon his employer's books, of statements made to him by another concerning the transaction, is not competent evidence for the bookkeeper. Such statements were mere hearsay, and the fact that the bookkeeper had entered them upon his employer's books added nothing to their competency.

J. D. Atchison and C. S. Walker for appellant.

Geo. W. Jolly for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This is an action by James D. Shortell to recover of Miles P. Mattingly a balance alleged to be due him for services rendered as bookkeeper and general manager of his business as a distiller in Owensboro, Kentucky, for a period of time running from 1882 to 1901. This balance is made up of three items: First, an account stated June 30, 1896, showing a balance due of $1,415.40; second, a balance due for services rendered from June 30, 1896, to December 31, 1900, at $100 per month, and, third, a balance due from December 31, 1900, to December 20, 1901, at $75 per month.

The answer placed in issue the account stated as of June 30, 1896; denied the rendition of the services from December 31, 1900, to December 20, 1901, and as to the second item of the claim pleaded payment and counterclaim.

A trial resulted in a verdict in favor of appellee for the amount claimed in the petition. From the judgment entered upon this verdict appellant is here on appeal. The burden of proof and the closing argument were awarded appellee over the objection of appellant. This, we think, was error. Had the case been submitted without any evidence judgment must have gone for appellee for a part of the amount claimed in the petition. Section 596 of the Civil Code provides: "The burden of proof in the whole action lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side." This means that the burden of proof is on the party against whom such a judgment would be rendered as carries the costs. (Walling v. Eggers, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1564.) This being true, it was error to deny the concluding argument to appellant. (Royal Insurance Co. v. Schwing, 87 Ky., 410; Fireman's Insurance Co. v. Schwing, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 883; Crabtree v. Atchison, 98 Ky., 338; Lucas v. Hunt, 91 Ky., 279.)

In support of his plea of payment appellant undertook to show by evidence that he had assigned to appellee a note of T. M. Hill for $1,500, secured by an insurance policy on the life of Hill for the amount of the note, and that appellee accepted it in part payment of his claim for services. This was denied by appellee, who claimed that the note and the insurance policy were transferred to him under the belief that Hill was about to die, and that Mattingly's creditors (he having become financially embarrassed) would attach the amount of the insurance policy; that to prevent this the assignment of the note and the transfer of the policy were made for the accommodation of Mattingly, and the proceeds were to be credited on Shortell's debt for services when paid; that Hill had recovered his health, but was insolvent, the policy had been allowed to lapse, and the note was entirely worthless. In evidence of his side of the transaction Shortell had entered it on the books of his employer (he being the bookkeeper) as he understood it, and also certain statements of Hill concerning the matter. This entry, and especially so much of it as contained a statement that the note was to be credited on the account for services "when paid," Mattingly claimed was entered without his knowledge or consent. Conceiving that this charge placed his character in issue, appellee was permitted by the court, over the objection of appellant, to introduce various witnesses to testify as to his general reputation for honesty. The issue between the parties was of a civil and not of a criminal nature, and, therefore, did not involve the character of appellee in the sense that would authorize the introduction of evidence of general reputation to support it. The question was whether or not Mattingly assigned the Hill note, and Shortell accepted it in part payment. Shortell entered in the books of his employer his understanding of the transaction, but the correctness of his understanding did not involve his character. In the case of Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky., 510, it was said: "In civil actions evidence of general reputation is not admissible unless the proceedings be such as to put the character of the party directly in issue." (Morris v. Hazelwood, 1 Bush, 210; Continental Insurance Co. v. Jachmichen, 59 Am. Rep., 198; Dudley v. McClure, 27 Am. Rep., 278.) Under the influence of this evidence the jury might well believe they were trying Shortell for a crime, and hesitate long before they would be willing to blast his good name on an adverse verdict. This was manifestly prejudicial to appellant.

We think the trial court also erred in instructing as to the account stated, permitting the jury to find for the plaintiff on this issue on a quantum meruit, although they might believe that the account was not stated, as alleged, on June 20, 1896. When an account is stated between a debtor and a creditor, and a balance struck and agreed upon, this constitutes the cause of action, and must be proved as alleged, and if not so proved there will be a variance unless the pleadings are amended. The court erred in permitting appellee to read as evidence his entry concerning the note, containing statements made by Hill to him concerning the transaction. These statements were mere hearsay, and the fact that appellee had entered them upon his employer's books added nothing to their competency. There was no variance between appellee's allegation concerning the stated account, in which he alleged an unconditional promise to pay, and the evidence adduced upon the trial, that appellant promised to pay "when able." The citation of authority on this point by appellant were all cases where the party making the conditional promise had been discharged from the debt by proceedings in bankruptcy. This discharge relieved the debtor from his original obligation, and his subsequent promise constituted a new cause of action, and necessarily this must be proved as alleged, and if the condition be alleged, then it must be proved to have happened. This principle has no application to the case at bar. Here there was a subsisting claim for services rendered, which was definitely ascertained by the parties by stating the account, and the law implied a promise to pay. The promise to pay when able meant to pay at once. (Kincaid v. Higgins, 1 Bibb, 896; Cecil v. Welch, 2 Bush, 168.)

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

PADUCAH RAILWAY AND LIGHT CO. v. BELL'S ADM'R.

(Filed March 2, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Master and servant—Negligence—In this action for damages for the death of appellee's intestate the question appears to have been fairly presented to the jury. The evidence was conflicting, but two juries having reached the same conclusion, rendering verdicts for appellee, the verdict and judgment appealed from herein will not be disturbed.

2. Same—Conduct of counsel—The bill of exceptions failing to show that the statements of counsel for appellee were made which are complained of, they will not be considered.

Reed & Berry for appellant.

Campbell & Campbell for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Appellee's decedent, Charles E. Bell, was in the employ of the appellant, Paducah Railway and Light Co., as lineman. It becoming necessary to tie a guy wire in an eye-bolt on one of the corporation's poles in Paducah, he was directed to climb it and perform that service. When he reached that point on the pole which brought his head close to the first cross arms he was heard to utter an exclamation of pain or fright, which attracted the attention of several bystanders, who looked up in time to see him fall head foremost to the pavement below, receiving injuries from which he in a few days died. This action was instituted by his administrator to recover damages for his death, that being alleged to have resulted from the negligence of appellant. There were two trials, the first resulting in a judgment in favor of appellee for $5,000, which, upon motion of appellant, was set aside by the trial judge and a new trial granted, resulting in a verdict against appellant for the sum of $3,000, of which it is now complaining.

There are two theories as to the cause of Bell's death. That of appellee is that he was knocked from the pole by an electric shock caused by defective insulation of appellant's wires; that of appellant is that, after he reached the point where he was to commence work he undertook to place his safety belt around the pole, and snap it in place; that by accident or oversight he failed to do this, and when he released the pole with his hands, expecting to be held safe by the belt, he fell to the pavement below. Both of these theories were submitted upon each of the trials, and both juries found adversely to appellant. We have so often held that it is the duty of the employer to furnish the servant with a safe place in which to work that it hardly requires citation of authority in support of this proposition of law. (Angel v. Jellico Coal Mining Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 108; Covington Saw Mill and Manufacturing Co. v. Clark, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 695.) There was no evidence to show that Bell knew anything of the dangerous condition of the pole or the wires, assuming them to have been so. On the contrary, however, the theory of appellant is that the poles and wires were perfectly safe.

In the case of McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 100 Ky., 198, it is said: "It seems clear to us that appellee should have been required to have had perfect protection on its wire at the point and place where appellant was injured. The fact that it was very expensive or inconvenient is no excuse for such failure. Very great care might be sufficient as to the wires at points where persons need not go for work or business, but the rule should be different as to points where people have a right to go for work, business or pleasure. At the latter points or places the insulation or protection should be made perfect, and the utmost care used to keep it so."

The rule thus laid down has not been abated in the many utterances of this court on this question since this case was decided. (Overall v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 759; Lexington Railway Co. v. Fain's Adm'r, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1443; Schweitzer's Adm'r v. Citizens General Electric Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 608; Macon v. Paducah Railway and Light Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 50; City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 50.)

Without discussing them in detail, we think the instructions given by the court were more favorable to appellant than it was entitled. There is no foundation for the claim for a reversal on the ground of misconduct of appellee's counsel. Certain statements purporting to have been made by him in his argument to the jury are incorporated by appellant in its grounds for a new trial, but the bill of exceptions fails to show that the statements complained of were made, and, therefore, we do not consider them. Upon the whole case, we are impressed with the belief that the question as to whether or not Charles E. Bell came to his death through the negligence of appellant, or his own, was fairly and fully presented to the jury, who found that issue against the corporation. The evidence was very conflicting on the vital issue, and two juries have reached the same conclusion on practically the same testimony. The verdicts rendered by both, and especially the latter, in amount evidence a conservative spirit, and under all the circumstances we do not believe appellant has any just ground to complain of the result.

Judgment affirmed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE CO. v. PRATT.

(Filed March 2, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Telegram—Diligence—Question for jury—Where appellant's messenger in attempting to deliver a telegram to appellee saw a light in his window, and knew that the house was occupied, although the family was out at the precise moment, and had telephone connection from its office with appellee from which the message being prepaid might have been telephoned, the question was for the jury to determine as to appellant's diligence in attempting to deliver the telegram.

2. Same—Jurisdiction—The question as to the place of contract in this case was settled adversely to appellant in the case of Howard v. Western Union Telegraph Co., ante, 224 (opinion delivered by this court February 7, 1905), where it was held that the contract, as in a case like the one at bar, should be construed in accordance with the law of the State where the message was delivered.

Leopold & Pennebaker for appellant.

Campbell & Campbell for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

On September 16, 1902, at 7:55 p. m., a telegraph message for transmission was delivered to appellant at its office in Shaw, Miss., addressed to E. W. Pratt, Paducah, Ky., reading: "Jerome died at 6 p. m.; will bury beside Della at Canton to-morrow. (Signed) Frank." This message was addressed to the house and street number of appellee, and arrived at the Paducah office at 8:03 p. m. on the day it was received by appellant. Within an hour after it reached Paducah appellant's messenger went to appellee's home with the dispatch, knocked at the front door, and, failing to receive a response, walked around to the rear door, and there also knocked. There was a light in the hall, but he found no one in charge to receive the message. Thereupon, after delivering one or two other telegrams, he returned to the office, placed the message in the proper place, and left for the night. He returned the next morning, and between 7 and 8 o'clock delivered it. It was then too late for appellee to attend the funeral of his brother, and he telegraphed his regrets at being unable to do so. Afterwards he instituted this action against appellant for damages for its failure to deliver the telegram, and a trial resulted in a verdict in his favor for $450, of which it is now complaining.

We think the question of the diligence of the telegraph company in failing to deliver the message was fairly presented to the jury by the instructions. Its messenger saw a light in the hall, and knew the house was occupied, although the family were out at the precise moment he sought admittance. Appellee had a telephone connection with appellant's office, and the message being prepaid, there was no reason why it might not have been telephoned, as is frequently done. The messenger returned to the office, after having failed to find any one in the house, in plenty of time to have done this before the office was closed for the night. Appellee had gone to the drug store, and his wife was visiting a neighbor at the time the messenger applied for admission. They both returned in a few minutes after he left, and were there the remainder of the night. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the question of diligence was one for the jury.

Appellant urges that when appellee found by the nondelivery of the message on the 16th that he could not reach Canton in time for the funeral of his brother, he should have requested its postponement by telegram. To this we can not agree. The time of funerals is generally arranged by those in charge, who are familiar with the urgency of the occasion, and we do not think it was incumbent upon appellee, by any duty he owed appellant, to request a postponement. The question is as to whether the contract to deliver the message is to be construed under the law of Mississippi, or of this State, was settled adversely to appellant in the case of John E. Howard v. Western Union Telegraph Co., ante, 244. opinion delivered February 7, 1905. It was there held, after a review of the authorities, that the contract in a case such as the one at bar is to be construed in accordance with the law of the State where the message is received. To this we adhere.

We think the petition states a cause of action, and the evidence shows that if appellee had received the telegram in time he would have attended the funeral. While there was nothing on the face of the telegram itself to show that the dead man was appellee's brother, that fact was known to appellant's agent at Shaw, with whom the contract for the transmission of the message was made. But whether it was or not, we are of opinion that the words of the message were sufficient to show its urgency, and imposed upon appellant the duty to exercise ordinary diligence to deliver it within a reasonable time. Upon the whole case we think appellant had a fair trial, and that none of its substantial rights were prejudiced by the rulings of the trial court or the verdict of the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

SANFORD, &c. v. REED.

(Filed March 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Lands—Conveyances—Fraud—The evidence in this case establishes the fact that appellee made the deed herein from fright and to avoid a liability, and not in settlement of any claim appellants had against her.

2. Same—While a court of equity will not ordinarily aid a grantor to escape from the consequences of his own fraud, this rule has no application where the grantor is the dupe of the grantee and his weakness has been imposed upon by undue advantage.

J. F. Vanarsdall for appellants.

E. H. Galtner and W. A. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Mercer Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee, Eliza A. Reed, shortly after the death of her husband, went to live with her cousin, appellants, Martha J. Sanford, and her husband, William Sanford, and lived with them about eight months. While she was there she went off on a visit and remained away about six weeks. Soon after her return she executed a deed to Martha J. Sanford for twenty-three and three-fourths acres of land which she owned, in consideration, as recited in the deed, of $450 cash in hand paid. The deed bears date March 7, 1903. By its terms the grantee was to have possession of the property on December 1, 1903. On January 25, 1904, Mrs. Reed filed this suit against Sanford and wife to cancel the deed, and the court having adjudged her the relief sought, the Sanfords appeal.

The facts of the case, as shown by the great weight of the evidence, are as follows: Mrs. Reed had no children and was something over sixty years of age. The Sanfords also had no children, and Mrs. Sanford was a first cousin of Mrs. Reed. Mrs. Reed, in addition to the twenty-three acres referred to, owned a tract of about fifty acres which she inherited from her father. The twenty-three acres she got from her husband. For a while after her husband's death she lived at home with a tenant, but finally moved down to Sanford's, and lived there under an agreement that she was to pay them at the rate of 10 cents a meal. She had signed the bond of one John Adkinson, as guardian of two infants, and while she was living at the defendant's house they instilled into her mind the idea that there was danger that she would suffer loss by reason of her suretyship on the guardian bond, and that all she had might thus be swept away from her. She was a timid, credulous woman, and easily influenced. She had no near kin, at least none with whom she was intimate. So after the defendants had impressed upon her the idea that she could not keep two homesteads, she offered to convey the twenty-three acres to William Sanford, and he said he would not have anything to do with it. She then made the deed to his wife. Nothing was paid at the time and the deed was made simply upon the idea that as soon as the guardianship trouble blew over the property was to be deeded back to her. After the deed was drawn and signed William Sanford took it to town and had it recorded, and Mrs. Reed paid for the recording of the deed. Sanford says he told her when she asked him what she ought to do about the guardian matter that she could not hold two homesteads, and that she had better sell this twenty-three acre piece as it was separated from the other. After the deed was made and recorded she went back to the home place, taking the Sanfords with her, and he rented the place from her, agreeing to take care of her as a member of the family for the land, and they were still living on the place in this way when the proof was taken. After they moved to her place she and Sanford had a settlement as to what she owed him for the eight months she had stayed at his house, and they agreed on $72, or $9 a month. She then surrendered to him a note which she held against him and gave him a check for the balance of the amount, but she did not have enough money in the bank to cover the check and he refused to accept the money when she subsequently tendered it to him, and he still held the check when the action was brought. The defendants claim that the deed was made in consideration of their taking care of the plaintiff, and pleaded a counterclaim for their care and keeping of her in the event the deed was set aside. The court allowed them $72 on their counterclaim, and adjudged that the plaintiff and defendants should each pay their own costs.

The evidence leaves no room for doubt that the deed was simply made from fright to avoid the guardianship liability and not in settlement of any claim for board or for nursing or other services. While Mrs. Reed's health was not robust, she did not need nursing, and the allowance of $72 to the defendants is more than we should have allowed, under the evidence, in view of the settlement which the parties subsequently made and the amount which had been paid upon the settlement. The evidence fully warrants the finding of the court that the deed was without consideration and executed to hide the property from Mrs. Reed's liabilities. But it is insisted that if this is true, she can have no relief because a court of equity will not aid a grantor in a fraudulent conveyance to escape from the consequences of his own fraud. This is the ordinary rule, but it has no application where the grantor is the dupe of the grantee, and his weakness has been imposed on to obtain an undue advantage of him. In Anderson's Adm'r v. Merideth, 82 Ky., 571, this court thus stated the rule: "The general rule is, in cases of executed contracts, where both parties are guilty of actual fraud, a court of equity will not lend its aid to either, but leave each to the consequences of his own wrongdoing. To apply this rule the parties must be in pari delicto, each equally guilty of the fraudulent intention and the fraudulent acting, with equal knowledge and equal willingness. When that is not the case, when there is imposition, duress, oppression, threats, undue influence, taking advantage of necessities or weakness, the party thus placed at disadvantage, although participating in the fraud, may be relieved in a court of equity against his co-wrongdoer."

In 2 Pomeroy's Equity, section 916, the rule is thus stated: "If the plaintiff is himself a party to the fraud, particeps doli, to such an extent that he is in pari delicto with the defendant, he can obtain no relief; equity does not in general relieve a person from the consequences of his own actual fraud. The mere fact, however, that the plaintiff was a party to the wrong in any degree and is not, therefore, completely innocent, will not necessarily deprive him of relief, defensive or even affirmative. If he is not in pari delicto, and is comparatively the more innocent of the two, he may obtain relief by doing full equity to those parties, if any, who have sustained injury by his partial wrong."

The proof leaves no doubt that the plaintiff is comparatively the more innocent of the two, and that her weakness was taken advantage of by the defendants to obtain a deed from her to Mrs. Sanford for the land without consideration, and that she was induced to make this deed by the frame of mind in which she was placed by the statements of the defendants to her.

In regard to her liability on the guardian's bond, and the danger of all she had being swept away.

Judgment affirmed.

HANCOCK v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed March 3, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Appellee having purchased a ticket to a station on appellant's line, contracted to take passage on a train scheduled to stop at that point, and in this action to recover damages against appellant for not taking him on its fast train, which was not scheduled to stop at the station on its line for which he had purchased a ticket, a nonsuit was properly ordered by the trial court.

Gordon, Gordon & Cox for appellant.

Benjamin D. Warfield and C. J. Waddell for appellee.

Appeal from Hopkins Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant bought a ticket for a continuous passage over appellee's railroad from Clarksville, Tenn., to Slaughter Station, in Hopkins county, Kentucky. Clarksville and Slaughter are on different branches of appellee's system, necessitating a change of cars by passengers between those points at Guthrie. When appellant arrived at Guthrie he left that train and had to wait for one going north on the Henderson division, due to stop at Slaughter. The first passenger train that came along that way was the fast express from Nashville to Henderson, which was not scheduled to stop at Slaughter. Appellant sought passage on it, but was told by the train crew that it did not stop at his station, and they could not stop for him. He boarded the train notwithstanding, and offered to pay the conductor additional fare to Sebree, a stopping point, or to get off at Madisonville, also a stopping point for that train. The conductor declined to accept that ticket for any purpose on that train, and appellant was ejected at Guthrie.

The circuit court directed a verdict for appellee at the close of plaintiff's evidence. Common carriers may make reasonable rules for the running of their trains. It is a reasonable rule that provides a local train for stopping at all stations, and through trains that stop only at populous places, and at greater distances apart. These through trains are expected to carry passengers intending to continue their journeys on other connecting roads. The volume of such traffic is considerable. The interests of such passengers are certainly entitled to as much consideration as of others. In order to make fast time, to meet connecting trains on time, and to expedite the passenger traffic of a large system, such fast through service is deemed indispensable. It would be unreasonable and unjust to compel the carrier to disarrange its schedule, and jeopardize its trains and the lives of its passengers and servants by compelling the carrier at every whim of a passenger to stop trains at any station, although contrary to the established schedule, for as trains so scheduled are not expected by train dispatchers and the operatives of other trains at nonscheduled points, the movements of other trains are regulated with that fact in mind; therefore, if any passenger could compel a change of schedule stops, many times at places where there was not a telegraph station, there would be great danger of collision by other trains coming unexpectedly. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Miles, 100 Ky., 84.)

A passenger purchasing a ticket for transportation to a station on the carrier's line contracts to take his passage on a train scheduled to stop at that point. Nor can the carrier be required to alter the contract by substituting another for it. As between the passenger and the train conductor the ticket is the sole evidence of the contract. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lyons, 104 Ky., 28.) A train conductor is not authorized to accept the fare from a passenger to a station not scheduled for a stop by his train. (Flood v. C. & O. Ry. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 2136.) He can not, upon the same principle, accept a ticket from a passenger to a point not scheduled for his train to stop. It is contrary to the rules for operating through trains for conductors to do either. They can not confer rights by contract that are violative of their known duties to other passengers, to the employer, and to the public. Nor can they vary the contract already made between the carrier and the passenger so as to cause the latter's right to flow in a different channel. (Schmidt v. C., C., & St. L. Ry. Co., 25 Ky. Law Rep., 11.) Appellant did not offer to pay the fare to Sebree or Madisonville. He showed no right of action against the carrier. The nonsuit was properly ordered.

Judgment affirmed.

CRABTREE v. CRABTREE.

(Filed March 3, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Divorce and alimony—The evidence in this case was examined, and held that the alimony allowed appellee was reasonable, but as the judgment gave her the absolute title to the land directed to be allotted to her, and it is declared by section 2123, Kentucky Statutes, that no allotment of alimony to the wife out of the husband's real estate shall divest of the fee-simple title thereto, the judgment to that extent was erroneous, and upon the return of the case to the lower court a supplemental order may be entered limiting appellee's interest in the land to an estate for life.

W. L. Porter for appellant.

Duff & Hutcherson for appellee.

Appeal from Monroe Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

After living together in the married state for about twenty-two years, during which time nine children were born to them, appellant and appellee separated. Soon after the separation she sued for a divorce and alimony upon three grounds: First, that appellant, while they lived together, habitually behaved toward her for not less than six months in such cruel and inhuman manner as to indicate a settled aversion to her, and to permanently destroy her peace and happiness; second, such cruel beating of and injury to her at the hands of appellant as indicated an outrageous temper in him, and probable danger to her life, or great bodily injury from her remaining with him; third, that appellant was living in adultery with another woman.

The appellant resisted the appellee's right to a divorce and claim to alimony by answer controverting the grounds therefor set forth in her petition. His answer was also made a counterclaim, and a divorce from appellee therein demanded upon the ground of her alleged abandonment of him of a year's duration. The chancellor, upon the issues and proof presented by the record, dismissed appellant's counterclaim, granted appellee a divorce a vinculo, gave her one-half of appellant's land and personal property as alimony; also the custody of the four younger children, and allowed her costs, including an attorney's fee of $75. Appellant complains of so much of the judgment as gave appellee custody of the four infant children and allowed her alimony, and asks its reversal as to these matters. Although this court has no revisory power of a judgment for divorce, it may consider the grounds and proof upon which it was granted, as well as the financial condition of the parties, in determining whether an allowance of alimony complained of is reasonable.

In the case at bar the evidence was conclusive as to the wife's right to a divorce, for it shows beyond question that appellant often cursed her; that he repeatedly kicked her, assaulted and beat her with his hand, whipped her with a switch, and on one occasion at least beat her with a stick or club. According to the evidence he frequently drove appellee out of the house in which they lived. Appellant's cruelty to appellee became so constant and unbearable as to finally compel her to leave her home and infant children, and take up her residence with a married daughter. The evidence fails to show that appellee gave appellant any cause for his brutal treatment of her, and the only reason that can be imagined for her forbearance and submission to the maltreatment to which she was so long subjected at the hands of appellant was her affection for, and disinclination to be separated from, her children, but the intolerable cruelty of appellant, as manifested by his treatment of appellee, is not the only vice attributed to him by the evidence, it also reveals his moral depravity in another and not less revolting aspect, in that it disclosed his adulterous relations with a woman of lewd character, continuing through several years of his married life. Indeed he was still living in adultery with this woman when the witnesses in this case gave their depositions. Several of them testified that appellant had for years maintained his paramour in a house he provided for her, and that after his separation from appellee this paramour spent much of her time at his home with his and appellee's children. It is patent, therefore, that appellee should have appealed to the chancellor for a legal separation from appellant, and to remove her infant children from the evil associations with which their father had surrounded them. Manifestly appellant is not a proper person to have the custody of the four younger children, and in view of the excellent character given appellee by all the witnesses whose depositions appear in the record, the chancellor is to be commended for placing the children in her custody.

Generally the father is entitled to the custody of his infant child, but if it is made to appear that the father's character or habits are such as to unfit him to have the custody of the child, and the mother is shown to be a proper person to have the care of it, the custody should be confided to her. (McBride v. McBride, 1 Bush, 15.)

"The chancellor should look to the happiness and comfort of the children, and confide their keeping to that parent whose time and attention can best be devoted to their care and welfare." (Irwin v. Irwin, 96 Ky., 818.)

It is insisted for appellant that the amount of alimony allowed appellee is excessive; that in no event should it have exceeded one-third of the appellant's real and personal estate. Kentucky Statutes, section 2122, provides: "If the wife have not sufficient estate of her own she may, on a divorce obtained by her, have such allowance out of that of her husband as shall be deemed equitable." * * *

The evidence shows that appellee has no estate in her own right, but that during their married life she, by industry and economy, assisted appellant in accumulating a considerable estate, and that he owns 200 acres of land worth from $1,800 to $1,500, and personal property worth about the same amount. In view of her having the care and support of the four small children, and of the further fact that she is in feeble health, we do not think the alimony allowed her by the chancellor, viz., one-half of appellant's land and personal property, was unreasonable or excessive. Appellant complains that the judgment gives appellee absolute title to the half of appellant's land the commissioners are ordered to allot her, and that as it is declared by section 2123, of the statute, supra, that no allotment of alimony to the wife out of the husband's real estate shall divest him of the fee-simple title thereto, the judgment to that extent was erroneous. While the judgment is not explicit on that point, we construe it to mean that she is to have use of the land for life, and it is apparent that no injury can result to appellant by reason thereof, as the court can, upon the return of the commissioner's report of allotment, enter a supplemental judgment limiting her interest in the land given her to the use thereof for her life.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

THE LINDENBERGER LAND CO., &c. v. PARK & CO.

(Filed March 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Street construction—Ordinance—Changing of grade—Section 2880, Kentucky Statutes, providing that changes of plans may be had upon the agreement of the board of public works by consent of contractor, it was no defense to the warrant that the grade was changed so as to lessen the cost of improvement after the contract had been let.

2. Same—Where it is not contended that lots affected by the improvement is in territory defined by squares, it is not a defense that the territory in which appellant's lots are situated was divided into squares by principal streets, and that, therefore, the defining of a taxing district so as to bear one-half of the costs was unauthorized.

Lane & Harrison for appellants.

Wm. Furlong for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This appeal attacks the validity of apportionment warrants issued by the board of public works of the city of Louisville for the construction of the carriage way of a portion of Frankfort avenue. Appellant's lots are on the south side of the street.

The ordinance providing for the work fixed the grade of the street. After the contract had been let the common council, by resolution, consented to by the contractor and recommended by the board of public works, changed the grade so as to lessen the cost of the improvement. It is complained that this invalidated the contract. It is expressly provided that changes of plans of work may be had upon the written agreement of the board of public works by consent of the contractor. (Section 2880, Kentucky Statutes, 1908.) So long as they do not add to the burden of the adjacent lot owners, but reduce the cost to the lot owners, as was done by the change in this case, it is no defense to the warrants. (Orth v. Park, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1910; Barber Asphalt Co. v. Garr, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2233; Schuster v. Barber Asphalt Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2346.)

The former rule existing under previous statutes on this subject has been modified so as to allow a reasonable and just execution of the work. Technical objections, formerly interposed to defeat wholly the claim of the contractor who had done the work, are now made to yield by the more just provision of the statute, that the court may adjust the rights of the parties after the completion and acceptance of the work if there is some variance, yet is a substantial compliance with the ordinance and contract. Another objection is, that the territory on the north side of Frankfort avenue improved was divided into squares by principal streets, and that, therefore, the defining of a taxing district on that side of the street to bear one-half of the cost of the improvement in question was unauthorized. However that might be, it is unavailing to appellants, for it is not contended that the territory embracing their lots is so defined. Nor would the invalidity of the apportionment warrants of the north side of the way at all affect appellants. The territory in which their property is situated is made to bear only one-half of the cost of the improvement, that is, to the center of the street.

There is no error in the record prejudicial to appellants, and the judgment is affirmed.

BROWNING v. WAYLAND.

(Filed March 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Former appeal—Costs—Judgment for—The judgment below only determined that appellant is not entitled to the strip so as to include appellee's right of passway, and subject to this right the title is in appellant, and where appellee had in no way violated appellant's right, no judgment for costs should have been entered against appellee. (Wayland v. Browning, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 485.)

R. L. Greene and C. C. Cram for appellant.

H. Clay White for appellee.

Appeal from Grant Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

In Wayland v. Browning, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 485, the facts are stated out of which this controversy arose. In that case it was held that Wayland did not own the sixteen-foot strip in controversy, but only a right of way over it, and the judgment of the circuit court dismissing his petition, seeking to have his title quieted to the strip, was affirmed.

In the case before us Browning sought by a petition in equity to have his title to the strip quieted and to restrain Snow from traveling over it. During the progress of the action a judgment in his favor against Snow was entered, Snow withdrawing all claim to the land. On final hearing the circuit court dismissed the petition as to Wayland, and Browning appeals.

It is not shown in the record that Wayland had violated any right of the plaintiff. He was entitled to a passway over the strip. The plaintiff was not entitled to have his title quieted as against Wayland to the extent of the easement belonging to Wayland, which entitled him to pass over the strip. The same circuit court which rendered the judgment, which was affirmed in Wayland v. Browning, also rendered the judgment which is appealed from here. The judgment in this case is not to be construed as affecting in any way Browning's title to the strip, subject to Wayland's right of passway. It simply determines that Browning is not entitled to the sixteen-foot strip so as to exclude Wayland's right of passway. Wayland is entitled to a passway over the sixteen-foot strip, and subject to this the title to the strip is in Browning. This is the meaning and legal effect of the judgment of the circuit court. The circuit court properly entered no judgment for costs against Wayland as it was not shown that he had in any way violated any right of Browning's. Appellant and appellee will each pay his own costs in this court.

Judgment affirmed.

COMBS v. BURT & BRABB LUMBER CO., &c.

(Filed March 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Evidence—Failure of proof—An examination of this case shows that there was a total failure of proof to sustain appellant's cause of action, and this being true had a jury been awarded him, the court would have been compelled, under the proof, to peremptorily instruct the jury to find against him.

Phillips & Fugate and Salyers & Baker for appellant.

J. J. C. Bach and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellee.

Appeal from Knott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant, who was plaintiff below, instituted this action against Burt & Brabb Lumber Co. and Elisha Hensley, its alleged agent, to recover $211, the alleged balance due him on a logging contract. There is no disagreement as to the number of logs hauled under this contract, there being 998.

The appellees controverted the petition and pleaded a final and complete settlement of this logging contract, made with appellant, after the completion of the hauling and the payment of the balance found due him, to wit, the sum of 81 cents. It appears that the appellee, Hensley, on August 29, 1901, in his own name, made a contract with one Joe Vermillion by which Vermillion was to haul these logs and put them on the bank of Bald Fork of Kentucky river, near appellant's dwelling house, at the price of 14 cents per hundred feet; that Hensley advanced him hay, corn and other things which he hauled to the house of Combs, and proceeded to prepare the roads for hauling out the logs. Before any logs were hauled another contract was entered into by which Vermillion and Combs became partners. This contract was similar to the first one, except each one was to receive one-half of the contract price. It was proven, without much contradiction, that the advancements made to Vermillion were to be charged to the job, and credited to Hensley on the final settlement. Appellant and Vermillion hauled 526 of the logs, when some slight trouble arose between them, and Vermillion quit and appellant completed the contract by hauling the remaining 472 logs. It appears that Hensley advanced to Vermillion and the firm, prior to the time Vermillion quit, about $226, and after that time paid to appellant about $224, the two sums making the whole amount due for hauling the logs at the contract price.

The appellant claims that after Vermillion quit the job he made a new contract with Hensley, by which Hensley agreed to pay him a reasonable price for hauling the remaining logs, and that 20 cents per hundred feet was a reasonable price, as the logs he hauled were further away from the place of delivery than the first logs. This was denied by appellees. The proof showed that the logs hauled by appellant were further away from the place of delivery than the first lot, and it was also proven, without contradiction, that appellant should have had more for this long haul, but that matter was to be adjusted and equalized between appellant and his partner, Vermillion. The only attempted proof of the making of a new contract was the statement of appellant and one witness, to the effect that appellee Hensley said to appellant, "Go ahead and finish the job, and I will do what is right." This was denied, but admitting it to be true, we hardly think that it was sufficient to establish any new contract or any change in the written one, as there was no additional consideration shown upon which to base it.

There is some proof tending to show that appellant hauled a few more than 998 logs, but whether he did or not, he sued for the hauling of the only the number named. The appellant also complains that the right of a trial by jury was denied him. In answer to this it is sufficient to say that even if there had been a jury, the court would have been compelled to have given a peremptory instruction to it to find against him, as there was a total failure of proof on his part to sustain his alleged cause of action.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HARGIS, &c. v. PARKER, JUDGE, &c.

(Filed March 10, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Writ of prohibition—Court of Appeals—Authority to issue—Section 110 of the Constitution of Kentucky, which provides, among other things: "That the Court of Appeals shall have power to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it general control of inferior jurisdictions," confers the power and jurisdiction upon this court to intervene by the writ of prohibition to stay the inferior courts of the State from proceeding out of their jurisdiction, and such writ may issue whether or not there is an appeal whether or not it ought to issue in advance of the decision of the lower court, or whether the party will be left to his remedy by appeal, will depend on whether that remedy is given, or whether it is adequate or not.

2. Counties—Concurrent jurisdiction—Homicide—Accessories—Fraudulent proceedings to fix jurisdiction—Where two counties have concurrent jurisdiction of parties charged as accessories before the fact to a murder, and such parties upon their own instigation, or that of some of them acting for all, procure a fraudulent proceeding, by having themselves arrested in one of the counties and executing bond, with the design not to have a trial of the charge there, or elsewhere, but as a cloak to prevent a trial elsewhere, such proceeding is void and no protection to the parties procuring it, against a prosecution subsequently instituted in good faith in the other county.

3. County officials—Concurring in fraud—The fact that the fraudulent proceeding was put in operation by the legally constituted officers of the county acting therein, does not bind the Commonwealth, as the courts which administer the law may protect their own jurisdiction from mere subterfuges intended to defeat their jurisdiction.

4. Accessories before the fact—Acts confined to one county—Where, in a homicide, the wounding occurred in one county and the death in another county, the fact that the accused accessories before the fact all resided in the county where the wound was inflicted and all their alleged acts are admitted to have been done in that county, does not give that county the sole jurisdiction to try them for the offense charged.

J. Smith Hays, Lewis McQuown, Hazelrigg & Hazelrigg, J. B. Hanna, John M. Stevenson and J. J. C. Bach for petitioners.

J. R. Allen, N. B. Hays, C. H. Morris, J. R. Morton, A. F. Byrd and B. R. Jouett for respondents.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear on motion for writ of prohibition.

The respondent, the Hon. Watts Parker, is the judge of the Twenty-second Judicial District of Kentucky, comprising Fayette county. The plaintiffs were indicted by the grand jury of Fayette county, charged with the murder of James Cockrill. A bench warrant issued upon the indictment, and was about to be served upon the plaintiffs in this proceeding, when they appeared in this court and asked that a writ of prohibition issue against the respondent, Parker, to prevent his taking or exercising jurisdiction over the persons of the plaintiffs. The facts upon which the application is based are, that James Cockrill was shot and wounded in Breathitt county, this State, in July, 1902; he was immediately conveyed to Fayette county for treatment of his wound, but shortly thereafter died in Fayette county; he was shot and killed, it is alleged, by Curtis Jett, who has since been tried and convicted of the crime and sentenced to death. Jett was indicted by the grand jury of Breathitt county, though he was tried in Harrison county upon a change of venue. The claim of the plaintiffs is that, as alleged by the State, they were accessories before the fact to the murder, and that their acts, if done as claimed, were committed wholly in Breathitt county; that on December 8, 1904, warrants were issued against the plaintiffs by one James W. Edwards, a justice of the peace for Breathitt county, charging them with this murder. They were arrested upon the warrants, carried before the magistrate, and were by him held over to answer such indictment as the grand jury might find against them, and were in the meantime released upon bail. On January 24, 1905, the Fayette county grand jury returned the indictment charging the plaintiffs with the same murder in that county, and it is under this last-named indictment that the Fayette court is proposing to take jurisdiction of the plaintiffs and to try the case. Since January 24, 1905, and in fact since the original petition was filed in this court, the grand jury of Breathitt county has been convened in regular session, has examined into the alleged murder of James Cockrill, and has returned in that court several indictments charging the plaintiffs with the murder of Cockrill. Upon these facts the plaintiffs assert that the authorities of Breathitt county first took jurisdiction of the offense and of the persons of the accused, and thereby affixed the exclusive jurisdiction to try them in the courts of that county. It is also contended by plaintiffs that the provisions of the statutes and Code of this State allowing a trial to be had in either county where any part of an offense may have been committed, is violative of the Constitution.

Judge Parker disclaims any intent or purpose in the proceeding other than to discharge his official duty as he sees it. The Commonwealth of Kentucky, at the request of the attorney general, and of the Commonwealth's attorney of the Twenty second Judicial District, was allowed to be made a party defendant, and has defended this suit. The contentions of the Commonwealth are as follows: First, that the writ should not be issued until the petitioners have first applied to the circuit court and had the question of its jurisdiction passed on by that court; second, that under the statutes of this State Fayette and Breathitt counties have concurrent jurisdiction of the offense charged in the indictment, and that the county where proceedings were first begun takes the exclusive jurisdiction; third, that proceedings were first begun in Fayette county; fourth, that the alleged proceedings in Breathitt county previous to the indictment returned in January are a myth, or, if in fact had, were the result of collusion between the accused and the officers, including the examining magistrate, were originated for the fraudulent purpose of preventing any prosecution, and were never intended to have been made public except as a defense to the jurisdiction of Fayette county. The 110th section of the Constitution of Kentucky reads: "The Court of Appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co extensive with the State, under such restrictions and regulations not repugnant to this Constitution, as may from time to time be prescribed by law. Said court shall have power to issue such writs as may be necessary to give it a general control of inferior jurisdictions."

The last sentence was not in any previous Constitution of this State.

From that fact, and inasmuch as it had been held under the former Constitutions, that this court might issue the common law writ of prohibition against any inferior court proceeding out of its jurisdiction (Arnold v. Shields, 5 Dana, 18; Sasseen v. Hammond, 18 B. Mon., 673), provided this court had appellate jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it was said that the last sentence of section 110 of the Constitution "seems to have been intended * * * to give the Court of Appeals plenary power to issue writs in every case when necessary to give it general control of inferior jurisdiction." (Hindman v. Toney, 97 Ky., 413, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 286.) Ordinarily this court might well refuse to issue the writ before the question of jurisdiction had been made in the lower court, for it might be presumed that until that court had proceeded out of its jurisdiction, or had evinced by an order of court that it proposed doing so, that it would not, or, at any rate, that the complainant was not injured, nor threatened with injury till then. But this is not necessarily so in all cases. If the situation disclosed be such as that to take the ordinary course would be of itself to subject the complainant to irreparable loss, the writ should issue without the objections having been made below. The matter of judicial courtesy should yield to substantial personal rights of litigants, such as a sacrifice of their liberty. If it be true that the Fayette court is proceeding without jurisdiction, it is not substantial justice that it should be allowed to take the bodies of the complainants, confine them in jail without bail as it might do at its discretion, subject the parties to enormous expense in defending the case, even if it went no further than a trial of the question of jurisdiction, and say to them, "your remedy is solely by appeal if you have been wronged." We think the section of the Constitution, though it be deemed only declaratory of the common law on the subject, confers the power and jurisdiction on this court to intervene by the writ of prohibition to stay the inferior courts of the State from proceeding out of their jurisdiction. It may issue whether or not there is an appeal; whether it ought to issue in advance of the decision of the lower court, or whether the party will be left to his remedy by appeal, will depend on whether that remedy is given, and whether it is adequate or not. This court will be slow to use the writ where there is an appeal, but its valuable office to the citizen who is being oppressed by unlawful assumption of judicial authority will not be limited by set rules. It is believed the general principles regulating the use of this writ are so well established and understood that it is unnecessary to further define them.

It is not an open question in this State whether an offense committed partly in two counties may be tried in either. Whatever may have been the common law rule, though it seems to have been substantially as now declared by our statute, legislation in this State has settled it, unless it be said that the Constitution is violated thereby. Section 1147, Kentucky Statutes (1903), provides: "If a mortal wound, or other violence or injury be inflicted, or poison be administered, in one county or corporation, and death ensue in another, the offense may be prosecuted in either."

And section 21 of the Criminal Code provides: "If an offense be committed partly in one and partly in another county, or if acts and their effects, constituting an offense occur in different counties, the jurisdiction is in either county."

If such was the common law, as we think it was, "a jury of the vicinage" at common law, was a jury selected from the neighborhood of the crime, which might be either county where it was in part committed. (Commonwealth, By, &c. v. Jones, Judge, 26 Ky. Law Rep., 867.) It has always been understood that the right to trial by a "jury of the vicinage" was subject to certain necessary exceptions, such as changes of venue, and the like. (Parker v. Commonwealth, 12 Bush, 191; Adkins v. Commonwealth, 98 Ky., 539; Smith v. Commonwealth, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1470.) This was held to be the law under the old Constitution before the provision found in section 11 of the present Constitution was adopted. (Commonwealth v. Davidson, 91 Ky., 162.) As it is admitted that the shot that killed Cockrill was fired in Breathitt county, and that his death from the wound occurred within one year and a day thereafter in Fayette county, they each had concurrent jurisdiction of the crime. Manifestly the courts of two counties could not try the same defendants for the same offense. There must be a time when the jurisdiction of one county becomes exclusive and that of the other county is lost. Section 24, Criminal Code, is: "If the jurisdiction of an offense be in two or more counties, the defendant shall be tried in the county in which he is first arrested, unless an indictment for the offense be pending in another county."

A literal application of the last section might lead to absurdities certainly never contemplated in the purpose of its enactment. It was so held in Massie v. Commonwealth, 90 Ky., 485. Horse stealing is punishable by statute in the county where the horse may be stolen, or in any county into which it may be carried. Massie took a horse in Montgomery county and carried it into Bourbon. At the instance of the Montgomery county authorities, and before an indictment in that county or elsewhere, they caused him to be arrested in Bourbon and brought back to Montgomery for trial, where he was convicted. He relied on section 24, above quoted, in bar of the jurisdiction of the Montgomery court. It would seem that literally his objection was well taken, but this court said: "This provision was not inserted in the Code for the benefit of the criminal, but to prevent a conflict of jurisdiction in cases where it belonged to more than one county."

It is conceded, as it must be under the statute quoted, and the decisions of this court, if adhered to, that where two or more counties have concurrent jurisdiction of an offense committed partly in each of them, that no substantial legal right of the accused can be invaded whether one or the other takes cognizance of the matter. So long as the accused is not put in jeopardy by the proceedings in both counties it can not be the subject of complaint from him which of them takes the jurisdiction and proceeds with his trial, so long as only one does so. The fact may be accepted as established by the proof in this case that magistrate Edwards issued warrants against plaintiffs on December 8, 1904, charging them with the murder of James Cockrill. It may also be accepted as established, for the purposes of this hearing, that the accused were arrested or voluntarily surrendered themselves to the custody of the magistrate, who signed an order committing them to the circuit court of Breathitt county for examination of the charge by the grand jury of that county, and that they executed bonds for their appearance before that court.

It is contended for the Commonwealth, though, and this is the main question presented for decision, that these proceedings are void. For the plaintiffs the argument is that whatever may have been the motives of the officers of Breathitt county, or however their action might have been induced, the fact is that, having jurisdiction to do what was done, the accused are actually bound by the proceedings, and the law's machinery being set in motion, under section 24, Criminal Code, the jurisdiction of Breathitt county becomes exclusive. The court has come to the conclusion upon the evidence before it that the arrests of the plaintiffs in Breathitt county were procured upon their own instigation, or that of some of them acting for all, with the design not to have a trial of the charge there or elsewhere, but as a cloak to prevent the trial elsewhere. If such be not the fact, the plaintiffs are peculiarly unfortunate in the matter of certain coincidences shown in the proof, as well as certain discrepancies between the record of the 'squire's proceedings and the admitted truth. Being of this opinion as to the facts, the question recurs, do the proceedings in Breathitt before the examining magistrate confer exclusive jurisdiction of the plaintiffs on the courts of that county? A judgment of a court may be a punishment, or it may be a protection. It may or may not be a bar, according to whether he who relies on it is in a position to do so. If it be obtained by fraud, the one procuring it ought not to be permitted to use it as a protection. That would be to allow one to profit by his own fraud, which is a doctrine repugnant to the law, and wholly untenable by any kind of right thinking. It is said that the Commonwealth has acted in the matter in Breathitt, through her legally constituted officers, whose authority is as complete to bind the Commonwealth as is that of the officers of Fayette, or any other county. If the Commonwealth is bound, it is upon principles analogous to agency, that he who sets another to do his business is bound by such agent's acts within the scope of his authority. Which is as it should be. But there is a necessary exception to that rule, which is, if the agent, in fraud of his principal, colludes with his opponent, so that instead of acting for his principal, he becomes the tool or accomplice of the opponent, then the principal ought not to be bound by his agent's acts; nor is he. As between two persons, this is undeniably the law. The State will not be given less consideration in matters of public concern than any individual. The courts which administer the law may protect their own jurisdictions from machinations, from palpable subterfuges intended merely to defeat their jurisdiction. The sovereignty of the law depends upon the power of the courts to maintain the integrity of their jurisdiction against mere devices that would defeat them. Judgments obtained by extrinsic fraud ought not to bind anybody not a party to the fraud. They ought to be, and are, subject to impeachment either by direct or collateral attack. This is so, although the court rendering them had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. (Grignon v. Astor, 2 Howard, 819; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S., 68; Cole v. Cunningham, 188 U. S., 112; Brunk v. Means, 11 B. Mon., 214; Talbott v. Todd, 5 Dana, 110.)

In Carrington v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky., 88, the accused was indicted for a violation of the liquor laws. His offense was a misdemeanor. A statute provided that "whenever any person shall be lodged in jail in default of bail, being charged with a misdemeanor," whether under an indictment or not, the judge of the quarterly court, the circuit court not being in session, had jurisdiction to try the case. The defendant surrendered to the jailer, failed to give bond, and was brought before the quarterly court, tried, convicted and fined, notwithstanding the circuit court proceeded afterwards to try him under the same indictment, rejecting his plea of former conviction in bar. This court said: "The circuit court properly refused to permit its jurisdiction to be ousted, and to allow the prisoner, by a device so transparent, to choose the tribunal in which he would be tried. A judgment of acquittal thus procured was not a bar, and was properly disregarded."

Plaintiffs seek to distinguish Carrington's case from this one upon the suggestion that the quarterly court had not jurisdiction of the case because Carrington was not in fact in jail, but was simply in the custody of the jailer. The court, however, did not rest its decision upon that feature of the case. It was referred to only as indicating a lack of good faith in the matter. The court said: "The evidence in this case shows that the prisoner never was committed to jail, nor was he in good faith committed to the custody of the jailer."

From this it appears that had the defendant been in good faith committed to the custody of the jailer it would not have been necessary to have gone through the idle form of locking and unlocking the jail door. Emphasis was laid upon the lack of good faith in the defendant's surrendering himself to the jailer's custody in this language: "Whatever was done toward bringing the case within the letter of the statute was evidently done to avoid the imprisonment of the defendant, but to secure a trial before the county judge. * * * The evidence in this case shows conclusively that the surrender of the prisoner to the jailer was merely formal, and merely with the design to give the quarterly judge jurisdiction, and not for the safe-keeping of the prisoner, or because he was either unable to give bail or unwilling to do so, except for the purpose of bringing his case within the statute."

Of all this the court said: "It is to be treated as if the prisoner had procured himself to be accused, arrested and tried, and then attempted to plead the judgment thus obtained in bar; for although he had been regularly indicted, he procured a trial in the quarterly court by a fraud upon the statute giving that court jurisdiction."

In applying that decision to this case it follows, a fortiori, that one accused of a crime can not procure himself to be arrested and bound over under form of law, to give jurisdiction to a county of his preference in fraud of the right of the prosecuting officers acting in good faith to fix it elsewhere if they choose to do so in the interest of a fair trial. The position of this court on this subject appears to be in harmony with the trend of authority elsewhere. (State v. Colvin, 11 Hump., 599, 54 Am. Dec., 60; Watkins v. State, 68 Ind., 427, 34 Am. Rep., 273; Commonwealth v. Dascom, 11 Mass., 404; State v. Simpson, 28 Minn., 66, 41 Am. Rep., 270.)

No reflection can be indulged against the judge and prosecuting attorney of the Breathitt Circuit Court. Their fitness and willingness to enforce the law is in no sense involved. This case, as made up on the trial, has to do solely with what occurred before the prosecution took any form in the Breathitt Circuit Court. In view of the language of section 24 of the Crimnal Code the case is resting upon the bona fides of the alleged prior arrest in Breathitt county. If that was not, properly speaking, an arrest of the accused, then as the Fayette Circuit Court first indicted them for the offense of murdering James Cockrill, it took jurisdiction of the matter, by virtue of section 24 of the Criminal Code, to the exclusion of the Breathitt Circuit Court.

The final contention of the plaintiff is that they are charged as accessories before the fact to the murder of Cockrill, and as their alleged acts are admitted to have been done in Breathitt county, under the authority of Tully v. Commonwealth, 18 Bush, 142, that county alone has jurisdiction to try them. Tully was accused as accessory after the fact to a murder committed in Scott county. The Scott court was held to be without jurisdiction, as the act of 1796 (1 Statute Laws, 530), held in that case not to have been repealed, but expressly continued in force by the Revised Statutes then in effect, provided: "An accessory to a murder or felony committed shall be examined by the court of that county and tried by the court in whose jurisdiction he became accessory, and shall answer upon his arraignment, and receive such judgment, order, execution, pains and penalties as is used in other cases of felony."

But the saving clause contained in the Revised Statutes, which continued the practice provided by the act of 1796, is not in the present statutes or Code of Practice. Section 8 of the present Criminal Code reads: "All laws coming within the purview of this act shall become repealed when this act goes into effect, except as provided in the preceding section." (The preceding section relates alone to prosecution begun before January 1, 1877.)

The Criminal Code of Practice regulates the trial of all criminal prosecutions, but it does not contain the provision from the act of 1796 just quoted. Section 1128, Kentucky Statutes, provides: "In all felonies, accessories before the fact shall be liable to the same punishment as principals, and may be prosecuted jointly with principals, or severally, though the principal be not taken or tried, unless otherwise provided in this chapter."

This section is found under the title of "Crimes and Punishments," in Kentucky Statutes (Barbour), which this court declared in Buchanan v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky. —, "to be a complete system of statutory law relating to crime and punishment, and as a consequence to supersede or repeal all existing statutes on that subject." If accessories before the fact can be indicted jointly with principals, and if the principals could be indicted in Fayette, the accessory before the fact could also be indicted and tried there, although his act may have been committed elsewhere. It follows that the present statute and the act of 1796 are incompatible in their provisions, and the latter must of necessity supersede the former.

In Commonwealth v. Parker, 108 Ky., 673, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 368, this precise question arose. The accessory before the fact, whose sole connection with the crime was shown to have been in Kenton county, was indicted and tried in Jefferson county. The court said: "We do not desire to go further than is necessary to decide the question here presented, i. e., that an accessory before the fact, who devises in one county a scheme to commit a crime in another, thereafter actually committed, or who in one county procures the commission of a crime in another, is, under section 21 of the Code, properly triable in either county."

The court is of opinion that the Fayette Circuit Court has now exclusive jurisdiction to try the case made by the indictment returned by the grand jury, and that the proceedings before Justice of the Peace Edwards are a nullity, in so far as they attempt to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of Breathitt county. The application for the writ of prohibition against the judge of the Fayette Circuit Court is consequently denied. The temporary writ heretofore issued is discharged.

Whole court sitting except Judge Cantrill, absent.

BALL v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed March 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Evidence—As to whether or not there was any evidence conducing to show the guilt of appellant, for this question see section 340, Criminal Code, and note 20, and cases there cited.

2. Same—Where one Flaverty testified upon the trial of this case that he was so near the parties at the time the shot was fired that blood spurted from the wound inflicted upon deceased upon his (witness') clothing, and the appellant introduced testimony to show that this witness was not present at the time of the difficulty, Held—That the Commonwealth had the right in corroboration of its witness, Flaverty, to show that there was blood upon his clothing, and where appellant's witness did not state what Flaverty said to him about it, there was no error.

3. Same—Conduct of Commonwealth's attorney—Where it appears that the Commonwealth's attorney did not connect appellant in any way with previous crimes in Bell county, this language: "That more than a score of men, perhaps, had been killed in Middlesborough, Bell county, Kentucky, and nothing had been said about it, because the people up there were afraid to talk about it," was not prejudicial to appellant.

W. G. Colson, O. V. Riley and J. G. Rollins for appellant.

N. B. Hays and Chas. H. Morris for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment of the Bell Circuit Court, convicting appellant of the crime of manslaughter and fixing his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for the term of twenty-one years.

The appellant seeks a reversal, and assigns three grounds: First, that the evidence did not authorize the verdict; second, the court erred in the admission of evidence; and, third, improper remarks of the Commonwealth's attorney in his concluding argument to the jury. Appellant was indicted and tried for the crime of murder, and was convicted as above stated. We deem it of no benefit to give in detail the facts proven as they appear in the record. It is sufficient to say that there was some evidence upon which to base this judgment of conviction, and this court has no power to reverse a judgment of conviction in a criminal case upon the sole ground there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict, being restricted to the single inquiry, whether there was any evidence before the jury conducing to show the guilt of the accused. (Section 340, Criminal Code, and note 20, and the cases there referred to.)

On the trial the Commonwealth introduced one Flaverty, who was the most damaging witness introduced against the appellant. He stated that he was so near the parties at the time the fatal shot was fired that the blood spurted from the wound given the deceased upon his, the witness', clothing. The appellant introduced witnesses showing from facts and circumstances that the witness, Flaverty, was not present at the difficulty. The Commonwealth in rebuttal introduced one A. Goff, and proved by him that on the night after the killing, or the night after that, he saw blood upon the clothing of Flaverty. He was then asked if Flaverty made any statement to him with reference to it, and he answered "yes," but he was never asked to state, nor did he state, what Flaverty said about it. This is the admission of incompetent testimony referred to. We are of the opinion that the Commonwealth had the right, in corroboration of its witness Flaverty, to show that there was blood upon his clothing. As the witness did not state what Flaverty said to him about it, there was no error.

In the motion for a new trial the appellant ascribed to the Commonwealth's attorney the following improper language: "That more than a score of men had been killed in Middlesborough, Ky., by parties connected with the defendant, and that nothing had been said about it, because the people up there were afraid to talk about it." We find from the record that the following was the language used by the Commonwealth's attorney: "That more than a score of men, perhaps, had been killed in Middlesborough, Bell county, Kentucky, and nothing had been said about it, because the people up there were afraid to talk about it." It appears that he did not connect appellant in any way with the previous crimes in that city and vicinity, and his language was not prejudicial to appellant. The appellant does not complain of the instructions of the court.

He filed his motion and grounds for a new trial, and one of them was newly-discovered evidence. In support of this he filed many affidavits.

By section 281 of the Criminal Code it is provided that the decision of the court upon a motion for a new trial shall not be subject to exceptions, and not subject to review by this court, and by reason thereof this court is powerless to give any relief for any error committed in overruling motions for a new trial.

For these reasons the judgment must be affirmed.

Whole court sitting, except Judge Cantrill.

LOUISVILLE RAILWAY CO. v. SHEEHAN.

(Filed March 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Complaint of misconduct of attorney in argument to jury—Upon the trial of this action for damages against appellant the statement of the attorney for appellee, to the effect that appellant was not required to go into trial without its absent witness, but had the right to file an affidavit as to what its witness would testify, and that in default of this affidavit he:

had a right to conclude that the testimony of this witness would have been in favor of appellee, Held—That as the court instructed the jury to disregard this statement of counsel it must be presumed that the jury obeyed the orders of the court, and that no injury accrued to appellant by reason of this occurrence.

2. Same—The statement of counsel for appellee, to the effect that it was the duty of the conductor to assist appellee in alighting from the car, while unwarranted, was not prejudicial, because at most it was but a mere expression of opinion, and had no weight in influencing the verdict of the jury.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh, David W. Baird and Robt. L. Greene for appellant.

Matt. O'Doherty for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

In attempting to alight from one of appellant's cars at the corner of Fourth and Breokinridge streets, in Louisville, Ky., appellee fell, or was thrown, to the pavement, receiving severe injuries. Claiming that her fall was the result of the negligence of appellant's employes in charge of the car, she instituted this action to recover damages, and a trial resulted in a verdict in her favor for the sum of $1,500.

On this appeal appellant, for reversal, insists only on the failure of the trial court to set aside the empaneling of the jury, and reassign the case to another day for trial, because of the misconduct of attorney for appellee in the closing argument. The first act of misconduct complained of was the statement of the attorney to the jury that appellant had summoned a witness who failed to appear; that it was not required to go to trial without its witness, but had the right to file an affidavit as to what the absent witness would have testified to if present; that in default of this affidavit he had the right to conclude that the testimony of the absent witness would have been in favor of the appellee. Upon objection to this the court told the jury, in positive terms, that they must not regard the statement of counsel with reference to what the evidence of the absent witness would have been. The second act of misconduct consisted in the argument to the jury on the part of appellee's counsel, that it was the duty of the conductor to have assisted appellee to alight from the car to the street. Upon objection the court declined to interfere with this argument.

As to the first of these alleged errors it need only be said that as the court instructed the jury to disregard the statement of counsel as to what the evidence of the absent witness would have been, we must presume they obeyed the orders of the court, and that no injury accrued to the interest of appellant by reason of this occurrence. As to the second, assuming, for the purpose of the case, that the statement of counsel was unwarranted, we do not believe it was prejudicial to appellant's interest; at most, it was a mere expression of the opinion of counsel, and taken in connection with all the evidence in this case and the instruction of the court as to the duty of appellant, we do not believe that it could have had any weight in influencing the verdict of the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

COULSON v. FERREE.

(Filed March 8, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Partnership—Action on claim growing out of—One partner can not maintain an action at law against his copartner on a claim growing out of the partnership transaction until the business and accounts are finally settled, therefore, it was erroneous in this action for the trial court to render judgment in favor of appellee upon the claim sued on.

Mather & Creal for appellant.

Williams & Handley for appellee.

Appeal from Larue Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee, Ferree, instituted this action against the appellant, Ben L. Coulson, and James E. Leadley. His cause of action may be stated by quoting from his petition. It reads as follows: "The plaintiff, E. A. Ferree, states that he and the defendants, Ben L. Coulson and J. E. Leadley, formed a partnership on the — day of —, 18—, for the purpose of manufacturing spokes, swings, grain fans, and other things; that the style of the firm was the Hodgenville Spoke and Lumber Co.; that in accordance with their contract plaintiff put in capital stock $2,500, Ben Coulson, — dollars; Jas. E. Leadley, — dollars, amounting in all to $10,000 in capital stock; that said firm has been in operation from the — day of —, until the — day of —, and that from the time they ceased operation the machinery has been in possession of this plaintiff, the defendants being nonresidents; and that said machinery and capital stock is depreciating in value; and that from the — day of —, until the — day of —, the plaintiff has rendered services and labor under contract at $20 per month, amounting in all to $600. Wherefore, he prays judgment for the dissolution of the partnership, for the settlement of business and accounts of the firm, for the division of the assets that may remain after the payment of the firm debts, and for judgment for $600 for services and labor and all proper relief."

He filed an amended petition which does not aid his cause of action for services rendered the firm, but simply contains averments which, if true, showed that the appellant misappropriated part of the proceeds of two notes which were delivered to him by the firm for negotiation for its benefit. Without referring the case to the commissioner or hearing proof, the court gave appellee judgment against the appellant, Coulson, for $450 for the alleged services.

From the averments of the petition the partnership had not been settled. Until that was done it could not be known how its affairs stood. The plaintiff might or might not have a valid claim for services against the firm. One partner can not maintain an action at law against his copartners on a claim growing out of the partnership transactions until the business is wound up and the accounts finally settled. The reason for the rule is that until there has been an accounting and partnership affairs settled, no cause of action is ascertained to exist.

In Stone v. Mattingly, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 118, the court said: "The allowance of salary was to be out of the proceeds of the business in which the parties hereto were partners. Losses were to be borne by them in proportion to their interests, and upon a settlement of firm matters it might appear that the appellant was indebted to the firm. In that event he would have no right to recover for salary, even if otherwise entitled to it. In any event his right to recover depended upon the state of accounts between him and the appellee as partners. The subject of the suit was a partnership matter. There had been no act of the parties separating this claim from the partnership. The written contract did not do so, because by it any indebtedness on this score was to be paid out of the proceeds of the venture. The claim for it was against the firm, and it is an elementary rule of the law of partnership that, in general, one partner can not sue the other at law on account of a firm transaction, in the absence of a settlement of the partnership accounts." The same rule is enunciated in Lawrence v. Clark, 9 Dana, 259.

The court treated the action as one at law, and rendered judgment on the averments of the petition as we have heretofore stated.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

LAPP & FLERSHEIM v. CLARK'S ADM'R, &c.

(Filed March 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Partnership—Jurisdiction—In this action to compel Bland, surviving partner, and his copartner's administrator, to compel the payment back into the partnership of several thousand dollars which it was alleged Bland had withdrawn after Clark's death, not leaving enough to pay the firm liabilities of about $150, and to subject the assets to the payment of its debts, the evidence establishing the partnership, it was erroneous to dismiss the appellant's petition. The matter in controversy is not alone, the appellant's claim which was less than $200, but as to whether there was a partnership which gives this court jurisdiction of the appeal.

Beard & Marshall and P. J. Beard for appellee T. E. Bland.

Gilbert & Gilbert for appellee Clark, administrator.

Appeal from Shelby Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

R. H. Clark and T. E. Bland entered into this contract:

"1st. This article of agreement, made July 1, 1896, between R. H. Clark and T. E. Bland, both of Shelby county, Kentucky. Said parties have agreed, and by these present do agree, to associate themselves as copartners for the purpose of carrying on the jewelry business on the following terms:

"2d. That said T. E. Bland contribute as his share of the joint stock $2,500 in cash, and that said R. H. Clark contribute as his share the time and attention necessary to conduct the business for their mutual benefit.

"3d. All the net profits accruing from said partnership shall be equally divided, and all expenses, except bad debts, shall be borne by R. H. Clark.

"4th. That book of accounts shall be kept in which shall be entered a full account of all transactions and accounts of said partnership.

"That the stock of jewelry shall stand as security to T. E. Bland for the money invested."

The business was conducted in the name of R. H. Clark. Appellant sold to R. H. Clark a bill of merchandise of about $300. After deducting payments made upon it there is a balance of about $150. Clark died and this suit was brought by appellants against Bland and Clark's administrator for a settlement of the copartnership between Clark and Bland, and to compel Bland to pay back into the copartnership several thousand dollars which it is alleged Bland had withdrawn after Clark's death, leaving not enough to pay the partnership liabilities, and for subjecting the assets to the payment of the partnership debts. The suit was in equity. Its effect, if successful, was to bring into chancery all the assets of the copartnership for the benefit of all its creditors. The circuit court dismissed appellant's petition.

The first question presented is, has this court jurisdiction of the appeal, the amount of appellant's claim being less than $200. The matter in controversy in this suit is not alone the amount of appellant's claim. It is whether there was a partnership between Bland and Clark, Bland denying it; also to recover from Bland a sum considerably more than $200 for the use and benefit of all the creditors in whose behalf the suit may be said to have been instituted by appellants. The motion to dismiss the appeal will, therefore, be overruled. There is testimony that the partnership between Bland and Clark did exist, but aside from that the writing itself shows conclusively that it did.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. SPINKS.

(Filed March 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Costs--Taxation of--Where attorneys for both appellant and appellee withdrew transcript of record from clerk's office of Court of Appeals, the custom having been uniform to charge for but one copy, this court is unwilling to change it. To charge for two copies where they have not been made has not been recognized by the legislature, and would be an undue addition to the cost of litigation, already very burdensome.

Robert Ramsey and W. W. Helm for appellant.

L. J. Crawford and Hazelrigg, Chenault & Hazelrigg for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Chief Justice Hobson delivered the following opinion on motion to correct taxation of costs:

The attorneys for appellant and appellee both withdrew from the clerk's office the transcript in this case, and the clerk has charged both appellant and appellee with a copy in taxing the cost. A motion is now made to correct this. The custom of the office, approved by the court in Parrish v. Ferguson, 83 Ky., 18, and Shackelford v. Phillips, 112 Ky., 568, has been to charge a party with a copy of the transcript when he uses it, though a copy is not in fact made. But the custom has been uniform also only to charge for one copy, though both parties used the transcript. The custom had been sustained on the ground that it has been recognized by the legislature, but the custom so recognized is the custom to charge only one copy, and we are unwilling to extend the custom or to change it. To charge two copies where they have not been made has not been recognized by the legislature, and would be an undue addition to the cost of litigation, already very burdensome. In the case of Owsley v. Owsley, 27 Ky. Law Rep., 180, no extension of the rule was intended to be laid down, but rather a limitation of it.

Motion sustained.

LOUISVILLE BRIDGE CO. v. DODD, &c.
 LOUISVILLE, & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. LOUISVILLE BRIDGE CO.
 (Filed March 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Helm, Bruce & Helm for L. & N. R. R. Co.

Thos. W. Bullitt for Louisville Bridge Co.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle, W. O. Harris and J. C. Dodd for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery Branch, First Division.

Judge O'Rear delivered the following extension of opinion:

In stating the account between the Louisville Bridge Co. and the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. we have not, as indicated in the original opinion, undertaken to figure out precisely what the parties are entitled to, either as charges or credits. It was intended merely that the basis of settlement should be stated, and the form of account in the opinion was only by way of illustration. It occurs to us that the principal of the sum owing by the L., N., A. & C. Ry. Co., called in the record the "Monon," to the bridge company was about $34,697. This principal sum, as decided on the former appeal, as well as is held on this appeal, should in no event be charged to the L. & N. R. R. Co. in its settlement with the bridge company. On the contrary, it should be credited upon the total receipts by the bridge company during the life of the contract of June 5, 1872, out of which were to be satisfied the fixed charges provided by that contract. If there should be a deficit for which the L. & N. R. R. Co. could be made responsible under the contract, it must be shown that the receipts of the bridge company were less than enough to provide the fixed charges called for by the contract. This deficit could not exist if the bridge company had actually collected from another railroad company, say the Monon, $34,000, which it subsequently lost by its own mismanagement. At least it could not exist to that extent.

The circuit court will, therefore, enter this credit in arriving at the state of accounts between the bridge company and the L. & N. R. R. Co.

COMMONWEALTH, FOR USE, &c. v. DONNELLY.

(Filed March 9, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Office and officer—Liens—Application for rule to compel payment of money—This proceeding for a rule to compel a county treasurer to pay into court money that he had collected from the sheriff, which money has upon a former appeal been held a trust fund for the benefit of the taxpayers, was properly refused where the proceeding was in rem, and was only an effort to obtain a personal judgment against the sheriff and his sureties. The treasurer received the money from the sheriff on an admitted debt owing the county by him, and the money not being in lien, and the deposit not having been stayed by garnishee process, the payment was not illegal.

Winfield Buckler for appellants.

Holmes & Ross and Morgan & Hughes for appellee.

Appeal from Nicholas Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

- Ratliff, as sheriff of Nicholas county, collected some $3,200 from the taxpayers of that county under a void levy. It was held on a former appeal that he held it in trust for the benefit of the taxpayers who had contributed it. (Whaley v. Commonwealth, For Use, 110 Ky., 154.)

This proceeding is an application by the plaintiffs below for a rule against Donnelly, the county treasurer of Nicholas county, to compel him to pay into court $3,200 odd, alleged to have been paid to him by Ratliff. It is stated as a basis for the rule that Ratliff had on deposit in bank the funds illegally collected by him from the taxpayers; that he drew his check on the bank, got the cash, and paid it to the county treasurer for an indebtedness owing the county by Ratliff, and that the treasurer had paid it out to various county claimants in payment of sundry claims allowed them by the fiscal court. It is also asserted that Donnelly knew when he received this money from Ratliff that it was the identical money collected illegally from the taxpayers. As these collections have been called a trust fund, and are so treated for certain purposes, appellant contends that he ought to be permitted, under familiar maxims applicable to trust funds, to follow and recover it from whomsoever has received it, so long as he is not an innocent holder, and that as Donnelly had notice of the facts he was not an innocent holder.

Money has not earmarks by which a lien can be got on it by lis pendens. The circulating medium, the currency of a county, can not be subjected to liens, and impressed with trust obligations so as to take it from general circulation. Nor was this a proceeding in rem. It was only to get a personal judgment against Ratliff and his sureties. No steps were taken to stop the money in the hands of the bank. The county treasurer received the cash from the former sheriff on an admitted debt owing the county by him. The currency not being in lien, and the debt of the bank to its depositor, Ratliff, not having been stayed by garnishee process, the payment by the sheriff to the treasurer was not illegal. The rule was properly refused.

Judgment affirmed.

GUNKEL v. SEIBERTH.

(Filed March 15, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Land—Conflict in lines—Evidence—Measurements by persons not surveyors—Competency—In a controversy as to the ownership of a strip of land two inches wide and 60 feet long claimed by appellee as being part of his lot No. 14, fronting 25 feet on McCracken avenue, in the city of Newport, which was also claimed by appellant, evidence of measurements made by persons who were not surveyors, with an ordinary standard tape line, who claimed to have some experience in measuring land, was competent to go to the jury for what it was worth, and it was error in the court to exclude it.

2. Change in deed—Evidence—It was also error in the court to permit a witness to state that the deed to one of the lots had been changed unless it was shown that such change was made after its execution and delivery.

3. Instructions—An instruction by the court to the jury was misleading which told them that if they believed that S. was the owner of and entitled to the possession of a certain lot known as lot No. 14, they should find for him, when it was conceded that S. owned said lot, but the controversy was as to whether the opposing claimant was in possession of any part of said lot as laid down on the plat. The instruction should have been that if the jury believed from the evidence that the defendant was over the line and held any part of lot No. 14 they should find for the plaintiff and say how much he was over the line, but unless defendant was over the line and held a part of lot No. 14, they should find for defendant.

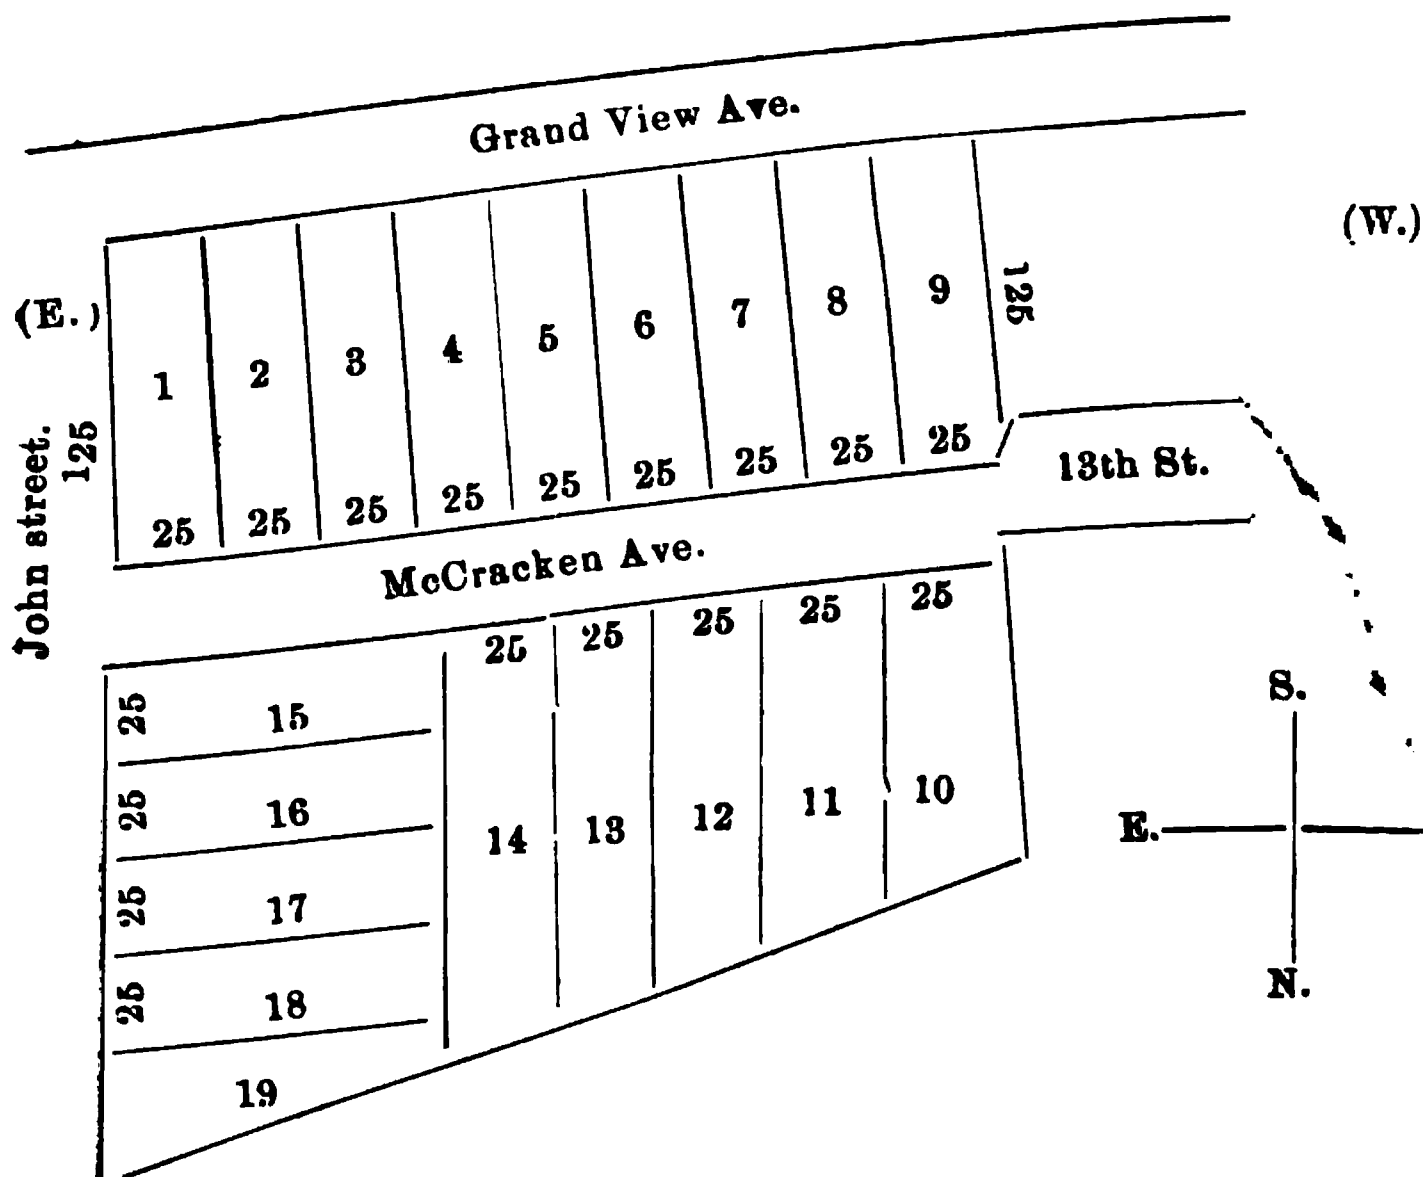

Kendrick & Roebuck for appellant.

John S. Geisher for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Hobson.

Appellee owns lot 14 in one of the subdivisions of Newport. Appellant owns lots 15, 16, 17 and 18. Each of the lots has a frontage of 25 feet according to the plat of the subdivision, which is as follows:

Appellee sued appellant, charging that he held wrongfully a strip of ground two feet in width and sixty feet in length on the east side of his lot (No. 14). Appellant answered, denying that he had in possession any part of lot 14, and alleging that he was two inches within his own line. He also showed that appellee had allowed the owner of lot 18 to fence up two feet of his lot, and that for this reason he was short two feet of the quantity specified in his deed. The case was submitted to a jury, who found for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

When the defendant was on the stand this occurred: "Defendant was then asked by his counsel: 'State if you know where the two-foot strip of land is located which plaintiff claims is occupied by your stable and taken off the east side of his lot No. 14,' and defendant answered: 'The stable is on my own lot, and not any part of it is on lot 14. If there is any land missing from lot 14 it is over on the west side of his lot, and contained in lots 18, 12 and 11, which are west of lot 14, and all of them are wider than the plat calls for. When Seiberth built his fence along the west side of his lot 14, he took Lindsey's word for it, and built his fence, which was only a short time ago, about two feet too far east; then he measured along Thirteenth street twenty-five feet to the corner of his back fence on lot 15, and sets that corner over two feet further east than it ought to be; then of course the back line of his lot 15 doesn't line up right with my stable, nor with his own fence at the rear of lot 16, which is in line with mine.' Plaintiff then moved to exclude said question and answer from the jury, and defendant objected thereto, the objection was overruled, and the question and answer were excluded, and the defendant at the time excepted to said ruling."

The evidence was competent, and should have been allowed to go to the jury for what it was worth. It was evident that the plaintiff had in possession only twenty-three feet front, and in determining whether the defendant had or not the missing two feet they should have been allowed to consider any evidence tending to fix his western line, for manifestly his eastern line was parallel to it and twenty-five feet from it. Further on this follows: "Defendant then introduced in his behalf Fred Wagner, who testified in substance that he had had considerable experience in measuring land, and in company with Joseph Haifle, had measured plaintiff's lot 14 and lots 18, 12 and 11, adjoining it on the west, and found that it measured (lot 14) twenty-five feet front, lot 18 measured twenty-six feet ten inches front, and lots 12 and 11 together measured fifty-one feet, all fronting on Thirteenth street (formerly McCracken avenue); that he began measuring at the surveyor's stake at Thirteenth and John streets, and measured westwardly from that point; that they used an ordinary standard tape line, and the said measuring was done since the filing of this suit and before the trial; that he made a memorandum of said measurements at the time of taking them and referred to it to refresh his memory. In cross-examination plaintiff asked witness if he was a surveyor, and defendant answered 'No.'"

"Defendant then introduced in his behalf Joseph Haifle, who testified in substance that he had had some experience in measuring land; that, with Squire Fred Wagner, they had measured the widths of lots 14, 18, 12 and 11, shown on the plat; that while doing said measuring he held one end of the tape line and Squire Wagner held the other; that it did not require a civil engineer to measure those lots, as the fences and engineers' stakes were there, and anybody could lay a line across a square lot like those and see how wide it was; that they measured the lots correctly and found the width to be as given by Squire Wagner. Upon cross-examination witness said he was not a surveyor."

The court, upon plaintiff's motion, excluded this evidence upon the idea that the witnesses were not surveyors. But they had measured the ground, and any measurement of the ground, whether made by a surveyor or any one else, is competent, the accuracy of the measurement being a question for the jury. The following exception also was taken: "Upon the conclusion of the defendant's testimony and evidence the plaintiff introduced in rebuttal George H. Ahlering, who testified in substance that he had drawn up the deeds of defendant to lots 17 and 18, and plaintiff then asked the witness: 'What was the depth of lots fronting on John street in said subdivision?' Defendant objected to the question, the objection was overruled by the court, and the witness answered: 'In most of the lots the depth was given as 100 feet, more or less, but in some no depth was given at all,' to which ruling defendant at the time excepted. Plaintiff then asked the witness: 'State whether or not the deed for the lot 18 has been changed or altered in any way since you wrote it,' handing witness the deed from Clifton Suburban Home and Building Co. to Gunkel. Defendant objected to the question, the objection was overruled by the court, and the witness answered: 'The deed to Gunkel of lot 18 has been changed by the addition in different ink of the words '100 feet deep,' to which ruling defendant at the time excepted. On cross-examination the witness testified that he did not know, and could not say, that the deed had been altered after its execution and recording, nor did he know if it had been altered by defendant, or any one for him.'"

The evidence as to the alteration of the deed was incompetent unless it was shown that the alteration was made after its execution and delivery. The deed for lot 18 was made in the year 1867, and the time had passed in which the grantor could have a mistake corrected made before its execution. He had never complained, and the presumption is that any change made in it after it was drawn was made before it was executed and delivered. The lines of lot 14 are straight, and lots 15, 16, 17 and 18 are of the same length. The court gave the jury this instruction only: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, Michael Seiberth, is the owner and entitled to the possession of a certain lot of ground situated in the Clifford Suburban Home and Building Co.'s subdivision in Campbell county, Kentucky, and known as lot 14, in block or section A, fronting twenty-five feet on Thirteenth street and extending back $116\frac{1}{4}$ feet deep, more or less, to the tracks of the L. & N. R. R., they will so say in their verdict and find for the plaintiff; otherwise, they will find for the defendant. Nine jurors may find a verdict, and all so agreeing must sign same."

This did not present to the jury the question they were to try. It was conceded that lot 14 was the property of the plaintiff. The question in the case was whether the defendant had in possession any part of lot 14 as laid down on the plat. The court should have instructed the jury that the plaintiff owned lot 14 on the plat; that the defendant owned lots 15, 16, 17 and 18; that if they believed from the evidence that the defendant was over the line and held any part of lot 14, they should find for the plaintiff, and say by their verdict how much he was over the line; but that unless the defendant was over the line, or held a part of lot 14, they should find for the defendant.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

WILLIS, BY, & CO. v. MAYSVILLE & BIG SANDY R. R. CO. AND CHESAPEAKE & OHIO R. R. CO.

(Filed February 28, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Operating trains in towns—Street crossings—Negligence—It is the duty of those operating trains through towns to keep a lookout for persons upon streets and especially at street crossings, and it is negligence in the company to have its agents or servants throwing substances from a train into the streets as it passes along or across them.

2. Contributory negligence—It is not contributory negligence for a boy thirteen years of age to stand in a street near a railroad crossing while a freight train is passing, at a place where there is no danger of being struck by the train, and he is not required to anticipate that persons connected with the train will throw freight from the train as it passed across the street, that might strike or injure him.

3. Injury by servant—Scope of employment—Liability of master—It is a matter of common knowledge that property is transported on freight trains, and where the evidence excludes the idea that a brakeman intentionally hurled a cake of ice from a passing freight train that struck and injured a boy standing in a street near a railroad crossing, the presumption is that the ice was being carried as freight and was thrown out at its destination by the servant while acting within the scope of his employment.

A. D. Cole and W. T. Cole for appellants.

W. H. Wadsworth and Worthington & Cochran for appellees.

Appeal from Greenup Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Ottis Willis, a boy thirteen years of age, was standing on a street in the town of Greenup near the tracks of the appellee where it crosses the street, and while so standing one of appellee's freight trains passed over the track, and as the rear of the caboose reached the point opposite where Willis stood a brakeman on the train kicked a cake of ice, weighing about twenty pounds, from the platform of the caboose, which struck the boy near the heart, from the effects of which it is claimed he sustained a serious injury and endured much pain. The boy was standing quite near the track at the time the injury was received. The street was used by the public as such streets are usually used in towns of that size. The court gave a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for the appellee.

It is contended that the court properly gave the instruction because, first, the appellee did not owe appellant any duty at the time and place and under the circumstances of his injury; second, his contributory negligence was the sole cause of the accident; third, there was no evidence upon which to base the claim that the brakeman at the time of the injury was acting within the scope of his authority. The boy, in common with the public, had the right to use the street. Under the law as enunciated by this court there is a duty imposed upon those operating trains through towns to keep a lookout for persons upon streets, and especially at street crossings. It certainly would be negligence in a railroad company to have its agents and servants throwing substances from a train into the streets as it passes along or across them. If the agents or servants do so by the authority of the master, and an injury is inflicted on persons using the street, it would be an actionable wrong. It is the duty of railroad companies to exercise proper care, so as to avoid injuring persons on streets of towns over which they pass. A failure to observe such care is certainly a breach of duty.

It is urged that the boy was guilty of contributory negligence because of his position near the train. We fail to see any negligence in the boy standing in the street at a point where there was no danger of being struck by the train. He was not required to anticipate that persons connected with the train would throw large lumps of ice from it as it passed across the street, so we are unable to see wherein Willis was guilty of any negligence. Had he been close enough to the train to have been struck by the cars as they passed, then it could be urged that he was guilty of negligence, and except for which the accident would not have happened. The last and most serious question to be considered is, was there evidence from which the court and jury might infer that the act of which complaint is made was done within the scope of the authority of the brakeman? The law is too well settled to require any discussion or citation of authorities, that where a servant assaults one while not in the performance of a duty imposed upon him by his employment, or who inflicts an injury upon another when not acting within the scope of his authority, the master is not responsible. If a conductor or brakeman on a train while passing over the track should fire a gun at some one standing upon the street or in a field, and inflicts an injury upon the person, the railroad company could not be held responsible. If he should leave his train and willfully assault one with a bludgeon, the master could not be held responsible for that act, because he would be acting entirely without the scope of his employment. If a servant on a train, acting within the scope of his authority, rightfully attempts to eject a person from it, the master is liable if any injury is inflicted upon such one, if it is done by the use of excessive force, or under circumstances as to time and place which renders the act wrongful. Whilst the master has only authorized the use of proper force to make the ejection at a proper time and place, still the master is responsible if an injury is inflicted by the use of excessive force, or at an improper time or place, because the servant was acting within the scope of his authority. The question recurs as to whether the court can infer from the evidence that the servant was acting within the scope of his authority. The brakeman was on a freight train. It is a matter of common knowledge that property is transported on freight trains. The evidence excludes the idea that the brakeman intentionally hurled the cake of ice from the train to injure the boy. It is possible that the ice was being carried for or without compensation, and as an easy means to discharge it, it was thrown from the train at its destination. It was not essential for the plaintiff to make out his case to prove that the lump of ice was placed on the car with the knowledge of the master or that it was thrown from the train with his knowledge or by his direction. The case is sufficiently made out if a reasonable inference might be drawn from the facts that the servant was acting within the scope of his authority. We shall not anticipate the defense or prejudge the question that may hereafter arise, but we are of the opinion that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to the jury.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO., OF HARTFORD, CONN. v. McCLAIN, &c.

(Filed March 1, 1905—Not to be reported.)

1. Fire insurance—Policy in trade name—No concealments—Validity—Where L. was conducting a store in the trade name of M. and had taken out a policy of insurance for $2,500 on his stock of goods in that name, there being no fraudulent concealment of the ownership and interest of L. therein, such policy is a valid contract of insurance.

2. Insurable interest of M.—Interest as pledgee—Although L. and M. were not partners, M. held the title to the property as an indemnity against liability for merchandise bought on his credit by L., which was enforceable as between them, and it appearing that M. was bound for merchandise bills to the amount of $1,800, he had a material interest in the goods and their preservation. The value of the insured stock being $2,000 in excess of the direct interest of M., he held such excess as pledgee in trust for the beneficial owner, and these were insurable interests.

W. S. Pryor, W. B. Stanfield and Barger & Ricks for appellant.

Robbins & Thomas for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee, R. F. McClain, owned a stock of merchandise at Lynnville, on which he carried an insurance with appellant against fire. In the fall of 1902 he sold his stock of goods to appellee, J. S. Longmire, for $2,400, and the payment by Longmire of all outstanding debts owing on behalf of that business. It was agreed between them that the business was to be continued in the name of R. F. McClain, who loaned his name and credit to Longmire in the business. McClain was to hold the assets of the business to indemnify him against loss by reason of debts contracted, as well as to secure the sum owing him. A new policy of insurance was taken out on the stock by Longmire in the name of McClain on October 10, 1902, for the term of one year, in the sum of $2,500. Longmire paid off all he owed to McClain about January, 1903, including debts to wholesale merchants owing by McClain and which Longmire had assumed as part of the purchase price of the goods. But he had continued buying from wholesalers, and owed them about $1,800 on July, 1903, when the insured property was destroyed by fire. This suit on the policy, issued in the name of R. F. McClain, was brought by appellees, R. F. McClain and J. S. Longmire, alleging the facts first revited, and that they as partners, trading under the style of R. F. McClain, effected the insurance in that name for their joint benefit.

The only defenses necessary to be noticed are, first, that the contract of insurance provides: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement endorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if * * * the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership."

Second. It is also provided in the contract: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof, or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated therein."

The verdict and judgment were for the appellee under instructions that assumed the insurer's liability upon the state of facts set out. If Longmire had been doing business under a trade name of R. F. McClain, and had taken out the insurance in that name, there being no fraudulent concealment of his ownership and interest, we perceive no reason why it might not have been a valid contract of insurance. Or if McClain and Longmire were partners in the ownership of the stock of merchandise, and carrying on their business under the style or firm name of R. F. McClain, there is no reason why an insurance contract made on behalf of the partnership in that name is not as binding as any other contract made by or on behalf of the partnership would be. (Joyce on Insurance, section 944; Ostrander Ins., section 106.) But were they partners? Partnership is a status, dependent upon contract between two or more persons. Its distinguishing essential elements are the contract or agreement to become partners, and the sharing of profits or losses proportionally. Its members may contribute money, property or labor, or any of them, but unless there is an express agreement to share profits (and impliedly if not expressly to bear losses) in a given proportion among the parties to the agreement, it is not a partnership, whatever other rights the parties have. (Miller v. Hughes, 1 A. K. Mar., 182, 10 Am. Dec., 719.) In the case at bar the agreement did not contemplate in any event that McClain was to share profits or to bear any part of the losses. His relation to Longmire was in the nature of a suretyship, or guarantor, holding in pledge as indemnity the stock of goods in question. If the business made money, Longmire was to get all of it. If it lost, McClain, as between him and Longmire, was to bear none of it. It is said, however, that McClain was bound to the public dealing with the concern as a partner. It would rather seem that he was bound as principal to those who dealt with the concern on the faith that it belonged to McClain. But this in no sense affected McClain's right to or claim upon the property as a supposed partner. The reason he was bound to those dealing with the concern upon the faith that it was his business, was upon the principle of estoppel, as well as of agency. Letting himself be held out as a principal, whereby persons were induced to deal with the concern upon a belief that he was principal, estopped him from saying to them afterwards that he was not in fact principal and owner of the goods. In addition, in this case, McClain having expressly authorized Longmire to buy goods for the latter in the former's name as ostensible principal and owner, as between the seller and McClain the latter may be treated as sole principal, or joint, as may be elected by the seller. So we see that under the agreement between McClain and Longmire they never agreed to become partners; they had not agreed to share profits or losses in the enterprise; they were not, either in fact or in law, copartners for any purpose. Yet McClain was bound to those selling goods to the concern upon the reliance induced by his act that he was principal or partner. As there was not a partnership between McClain and Longmire, there was no insurance issued to such firm.

The question next arises, what was McClain's interest in the property insured? That he was not the beneficial owner was clear enough. As between him and Longmire, he held the title to the property as an indemnity against liability for merchandise bought on his credit by Longmire. The agreement was enforceable as between them. It appearing that McClain was bound for merchandise bills to the amount of $1,800, he had a material interest in the goods and their preservation. The value of the insured stock was greater than $1,800 by $3,000 above the direct interest therein of McClain. The excess, as pledgee, he held in trust for the beneficial owner, Longmire; that these interests were insurable interests we have no doubt. It is said in Joyce on Insurance (volume 2, section 895): "Although an absolute ownership is a common form of insurable interest, the term does not necessarily imply any property in the subject of insurance or ownership thereof, for it is well settled at the present day that an insurable interest need not amount to a right of property or of possession. Whenever a legal connection can be shown to exist between injury to the thing insured and the loss to the party insuring, it is sufficient. So if one has a right which may be enforced against the property, and which is so connected with it that its injury or destruction will necessarily damnify him, he has an insurable interest therein. And whoever has such title, that if the property were lost without insurance the loss would fall on him, has an insurable interest. The interest of a mortgagor is within the rule. So if one insured has any interest that would be injured if the peril insured against should happen, his contract of insurance is a valid one."

Again, in section 928, the same author says: "If a merchant furnishes another with a stock of goods, depending for his payment upon the latter's success in business, he has an insurable interest in such stock."

It is claimed for appellant, however, that although McClain's interest might be an insurable one, yet appellant never agreed to insure that particular interest, but instead expressly restricted its contract to an insurance of the property, provided it was owned solely and exclusively by the insured named in the policy to wit, R. F. McClain. The provision of insurance policies regarding the extent of ownership by the assured has become familiar in the decisions of the courts. The insurance is not of the title, but is to indemnify the insured against loss of the thing. Therefore, if it be lost or damaged by fire, and if the loss to the assured is equal to the indemnity contracted by the insurer, every element material to the risk is satisfied. Anything beyond becomes wholly immaterial. The parties are deemed to have in mind, in contracting, the making of a valid contract by which the insurer for an agreed consideration assumes the risk of loss or damage by fire to the thing insured, instead of the owner's bearing it. The writing between them must be so construed if its terms will admit of it. If the insured has pecuniary interest in the thing insured equal or greater than the insurance, it can not be material to the risk that somebody else has some interest in the property, or that the assured does not own the absolute and unconditional title. (Germania Ins. Co. v. Rudwig, 80 Ky., 234.)

A trustee of an implied as well as of an express trust may effect an insurance in his own name for the benefit of the cestui que trust. Such contracts, though the names of the beneficiaries are not disclosed, are not repugnant to the clause in the policies concerning concealments or misrepresentations of any material fact concerning the risk, or of the interest of the insured. (California Ins. Co. v. Union Express Co., 133 U. S., 387; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 14 Wall., 504.) Where, as in this case, no representation was made by the insured, there is no misrepresentation at all; nor is there a concealment of any material fact, although the names of some of the beneficiaries of the policy are not disclosed. McClain holding the excess in the stock above his own liability as trustee for Longmire, the insurance taken in his own name is, nevertheless, for the benefit of his cestui que trust, and will be so treated. In some cases it is important to the insurer to know who is interested in the property in order that it may form a judgment as to the probable care that will be given in its custody and preservation. But in the case at bar the insured and Longmire were known to the insurers to be both in control, and that Longmire was the only one who actually attended to the store, whether as clerk or manager or owner. There was, therefore, no concealed risk, and no material concealment in not divulging the exact nature and extent of Longmire's interest in the property insured.

The statement in the policy as to concealment or misrepresentation is to be construed also in the light of the statute of this State, section 639, which reads: "All statements or descriptions in any application for a policy of insurance shall be deemed and held representations and not warranties; nor shall any misrepresentations, unless material or fraudulent, prevent a recovery on the policy."

The insured is not bound by the exact letter of such statements, nor is his policy voided, if matter though relevant to the transaction, but not material to the risk, has not been disclosed, particularly where no question was asked concerning it. (Kenton Ins. Co. v. Wigginton, 39 Ky., 330; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Monroe, 101 Ky., 12.)

Counsel for appellant urges that the stipulation invoked in this case is not found in an application for the insurance, but in the contract itself; and that the statute speaks only of applications for insurance. In the cases from this court, cited above, some of them in applying this identical statute, as is here done, have treated it as applying to the terms of the policy as well as to the application which precedes it. And such seems to be the logic of the matter. The stipulation as to interest and title though in the policy, not signed by the assured, amount to representations by him of facts, if not assurances on his part, and are of the subject-matter and within the very mischief sought to be remedied by the statute quoted.

The judgment of the circuit court, the trial having been in conformity to the principles herein announced, is affirmed, with damages.

MERSCHER, BY, & C. v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed March 2, 1905.)

1. Railroads—Servants—Negligently exposing torpedo—Injury to child—Liability of company—Alternative allegations—A petition which alleged that "an agent and servant of a railroad company, with gross negligence and carelessness, placed a torpedo on the sidewalk where it was found, or with gross negligence and carelessness placed it on the railroad track so that it could easily be removed or brushed away, and suffered it to be removed to the place where it was found; that one of these statements is true, but he does not know which one is true; that the agent or servant who placed it upon the sidewalk had been and was then charged by the defendant with the duty of safely keeping it; that he knew of its dangerous character; that if he placed it upon the track he had been and was then duly intrusted with its safe keeping, and that the plaintiff, a boy eleven years old, picked said torpedo up from the street in a populous part of the city and in childish curiosity struck it with a hammer, causing it to explode and put out his eye, stated a cause of action, and a demurrer thereto was improperly sustained.

2. Act of agent is act of master—The defendant being a corporate entity, it could only have the custody and control of the torpedoes through the instrumentality of agents or servants. The demurrer admits that the agent and servant was charged with the safe keeping of the torpedo, and use of the same at the time it was placed upon the track or upon the street, therefore, it was the act of the defendant in so placing it.

3. Same—Where a master substitutes another in the care and control of forces or explosives calculated to endanger life, he is responsible for the negligent acts of such other, the same as if acting himself.

4. Pleading—Scope of servant's employment—Where it was alleged in the petition that the agent and servant had the care and custody of the torpedo, it was not necessary to allege that the act of the servant was within the scope of his employment.

Samuel C. Bailey for appellants.

Benjamin D. Warfield and Jas. C. Wright for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and the plaintiff refusing to plead further, the petition was dismissed. From the petition it appears that the appellant is a boy eleven years of age; that he lost an eye by the explosion of a railway torpedo which he had picked up from a public street near the appellee's track in a populous part of the city of Newport, where children were accustomed to play. The boy's childish curiosity to discover the contents of the torpedo lead him to strike it with a hammer, causing it to explode, and thus inflicting the injury of which complaint is made. By the petition, as amended, it is substantially stated that an agent and servant of the defendant, with gross negligence and carelessness, placed the torpedo on the sidewalk where it was found, or with gross negligence and carelessness placed it on the railroad track so that it could be easily removed or brushed away, and suffered it to be removed to the place where it was found; that one of these statements is true, but he does not know which one is true; that the agent and servant who placed the torpedo upon the sidewalk had been and then was charged by the defendant with the duty of safely keeping the torpedo; that he knew of its dangerous character; that the agent and servant of the defendant, if he placed the torpedo upon the track, had been and was then duly intrusted with its safe keeping. The averment that it was negligently placed upon the track and the one that it was placed upon the sidewalk were made in the alternative, which is permitted under the Civil Code of Practice. The plaintiff proceeded upon the idea that if the agent and servant of the defendant who was intrusted with the care of the torpedo placed it upon the track in such a negligent way as to be easily removed or knocked therefrom to the street, he was entitled to recover the damages sustained. Again, if this was not true, he being charged with the safe keeping of the torpedo, and negligently placed it upon the street, and the plaintiff was thereby injured, he was entitled to recover.

The defendant being a corporate entity, it could only have the custody and control of the torpedoes through the instrumentality of agents or servants. The demurrer admits that the agent and servant was charged with the safe keeping of the torpedo and use of them at the time it was placed upon the track or upon the street, therefore, it was the act of the defendant in so placing it. If the master himself has control of forces or explosives calculated to endanger life, the obligation is upon him to control or superintend them. He is under an obligation to use proper care for the protection of life and property therefrom. If he substitutes another to represent him in their care and control, the same obligation remains upon him. The master is responsible for the negligent acts of his servants in the course of their employment. This is true whether the negligent act be authorized or forbidden.

In Sherman and Redfield on Negligence, 5th edition, section 146, it is said: "The master is responsible for the negligent acts or omissions of his servants in the course of their employment, though unauthorized or even forbidden by him, and though outside of their 'line of duty,' and without regard to their motives. He can not limit his responsibility for any servant, by employing him only with reference to a single branch of the business."

In Cohen v. D. D. E. B. & B. R. R. Co., 69 N. Y., 170, it is said: "The master who puts a servant in a place of trust or responsibility, or commits him to the management of his business or the care of his property, is justly held responsible when the servant, through lack of judgment or discretion, * * * goes beyond the strict line of his duty or authority, and inflicts an unjustifiable injury upon another."

In Thompson on Negligence, volume 1, section 523, it is said: "Every person who employs highly dangerous agencies upon his premises or about his business stands under the obligation of exercising, to the end that third persons shall not be injured through those agencies, a degree of care proportionate to the danger of such injury."

This court has recognized the rules announced by the authors quoted as being correct.

In Bransom's Adm'r v. Labrot, & Co., 81 Ky., 688, it is said: "It is held that a party is guilty of negligence in leaving anything in a place, when he knows it to be extremely probable that some other person will unjustifiably set it in motion, to the injury of a third person. (1 Addison on Torts, 511.) And said a learned judge: 'It appears to me that a man who leaves in a public place, along which persons, and amongst them children, have to pass a dangerous machine, which may be fatal to any one who touches it, without any precaution against mischief, is not only guilty of negligence, but of negligence of a very reprehensible character, and not the less so because the imprudence and unauthorized act of another may be necessary to realize the mischief to which the unlawful act, or negligence, of the defendant, has given occasion.' "

In the case of City of Owensboro v. York's Adm'r. 25 Ky. Law Rep., 1899, it was said: "It is incumbent on those having dangerous instrumentalities not to leave exposed to the reach of children anything which would be tempting to them, and which they, in their immature judgment, might naturally suppose they could handle and play with."

Our conclusion is that if the agent and servant of the defendant had the care and custody of the torpedo, and negligently placed it upon the railroad track, or upon the street, under the circumstances stated in the petition, it is liable for the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff. It is urged that the petition is defective, because there was no averment that the act was within the scope of the agent and servant's employment. It was not necessary to make this averment, because it was averred in the petition that the agent and servant had the care and custody of the torpedo, and so had it at the time when it was so placed upon the track or street. If the master had imposed the duty upon the servant to care for the torpedo, and that duty was resting upon him at the time it was placed upon the track or street, the wrongful act was within the scope of his employment, though a grossly negligent one. The substance of the averment is that the negligent act was committed by the agent within the scope of his authority. The doctrine enunciated in Sullivan v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2341, does not apply to the facts averred in the petition. In that case the party who caused the injury to be inflicted did not have the care and custody of the torpedo as the agent or servant of the defendant. The act was not done within the scope of the servant's employment. It was an intentional act, apart from the employment, hence a different rule from the one here invoked was adjudged and applied to the facts of that case. Of course this opinion is predicated upon the facts admitted by the demurrer, and may or may not have any application to the facts which may be developed on the trial of the case.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Barker dissenting.

BERRY v. EWEN, &c.

(Filed March 7, 1906—Not to be reported.)

1. Deed to wife—Payment by husband—Fraud on creditors of husband—In an action by a judgment creditor against a debtor and his wife to set aside a deed made to the wife for land alleged to have been paid for by the husband, and to subject it to the payment of the husband's debts, where the evidence conduced to show that the wife had not a great while before the conveyance received from her father's estate money or property equal to the consideration paid for the land, fraud will not be presumed in making the conveyance in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

2. Homestead proceeds—Invested in another homestead—In an action by a creditor of the husband to set aside a deed made to his wife, which is shown to have been paid for by property of the husband which at the time was exempt to the husband under the statutes, and it is also shown that the land so conveyed is occupied by the husband and wife as a homestead, and is of less value than $1,000, it can not be subjected to the payment of the husband's debts, and the deed to the wife was not fraudulent.

W. D. Jackson for appellant.

C. F. Spencer for appellees.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant having obtained judgment against the appellee, G. W. Ewen, for $45, and caused execution to issue thereon, which was returned "no property found," instituted this action in equity to set aside certain deeds made to the appellee, Susan F. Ewen, wife of the judgment debtor, and asked that the lands thereby conveyed be subjected to the satisfaction of his judgment upon the alleged ground that they were paid for with the money of the husband, but that he had wrongfully procured the deeds thereto to be made to his wife for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding his creditors.

The first tract is particularly described in the original petition, though the quantity is not given. It was, however, in substance alleged that it was by deed from S. P. Sersain conveyed in January, 1901, to appellee, Susan Ewen, but that the consideration, $260, was paid with money belonging to her husband, and not to her. The answer filed by appellees to the original petition contained a specific denial of its allegations.

By amended petition appellant set out the conveyance June 25, 1901, of the second tract to appellee, Susan F. Ewen, by deed from G. P. Day and wife, and averred that the consideration therefor, $150, was likewise paid by appellee G. W. Ewen, with money belonging to him, that is, that he paid $110 thereof in money, and the remaining $40 was paid by him in an account for medical services the grantor owed him as a physician. In their answer to the amended petition appellees deny that the last-mentioned parcel of land was purchased of Day by appellee, G. W. Ewen, or that it was conveyed to his wife to cheat, hinder or defraud his creditors, but do not deny that the consideration of $150 was paid by him in money and a medical account, as charged in the amended petition.

The answer, however, contains the averments that the tract purchased of Day, which includes only one and one-half acres, adjoins the tract purchased of Sersain; that the parcels are worth together less than $1,000, and that they were at the institution of appellee's action, and are now, occupied by appellees as one place and as a homestead, and that appellee, G. W. Ewen, was then and is now a bona fide housekeeper with a family, consisting of himself, and wife and ten children; that at the time of the conveyance to the wife from Day, appellee, G. W. Ewen, did not have or own sufficient provision, including breadstuff and animal food, to sustain himself and family a year, or any considerable part of that time; that he was also without money, personal property or growing crop, other than the money and medical account paid Day, although entitled to have allowed him out of money, other personal property or growing crop, if any such had been on hand, an amount in lieu of such provision equal to $40 for each member of his family, for which reason the $150 was not subject to appellant's debt, but exempt to him under the statute.

Appellant did not file a reply to the affirmative averments of the answer to the amended petition, but did file a demurrer thereto. The case was then submitted upon the pleadings and proof, and the chancellor dismissed appellant's action at his cost. Appellant took the depositions of several witnesses, and the facts furnished by them conduced to prove that the appellee, Susan F. Ewen, not a great while before the conveyances to her, received from the estate of her father and grandfather money or property equal in amount to, if not in excess of, the consideration paid for the Sersain land. As fraud will not be presumed in view of this testimony furnished by appellant, and the absence from the record of any competent evidence to the contrary, we concur in the conclusion of the chancellor that the conveyance to the wife from Sersain was without fraud. The only question that remains to be determined is as to the right of appellee, G. W. Ewen, to apply to the purchase of the Day land money exempt to him under section 1697, Kentucky Statutes. The fact that it was exempt is confessed in the record, and if so there could have been no question of his right to give it to his wife, or to invest it in land to which she took the title; in neither event could appellant complain, as the money loaned could not have been reached by attachment or otherwise for his debt.

In Wallace v. Mason, 100 Ky., 561, it is said: "If a debtor owns just such personal property as the law exempts from the payment of his debts, why should he not be permitted to sell it and invest it in land, occupy it with his family and hold it as a homestead exempt from the payment of his debts? Where is the difference in principle between the case where the proceeds of exempt realty and those of exempt personalty are invested in a homestead? The creditor is injured no more in the one than in the other case."

Judgment affirmed.

A. O. U. W. GRAND LODGE OF KENTUCKY v. EDWARDS.

(Filed March 7, 1905—Not to be reported.)

Life insurance—Construction of statutes—Waiver—The defense interposed upon the trial of this action in the lower court for the recovery upon the contract of insurance was that as the insured died of smallpox there could be no recovery upon the policy because of an agreement in the application that there should be no liability in the event that insured died of small pox as he had not been vaccinated. The court upon motion struck out the plea of special waiver and peremptorily instructed the jury to find for appellee. Held—That the questions raised by the answer were adversely settled to appellant's contention by this court in Supreme Commandery, &c., Golden

Cross v. Hughes, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 984, the court holding that the exemption in section 641, Kentucky Statutes, refers only to those general provisions regulating insurance companies found in subdivision 1 of the insurance law. Section 679, Kentucky Statutes, applies to the certificate sued on in this case, and, therefore, the application for the certificate not having been attached to and accompanying the certificate, can not be received in evidence or considered as a part of the contract in any controversy between the parties interested in the certificate.

Baker & Baker and Caruth, Chatterson & Blitz for appellant.

Bourland & Hunt for appellee.

Appeal from Webster Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This is an appeal from a judgment for $1,000 in favor of appellee, rendered against appellant by the lower court upon the verdict of a jury returned for that amount.

The action was upon a benefit certificate issued by the Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen of Kentucky, whereby it agreed to pay appellee as beneficiary $1,000 upon the death of W. H. Edwards, to whom the certificate was issued. The petition sets out the contract of insurance, the issual to the insured of the certificate in pursuance thereof, his death, the furnishing to appellant of the proofs of death, and its refusal to pay the amount fixed by the certificate. The answer of appellant interposed the defense that at the time the certificate in question was issued it was a secret fraternal society, having lodges under the supervision of a grand body, and owing allegiance to it; that its members are secured solely by admission into subordinate lodges, and that it does not pay commissions, or employ agents, except in the organization or supervision of the work of its subordinate lodges, and that its object was and is to furnish its members benefits and protection at actual cost, and without revenue or profit to the organization. The answer further averred in substance that as a consideration for the issual of the benefit certificate to W. H. Edwards, he executed and delivered to appellant an agreement or waiver to the effect that inasmuch as he had not been vaccinated, there should be no liability on the part of appellant to the beneficiary named in the certificate in the event the death of the assured resulted from smallpox; that the death of the assured was caused by smallpox, for which reason appellant was not liable to the beneficiary for the amount named in the certificate.

So much of the answer as pleaded the special waiver as a bar to a recovery was, upon motion of appellee, stricken out by the court, and an amended answer pleading with greater particularity the waiver being offered by appellant, the court refused to permit it to be filed. The cause then being upon a trial the jury, under a peremptory instruction from the court, found for appellee the $1,000 named in the certificate. Appellant thereupon made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and this court is asked to review the several rulings complained of, especially the striking from the answer of the plea of waiver and the giving of the peremptory instruction.

That the alleged waiver was a part of the application of the assured is shown by the following stipulation therein: "And I do hereby make this waiver a part of the agreement contained in my said application." * * *

